

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

THE
LAWYERS REPORTS
ANNOTATED

NEW SERIES
BOOK 33

BURDETT A. RICH, HENRY P. FARNHAM, EDITORS

1911

ROCHESTER, N. Y.
THE LAWYERS CO-OPERATIVE PUBLISHING COMPANY

1911

122038

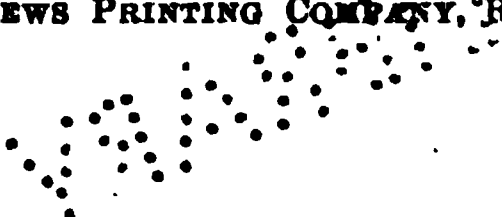

JUL 29 1942

Copyright 1911

by

THE LAWYERS CO-OPERATIVE PUBLISHING COMPANY.

E. R. ANDREWS PRINTING COMPANY, Rochester, N. Y.

TABLE

OF

CASES REPORTED

A.		Bluefield Waterworks & Improv. Co. v. Bluefield.. (W. Va.)
Abbott, State v. (S. C.)	112	Boston Elevated R. Co., Boyle v. (Mass.)	552
American Bonding Co., George A. Hormel Co. v. (Minn.)	513	Bourdreaux v. Tucson Gas, E. L. & P. Co. (Ariz.)	196
American Express Co. v. State Nat. Bank (Okla.)	188	Bourke v. Olcott Water Co.... (Vt.)	1015
Andersen, Lepley v. (Wis.)	836	Boyes v. Masters (Okla.)	576
Arkansas Brick & Mfg. Co., State v. (Ark.)	376	Boyle v. Boston Elevated R. Co. (Mass.)	552
Asbury Park, Bisbing v. (N. J. Err. & App.)	523	Brand, J. R. Watkins Medical Co. v. (Ky.)	960
Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co., Losey v. (Kan.)	414	Britton v. Washington Water Power Co. (Wash.)	109
Atlantic C. L. R. Co., Exum v. (N. C.)	169	Brown v. Fuller (Mich.)	459
Augir v. Warder (W. Va.)	69	Yazoo & M. V. R. Co. v. (Miss.)	804
B.		Burke v. Scheer (Neb.)	1057
Badington, Crocheron v. (Idaho)	868	Burley v. United States... (C. C. A.)	807
Baker, State v. (W. Va.)	549	Burns, Seidler v. (Conn.)	291
Bank, National Exch., v. Ginn.. (Md.)	963	Burton, Sherman v. (Mich.)	87
of Commerce, Schmidt v. (N. M.)	558	C.
of Fulton, Title Guaranty & Surety Co. v. (Ark.)	676	Carley v. Liberty Hat Mfg. Co. (N. J. Err. & App.)	545
Oklahoma State, Central Mercantile Co. v. (Kan.)	954	Carrell v. State ex rel. Little (Ark.)	325
Rossville State, v. Heslet (Kan.)	738	Carroll v. Elmwood (Neb.)	1053
State Nat., American Ex- press Co. v. (Okla.)	188	Cathey v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. (Tex.)	103
Bass, Heard, & Howle v. Inter- national Harvester Co. (Ala.)	374	Central Mercantile Co. v. Okla- homa State Bank.. (Kan.)	954
Bassick Gold Mine Co. v. Beards- ley (Colo.)	852	Charmley, Lee v. (N. D.)	275
Beardsley, Bassick Gold Mine Co. . v. (Colo.)	852	Chesapeake & O. R. Co., Plummer v. (Ky.)	362
Berry, Com. v. (Ky.)	976	Raines v. (W. Va.)	583
Bisbing v. Asbury Park (N. J. Err. & App.)	523	v. Selsor (Ky.)	165
Blanchard, Welch v. (Mass.)	1	Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., Mc- Guire v. (Iowa)	706
Bleeker v. Colorado & S. R. Co. (Colo.)	386	Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., State v. (Minn.)	494
Bluefield, Bluefield Waterworks & Improv. Co. v. (W. Va.)	759	Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., Flee- man v. (Kan.)	733
3 L.R.A. (N.S.)		Childs v. State.... (Okla. Crim. App.)	563
		Clairview Park Improv. Co. v. Detroit & Lake St. Clair R. Co. (Mich.)	250
		Clarey v. Union C. L. Ins. Co... (Ky.)	881
		Clark v. Tenneson (Wis.)	426
			iii

Clear Creek Coal Co., Low v... (Ky.)	656	Farnsworth, Ex parte
Cobe, Parker v. (Mass.)	978	(Tex. Crim. App.)	968
Colorado & S. R. Co., Bleecker v.		Ferrell, Supreme Lodge, K. of P.
(Colo.)	380	v. (Kan.)	777
Com. v. Berry (Ky.)	976	F. G. Smith Piano Co., Minton v.
v. Drew (Mass.)	401	(App. D. C.)	305
Com. ex rel. Selligman, Rodman		Field, People v. (Ill.)	230
v. (Ky.)	592	Findley, Thornton v. (Ark.)	491
Commonwealth Coal Co., Winsor		Fitzgerald v. Union Stock Yards
v. (Wash.)	63	Co. (Neb.)	983
Conklin, Willits v. (Neb.)	321	Flanagan v. Mankato (Minn.)	339
Conley, Gordon v. (Me.)	336	Fleeman v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R.
O'Neil v. (Me.)	336	Co. (Kan.)	733
Twitchell v. (Me.)	330	Fleischner v. Durgin (Mass.)	79
Connolly, Warren v. (Mich.)	314	Fleming, Edwards v. (Kan.)	923
Crawford, Dollar Sav. & T. Co. v.		Floyd v. Duffy (W. Va.)	883
(W. Va.)	587	Forsythe v. Kluckhohn (Iowa)	163
Crelly v. Missouri & K. Teleph.		Fort Wayne & W. V. Traction
Co. (Kan.)	328	Co., Effinger v. (Ind.)	123
Crocheron, Re (Idaho)	868	Frazin, Re (C. C. A.)	745
v. Babington (Idaho)	868	Fuller, Brown v. (Mich.)	459
Cullen, Ebert v. (Mich.)	84
		G.
D.		Gacking, Petty v. (Ark.)	175
Danenhower v. Hayes ... (App. D. C.)	698	Gardner, Re (Kan.)	956
Darwin, State v. (Wash.)	1026	Gay, Louisville & N. R. Co. v... (Ky.)	303
DeGlopper v. Nashville R. &		George A. Hormel & Co. v.
Light Co. (Tenn.)	913	American Bonding Co.
Dentzel v. Island Park Asso.... (Pa.)	54	(Minn.)	513
Denver v. State Invest. Co. .. (Colo.)	395	George M. McDonald & Co. v.
Detroit & Lake St. Clair R. Co.,		Johns (Wash.)	57
Clairview Park Im-		Germania F. Ins. Co., Shepard v.
prov. Co. v. (Mich.)	250	(Mich.)	156
Dickerson, People v. (Mich.)	917	Ginn, National Exch. Bank v... (Md.)	963
Diehl, Wallace v. (N. Y.)	9	Girard Trust Co. v. Owen ... (Kan.)	262
Diener v. Star-Chronicle Pub. Co.		Goode, Tate v. (Ga.)	310
(Mo.)	216	Gordon v. Conley (Me.)	336
Dindorff, Saxton v. (Utah)	347	Gray, Re' (Neb.)	319
Dollar Sav. & T. Co. v. Crawford		Greenville, Tutt v. (Ky.)	331
(W. Va.)	587	Grimes, Prescott v. (Ky.)	669
Dotterweich, Smith v. (N. Y.)	883	v. State (Miss.)	682
Draffen, Meeker v. (N. Y.)	816	Gross v. State (Tex. Crim. Rep.)	477
Drew, Com. v. (Mass.)	401	Gum, State v. (W. Va.)	150
Duffy, Floyd v. (W. Va.)	883
Durgin, Fleischner v. (Mass.)	79	H.
		Hall v. Hall (Vt.)	191
E.		Hanna v. Kelsey Realty Co. ... (Wis.)	355
Eagle Ore Co., Jensen v. (Colo.)	681	Harlow, Mason v. (Kan.)	234
Eaid, State v. (Wash.)	946	Hartgraves v. State
Ebert v. Cullen (Mich.)	84	(Okla. Crim. App.)	568
Edwards v. Fleming (Kan.)	923	Hartley v. Miller (Mich.)	81
v. Schillinger (Ill.)	895	Harvey v. Weisbaum (Cal.)	540
Effinger v. Fort Wayne & W. V.		Hayes, Danenhower v. .. (App. D. C.)	698
Traction Co. (Ind.)	123	Helphand v. Independent Teleph.
Ellis, Hendry v. (Fla.)	702	Co. (Neb.)	369
Elmwood, Carroll v. (Neb.)	1053	Hendry v. Ellis (Fla.)	702
Ex parte Farnsworth		Henrikson v. Henrikson (Wis.)	534
(Tex. Crim. App.)	968	Heslet, Rossville State Bank v.
Exum v. Atlantic C. L. R. Co. (N. C.)	169	(Kan.)	738
		Hicks, State ex rel. Kerr v... (N. C.)	529
F.		Higdon v. Louisville & N. R. Co.
Fancher, Palm v. (Miss.)	295	(Ky.)	442
33 L.R.A. (N.S.)		Hodges v. Pine Product Co.,... (Ga.)	74

CASES REPORTED.

v

Hoppe v. Winona(Minn.) 449
Hudson River Power Transmission Co., Re(C. C. A.) 454
Huff, Spokane & Eastern Trust
Co. v.(Wash.) 1023
Hutti, Louisville R. Co. v.(Ky.) 867

I.

Idaho Springs Invest. Co., Seaton
Mountain E. L. H. &
P. Co. v.(Colo.) 1078
Independent Teleph. Co., Help-hand v.(Neb.) 369
Insurance Co., Germania F.,
Shepard v.(Mich.) 150
Mutual L., v. Smith... (C. C. A.) 439
Union C. L., Clarey v.... (Ky.) 881
International Harvester Co., Bass, Heard, & Howle
v.(Ala.) 374
Island Park Asso., Dentzel v. ..(Pa.) 54

J.

James v. State ... (Okla. Crim. App.) 827
Jensen v. Eagle Ore Co.(Colo.) 681
v. Maine Eye & Ear Infirmary(Me.) 141
Johns, George M. McDonald &
Co. v.(Wash.) 57
Johnson, Worley v.(Fla.) 639
J. R. Watkins Medical Co. v.
Brand(Ky.) 960

K.

Kalamazoo. Parsons Business College v.(Mich.) 921
Keever v. Mankato(Minn.) 339
Kelsey Realty Co., Hanna v.... (Wis.) 355
Kerr, State ex rel., v. Hicks ..(N. C.) 529
Kirby, Kurpgewert v.(Neb.) 98
Kluckhohn, Forsythe v.(Iowa) 163
Knights of Modern Maccabees v.
Sharp(Mich.) 780
Knudsen v. La Crosse Stone Co.
(Wis.) 223
Kruse v. Rabe.... (N. J. Err. & App.) 469
Kurpgewert v. Kirby(Neb.) 98

L.

La Crosse Stone Co., Knudsen v.
(Wis.) 223
Lathrop v. Sundberg(Wash.) 90
Lee v. Charmley(N. D.) 275
Lepley v. Andersen(Wis.) 836
Liberty Hat Mfg. Co., Carley v.
(N. J. Err. & App.) 545
Lininger Implement Co., Loxterkamp v.(Iowa) 501
Little. State ex-rel., Carrell v. (Ark.) 325
33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Londoner, Union Depot & R. Co.
v.(Colo.) 433
Long, Seigel v.(Ala.) 1070
Losey v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R.
Co.(Kan.) 414
Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Gay (Ky.) 303
Higdon v.(Ky.) 442
v. Renfro(Ky.) 133
Louisville R. Co. v. Hutti(Ky.) 867
Low v. Clear Creek Coal Co.... (Ky.) 656
Loxterkamp v. Lininger Implement Co.(Iowa) 501
Lyell v. Walbach(Md.) 741

M.

McArthur v. Moffett(Wis.) 264
McAuliffe v. Vaughan(Ga.) 255
McConnell v. McConnell(Ark.) 1074
McFall v. St. Louis(Mo.) 471
McGuire v. Chicago, B. & Q. R.
Co.(Iowa) 706
McKennan, Re(S. D.) 606
McLennan v. North Carolina R.
Co.(N. C.) 988
McRae v. Warmack(Ark.) 949
Maine Eye & Ear Infirmary, Jensen v.(Me.) 141
Maki v. State(Wyo.) 465
Mankato, Flanagan v.(Minn.) 339
Keever v.(Minn.) 339
Marri v. Stamford Street R. Co.
(Conn.) 1042
Mason v. Harlow(Kan.) 234
v. Nashville, C. & St. L.
R. Co.(Ga.) 280
Masters, Boyes v.(Okla.) 576
Mastin v. New York(N. Y.) 784
Meeker v. Draffen(N. Y.) 816
Merritt v. Morton(Ky.) 139
Meyers, State v.(Or.) 143
Miller, Hartley v.(Mich.) 81
Minot v. Stevens(Mass.) 236
Minton v. F. G. Smith Piano Co.
(App. D. C.) 305
Missouri & K. Teleph. Co.,
Crelly v.(Kan.) 328
Missouri, K. & T. R. Co., Cathey
v.(Tex.) 103
Modern Woodmen of A., Savage
v.(Kan.) 773
Moffett, McArthur v.(Wis.) 264
Morton, Merritt v.(Ky.) 139
Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Smith (C. C. A.) 439

N.

Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co.,
Mason v.(Ga.) 280
Nashville R. & Light Co., DeGlopper v.(Tenn.) 913
National Exch. Bank v. Ginn... (Md.) 963
Neely v. State(Miss.) 138
Neitzel v. Purchase(Neb.) 319

New York, Mastin v. (N. Y.)	784	Railroad Co., Stamford Street, Marri v. (Conn.)	1042
Nichols, State v. (W. Va.)	419	Union P., Schenberger v. (Kan.)	391
North Carolina R. Co., McLennan v. (N. C.)	988	Yazoo & M. V., v. Brown (Miss.)	804
North German Lloyd S. S. Co., Pratt v. (C. C. A.)	532	Railway Co., Atchison, T. & S. F., Losey v. (Kan.)	414
Numa Block Coal Co., Poli v. (Iowa)	646	Boston Elevated, Boyle v. (Mass.)	552
O.
Oakes v. State (Miss.)	207	Chesapeake & O., Plummer v. (Ky.)	362
Oklahoma City v. Reed (Okla.)	1083	Chesapeake & O., Raines v. (W. Va.)	583
Oklahoma City R. Co., Stephens v. (Okla.)	1007	Chesapeake & O., v. Selsor (Ky.)	165
Oklahoma State Bank, Central Mercantile Co. v. .. (Kan.)	954	Chicago, M. & St. P., State v. (Minn.)	494
Olcott Water Co., Bourke v. .. (Vt.)	1015	Chicago, R. I. & P., Flee- man v. (Kan.)	733
O'Neil v. Conley (Me.)	336	Colorado & S., Bleecker v. (Colo.)	386
State v. (Iowa)	788	Detroit & Lake St. Clair, Clairview Park Im- prov. Co. v. (Mich.)	250
Owen, Girard Trust Co. v. (Kan.)	262	Missouri, K. & T., Cathey v. (Tex.)	103
P.
Palm v. Fancher (Miss.)	295	Nashville, C. & St. L., Mason v. (Ga.)	280
Parker v. Cobe (Mass.)	978	Oklahoma City, Stephens v. (Okla.)	1007
Parnell v. Thompson (Kan.)	658	St. Louis, I. M. & S., v. Woods (Ark.)	855
Parsons Business College v. Kalamazoo (Mich.)	921	Union Depot & v. Lon- doner (Colo.)	433
Peake v. Renwick (S. C.)	409	Railways Co., Pittsburg, Rosen- stiel v. (Pa.)	751
Pegg v. Pegg (Mich.)	166	Raines v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. (W. Va.)	583
People v. Dickerson (Mich.)	917	Re Crocheron (Idaho)	868
v. Field (Ill.)	230	Frazin (C. C. A.)	745
v. Turpin (Colo.)	766	Gardner (Kan.)	956
People ex rel. Wayman v. Stew- ard (Ill.)	259	Gray (Neb.)	319
Peterson, Re (Idaho)	1067	Hudson River Power Trans- mission Co. (C. C. A.)	454
Petty v. Gacking (Ark.)	175	McKenna (S. D.)	606
Pine Product Co., Hodges v. (Ga.)	74	Peterson (Idaho)	1067
Pittsburg R. Co., Rosenstiel v. (Pa.)	751	Schnitzer (Nev.)	941
Plummer v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. (Ky.)	362	Shearn (Utah)	347
Poli v. Numa Block Coal Co. (Iowa)	646	Stixrud (Wash.)	632
Pratt v. North German Lloyd S. S. Co. (C. C. A.)	532	Reed, Oklahoma City v. (Okla.)	1083
Prescott v. Grimes (Ky.)	669	Renfro, Louisville & N. R. Co. v. (Ky.)	133
Pugh, Yarbrough v. (Wash.)	351	Renwick, Peake v. (S. C.)	409
Purchase, Neitzel v. (Neb.)	319	Rodman v. Com. ex rel. Sellig- man (Ky.)	592
R.
Rabe, Kruse v. (N. J. Err. & App.)	469	Rosenstiel v. Pittsburg R. Co. (Pa.)	751
Railroad Co., Atlantic C. L. Exum v. (N. C.)	169	Rossville State Bank v. Heslet (Kan.)	738
Chicago, B. & Q., McGuire v. (Iowa)	706	S.
Louisville, v. Hutti ... (Ky.)	867	St. Louis, McFall v. (Mo.)	471
Louisville & N., v. Gay .. (Ky.)	303	St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Wil- liams (Ark.)	94
Louisville & N., Higdon v. (Ky.)	442
Louisville & N., v. Renfro (Ky.)	133
North Carolina, McLen- nan v. (N. C.)	988
St. Louis & S. F., v. Wil- liams (Ark.)	94

St. Louis, L. M. & S. R. Co. v. Woods (Ark.)	855	State, Schultz v. (Neb.)	403
Savage v. Modern Woodmen of A. (Kan.)	773	Sherman v. (S. D.)	606
Saxon v. Dindorff (Utah)	347	v. Smith (Mo.)	179
Scheer, Burke v. (Neb.)	1057	v. Smith (Wis.)	463
Schenberger v. Union P. R. Co. (Kan.)	391	Stixrud v. (Wash.)	632
Schilling, Edwards v. (Ill.)	895	State ex rel. Kerr v. Hicks.. (N. C.)	629
Schmidt v. Bank of Commerce (N. M.)	558	Little, Carrell v. (Ark.)	325
Schnitzer, Re (Nev.)	941	State Invest. Co., Denver v. .. (Colo.)	395
Scholey, Winder v. (Ohio St.)	995	State Nat. Bank, American Ex- press Co. v. (Okla.)	188
Schultz v. State (Neb.)	403	Stephens v. Oklahoma City R. Co. (Okla.)	1007
Saton Mountain E. L. H. & P. Co. v. Idaho Springs Invest. Co. (Colo.)	1078	Stevens, Minot v. (Mass.)	236
Sidler v. Burns (Conn.)	291	Steward, People ex rel. Wayman v. (Ill.)	259
Siegel v. Long (Ala.)	1070	Stixrud, Re (Wash.)	632
Selligman, Com. ex rel. Rodman v. (Ky.)	592	v. State (Wash.)	632
Selsor, Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. (Ky.)	165	Sundberg, Lathrop v. (Wash.)	90
Selva v. Talbott (Ind.)	973	Supreme Lodge, K. of P. v. Fer- rell (Kan.)	777
Sharp, Knights of Modern Mac- cabees v. (Mich.)	780	T.
Shearn, Re (Utah)	347	Talbott, Selva v. (Ind.)	973
Shepard v. Germania F. Ins. Co. (Mich.)	156	Tate v. Goode (Ga.)	310
Sherman v. Burton (Mich.)	87	Tenneson, Clark v. (Wis.)	426
v. State (S. D.)	606	Thaler v. Wilhelm Greisser Constr. Co. (Pa.)	345
Smith v. Dotterweich (N. Y.)	892	Thompson, Parnell v. (Kan.)	658
Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. (C. C. A.)	439	Thornton v. Findley (Ark.)	491
v. Smith (Va.)	1018	Thurmond, Weaver Mercantile Co. v. (W. Va.)	1061
State v. (Mo.)	179	Title Guaranty & Surety Co. v. Bank of Fulton ... (Ark.)	676
State v. (Wis.)	463	Tucson Gas, E. L. & P. Co., Bourdreaux v. (Ariz.)	196
v. Ward (W. Va.)	1030	Turpin, People v. (Colo.)	766
Spokane & Eastern Trust Co. v. Huff (Wash.)	1023	Tutt v. Greenville (Ky.)	331
Stamford Street R. Co., Marri v. (Conn.)	1042	Twitchell v. Conley (Me.)	336
Star Chronicle Pub. Co., Diener v. (Mo.)	216	U.
State v. Abbott (S. C.)	112	Union C. L. Ins. Co., Clarey v. (Ky.)	881
v. Arkansas Brick & Mfg. Co. (Ark.)	376	Union Depot & R. Co. v. Lon- doner (Colo.)	433
v. Baker (W. Va.)	549	Union Labor Hospital Asso. v. Vance Redwood Lum- ber Co. (Cal.)	1034
v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (Minn.)	494	Union P. R. Co., Schenberger v. (Kan.)	391
Childs v. ... (Okla. Crim. App.)	563	Union Stock Yards Co., Fitz- gerald v. (Neb.)	983
v. Darwin (Wash.)	1026	United States, Burley v. ... (C. C. A.)	807
v. Eaid (Wash.)	946	Warren v. (C. C. A.)	809
Grimes v. (Miss.)	682	V.
Gross v. ... (Tex. Crim. Rep.)	477	Vance Redwood Lumber Co., Union Labor Hospital Asso. v. (Cal.)	1034
v. Gum (W. Va.)	150	Vaughan, McAuliffe v. (Ga.)	255
Hartgraves v. (Okla. Crim. App.)	568	Vicksburg, Vicksburg Water- works Co. v. (Miss.)	844
James v. ... (Okla. Crim. App.)	827
Maki v. (Wyo.)	465
v. Meyers (Or.)	143
Neely v. (Miss.)	138
v. Nichols (W. Va.)	419
Oakes v. (Miss.)	207
v. O'Neil (Iowa)	788

Vicksburg Waterworks Co. v. Vicksburg (Miss.)	844	Welch v. Blanchard (Mass.)	1
W.		Wilhelm Greissner Constr. Co., Thaler v. (Pa.)	345
Walbach, Lyell v. (Md.)	741	Williams, St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. (Ark.)	94
Wallace v. Diehl (N. Y.)	9	Willits v. Conklin (Neb.)	321
Ward, Smith v. (W. Va.)	1030	Winder v. Scholey (Ohio St.)	995
Warder, Augir v. (W. Va.)	69	Winona, Hoppe v. (Minn.)	449
Warmack, McRae v. (Ark.)	949	Winsor v. Commonwealth Coal Co. (Wash.)	63
Warren v. Connolly (Mich.)	314	Woods, St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. (Ark.)	855
v. United States (C. C. A.)	800	Worley v. Johnson (Fla.)	639
Washington Water Power Co., Britton v. (Wash.)	109	Y.
Wayman, People ex rel., v. Stew- ard (Ill.)	259	Yarbrough v. Pugh (Wash.)	351
Weaver Mercantile Co. v. Thur- mond (W. Va.)	1061	Yazoo & M. V. R. Co. v. Brown (Miss.)	804
Weisbaum, Harvey v. (Cal.)	540
33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

LAWYERS REPORTS

ANNOTATED

NEW SERIES.

MASSACHUSETTS SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

FRANCES C. WELCH et al.

v.

HAROLD BLANCHARD et al.

(— Mass. —, 94 N. E. 811.)

Will — devise to heirs after life estate —rule for determining.

Under a bequest in trust to pay the income to testator's children for life, and after the decease of the survivor of them, to distribute the fund to those persons "who may then take the same as my heirs," the persons to take are those who were his heirs at testator's death, and not those who would have been such had he lived until the time of the death of the surviving child; at least, where other clauses of the will creating similar estates indicate that he referred to his real, and not hypothetical, heirs.

(April 7, 1911.)

REPORT by the Supreme Judicial Court for Suffolk County for the determination of the Full Bench of a bill for instructions by the trustees under the will of John Dove, deceased, after a decision that, under the eighth clause of the will of testator, the latter's heirs were to be ascertained as of the date of his death. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Note. — Time for ascertaining member of class described as testator's "heirs," "next of kin," "relations," etc., to whom an estate in real or personal property is limited by way of remainder or executory gift.

I. Scope, 2.

II. General principles,

a. The rule of construction.

1. In general, 2.

2. Reasons supporting rule, 4.

3. Yields to contrary intention, 5.

b. Matters relating to applicability of rule.

1. In general, 6.

2. Membership of first taker in class, 7.

3. Imbecility of person for whose benefit particular estate created, who is member of class at testator's death, 12.

4. Nonexistence of subject-matter of gift at testator's death, 12.

5. Provision for accumulation, 12.

6. Contingency of gift, 13.

7. Gift to class by direction to distribute, 13.

8. Words of futurity, 13.

II. b—continued.

9. Use of word "then", 13.

10. Reference to statute of distributions, 15.

11. Terms importing plurality in membership of class, 17.

12. Limitation to those of class making claim or proving relationship, 17.

13. Limitation to heirs, etc., both of testator and of another, 17.

14. Exclusion of certain persons, 18.

15. Other phraseology, 18.

16. Provision against alienation of particular estate, 19.

17. Power of appointment,

18. Other similar limitations, 20.

19. Miscellaneous, 20.

III. Instances of application of rule. 20.

a. Preliminary statement, 21.

b. Where gift is immediate, 21.

c. Where gift is contingent on future event.

1. Remainders, 29.

2. Executory limitations, 37.

IV. Instances where application precluded by context of will or accompanying circumstances.

a. Preliminary statement, 39.

Mr. Henry Wheeler, for plaintiffs Lee et al.:

The fund should be distributed among those persons who would have been entitled to take the same as the testator's heirs had he died at the time of the death of the last surviving life tenant.

Boston Safe Deposit & T. Co. v. Blanchard, 196 Mass. 35, 81 N. E. 654; Boston Safe Deposit & T. Co. v. Parker, 197 Mass. 70, 83 N. E. 307; Hale v. Hobson, 167 Mass. 397, 45 N. E. 913; Proctor v. Clark, 154 Mass. 45, 12 L.R.A. 721, 27 N. E. 673; Brown v. Wright, 194 Mass. 540, 80 N. E. 612; Sears v. Russell, 8 Gray, 86; Knowlton v. Sanderson, 141 Mass. 323, 6 N. E. 228; White v. Stanfield, 146 Mass. 424, 15 N. E. 919; Fargo v. Miller, 150

Mass. 225, 5 L.R.A. 690, 22 N. E. 1003; Wood v. Bullard, 151 Mass. 324, 7 L.R.A. 304, 25 N. E. 67; Peck v. Carlton, 154 Mass. 231, 28 N. E. 166; Eager v. Whitney, 163 Mass. 463, 40 N. E. 1046; Welch v. Brimmer, 169 Mass. 204, 47 N. E. 699; Heard v. Read, 169 Mass. 216, 47 N. E. 778; Leonard v. Haworth, 171 Mass. 496, 51 N. E. 7; Delaney v. McCormick, 25 Hun, 574, s. c. 88 N. Y. 174; Bisson v. West Shore R. Co. 66 Hun, 604, 22 N. Y. Supp. 31, s. c. 143 N. Y. 125, 38 N. E. 104; Pinkham v. Blair, 57 N. H. 226; Hardy v. Gage, 66 N. H. 552, 22 Atl. 557; De Wolf v. Middleton, 18 R. I. 810, 31 L.R.A. 146, 26 Atl. 44, 31 Atl. 271; Wood v. Schoen, 216 Pa. 425, 66 Atl. 79.

IV.—continued.

b. Where gift is immediate, 39.

c. Where gift is contingent on future event.

1. Remainders, 42.

2. Executory limitations, 49.

V. Exclusion of first taker from participation, 50.

VI. Instances in which members of class are ascertained at testator's death, but take only in event of surviving distribution, 53.

I. Scope.

In further elucidation of the scope of this note as outlined by its title, it may be stated that it includes cases where a testamentary gift the enjoyment of which is postponed to some period subsequent to the death of the testator, as at the death of a life tenant, the termination of a trust, or the happening of a contingency, is limited to a class described as the testator's "heirs," "right heirs," "heirs according to law," "lawful heirs," "such persons as would take an estate in fee simple in lands by descent from him," "such persons as would be legally entitled to succeed to and inherit the same in case I died intestate," "next of kin," "nearest of kin," "next of kin in due course of administration," "nearest relations," "such person or persons who shall appear to be related to me," "nearest relatives," "blood relations of the degree which the law permits," "my personal representative or representatives," "legal representatives," etc.

Cases in which the word "heirs" is used to designate certain individuals, such as testator's children, and in which the question is whether the interest taken is subject to be divested by death before the period of enjoyment, are obviously not in point, since in such cases there can be no question that the class is to be ascertained at the time of testator's death.

Nor does this note include cases in which the limitation over is to a class described as "heirs" or "next of kin" of some individual other than the testator himself, as such cases, though analogous, are governed by distinct considerations.

33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Although the primary inquiry to which the note is addressed is as to the time as to which the membership of the class is to be ascertained, attention has also been given to the question as to when the first taker may be excluded from participation in a gift to a class of which he is a member, and to the cases in which the membership of the class has been held subject to diminution by death prior to the time of actual enjoyment.

II. General principles.

a. The rule of construction.

1. In general.

It is a general rule of testamentary construction, so universally recognized as to render superfluous a full citation of the cases which support it, that, in the absence of clear and unambiguous indications of a different intention to be derived from the context of the will, read in the light of the surrounding circumstances, the class described as testator's heirs, or next of kin, or relations, or such persons as would take his estate by the rules of law if he had died intestate, to whom a remainder or executory interest is given by the will, is to be ascertained at the death of the testator.

This is not only a rule of construction, but the natural meaning of the words. Re Winn [1910] 1 Ch. 278, 79 L. J. Ch. N. S. 165, 101 L. T. N. S. 737; Whall v. Converse, 146 Mass. 345, 15 N. E. 660; Tuttle v. Woolworth, 62 N. J. Eq. 532, 50 Atl. 445.

It may, however, be useful to notice some of the decisions in which the rule is comprehensively stated or particularly discussed.

Thus, in the leading case of Bullock v. Downes, 9 H. L. Cas. 1, Lord Campbell said: "Generally speaking, where there is a bequest to one for life, and after his decease to the testator's next of kin, the next of kin who are to take are the persons who answer that description at the death of the testator, and not those who answer that description at the death of the first taker. Gifts to a class, following a bequest of the same property for life, vest

Mr. J. L. Thorndike, for defendants J. A. Blanchard et al.:

The word "heirs" referred to those who were such at the time of the testator's death.

Dove v. Torr, 128 Mass. 38; Bullock v. Downes, 9 H. L. Cas. 1; Mortimer v. Slater, L. R. 7 Ch. Div. 323, 47 L. J. Ch. N. S. 134, 37 L. T. N. S. 520, 26 Week. Rep. 134, L. R. 4 App. Cas. 448, 48 L. J. Ch. N. S. 470, 27 Week. Rep. 575; Re Wilson, [1907] 1 Ch. 450, 76 L. J. Ch. N. S. 228, 96 L. T. N. S. 392, [1907] 2 Ch. 574; Holmes v. Holmes, 194 Mass. 558, 80 N. E. 614; Minot v. Harris, 132 Mass. 528; Jewett v. Jewett, 200 Mass. 310, 86 N. E. 308; McArthur v. Scott, 113 U. S. 380, 28 L. ed. 1027, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 652; Abbott v. Bradstreet, 3 Allen, 587; Whall v. Converse, 146 Mass. 345, 15 N. E. 660; Rotch v. Rotch, 173 Mass. 125, 53 N. E. 268.

Loring, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

By the eighth article of his will, John Dove gave one sixth of the residue of his estate to his son outright, and five sixths thereof to trustees to pay the income thereof to all his daughters, in equal shares, and to the issue of any deceased daughter (such issue taking their mother's share), and "after the decease of the survivor of my daughters the trust fund created by this item shall be distributed to those persons who may then take the same as my heirs." John Dove died in 1876, and the last sur-mediately upon the death of the testator. Nor does it make any difference that the person to whom such previous life interest was given is also a member of the class to take on his death."

And in Lee v. Lee, 1 Drew. & S. 85, it is said: "It is a general rule that a bequest in trust for A for life, and from and after his death in trust for other persons nominatim, is an immediate bequest to the persons in whose favor the ulterior gift is made, subject to the life interest given to A; and those persons take immediate vested interests, transmissible to their representatives, although they may die before A. And the same general rule prevails in the case of a bequest in trust for A for life, and from and after his death in trust for a class of persons, as, for example, the testator's next of kin; this is an immediate gift to the persons answering the description of the testator's next of kin at his death, subject to the life interest given to A. The gift of the previous life interest to A does not postpone the period at which the persons answering the description next of kin are to be ascertained. The persons answering the description of next of kin at the death of the testator take an immediate vested interest, subject only to the life interest of A. And whether the testator, in giving the fund to the next of kin, uses the language 'from and after the death of A,' or 'subject to the life interest of A,' the result is the same."

In Michell v. Bridges, 13 Week. Rep. 200, 11 L. T. N. S. 727, it is said that the general rule is clear and undisputed that if a testator, after giving an estate for life in personal estate, and whether there is or is not a limitation to the children of any person which may fail if he die, after these limitations directs that the personal estate shall be distributed amongst his next of kin, according to the statute, the persons to take are the testator's next of kin under the statute at the time of his death, unless a clear and unambiguous intention to the contrary can be collected from the will.

Other English cases which particularly state the rule are Doe ex dem. Pilkington 33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

v. Spratt, 5 Barn. & Ad. 731, 2 Nev. & M. 524, 3 L. J. K. B. N. S. 53; Murphy v. Donegan, 3 Jones & L. 534; Say v. Creed, 5 Hare, 580, 16 L. J. Ch. N. S. 361, 11 Jur. 603.

In Kellett v. Shepard, 139 Ill. 442, 28 N. E. 751, it is said: "Ordinarily, the words 'heirs,' or 'heirs at law,' are used to designate those persons who answer this description at the death of the testator. The word 'heir,' in its strict and technical import, applies to the person or persons appointed by law to succeed to the estate in case of intestacy. 2 Bl. Com. 201; Rawson v. Rawson, 52 Ill. 62. Hence, where the word occurs in a will, it will be held to apply to those who are heirs of the testator at his death, unless the intention of the testator to refer to those who shall be his heirs at a period subsequent to his death is plainly manifested in the will. This construction or definition is not changed by the fact that a life estate may precede the bequest to the heirs at law, nor by the circumstance, that the bequest to the heirs is contingent on an event that may or may not happen."

A testamentary gift to testator's heirs will be construed as a gift to those who are his heirs at the time of his death, in the absence of words indicating a clear intention that it shall go to those who may be in that relation at the time of the happening of the contingency upon which the estate is to be distributed. Merrill v. Wooster, 99 Me. 460, 59 Atl. 596.

The rule is the same when the devise or bequest is to the next of kin of the testator as when it is to his heirs. Fargo v. Miller, 150 Mass. 225, 5 L.R.A. 690, 22 N. E. 1003.

When a bequest is made to one or more for life and remainder to the testator's heirs, or next of kin, or relations, or such persons as would take his estate by the rules of law if he had died intestate, the bequest is to those who are such heirs or next of kin at the time of his decease, unless there are words indicating a clear intention that it shall go to those who may be his relations or next of kin at the time viving daughter died in 1910. The question we have to decide is whether, by the true construction of these words, this fund is to be distributed to and among those persons who are entitled thereto in 1910 as the heirs of John Dove who died in 1876 (including persons who have succeeded to the rights of his heirs as next of kin or by bequest or assignment), on the one hand, or, on the other hand, to and among those persons who would have been the heirs of John Dove if he had died in 1910 in place of 1876.

A man's heirs are not ascertained until he dies, and, using words with accuracy, a man's heirs cannot be ascertained at any other time or as of any other time. But a testator may make a gift to persons who would have been his heirs had he died at some time other than the time when he did die. See, for example, Peck v. Carlton, 154 Mass. 231, 28 N. E. 166. This is not (using words with accuracy) a gift to heirs, but to a body of artificial or hypothetical heirs (see Re Wilson [1907] 2 Ch. 572, 575); i. e., to persons who would have been his heirs had he died under circumstances different from those under which he did die.

The rule of construction in cases like that now before us was settled as early as Abbott v. Bradstreet, 3 Allen, 587, and it is this: "A bequest or devise to 'heirs' or 'heirs at law' of a testator will be construed as referring to those who are such at the time of the testator's decease, unless of the happening of the contingency upon which the estate is to be distributed. Childs v. Russell, 11 Met. 16; Brown v. Lawrence, 3 Cush. 390.

In Jones v. Oliver, 38 N. C. (3 Ired. Eq.) 369, it is said that when a devise or bequest is simply to a testator's next of kin, it unquestionably vests in those who sustain the character at his death; and it is equally clear that when a testator devises or bequeaths for life or for any other limited interest, and afterwards to his own next of kin, those who stand in that relation at the death of the testator will be entitled, without regard to the fact of their existence at the period of distribution. To take a case out of the general rule there must be some special circumstances tending to show that the testator did not intend that the next of kin who were to take should be looked for at his death, but at some other period.

And in Buzby's Appeal, 61 Pa. 111, it is said that it is well settled as a general rule of construction that a devise or bequest to heirs or heirs at law of a testator, or to his next of kin, will be construed as referring to those who are such at the time of testator's decease, unless a different intent is plainly manifested by the will. Other Pennsylvania decisions to the same effect are Stewart's Estate, 147 Pa. 383, 23 Atl. 599; and Wood v. Schoen, 216 Pa. 425, 66 Atl. 79.

B. Reasons supporting rule.

One of the reasons adduced in support of this rule of construction is that it gives the words of description their natural and prima facie meaning.

Thus, in Tuttle v. Woolworth, 62 N. J. Eq. 532, 50 Atl. 445, it is said: "The words 'heirs or next of kin' are technical legal words, and in their legal sense bear within themselves an indication as to the time intended for fixing the class, which cannot be overlooked. The legal relation or status of 'heir' or 'next of kin' arises only upon the death of the ancestor, and it arises immediately. In a legal sense, 33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

therefore, 'heirs' implies a reference to the time of the ancestor's death; and if a testator makes a devise or gift to his 'heirs' or 'next of kin,' those standing in that relation at the time of his death would seem to be the persons intended, unless there is something in the will itself to show that the testator had another period in his mind, and that the legal sense of the words is to be restricted by indications that some other time is fixed."

And in Whall v. Converse, 146 Mass. 345, 15 N. E. 660, it is said that the reasons for the rule that persons to take under an ultimate limitation to testator's heirs at law are those who answer the description at the time of testator's death, are that the words cannot be used properly to designate anybody else, that such a mode of ascertaining the beneficiary implies that the testator has exhausted his specific wishes upon the previous limitations, and is content thereafter to let the law take its course; and perhaps that the law leans toward a construction which vests the interest at the earliest moment.

See also Re Winn [1910] 1 Ch. 278, 79 L. J. Ch. N. S. 165, 101 L. T. N. S. 737.

A reason more frequently brought forward is the preference of the law to construe a remainder as vested rather than as contingent.

Thus, in Wood v. Bullard, 151 Mass. 324, 7 L.R.A. 304, 25 N. E. 67, it is said: "Where there is a limitation over to a class designated as the testator's heirs at law, or his next of kin, it is usual to hold that this class should be ascertained at the time of the testator's death, unless there is something to be found in the will showing a contrary intention; and this for two principal reasons; namely, that the law leans rather to vested remainders, and that ordinarily in such cases it appears that, after making the special and earlier provisions for the disposition of his property, the testator does not care to follow the property further, but is content to let the law take its course, and the final devise to his heirs at law means that at that stage he will let it go as intestate property."

a different intent is plainly manifested by the will." See page 589. This rule has since been adhered to. The last case is Jewett v. Jewett, 200 Mass. 310, 86 N. E. 308. It was said in Whall v. Converse, 146 Mass. 345, 348, 15 N. E. 660, 662, that "the reasons for this rule are that the words [heirs of the testator] cannot be used properly to designate anybody else" than those who take his real estate at his death); that the testator wishes the law to take its course; and perhaps that the law leans toward a construction which vests the interest at the earliest moment.

We do not spend time on a discussion of what the construction of these words in the eighth article of this will would have been if they had stood alone. For they do not stand alone, and the general scheme of the will shows that the intention of the testator was that on the death of the last surviving daughter this fund should be distributed to and among those entitled to it then as the real heirs of the testator, including those who had succeeded to the rights of his heirs as next of kin or by bequest or assignment.

The testator was a widower with one son and five daughters, possessed of a very considerable property, about $90,000 of which was in real estate, including his homestead. It does not directly appear that he had any land, in addition to the homestead, except that within the fence around his son's house which he devised to his son.

He first gave legacies amounting to $3,000

The question "is to be decided in the light of the rule that the law favors vesting very strongly, and will not regard a remainder as contingent, in the absence of very decisive terms of contingency, unless the provisions or implications of the will clearly require it, and that words expressive of future time are to be preferred to the vesting in possession if they reasonably can be, rather than to the vesting in right." Kenyon's Petition, 17 R. I. 149, 20 Atl. 294.

Since the law favors the vesting of estates, and it is an established rule of construction not to read a limitation in a will as being a contingent remainder unless such clearly appears to have been the testator's intention, it follows that where land is given to one for life, or any other estate upon which a remainder may be limited, and after the determination of that estate to a person sustaining a given character, as heir at law, heir male, or next of kin, of testator, the remainder will vest in the person or persons who fill that character at the death of the testator, unless it can be plainly and distinctly made out from the will that the testator intended otherwise. Doe ex dem. Pilkington v. Spratt, 5 Barn. & Ad. 731, 2 Nev. & M. 524, 3 L. J. K. B. N. S. 53.

And see also, to the same effect as the preceding cases. Abbott v. Bradstreet, 3 Allen, 587; Dove v. Torr, 128 Mass. 38; Minot v. Harris, 132 Mass. 528; Whall v. Converse, 146 Mass. 345, 15 N. E. 660; Jewett v. Jewett, 200 Mass. 310, 86 N. E. 308; Boston Safe Deposit & T. Co. v. Parker, 197 Mass. 70, 83 N. E. 307; Wood v. Schoen, 216 Pa. 425, 66 Atl. 79.

But in Heard v. Read, 169 Mass. 216, 47 N. E. 778, it is said that since contingent remainders in property are now protected to a considerable degree by modern legislation, the tendency of the modern cases is to put the reason of the rule, not on any fondness which the law has for vested over contingent interests, but upon the fact that heirs at law, by the very meaning of the words, are usually those persons who take inheritable real property immediately on the death of the owner if he dies intestate.

A third reason assigned is the bias of the courts in favor of the heir or next of kin, as against third persons.

Thus, in Stewart's Estate, 147 Pa. 383, 23 Atl. 599, it is said that as, in construing a will under which title is asserted by a stranger or person not claiming by immediate descent, all doubts will be resolved in favor of the heir or next of kin, hence, where a testator directs that, in a certain event, after the expiration of a particular interest, the estate shall go to his heirs or next of kin, or to the persons who would take under the intestate laws, he is to be understood as meaning the persons who would have so taken at the time of his death, and not at the time appointed for their taking, unless the will affords clear and unequivocal evidence to the contrary.

3. Yields to contrary intention.

The rule above stated, as is said in Heard v. Read, 169 Mass. 216, 47 N. E. 778, "is not a rule of substantive law, but a rule of interpretation, which has been adopted by the courts as one means of ascertaining the intention of the testator as expressed in his will; and it never should be used to defeat what, from the whole will, appears with reasonable certainty to have been his intention."

It is a rule of mere construction, which the court cannot apply if the context excludes it. Valentine v. Fitzsimons [1894] 1 I. R. 93.

"The rules of construction that the word 'heirs' in a will is usually construed to mean those who are such at the time of the testator's decease, and that estates created by devise are to be held to be vested rather than contingent, must give way to the controlling rule of interpretation that the intent of the testator is to govern if it does not conflict with the rules of law.

. . . And if it be found to conflict, it does not change the rule of construction. The will must fail of effect so far as it violates the rules of law, not because the intent of the testator does not control its con-to several persons who may be assumed to have been servants, a bequest of $10,000 for a library, and to his two unmarried daughters bequests equal in amount to the sums given by him on their marriage to his other daughters. These sums amounted to some $28,000. Then, by the fourth article of the will, he gave to trustees $2,000 to pay the income thereof to one Mary McLagan during her life, $5,000 to pay the income thereof to one Coulie during his life, and $50,000 to pay the income thereof to his unmarried daughters and the survivor of them so long as they or she remained unmarried and occupied the homestead, "for the purpose of enabling them to keep said homestead in good order and condition." This (the fourth article) ends with these words:

struction, but because the law will not permit his intent to be accomplished." Sears v. Russell, 8 Gray, 86.

"The truth is," says Vice Chancellor Stuart, in Re Barber, 1 Smale & G. 118, "that in all this class of cases the question must be determined upon the particular passage, taken in connection with the context."

"Upon the question whether the customary meaning of these words when used in a will is to be regarded as modified by the other provisions of the will, not only particular clauses, but the whole scope of the will must be considered." Heard v. Read, 169 Mass. 216, 47 N. E. 778.

The expression of a contrary intention which will preclude the application of the rule must be clear and unambiguous (Cusack v. Rood, 24 Week. Rep. 391); and is not sufficient that there is in the will that which raises a doubt, ever so serious, as to whether the testator intended that the next of kin should be ascertained at some future time. (Michell v. Bridges, 13 Week. Rep. 200, 11 L. T. N. S. 727; Wharton v. Barker, 4 Kay & J. 483, 4 Jur. N. S. 553, 6 Week. Rep. 534).

As remarked in Wood v. Bullard, 151 Mass. 324, 7 L.R.A. 304, 25 N. E. 67, the reasoning of the cases is often very refined and subtle, and involves a consideration of minute differences of language; and the final determination of each case must, after all, depend upon the intention to be gathered from all of the language used by the particular testator whose will is before the court.

b. Matters relating to applicability of rule.

1. In general.

In such a situation, it is obviously impossible to indulge in generalizations as to when the rule may or may not be applicable. There are, however, certain points of discussion the frequency of the recurrence of which renders proper their separate consideration, which immediately follows.

33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

"The principal sums or funds shall, as the trusts cease, be distributed to my heirs." By the fifth article he gave to his son the land within the fence of his homestead, and by the sixth article he devised to his unmarried daughters the residue of his real estate for their lives and the life of the survivor so long as they or she should continue unmarried. He then provided that "after the marriage or death of my surviving daughter taking under this item, the estate herein devised shall descend to those persons who may then be entitled to take the same as my heirs." By the seventh article he gave the personal property pertaining to the homestead to his daughters, to be held by them upon the same terms as the real estate covered by the sixth article,

It is no argument to say that the testator has done what the law would have done for him. Re Lang, 9 Week. Rep. 589, 4 L. T. N. S. 577.

Or that the application of the rule may lead to peculiarities and inconsistencies which, if pointed out to the testator, would have been avoided, will not prevent its being applied. Starr v. Newberry, 23 Beav. 436.

Or that the effect of the construction is to take property out of the testator's family and give it to a stranger to his blood. Bird v. Luckie, 8 Hare, 301, 14 Jur. 1015.

The rule is equally applicable whether the limitation over is regarded as an executory devise or a contingent remainder. Buzby's Appeal, 61 Pa. 111.

It is immaterial whether the subject of the gift be realty or personalty (Kellett v. Shepard, 139 Ill. 443, 28 N. E. 751, 34 N. E. 254); nor is the rule affected by the circumstance that the gift includes the proceeds of the sale of realty as well as of personalty. (Cusack v. Rood, 24 Week. Rep. 391).

Or by the fact that the testator has made ample provision for those who were his heirs at the time of his death. Boston Safe Deposit & T. Co. v. Parker, 197 Mass. 70, 80 N. E. 307.

The words "legal personal representatives" are more flexible than the words "next of kin," and as "legal personal representatives," in the strict signification of the term, do not take, the prima facie meaning will the more readily yield to indications of a contrary intention to be found in the context of the will. Holloway v. Radcliffe, 23 Beav. 163, 26 L. J. Ch. N. S. 401, 3 Jur. N. S. 198, 5 Week. Rep. 271.

See also, as illustrating the greater flexibility of the phrase "my relations," the case of Lees v. Massey, 3 DeG. F. & J. 113, 7 Jur. N. S. 534, 4 L. T. N. S. 36, 9 Week. Rep. 425, where it was held that the limitation over to a class thus designated, who were to take share and share alike, was inconsistent with an intention that the

and by the eighth article (the article here in question) he bequeathed to his son (in the event which happened) one-sixth of the residue of his personal estate, and to trustees the other five-sixths thereof in trust (as we have said) to pay the income thereof to all his daughters in equal shares and to the issue of any deceased daughter (such issue taking their mother's share), and after the decease of the survivor of my daughters, the trust fund created by this item shall be distributed to those persons who may then take the same as my heirs."

Apart from the provisions for servants, for the library, and his son, the scheme of the will was to create life estates in five different funds and as the life estate or the last life estate in each fund came to an end, the principal of that fund was to pass to or be distributed among his heirs. These several life estates of necessity would terminate at three different times, and might terminate at four or possibly five different times; consequently the five different funds would pass under the gifts over at three, four, or possibly five different dates. It is hardly conceivable that the testator should have intended that these several gifts over to heirs should be to three, four, or possibly five sets of different hypothetical heirs. On the contrary, it is plain that all that the testator wished to do was to provide for certain persons by creating life estates in the five different funds, and having done that, to let the law take its course in each instance.

class should be ascertained at testator's death, where he must have known that his daughter, who was given the property absolutely in the event of her surviving the termination of the particular estate, would be his sole heir and sole next of kin at that time.

2. Membership of first taker in class.

The courts, both in England and the United States, agree in holding that the circumstance that the first taker will be one of the class to whom the limitation over is made is not so incongruous as to preclude the ascertainment of the membership of the class as of the time of testator's death, whether the first taker is given an estate for life, as in Doe ex dem. Garner v. Lawson, 3 East, 278; Wharton v. Barker, 4 Kay & J. 483, 4 Jur. N. S. 553, 6 Week. Rep. 534; Bullock v. Downes, 9 H. L. Cas. 1; Kellett v. Shepard, 139 Ill. 443, 28 N. E. 751, 34 N. E. 254; Minot v. Tappan, 122 Mass. 535; Keniston v. Mayhew, 169 Mass. 166, 47 N. E. 612; Leonard v. Haworth, 171 Mass. 496, 51 N. E. 7, and other cases subsequently cited; or an absolute interest, subject to be defeated by condition subsequent, as in Southgate v. Clinch, 27 L. J. Ch. N. S. 651, 4 Jur. N. S. 428, 6 Week. Rep. 489; or a defeasible fee, as in Brabant v. Lalonde, 26 Ont. Rep. 379.

Thus in Holloway v. Holloway, 5 Ves. Jr. 399, 25 Eng. Rul. Cas. 687, it is said that the circumstance that the first taker is an heir at law of testator at the time of his death is not alone sufficient to control the legal meaning of a limitation over to his heirs, the court saying: "If an estate for life was devised to one, and after his death to the right heirs of the testator, it never would be held that though the tenant for life was one of the heirs, that would reduce him to an estate for life, but he would take a fee."

Little weight can be given to the argument that a testator, having given particular interests to those who were his next of kin at the time of his death, could not have intended them to take under the limitation to next of kin in default of issue, as at the time when a will is made it is necessarily uncertain who will be the testator's next of kin at the time of his death, and in view of the various contingencies which may operate to change the membership of the class between the making of the will and the testator's death, it is quite probable that the testator in such case means only to provide for those whom he does mean to benefit in the way he thinks best, and then to add, that if events defeat that particular intention, the law may take its course. Seifferth v. Badham, 9 Beav. 370, 15 L. J. Ch. N. S. 345, 10 Jur. 892.

It is no decisive or valid objection to the construction which vests a bequest of a remainder interest to testator's heirs or next of kin in those who are such heirs or next of kin at the time of his decease, that some of the persons thus designated to take in remainder are the same persons to whom an interest for life is thus given, so that the personal representative of such deceased tenant for life may take a share in the remainder under a residuary clause; though this circumstance, in connection with other words or special circumstances, may be resorted to to show that such was not the intention of the testator. Childs v. Russell, 11 Met. 16; Abbott v. Bradstreet, 3 Allen, 587; Minot v. Tappan, 122 Mass. 535.

In Tuttle v. Woolworth, 62 N. J. Eq. 532, 50 Atl. 445, it is said: "The objection from incongruity supposed to arise against holding that the previous tenant is entitled to any interest in an estate as next of kin after the estate specially given to him by the will has terminated is, as it seems to me, met and answered by the consideration that when the testator limits an estate to one of his next of kin and his children or issue, and then directs that, on failure of this limitation, his heirs or next of kin shall take according to law, he discloses clearly that if the special and immediate limitation fail, as it may, then he had no intentions or wishes to change the disposition which the law itself would Again, it is hard to believe that the testator intended the gift over made by the eighth article to be a gift to artificial or hypothetical heirs, while the gifts over made in the fourth and sixth articles were to his real heirs. It was decided in Dove v. Torr, 128 Mass. 38, that the gift over in the sixth article was a gift to the testator's real heirs. And it is plain that the gift over made in the fourth article is the same; i. e., to his real heirs. That gift plainly comes within the rule established in Abbott v. Bradstreet, supra, and since acted upon, the last case being Jewett v. Jewett, supra. The fact that a gift over is made only by a direction to distribute does not prevent the application of the usual rule. The gift over in the following cases was only by way of a direction to pay or distribute: Minot v. Tappan, 122 Mass. 535; Dove v. Torr, 128 Mass. 38; Whall v. Converse, 146 Mass. 345, 15 N. E. 660; Rotch v. Rotch, 173 Mass. 125, 53 N. E. 268; Jewett v. Jewett, 200 Mass. 310, 86 N. E. 308. See also 2 Wms. Exrs. 9th ed. 1108; 1 Wms. Exrs. 10th ed. 990, 991; 2 Jarman, Wills, 8th ed. 1104.

It has been urged with great insistence by the learned counsel for the appellant that it could not have been the testator's intention that when the time for distribution came anyone should take who was not a blood relation or a statutory heir, and that, under the construction adopted by the single justice, the assignees of an heir would and in this case do take. But it is evident that it was no part of the intention of the testator in making this will to guard his heirs against their own improvidence. He did not provide, as he might have done, that what they took under his will should not be alienated by them or taken by their creditors. He was content to create certain life estates and then to let the law take its course, which included the right of his children to assign or bequeath their respective shares of his property, subject to the several life estates created by him.

We are therefore of opinion that by the true construction of the eighth article of the will here in question, the principal of the trust fund there created should be distributed to and among those persons now entitled to it as the heirs of the testator, including persons who have succeeded to the rights of his heirs as next of kin or by bequest or assignment.

Decree accordingly.

have made for him in regard to this part of his estate, and that, on the failure of the special purpose, he desires that he should be considered as making no provisions of his own about the disposition of his estate, but as expressly leaving that disposition to be made by the laws as if he had died intestate."

The fact that the person to whom the prior estate is given, though his death is to precede the ultimate limitation, is himself an heir, does not change the result, or show such unequivocal intention that he was not also to take as heir upon the happening of the contingency. Stewart's Estate, 147 Pa. 383, 23 Atl. 599.

And see also in this connection, Cushman v. Arnold, 185 Mass. 165, 70 N. E. 43, where the residuary estate was directed to be divided among the legatees named in the will in proportion to the amount of their several legacies, and it was held that the fact that one of such legatees had been given an estate for life did not take the case out of the ordinary rule that a remainder after a life estate must be held to have vested at the death of testator; also Smith v. Smith, 186 Mass. 138, 71 N. E. 314, where a remainder was limited over to the brothers and sisters of the testator, and it was held that the fact that the construction which adopts the death of the testator as the period for ascertaining the members of the class brings the life tenant within the class among which the remainder is to be divided does not show a contrary meaning.

It was at one time made a question in 33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

the English courts whether, where the person taking the particular estate was at testator's death the sole member of the class to whom the limitation over was made, an intention was not ipso facto shown that the gift should vest in the person answering the description at the termination of the particular estate. Among the cases which appear to recognize this contention are Marsh v. Marsh, 1 Bro. Ch. 293; Jones v. Colbeck, 8 Ves. Jr. 38, 6 Revised Rep. 207; Miller v. Eaton, G. Cooper, 272, 14 Revised Rep. 259; Briden v. Hewlett, 2 Myl. & K. 90, 1 L. J. Ch. N. S. 114; and Butler v. Bushnell, 3 Myl. & K. 232, 3 L. J. Ch. N. S. 139,—in all of which, however, with the exception of Miller v. Eaton, there were other indications which were relied upon as supporting the construction adopted. In 2 Jarman on Wills, *987, in commenting upon decisions of this type, it is said: "But the effect given to those additional grounds of argument is scarcely to be reconciled with the principle which may be considered to be now established, that, as infinite variations may take place in the expectant next of kin, either by deaths or births, or both, in the interval between the making of the will and the death of the testator, it is not to be assumed, in the absence of a clear context, that the testator lost sight of the probability of such variation; and without that assumption, the testator's supposed intention in favor of or against particular persons as his next of kin can possess little or no weight. The argument drawn from the inapplicability of the description used to the person even-

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS.

MARGARETTA WETHERILL WALLACE
et al., Exrs., etc., of Margaretta M. Diehl, Deceased, Appts.,

v.

CHARLES W. DIEHL et al., Respts., and
SUSAN D. EDSON, Appt.

(— N. Y. —, 95 N. E. 646.)

Will — life estates — appointment of remainder among heirs — time of ascertainment.

1. A devise of a life estate, with power to bequeath the property upon death of the life tenant to such of testator's heirs as the life tenant may prefer, confines the selection to testator's legal or actual heirs, so that the property may not be given to a descendant of testator, whose parent is living, but the heirs among whom the appointment may be made will be determined as of the time of the death of the life tenant.

Same — conditional bequest — lapse.

2. A provision in a will giving money to a testator's granddaughter "if she survives me" is not relieved of the condition by a succeeding clause, "I hereby give and bequeath such sum to her," and therefore usually answering to it thus falls to the ground; since the testator may have chosen to give to that person by a description which, if he died in his lifetime, would carry his bounty to other objects. Again, words which are expressive of futurity without pointing to any definite period are satisfied when referred to the time of the testator's death; and, being themselves ambiguous, ought not to be allowed to control the known legal meaning of such words as 'next of kin.' At the present day it is not probable that such decisions would be made as those in Briden v. Hewlett and Butler v. Bushnell."

Indications of a disposition to follow the earlier English cases in holding that the fact that a person taking a particular estate was, at the time of making the will and at testator's death, the sole member of a class to which the limitation over was made, sufficiently indicates an intention that the gift over should not vest until the termination of the particular estate, are manifest in the cases of Johnson v. Askey, 190 Ill. 58, 60 N. E. 76; and Bond v. Moore, 236 Ill. 576, 19 L.R.A. (N.S.) 540, 86 N. E. 386, as well as in the Massachusetts cases which follow.

In Welch v. Brimmer, 169 Mass. 204, 47 N. E. 699, it is said: "When a life estate is given to one, and the remainder on his death to the heirs at law of the testator, and the life tenant is one of these heirs, this fact alone has been held not sufficient to take the case out of the general rule that the heirs at law of the testator are to be determined as of the time of his the bequest will lapse in case of her death before that of testator.

(Collin and Gray, JJ., dissent in part.)

(May 9, 1911.)

APPEAL by plaintiffs and defendant Susan D. Edson from an order of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, Second Department, affirming certain parts of an interlocutory judgment of a Special Term for Richmond County, in an action brought to construe the will of Margaretta M. Diehl, deceased, and for an accounting. Modified and affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. W. B. Chamberlin and G. F. Chamberlin, for appellants Wallace et al.:

The word "heirs" was used in the sense of "issue" or "descendants."

Re Cramer, 59 App. Div. 553, 69 N. Y. Supp. 299; Johnson v. Brasington, 156 N. Y. 181, 50 N. E. 859; New York L. Ins. & T. Co. v. Viele, 161 N. Y. 11, 76 Am. St. Rep. 238, 55 N. E. 311; Lawton v. Corlies, 127 N. Y. 108, 27 N. E. 847; Bundy v. Bundy, 38 N. Y. 419.

The legacy bequeathed to testator's

death, unless it plainly appears from other provisions of the will that the testator's intention was that they should be determined as of some other time. But when the person to whom the property is given for life is sole heir presumptive of the testator at the time when the will is made, and will continue to be such if he lives until the death of the testator, unless there are some changes in the testator's family relations or in the laws, which the will apparently does not contemplate, whether that person will take a remainder given on the death of the life tenant to the heirs at law of the testator, if there is nothing else in the will to determine as of what time the heirs of the testator are to be ascertained, has occasioned a good deal of doubt. The present tendency of the law in England seems to be that this fact alone would be held not enough to take the case out of the general rule. In this commonwealth the intimations are perhaps doubtfully the other way."

But in Heard v. Read, 169 Mass. 216, 47 N. E. 778, it is said: "It has been intimated by this court, but with some doubt, that where property is given by will to a person for life, and on his death without issue surviving him, to the testator's heirs at law, and it is known to the testator at the time when the will is made that that person is his sole heir presumptive, and probably will be his sole heir when he dies, if such person survive him, it is to be inferred that that person is not intended by the designation of the testator's heirs at law. But in the cases actually decided in granddaughter lapses and falls into the residuary estate.

Pimel v. Betjemann, 183 N. Y. 194, 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 580, 76 N. E. 157, 5 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 239; Lytle v. Beveridge, 58 N. Y. 598; Phillips v. Davies, 92 N. Y. 204.

The statute of wills does not operate to prevent a lapse.

Pimel v. Betjemann, 183 N. Y. 194, 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 580, 76 N. E. 157, 5 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 239; Howland v. Slade, 155 Mass. 415, 29 N. E. 631; Wildberger v. Cheek, 94 Va. 517, 27 S. E. 441.

Mr. John Ewen, for appellant Edson:

The word "heirs," when used in a will or other instrument, is to be understood in its primary or legal sense, unless it appears from other parts of the instrument that it was used in the more restricted sense of "children," "heirs of the body," or "descendants."

Johnson v. Brasington, 156 N. Y. 181, 50 N. E. 859; Cushman v. Horton, 59 N. Y. 149; Bodife v. Brown, 12 App. Div. 335, 42 N. Y. Supp. 202; affirmed in 154 N. Y. 778, 49 N. E. 1093; Re Russell, 168 N. Y. 169, 61 N. E. 166; Newcomb v. Lush, 84 Hun, 254, affirmed in 155 N. Y. 687, 50 N. E. 1120.

The bequest to the testatrix's granddaughter lapsed upon her death by the express terms of the will and codicils, and did not vest in her daughter.

Pimel v. Betjemann, 183 N. Y. 194, 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 580, 76 N. E. 157, 5 A. & E.

this commonwealth there were other provisions in the will which supported this construction. The cases generally on this subject have been often considered by this court. The present tendency in this country is against absolute rules of construction, and in favor of a careful consideration of the particular language of each will, as well as of its general scope and purpose, in order to determine, in view of the circumstances known to the testator when the will was made, his intention, as expressed to it."

The decided weight of authority may be said to be to the effect that the fact that, at the time of the making of the will, the person to whom a particular estate is given will presumably be at testator's death the sole member of the class to whom the same property is limited is not of itself sufficient to overcome the prima facie meaning of the words of limitation. See, in addition to the other cases which follow, Urquhart v. Urquhart, 13 Sim. 613; Jenkins v. Gower, 2 Colly. Ch. Cas. 537, 10 Jur. 702; Murphy v. Donegan, 3 Jones & L. 534; Bird v. Luckie, 8 Hare, 301, 14 Jur. 1015; Re Barber, 1 Smale & G. 118; Gorbell v. Davison, 8 Jur. 161, 18 Beav. 556; Lee v. Lee, 1 Drew. & S. 85, 29 L. J. Ch. N. S. 788, 6 Jur. N. S. 621, 8 Week. Rep. 443; Re Ford, 72 L. T. N. S. 5; Thompson v. Smith, 27 Can. S. C. 628; Re Ferguson, 28 Can. S. C. 38; Doe ex dem. Wright v. Gooden, 6 Houst. (Del.) 397; Abbott v. Bradstreet, 3 Allen, 587; Kenyon's Petition, 17 R. I. 149, 20 Atl. 294; Stokes v. Van Wyck, 83 Va. 724, 3 S. E. 387,—in all of which a life estate was given to persons constituting the class at the time of testator's death; also Seifferth v. Badham, 9 Beav. 370, 15 L. J. Ch. N. S. 345, 10 Jur. 892; Wilkinson v. Garrett, 2 Colly. Ch. Cas. 643, 15 L. J. Ch. N. S. 416, 10 Jur. 560; Holloway v. Radcliffe, 23 Beav. 163, 26 L. J. Ch. N. S. 401, 3 Jur. N. S. 198, 5 Week. Rep. 271; Harrison v. Harrison, 28 Beav. 21; Brabant v. Lalonde, 26 Ont. Rep. 379,—in all of which a gift subject to be defeated by the happening of a certain contingency was given in the first 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) instance to those who were at testator's death the sole members of the class to which the limitation over was made. The cases cited are more fully set out under subdivision III., infra.

In Lee v. Lee, 1 Drew. & S. 85, 29 L. J. Ch. N. S. 788, 6 Jur. N. S. 621, 8 Week. Rep. 443, the opinion that where the tenant for life happens to be the next of kin of the testator, the persons who in that case are to take under the ulterior gift to next of kin are those who shall answer the description, not at testator's death, but at the death of the tenant for life, and which is said to be founded upon the reasoning that it is impossible to suppose that the testator intended the life tenant to have any further interest in the property, that therefore he must be excluded from taking under the limitation over, and that, in order to effect that exclusion, the gift to the next of kin shall be held to mean a gift to those persons who shall answer the description at the death of the life tenant,—is criticized at length, as based upon two insufficient conclusions: the first being the assumed impossibility of supposing that the testator intended the first taker to have anything more than the life interest, and the second being that the exclusion of the first taker ought to be effected by postponing till his death the period at which the person answering the description of the testator's next of kin shall be ascertained. As to the first conclusion, it is said that if a testator bequeaths property to a class by a particular description, and the question arises whether a certain individual who comes within the description ought or ought not to be excluded, it is not sufficient, in order to exclude him, to show the absence of a special intention to include him, but that a clear and unambiguous indication of an intention to exclude him must be shown; that there is no such absurdity or unreasonableness in a person taking a life interest by virtue of a particular gift to him nominatim and a further interest, either alone or jointly with others, as the case may be, under a gift in the same will to a class which, as described by the testator, clearly

Ann. Cas. 239; Re Depeirris, 110 App. Div. 421, 97 N. Y. Supp. 321.

The attempted gift to defendant Purcell was ineffectual, since it was not to take effect at all events, or until the death of the testatrix, and until that time the testatrix retained control of the property. It was, at most, an imperfect attempted testamentary disposition.

Thornton, Gifts, § 76; Young v. Young, 90 N. Y. 422, 36 Am. Rep. 634; Trow v. Shannon, 78 N. Y. 446; Robb v. Washington & J. College, 185 N. Y. 492, 78 N. E. 359; Priester v. Hohloch, 70 App. Div. 256, 75 N. Y. Supp. 405; Sullivan v. Sullivan, 161 N. Y. 554, 56 N. E. 116.

Mr. George M. Pinney, Jr., for respondent Lillian Purcell:

It was the intention of the testatrix to part with her dominion over the bond and mortgage and the stock, and to place the same with her daughter, Mrs. Wallace.

Hill, Tr. 130; Martin v. Funk, 75 N. Y. 143, 31 Am. Rep. 446; Re Totten, 179 N. Y. 112, 70 L.R.A. 711, 71 N. E. 748, 1 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 900; Brown v. Spohr, 180 N. Y. 201, 73 N. E. 14; Re King, 115 App. Div. 751, 100 N. Y. Supp. 1089; Beakes Dairy Co. v. Berns, 128 App. Div. 137, 112 N. Y. Supp. 529; Gegan v. Union Trust Co. 129 App. Div. 184, 113 N. Y. Supp. 595, affirmed in 198 N. Y. 541, 92 N. E. 1085; Beaver v. Beaver, 117 N. Y. 421, 6 L.R.A. 403, 15 Am. St. Rep. 531, 22 N. E. 940.

Mr. Frederick A. Drake, for infant respondents:

The legacy bequeathed to Marguerite Wetherill Buckwell did not lapse, but de-includes him; especially since it is probable that the testator did not concern himself with the consideration of the question who would be his next of kin, but simply intended that, at all events, the first taker should have a life estate, and then that the property should go to his next of kin, whoever he, she, or they might happen to be. As to the second conclusion, that, in order to accomplish the exclusion of the life tenant, the period for ascertaining the persons answering the description of testator's next of kin must be postponed till the death of the life tenant, it is said that if the first taker must be excluded, the proper way to effect that object would be simply to exclude him, and to hold that the persons to take under the gift to the next of kin should be those who would answer the description at the testator's death if the life tenant were altogether left out of consideration; that because the first taker is to be excluded, it does not follow that others who would be testator's next of kin at the time of his death, but who might die in the meantime, also are to be excluded, as might be the case if the time for ascertaining the class were thus postponed.

In Cusack v. Rood, 24 Week. Rep. 391, it is said to be settled by authority that a gift to a person who may even be the testator's sole next of kin, and after his decease to the testator's next of kin, or to the persons who shall be then his next of kin, is a gift to the person or persons who, at the death of testator, filled the character of next of kin.

It is not enough to preclude the application of the rule that the heir has an express estate in the same property limited to him in a previous part of the will. Re Frith, 85 L. T. N. S. 455.

An intention to indicate by the term "heirs" persons other than those answering the description at the time of testator's death does not sufficiently appear merely from the fact that, by the will, a prior particular estate is limited to a particular person, who presumably would, and in fact did turn out to, be the person filling the character of right heir. Thompson v. Smith, 27 Can. S. C. 628; Re Ferguson, 28 Can. S. C. 38; Jost v. McNutt, 40 N. S. 41.

The case of Rand v. Butler, 48 Conn. 293, sometimes cited as authority for the proposition that the testator's death is the time for ascertaining the heirs to whom a remainder interest is given, notwithstanding the fact that the life tenant is testator's only heir, does not in fact decide the question, as it was there held that the invalidity of the limitation over, if the heirs intended were those who were such at the death of the life tenant, would lead to the same practical result. The same is true of the case of Thomas v. Castle, 76 Conn. 447, 56 Atl. 854.

The facts that the heirs of a testatrix at her death are her children, that an absolute bequest was made to one and life estates given to the others, do not indicate an intention that the same children should not finally take as heirs under a limitation over to heirs in default of descendants of any of her daughters. Jewett v. Jewett, 200 Mass. 310, 86 N. E. 308.

Although not of itself sufficient to overcome the prima facie meaning of the words of limitation, the fact that the first taker is among the members of the class, or the sole member thereof, at the time of testator's decease, may be taken into consideration in ascertaining testator's real intention, and was so taken into account in Minter v. Wraith, 13 Sim. 52; Wharton v. Barker, 4 Kay & J. 483, 4 Jur. N. S. 553, 6 Week. Rep. 553; Re Greenwood, 31 L. J. Ch. N. S. 119, 3 Giff. 300, 8 Jur. N. S. 907, 10 Week. Rep. 1117; and Sears v. Russell, 8 Gray, 86,—in all of which the first taker was one of the members of the class; and in Clapton v. Bulmer, 15 Nyl. & C. 108; Say v. Creed, 5 Hare, 580, 16 L. J. Ch. N. S. 361, 11 Jur. 603; Lees v. Massey, 3 DeG. F. & J. 113, 7 Jur. N. S. 534, 4 L. T. N. S. 38, 9 Week. Rep. 425; Johnson v. Askey, 190 Ill. 58, 60 N. E. 76; Bond v. Moore, 236 Ill. 576, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 540, scended under the statute to the infant defendant Isabel Bingham Buckwell.

Trask v. Sturges, 170 N. Y. 492, 63 N. E. 534; Roe v. Vingut, 117 N. Y. 212, 22 N. E. 933; Van Nostrand v. Moore, 52 N. Y. 20; Parks v. Parks, 9 Paige, 124; 30 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 687; Roberts v. Bosworth, 107 App. Div. 511, 95 N. Y. Supp. 239; Re Hafner, 45 App. Div. 549, 61 N. Y. Supp. 565; Barnes v. Huson, 60 Barb. 598; Moses v. Allen, 81 Me. 268, 17 Atl. 66; Bishop v. Bishop, 4 Hill, 138; Re Disney, 190 N. Y. 128, 82 N. E. 1093; Pimel v. Betjemann, 183 N. Y. 199, 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 580, 76 N. E. 157, 5 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 239; Re Depeirris, 110 App. Div. 422, 97 N. Y. Supp. 321; Re Wells, 113 N. Y. 400, 10 Am. St. Rep. 457, 21 N. E. 137; Red-

86 N. E. 386; Welch v. Brimmer, 169 Mass. 204, 47 N. E. 699; Heard v. Read, 169 Mass. 216, 47 N. E. 778; Brown v. Wright, 194 Mass. 540, 80 N. E. 612; Boston Safe Deposit & T. Co. v. Blanchard, 196 Mass. 35, 81 N. E. 654; Pinkham v. Blair, 57 N. H. 226; Delaney v. McCormack, 88 N. Y. 174; Salter v. Drowne, 141 App. Div. 352, 126 N. Y. Supp. 686; Everitt's Estate, 195 Pa. 450, 46 Atl. 1; McKee's Estate, 198 Pa. 255, 47 Atl. 993; Merrefield's Estate, 5 Pa. Dist. R. 463,—in all of which the first taker was the sole member of the class at the time of testator's decease. The cases cited will be found set forth in detail under subdivision IV. infra.

3. Imbecility of person for whose benefit particular estate created, who is member of class at testator's death

The imbecility of the person who will be the sole member of the class if ascertained at testator's death, and for whose benefit the particular estate has been created, may be considered in determining the time at which the class is to be ascertained. See Johnson v. Askey, 190 Ill. 58, 60 N. E. 76.

A direction that the daughter's share shall be held in trust for her "so long as she should continue to labor under her present affliction," which is unaccompanied by any direction as to what should be done with respect to the whole of the property in case she should become entitled to have the whole conveyed to her, is indicative of an intention to postpone the ascertainment of the class entitled under a limitation in default of issue of any of his children. Minter v. Wraith, 13 Sim. 52.

But in Rand v. Butler, 48 Conn. 298, the fact that property was put into the hands of trustees for the benefit of one who was testator's sole heir, during his life, from which it may be inferred that testator regarded him as incapable of managing his own affairs, as was the fact, was held insufficient, of itself, to give to the word "heirs" a different meaning from that 33 L.R.A.(N.S.)

field, Law & Pr. Surrogates Ct. 6th ed. § 763.

The word "heirs," in the eleventh paragraph of the will, was intended to include the issue of any child or descendant of the testatrix who might be living at the time the power of appointment was exercised.

Re Smith, 131 N. Y. 239, 27 Am. St. Rep. 586, 30 N. E. 130; Re Russell, 168 N. Y. 169, 61 N. E. 166; Fuller v. Martin, 96 Ky. 500, 29 S. W. 315; Teed v. Morton, 60 N. Y. 503; Goebel v. Wolf, 113 N. Y. 405, 10 Am. St. Rep. 464, 21 N. E. 388.

Cullen, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

I concur in the opinion of my Brother Collin, save in one respect. The courts which the word ordinarily imports; i. e., those answering the description at testator's death. The force of this decision is, however, considerably impaired by the fact that it was further held that any other construction would cause the will to offend the rule against perpetuities, in which case the same person would, of course, take by inheritance.

4. Nonexistence of subject-matter of gift at testator's death.

An intention that the class shall not be immediately ascertained is manifested by the fact that the property is to be converted into personalty and distributed as such at the death of the first taker, so that the subject of the gift does not come into existence until then. Delaney v. McCormack, 88 N. Y. 174.

Where a gift is of a fund which is to be created at the termination of the particular estate, and there is no gift in præsentia, either by remainder or executory devise, the class among whom the fund is to be distributed is to be ascertained at the termination of the life estate. Barr v. Denney, 79 Ohio St. 358, 87 N. E. 267.

5. Provision for accumulation.

The ordinary meaning of the words is not overcome by a provision for the accumulation of the income of a moiety of the property during the life of the life tenant of the other moiety. Urquhart v. Urquhart, 13 Sim. 613, 8 Jur. 161.

But in Re Southworth, 52 Misc. 86, 102 N. Y. Supp. 447, it is held that a contrary intention might be found in a direction that principal and accrued interest shall be divided at the death of the life tenant, since testator could not have intended that unexpended interest remaining at the death of the life tenant should vest before it was in existence.

A conclusion that the time for ascertaining the class should be postponed is strengthened by a direction to accumulate income. Brown v. Wright, 194 Mass. 540, 80 N. E. 612.

below have held that the power of appointment given in the eleventh clause of the testatrix's will to Mrs. Wallace, "to give, devise, and bequeath upon her death, by last will and testament, duly executed, to such of my heirs as she may prefer," may be exercised in favor of any issue or descendant of the testator. I can find no authority in the decided cases for the extension of the term "heir" to include issue or descendants who are not heirs. Not one of the propositions cited in support of that contention in my opinion sustains it.

Before entering on a review of the cases, the distinction must be borne in mind between two radically different propositions: First, that in the case of a devise to "heirs" upon the death of a life tenant, and especially in the case of a gift over upon death without heirs, the term "heirs" may be confined to such heirs as are issue or descendants; in other words, to heirs of the body; second, the proposition which it is necessary to maintain to support the decisions below, that the term "heirs" may include all descendants, however remote, though not heirs because their parents or ancestors are still living. This second proposition, as I have said, I can find no authority to sustain. Now, to refer to the cases cited by my Brother, Re Cramer, 170 N. Y. 271, 63 N. E. 279, is authority for the first proposition, not the second. In that case the word "heirs" was limited to heirs of the body, and death without heirs construed as a gift over without heirs who were de-

6. Contingency of gift.

The mere circumstance that a gift to the next of kin is not immediate, but is contingent upon a future event which may or may not happen, is insufficient of itself to render the description applicable only to such person or persons as should form the class at the time of the occurrence of the event. Bird v. Luckie, 8 Hare, 301, 14 Jur. 1015.

In Tuttle v. Woolworth, 62 N. J. Eq. 532, 50 Atl. 445, it is said that the contingency as to a limitation over to testator's heirs taking effect does not affect the question of who compose the class to take, and does not of itself afford a reason for restricting its application so as to exclude any person who was an heir of testator at the time of his death.

7. Gift to class by direction to distribute.

In WELCH v. BLANCHARD, it is said that the fact that a gift over is made only by a direction to distribute does not prevent the application of the usual rule.

And see also the following cases, in which a direction to divide at the termination of a life estate, as in Masters v. Hooper, 4 Bro. Ch. 207; Gorbell v. Davison, 18 Beav. 556; Weil v. King, 31 Ky. L. Rep. 1010, 104 S. W. 380; Childs v. Russell, 11 Met. 16; Cummings v. Cummings, 146 Mass. 501, 16 N. E. 401; and McDaniel v. Allen, 64 Miss. 417, 1 So. 356; or at the termination of a trust, as in Rayner v. Mowbray, 3 Bro. Ch. 234; Collisam v. Sams, Tamlyn, 346; Urquhart v. Urquhart, 13 Sim. 613, 8 Jur. 161; Lee v. Lee, 1 Drew. & S. 85, 29 L. J. Ch. N. S. 788, 6 Jur. N. S. 621, 8 Week. Rep. 443; Merrill v. Wooster, 99 Me. 460, 59 Atl. 596; Boston Safe Deposit & T. Co. v. Parker, 197 Mass. 70, 83 N. E. 307; Jewett v. Jewett, 200 Mass. 310, 86 N. E. 308; and Allison v. Allison, 101 Va. 537, 63 L.R.A. 920, 44 S. E. 904,—seems not to have been regarded as precluding the application of the general rule.

But in some instances the fact that there are no words specifically giving the remainder to a class has been considered, together with other indications, as indicative of an intention that the remainder should not vest before the time of distribution. See Leonard v. Haworth, 171 Mass. 496, 51 N. E. 7; Brown v. Wright, 194 Mass. 540, 80 N. E. 612; Boston Safe Deposit & T. Co. v. Blanchard, 196 Mass. 35, 81 N. E. 654; Re Bowers, 109 App. Div. 566, 96 N. Y. Supp. 562; Salter v. Drowne, 141 App. Div. 352, 126 N. Y. Supp. 686.

And see also Forrest v. Porch, 100 Tenn. 391, 45 S. W. 676, where a direction that at the death of the life tenant the property should be divided was held not to vest the remainder until the time for distribution.

8. Words of futurity.

The use of words of description in the future is immaterial, since words to postpone the vesting in possession of an interest are naturally prospective. Doe ex dem. Garner v. Lawson, 3 East, 278; Wharton v. Barker, 4 Kay & J. 483, 4 Jur. N. S. 553, 6 Week. Rep. 534; Valentine v. Fitzsimons [1894] 1 I. R. 93.

Mere words of futurity without the adverb of time are insufficient to preclude the application of the general rule. Per Baggallay and Thesiger, Lds. JJ., in Mortimer v. Slater, L. R. 7 Ch. Div. 322.

Words expressive of future time are to be referred to the vesting in possession if they reasonably can be, rather than to the vesting in right. Kenyon's Petition, 17 R. I. 149, 20 Atl. 294.

But in Butler v. Bushnell, 3 Myl. & K. 232, 3 L. J. Ch. N. S. 139, it was said that the words "such persons as shall happen to be my next of kin," or "such persons as shall or should be my next of kin," which import a future period, indicate an intention to confine the gift to such persons as shall answer the description at the death of the life tenant. But see criticism of this decision in Jarman on Wills, hereinbefore quoted.

9. Use of word "then."

Where the word "then," which is frescendants or heirs of the body. Snider v. Snider, 160 N. Y. 151, 54 N. E. 676, decides exactly the same proposition. Johnson v. Brasington, 156 N. Y. 181, 50 N. E. 859, the same. So with Kiah v. Grenier, 56 N. Y. 220. In Heath v. Hewitt, 127 N. Y. 166, 13 L. R. A. 46, 24 Am. St. Rep. 438, 27 N. E. 959, which was the case of a gift to the heirs of a living person, Judge Parker, writing for the court, said the devise was to the children, but this was not because the word "heirs" could be construed as meaning children, but because it was the children which happened in that case to be the persons who would have been the heirs of the living person had he died at that time. This plainly appears, because the case was decided on the authority of Heard

v. Horton, 1 Denio, 165, 43 Am. Dec. 659, where the general rule is stated that "a devise to the heirs of one who is stated in the will to be living is a valid disposition in favor of those who would be his heirs if he should then die." Livingston v. Greene, 52 N. Y. 118, seems to have no application to the case before us. In Thurber v. Chambers, 66 N. Y. 42, 47, the term "heirs" was construed in its legal meaning so as to include all persons entitled to succeed in case of intestacy. So the decision has no bearing on the question before us. But Judge Church does remark in his opinion: "The word 'heirs' will, however, be construed to mean 'children' when, from the whole will, such appears to have been the intention of the testator. Taggart v. Murray, 53 N.

quently employed in limitations of the sort under discussion, is clearly used as an adverb of time, and not as referring to the event, it will have the effect to postpone the ascertainment of the class until the period to which it has reference.

Thus, in Long v. Blackall, 3 Ves. Jr. 486, 4 Revised Rep. 73, where the limitation was to such persons "as should then be" the legal representatives of the testator, the word "then" seems to have been regarded as showing that the personal representatives at the time of testator's death were not intended.

And where the word "then" is used twice in the limiting clause so closely together that it is clearly not employed in both places for the same purpose nor with the same meaning, it may be sufficient to indicate an intention that the class should be determined as of the time of distribution. See Wharton v. Barker, 4 Kay & J. 483, 4 Jur. N. S. 553, 6 Week. Rep. 534; Travis v. Taylor, 14 Week. Rep. 909, 12 Jur. N. S. 791; Valentine v. Fitzsimons [1894] 1 I. R. 93; Re Karn, 2 Ont. Week. Rep. 841; Wood v. Schoen, 216 Pa. 425, 66 Atl. 79.

But the tendency of the courts seems to be to construe the word "then" ordinarily as having reference to the event, rather than to the time; and such effect as it might have had as a temporal word if used alone is generally held to be controlled or overcome by a reference to the statute of distributions.

Thus, in Doe ex dem. Garner v. Lawson, 3 East, 278, it was said by Le Blanc, J., that even though a distribution upon a contingency is directed to be made amongst such persons as should "then" appear to be testator's next of kin, the word "then" would be satisfied by reference to the time when the inquiry was to be made, and that the time for ascertaining the class would be controlled by the further provision that the next of kin should take in such parts and proportions as they would, by virtue of the statute of distributions, have been entitled to his personal estate if he had died intestate, which must refer to the time of his death.

33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

In Wharton v. Barker, 4 Kay & J. 483, it is said that the application of the rule is excluded where, after a previous bequest for life or other limited interest, there is a bequest "to those who then shall be" the next of kin of the testator, although it would seem that in such case, if the ulterior bequest were "to those who then shall appear to be his next of kin, in such parts and proportions as they would, by virtue of the statutes of distribution, have been entitled to his personal estate if he had died intestate," the rule would again become applicable, and the death of the testator would be the period for designating the persons to take under that designation.

In Bullock v. Downes, 9 H. L. Cas. 1, where property was limited over upon certain contingencies to such person or persons of testator's blood "as would, by virtue of the statutes of distributions of intestates' effects have become and been then entitled thereto in case I had died intestate," it was held that, even assuming that the word "then" is to be read as an adverb of time, the time indicated is not the time of the death of testator, but the time when the persons would come into the enjoyment of that which is bequeathed to them.

So also in Mortimore v. Mortimore, L. R. 4 App. Cas. 448, 48 L. J. Ch. N. S. 470, 27 Week. Rep. 575, it is said that even though the word "then" be used as an adverb of time, it may be satisfied by taking it as referring to the time at which the persons entitled under a limitation are to be found out, and not the time as of which the membership of the class is to be determined, where there is in the limitation a reference to the statute of distributions, such reference being taken as descriptive of a class which must be ascertained at the death of the testator.

In Re Winn [1910] 1 Ch. 278, 79 L. J. Ch. N. S. 165, 101 L. T. N. S. 737, it was said that although where there is a gift to the next of kin or nearest of blood, or any similar gift, the time at which a class is to be ascertained is the death of the testator, it is always possible for a tes-

Y. 233, 238; Bundy v. Bundy, 38 N. Y. 410." A reference to the two cases Judge Church cites plainly indicates his meaning that the term "heirs" will be limited to children or other issue, and not extended to heirs generally. Scott v. Guernsey, 48 N. Y. 106, is precisely to the same effect, and in the opinion it is said: "The testator has used the word 'heirs' in the sense of 'children.'" Now, such a statement was correct, though possibly misleading, because in that case children were the heirs.

Without discussing the provisions of the will at length, I can simply say I cannot find any indication of a desire of the testatrix to pass over the nearest in line of her descendants or heirs in favor of more remote issue who might not be born till a generation after she was in her grave. Certainly there is no such clear indication as would warrant us in departing from the proper meaning of the word "heirs."

But I am of opinion that the heirs of the testatrix were to be ascertained, not at her death, but at the death of the life tenant, to whom she gave the power of appointment.

It should be conceded that the general rule is that a gift to a testator's heirs, though after the death of a life tenant, is a gift to those who were the testator's heirs at law at the time of his decease. But the will may disclose an intention that they are to be ascertained at a different period. In some of the cases cited as requiring a class to be ascertained at the death of the tator to say that the class is to be ascertained at a later time; and if the testator makes a gift to a tenant for life, and after the death of the tenant for life "to the persons who shall then be my relatives or my next of kin," then, apart from any reference to the statute of distributions, the class is clearly to be ascertained at the death of the tenant for life, in accordance with the express language of the testator; but that where a testator, referring to his statutory next of kin, uses expressions such as "the persons who shall then be entitled by virtue of the statute of distributions," the ordinary rule which would have ascertained the class at the time to which the word "then" points is or may be rebutted because of the necessity for every person who claims under the gift to prove his title by virtue of the statute of distributions.

The word "then" is not decisive of testator's intention that a gift in remainder, after a life estate, to heirs or next of kin, is to those answering such description at the time of distribution, as it may be satisfied by the consideration that it refers to those who shall be entitled to share in that capacity at the time of the testator's decease. Childs v. Russell, 11 Met. 16.

The use of the word "then," as introductory to a limitation to testator's right heirs, is not sufficient to show that the testator intended to limit the estate to those who should be such at the time of the happening of the contingency. Buzby's Appeal, 61 Pa. 111.

The word "then," as introductory of a limitation to testator's heirs, is not to be understood as an adverb of time, or as indicating anything else than the event in which the heirs, etc., are to take. Stewart's Estate, 147 Pa. 383, 23 Atl. 599.

For other instances in which it has been held that the class was to be determined as of the time of testator's death, and not as of the time of distribution, notwithstanding testator's use of the word "then," see Harrington v. Harte, 1 Cox, Ch. Cas. 131; Nicholson v. Wilson, 14 Sim. 549, 14 L. J. Ch. N. S. 351, 9 Jur. 389; Ware v. Row, 33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

land, 2 Phill. Ch. 635, 17 L. J. Ch. N. S. 147, 12 Jur. 165; Cable v. Cable, 16 Beav. 507; Mays v. Carroll, 14 Ont. Rep. 699; Brabant v. Lalonde, 26 Ont. Rep. 379; Jost v. McNutt, 40 N. S. 41; Bunting v. Speck, 41 Kan. 424, 3 L.R.A. 690, 21 Pac. 288; Dove v. Torr, 128 Mass. 38; Boston Safe Deposit & T. Co. v. Parker, 197 Mass. 70, 83 N. E. 307; Stokes v. VanWyck, 83 Va. 724, 3 S. E. 387; Allison v. Allison, 101 Va. 537, 63 L.R.A. 920, 44 S. E. 904,—set forth in full in subdivision III., infra.

10. Reference to statute of distributions.

As those who are testator's next of kin at the time of his death are alone entitled to take by the statute of distributions in case of his intestacy, a reference to such statute in the limitation over has been held to show that the persons intended by such limitation are those who answer the description at that time. Doe ex dem. Garner v. Lawson, 3 East, 278.

A reference to the statute to point out the persons who are to take tends to show that those who are to take are those living at the death of the person whose estate is to be distributed. Holloway v. Radcliffe, 23 Beav. 163, 26 L. J. Ch. N. S. 401, 3 Jur. N. S. 198, 5 Week. Rep. 271; and see also Wharton v. Barker, 4 Kay & J. 483, 4 Jur. N. S. 553, 6 Week. Rep. 534, and Re Winn [1910] 1 Ch. 278, 79 L. J. Ch. N. S. 165, 101 L. T. N. S. 737, set out more fully under heading immediately preceding.

So also, in Cable v. Cable, 16 Beav. 507, a limitation over to persons entitled under the provision of the statute of distributions, and in the proportion pointed out by such statute, was regarded as militating against a construction by which the next of kin would be determined at the time of the first taker's death, as in such case the fund could not be divided in the same proportions as directed by statute.

The fact that the gift is to such persons as may be legally entitled to the same under the statute of distribution clearly shows testator's intention that the property is testator, the language is too plain to admit of discussion. In Delaney v. McCormack, 88 N. Y. 174, the provision was "to distribute the proceeds thereof amongst my next of kin as personal estate, according to the laws of the state of New York for the distribution of intestate personal estate." There also the language of the will was imperative. There appears to have been no claim that the next of kin would have been ascertained at a later period. In Wadsworth v. Murray, 161 N. Y. 274, 282, 76 Am. St. Rep. 265, 55 N. E. 910, 911, the provision was that the property should "descend to and vest in my heirs at law in the same manner that it would have descended to and vested in them if this will had not been made." Of course, if the will had not been made, the property would have passed as in case of intestacy. The general rule is stated in 2 Jarman on Wills, 6th ed. p. 981: "Prima facie the next of kin at the death of the testator are meant; and the indication should be clear to overcome the presumption." But in several cases indications have been held sufficiently clear to show that the testator meant the class to be ascertained at the death of a life tenant or of a primary devisee. Such cases are Wood v. Bullard, 151 Mass. 324, 7 L.R.A. 304, 25 N. E. 67; Welch v. Brimmer, 169 Mass. 204, 47 N. E. 699; and Re Bowers, 109 App. Div. 566, 96 N. Y. Supp. 562, affirmed on op. below in 184 N. Y. 574, 77 N. E. 1182.

It must be borne in mind that in the case to go as if he had died intestate, and therefore that the class is to be ascertained at the time of his death. Starr v. Newberry, 23 Beav. 436.

Where the limitation is "according to the statute of distribution" of intestates' effects, it has been held that the next of kin at the time of testator's death are clearly entitled. See Royds v. Royds, 1 New Reports, 516, 8 L. T. N. S. 199.

The phrase, "my next of kin under the statute for the distribution of intestates' estates," describes a class which, according to the statute, must be ascertained at the death of the testator. Mortimore v. Mortimore, L. R. 4 App. Cas. 448, 48 L. J. Ch. N. S. 470, 27 Week. Rep. 575.

In Re Wilson [1907] 2 Ch. 572, the effect of a gift to those entitled as next of kin under the statute of distributions as a gift to those who, according to the express language of that statute, must be ascertained at the testator's death, was held not to be varied by the introduction of the phrase, "on the death of my said nephew" (the tenant for life), in a limitation to "such person or persons as, on the death of my said nephew, will be entitled as my next of kin under the statute for the distribution of intestates' estates," as, even if the latter phrase refers to the time, and not the event, it may be satisfied by taking it as referring to the time of coming into possession, and not the time of vesting.

In Fargo v. Miller, 150 Mass. 225, 5 L.R.A. 690, 22 N. E. 1003, it is said that a reference to the statutes of distribution has sometimes been regarded as a circumstance indicating that the testator intended that his next of kin should take as of his death, because the persons who are distributees under the statute take from that time.

A clear intention that the heirs shall be determined as of the time of testator's death is manifested by a provision that, upon certain contingencies, the trust estate and its accumulations shall descend to and vest in testator's heirs at law in the same manner that it would have descended to and vested in them if the will had not been made. Wadsworth v. Murray, 161 33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

N. Y. 274, 76 Am. St. Rep. 265, 55 N. E. 910.

An intention that the class shall be ascertained at testator's death is disclosed by a limitation to such person or persons who would be legally entitled to succeed to and inherit the same in case of intestacy, as the persons who take under such circumstances are those in being at the time of their decedent's demise. Smith v. Allen, 161 N. Y. 478, 55 N. E. 1056.

Although the presumption arising from the prima facie meaning of the words is strengthened by a direct reference to the statute of distribution (Valentine v. Fitzsimons [1894] 1 I. R. 93; Tuttle v. Woolworth, 62 N. J. Eq. 532, 50 Atl. 445), the absence of a reference to the statute is not a sufficient reason for departing from the general rule (Re Ford, 72 L. T. N. S. 5).

A reference to the "shares, proportions, and manner prescribed by the statute" must however, give way to other indications of an intent to postpone the ascertainment of the class. Sturge v. Great Western R. Co. L. R. 19 Ch. Div. 444, 51 L. J. Ch. N. S. 185, 45 L. T. N. S. 787, 30 Week. Rep. 456.

And in De Wolf v. Middleton, 18 R. I. 810, 31 L.R.A. 146, 26 Atl. 44, 31 Atl. 271, it is held that the words, "according to the statute of descents," in an executory devise to testator's heirs at law according to such statute, do not necessarily import a class to be ascertained and traced from testator's death.

A distinction between cases in which the reference is to a title conferred by the statute of distribution, e. g., "to those who would be entitled thereto as my next of kin under the statute of distribution," and cases in which the reference is not to the title conferred, e. g., "to those who would be my next of kin according to the statutes," is taken in Valentine v. Fitzsimons [1894] 1 I. R. 93, where the latter expression was held insufficient to limit the meaning of the word "then," used in an adverbial sense, on the ground that in such case it was susceptible of meaning "in the way in which kinship is reckoned under these statutes."

before us there is no present gift of the property, the subject of the eleventh clause, to the heirs of the testatrix. They take solely by the exercise of the power of appointment, dependent entirely on the favor of the life tenant, who might give all to one and exclude the rest. It was not a gift to a class, but the designation of a class among which the life tenant was to exercise her favor. It is in this respect that I think the case before us is to be distinguished from an ordinary gift by the testatrix herself. There the class to be benefited would be known to the testator, and take under the will as a recipient of the testator's bounty. Here, though it was not the life tenant's bounty, it was the life tenant's favor to which any appointee would be indebted for what he might get. That favor was to be exercised by the life tenant at her decease; and it seems to me that the class was to be ascertained at the same time. But there is one further consideration which is to my mind controlling. It is true that the life tenant has no children, but she might have had children after the testatrix's death, and, for aught we know, even after the present time. A construction of the will which would require the heirs of the testatrix to be ascertained at her death would preclude the life tenant from exercising the power of appointment over what may be not improperly termed her own share of her mother's estate in favor of her own children. Certainly this testatrix never intended this.

11. Terms importing plurality in membership of class.

The description of the class in terms which import that testator contemplated a plurality of persons under that description, although, at the time of the making of the will, such class presumptively consisted of but one person, is not conclusive of an intent to postpone the ascertainment of the membership of the class; although it may be indicative of such an intention. Say v. Creed, 5 Hare, 580, 16 L. J. Ch. N. S. 301, 11 Jur. 603; Urquhart v. Urquhart, 13 Sim. 613, 8 Jur. 161; Ware v. Rowland, 2 Phill. Ch. 635, 17 L. J. Ch. N. S. 147, 12 Jur. 165; Bird v. Luckie, 8 Hare 301, 14 Jur. 1015; Re Barber, 1 Smale & G. 118; Re Lang, 9 Week. Rep. 589, 4 L. T. N. S. 577; Rand v. Butler, 48 Conn. 293; Stokes v. Van Wyck, 83 Va. 724, 3 S. E. 387.

The solution of such apparent inconsistency is found in the fact that the testator would naturally use such terms with respect to an event which might not take place until some distant period, when it would be uncertain who would compose the class, or in the fact that he may have contemplated the possibility of the death of his heir presumptive in his own lifetime. Ware v. Rowland, 2 Phill. Ch. 635, 17 L. J. Ch. N. S. 147, 12 Jur. 165.

The reference to a plurality or possible plurality of persons as the testator's next of kin, while at the time the will was made and at his death there was only one person answering such description, is of little force to show that testator intended the class to be ascertained at a time subsequent to his death, as he may have supposed some change or circumstances might take place in his lifetime so as to render the plural properly descriptive. Bird v. Luckie, 8 Hare. 301, 14 Jur. 1015, Re Barber, 1 Smale & G. 118.

The use of the words "between and amongst," which seem to import a plurality of members of the class, will not preclude a construction which has the effect to vest the gift in a single person. Lee v. Lee, 1 33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Drew. & S. 85, 29 L. J. Ch. N. S. 788, 6 Jur. N. S. 621, 8 Week. Rep. 443.

But see Johnson v. Askey, 190 Ill. 58, 60 N. E. 76, in which the use of the plural was taken into consideration in ascertaining whether it was testator's intention that the time as of which the class should be ascertained should be postponed.

See also Nicoll v. Irby, — Conn. —, 77 Atl. 957, in which the use of the plural "heirs," and the provision that they should share alike, was held to indicate an intention on the part of the testator to exclude the life tenant who was the sole member of the class at the time of testator's death.

12. Limitation to those of class making claim or proving relationship.

A limitation over in case no claimant shall appear after a certain time will not preclude the application of the rule, notwithstanding the fact that the life tenants were members of the class at the time of testator's death, the claim being no part of the qualification necessary to constitute the members of the class legatees. Gorbell v. Davison, 18 Beav. 556.

And in Re Ferguson, 28 Can. S. C. 38, it was held that no contrary intention could be found in the fact that the limitation was to the testator's heirs who might prove their relationship within six months from the termination of the particular estate.

But in Tiffin v. Longman, 15 Beav. 275, where the limitation was to such of testator's relations as should make their claim within a certain period after advertisement upon the termination of the life estate, it was held indicative of an intention that the class should be ascertained at the termination of the life estate.

13. Limitation to heirs, etc., both of testator and of another.

In Jones v. Oliver, 38 N. C. (3 Ired. Eq.) 369, it is said that it makes no difference in the application of the general rule that the gift over is to the next of kin both of testator and of another person.

I think the judgment of the Appellate Division and of the Special Term should be further modified so as to hold that the power of appointment given in the eleventh clause of the will must be exercised in favor of the heirs of the testator, such heirs, however, to be ascertained at the death of the life tenant and donee of the power.

Collin, J. (dissenting in part):

The action is to procure a judgment establishing the meaning of certain provisions of the will of Margaretta M. Diehl and settling the accounts of the plaintiffs. Upon the trial at special term, by an interlocutory judgment unanimously affirmed, the disputed parts of the will were given construction and the plaintiffs directed to account. The action thereupon proceeded to the final judgment appealed from.

The testatrix died in January, 1908, leaving surviving as her sole heirs at law and next of kin three sons, Charles W., Thomas, and William, and three daughters, Margaretta Wetherill Wallace, Mary E. Smith, and Susan D. Edson. The original will and the three codicils were probated April 13, 1908. They are without unusual or involved features, and a brief general statement of their contents will suffice. The original will by its second paragraph gave to Charles, in case he survived the testatrix, certain shares of corporate stock, and to the executors the sum of $10,000 in trust to purchase him an annuity. By its third

And see also Holloway v. Radcliffe, 23 Beav. 163, 26 L. J. Ch. N. S. 401, 3 Jur. N. S. 198, 5 Week. Rep. 271; Walker v. Dunshee, 38 Pa. 430; and Jones v. Knappen, 63 Vt. 391, 14 L.R.A. 293, 22 Atl. 630, in which the general rule was applied in the case of a similar limitation. But see also Wharton v. Barker, 4 Kay & J. 483, 4 Jur. N. S. 553, 6 Week. Rep. 534; Howell v. Ackerman, 89 Ky. 22, 11 S. W. 819; and Bisson v. West Shore R. Co. 143 N. Y. 125, 38 N. E. 104, in which the fact that the remainder was limited to the heirs of the testator and of the life tenant seems to have been regarded as indicative of an intention to postpone ascertainment of the class until the termination of the life estate.

14. Exclusion of certain persons.

The express exclusion of persons who would be members of a class if such class is determined at a certain time is an indication of intention that the class should then be ascertained, where it may be assumed that testator, in making his will, regarded it as certain that the state of his family would remain precisely the same at his death as at the date of his will. Lee v. Lee, 1 Drew. & S. 85, 29 L. J. Ch. N. S. 788, 6 Jur. N. S. 621, 8 Week. Rep. 443; Clark v. Shawen, 190 Ill. 47, 60 N. E. 116.

Thus, the rule of construction under which the class is ascertained at testator's death is fortified by the circumstance of the exclusion of the tenant for life, which would be superfluous if the vesting was postponed until the termination of the life estate. Cable v. Cable, 16 Beav. 507; Fletcher v. Fletcher, 3 De G. F. & J. 775; Minot v. Harris, 132 Mass. 528.

But the exclusion of a person who would be the sole member of a class at the time of testator's death is indicative of an intention to postpone the ascertainment of the membership of the class. Say v. Creed, 5 Hare, 580, 16 L. J. Ch. N. S. 361, 11 Jur. 603.

An instance in which the exception of 33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

persons who presumptively would not, at the time of testator's death, be members of the class, was held insufficient to show an intention that the ascertainment of the members of a class should be postponed, may be found in Re Winn [1910] 1 Ch. 278, 79 L. J. Ch. N. S. 165, 101 L. T. N. S. 737, where testator made the same exception in another provision of his will, where it was clear that the class must be ascertained at his death, as in such case the probability is that he may have contemplated the possibility of changes during his own lifetime in the membership of the class who were presumptively his next of kin.

So, in Lee v. Lee, supra, it was held that the exclusion of certain nephews and nieces did not afford any sufficient indication of testator's intention that the class of which they were members should take under the limitation, where it appeared that the nephews and nieces whom testator wished to exclude were the children of a brother who was living when the will was made, showing that he had in his mind the possibility of changes taking place in the state of his family by death.

15. Other phraseology.

The construction reached by the application of the general rule is fortified by the use of the word "descend," which ordinarily denotes the vesting of the estate by operation of law in the heirs immediately upon the death of the ancestor. Dove v. Torr, 128 Mass. 38.

Such construction is strengthened by the use of the words "go and descend." Abbott v. Bradstreet, 3 Allen, 587.

It is strengthened by the absence of words of contingency, such as "if they shall be living at his death," or "to such of my heirs as shall then be living." Minot v. Tappan, 122 Mass. 535.

No contrary intention may be derived from the employment of the phrase "convey and transfer." Ibid.

The fact that the limitation is to next of kin "for the time being" will not preclude such construction, although its effect paragraph it gave to Thomas, in case he survived her, all promissory notes belonging to the estate of her deceased husband under process of collection by him; also his indebtedness to her, and to the executors $10,000 in trust to purchase an annuity for him. Each paragraph provided that, if the son named therein did not survive the testatrix, the bequests should form a part of the residue of the estate. The fourth paragraph devised to William certain lands in St. Paul, Minnesota. It was, however, revoked by a codicil which devised to him all properties in the state of Minnesota owned by the testatrix. By the fifth paragraph testatrix gave to her daughter Mary E. Smith all of her diamonds and the sum of $500; and to her grandson, Edward I. Smith, certain paintings and engravings. The sixth and seventh paragraphs were revoked by the codicils. The eighth paragraph gave to the daughter Margaretta Wetherill Wallace a real-estate mortgage of $5,000, and to the daughter Susan Douglas Edson real property known as No. 12 Clinton avenue, in the borough of Richmond, New York city. The ninth paragraph directed the executors to divide the rest and residue into two equal parts, with power to convert it into cash, one of which parts the tenth paragraph gave to her daughter, the appellant Susan D. Edson, and the other was disposed of in the following language: "Eleventh. I give, devise, and bequeath unto my daughter Margaretta Wetherill Wallace, if livis to reduce the words quoted to a nullity, since it is a matter of constant occurrence to find in an instrument more words than are necessary. Moss v. Dunlop, Johns. V. C. (Eng.) 490.

No contrary inference may be drawn from the expression "whoever they may be," following a gift to the next of kin living at the time of the termination of the precedent estates, since such expression may be explained either as indicating a doubt in testator's mind as to who will be his next of kin, or as meaning that he is in doubt as to which of the next of kin may survive the period. Re Winn [1910] 1 Ch. 278, 79 L. J. Ch. N. S. 165, 101 L. T. N. S. 737.

No contrary intention is manifested by the circumstances that a bequest was given to a member of the class "in full of any share of the estate" to which such person might be entitled. Abbott v. Bradstreet, supra.

Such construction is not affected by the use of the phrase "if I were to die," in a limitation to those who, under the statute of distributions, would then be entitled thereto if I were to die possessed thereof and intestate," as they express an hypothesis not as to death only, but as to death under particular circumstances. Michell v. Bridges, 13 Week. Rep. 200, 11 L. T. N. S. 727.

The clear words of a gift to a class which must be ascertained at testator's death cannot be cut down by the phrase "on the death of" the life tenant, which, even if it refers to the time, and not to the event, must be taken as referring only to the time when the persons entitled will come into possession. Re Wilson [1907] 2 Ch. 572.

In Hersee v. Simpson, 154 N. Y. 496, 18 N. E. 890, where a testator gave his residuary estate to his wife for life, adding, "and from and after her decease my will is that all of my said property be disposed of according to the statutes of the state of New York governing the descent of real property and the distribution of personal estates," it was held that the words "from and after" the wife's death were insufficient to limit to a contingent remainder the estate devised to testator's heirs, but were to be construed to relate merely to the time of the enjoyment of the estate, and not to the time of its vesting.

But a contrary intention which will preclude the application of the rule is manifested by a limitation to testator's "heirs then living." Cushman v. Goodwin, 95 Me. 353, 50 Atl. 50.

Or by a limitation to such persons "as shall then be my next of kin." Travis v. Taylor, 14 Week. Rep. 909, 12 Jur. N. S. 791.

Or by a limitation to such persons as would have been entitled under the statute of distribution "in case I had then died intestate." Clowes v. Hilliard, L. R. 4 Ch. Div. 413, 46 L. J. Ch. N. S. 271, 25 Week. Rep. 224.

Or by a limitation to such persons "who, at the time of such respective decease of my children," should be testator's next of kin. Sturge v. Great Western R. Co. L. R. 19 Ch. Div. 444, 51 L. J. Ch. N. S. 185, 45 L. T. N. S. 787, 30 Week. Rep. 456.

Or where the testator directs that the property, after the decease of the life tenant, be equally divided among his surviving heirs. Evans v. Godbold, 6 Rich. Eq. 26.

Or by a limitation to testator's "heirs at law then surviving, they taking by right of representation." Wood v. Bullard, 151 Mass. 324, 7 L.R.A. 304, 25 N. E. 67.

Or by a limitation to such persons "as shall, upon the death of [the life tenant], be my then next of kin." Re McFee [1910] W. N. 186, 79 L. J. Ch. N. S. 676, 103 L. T. N. S. 210.

Or by a limitation to such persons "as shall, at the time of the decease of" the life tenant, be entitled thereto, etc. Horn v. Coleman, 1 Smale & G. 169, 22 L. J. Ch. N. S. 779, 17 Jur. 408, 1 Week. Rep. 94; Re Morley, 25 Week. Rep. 825.

16. Provision against alienation of particular estate.

A provision against alienation or encumbrance of the respective life estates taken by ing, the other part of my residuary estate during the term of her natural life, with power to collect and apply the income therefrom for her own use, to invest and reinvest the principal according to her judgment, in real estate or in any other investment except railroad securities, and with further power to give, devise, and bequeath upon her death by last will and testament duly executed, to such of my heirs as she may prefer." A question presented to us is, Does the word "heirs" therein mean those who were the testatrix's legal or actual heirs, or those who are her descendants at the time the legatee exercises the power of appointment. The courts below have held that the legatee may effectually exercise the power of appointment for the benefit of any descendants of the testatrix.

The sixth paragraph of the will, revoked by a codicil, gave to the executors $5,000 in trust to establish a comfortable home for Marguerite Wetherill Buckwell, a granddaughter of testatrix. The first codicil revoked the sixth paragraph and gave the $5,000 to the executors in trust, to purchase an annuity for the said granddaughter. The second codicil contained the provision: "Whereas circumstances may arise which may make the purchase of an annuity undesirable, it is my will that said sum of five thousand dollars be paid to my said granddaughter Marguerite Wetherill Buckwell if she survive me, and I hereby give and bequeath such sum of five thousand dollars to her, giving, however, my persons who would be members of the class if ascertained at testator's death is not a sufficient reason for departing from the general rule. Re Ford, 72 L. T. N. S. 5.

Nor is the fact that testator manifests an intention to prevent the capital from coming into the hands of the life tenant. Jost v. McNutt, 40 N. S. 41.

A contrary intention which will preclude the application of the rule cannot be found in a provision that the beneficiaries of a trust created by a testator are not to have or exercise any right or power of disposing of their respective interests, title, or property in their respective trust estates by will or testamentary appointment, nor to sell, pledge, assign, or transfer the same, since, if testator had desired to make it impossible for any of them to have the disposition of any part of what he himself should leave in trust, a construction that he meant by the words "to my heirs at law," heirs to be determined as of some other time than as of that of his death, would not have made that intent effectual. Rotch v. Rotch, 173 Mass. 125, 53 N. E. 268.

17. Power of appointment.

An intention which will preclude the application of the rule may be inferred from a limited power to appoint by will, given to the donee of a defeasible fee. Doe ex dem. King v. Frost, 3 Barn. & Ald. 546, 22 Revised Rep. 478.

Such an intention is manifested by the fact that the life tenant, who was testator's sole next of kin at the time of his death, is given a power of appointment, in default of which the property is limited over to such person or persons as would be entitled to the same by virtue of the statute of distributions. Briden v. Hewlett, 2 Myl. & K. 90, 1 L. J. Ch. N. S. 114.

But see Pearce v. Vincent, 2 Keen, 230, 7 L. J. Ch. N. S. 285, where it was held that the gift of a power of appointment to a life tenant who was testator's sole next of kin at his death was not inconsistent with an intention that the class to whom the limitation over was made in default of appointment should be ascertained at testator's death.

tor's death, the court saying that the argument derived from intention did not apply in such case, because testator could not have had in his view and knowledge that the ultimate gift should go to any particular individual.

18. Other similar limitations.

The construction under which the class is ascertained at testator's decision is supported by the fact that a similar limitation over is made after other provisions of the will,—especially where the language used gives rise to the inference that the whole is to be treated as a single fund, to go all together in one direction. Moss v. Dunlop, John, V. C. (Eng.) 490.

It is strengthened by the circumstance that other provisions are similarly limited, as it is hardly conceivable that the testator contemplated several sets of different hypothetical heirs. WELCH v. BLANCHARD; Kellett v. Shepard, 139 Ill. 443, 28 N. E. 571, 34 N. E. 254.

Such construction is assisted by the circumstance of there being an immediate gift to the same class. See Crisp v. Crisp, 61 Md. 149.

But an indication of an intention to postpone the ascertainment of the members of a class to whom a moiety in a trust estate is given upon the termination of the trust has been found in the fact that the gift of the other moiety to a named person or his issue is made contingent upon one or the other being alive at the time of distribution. See Boston Safe Deposit & T. Co. v. Blanchard, 196 Mass. 35, 81 N. E. 654.

19. Miscellaneous.

An additional reason for giving the words of the limitation their prima facie meaning may be found in the fact that a construction which would postpone the time for ascertaining the membership of the class would render the provision obnoxious to the statute of perpetuities. See Nicoll v. Irby, — Conn. —, 77 Atl. 957.

The fact that the limitation over is only said executors power to apply said sum of five thousand dollars to the purchase of an annuity in their discretion, for the benefit of my said granddaughter Marguerite, in the manner as declared with respect to the proceeds of my property in Manhattan, Kansas, given my granddaughter Lillian." The granddaughter died April, 1907, leaving her surviving her daughter, Isabel Bingham Buckwell, her only heir at law and next of kin. The testatrix died, as stated, January 20, 1908. A question presented to us is, Did this legacy lapse because of the death of the legatee prior to that of the testatrix. The courts below have held that it did not lapse and become a part of the residuary estate, but vested in Isabel Bingham Buckwell.

of such property as shall then remain is not sufficient to show an intention that the heirs shall be ascertained as of the time of distribution. Childs v. Russell, 11 Met. 16; Kenyon's Petition, 17 R. I. 149, 20 Atl. 24. See also Clark v. Shawen, 190 Ill. 47, 60 N. E. 116; Smith v. Winsor, 239 Ill. 567, 88 N. E. 482; Keniston v. Mayhew, 169 Mass. 166, 47 N. E. 612; Clark v. Mack, 161 Mich. 545, 28 L.R.A.(N.S.) 479, 126 N. W. 632.

In Smith v. Winsor, 239 Ill. 567, 88 N. E. 482, the fact that a power of disposition given to a life tenant was limited to the right to use the property for her own support, comfort, and enjoyment, or for such charitable purposes as she should deem worthy, was taken into consideration, together with other indications of intention, as showing an intention to exclude the life tenant from the class to whom the remainder was limited.

A direction to devote the income and such of the principal of a testamentary trust as may be necessary for the comfort of a daughter, who was the sole next of kin and heir at law at the time of the death of the testatrix, makes it unreasonable to suppose that such daughter was intended to take under limitation over in the event of the death of any of such daughter's children before becoming twenty-three years old. Hardy v. Gage, 66 N. H. 552, 22 Atl. 557.

Where the termination of the life estate is the time fixed for the gift to take effect, then is the time when the members of the class are to be ascertained. Bisson v. West Shore R. Co. 143 N. Y. 125, 38 N. E. 104.

Where a power of appointment is given in trust to a life tenant for the benefit of a class, it seems that, in default of such appointment, the persons entitled to an execution of the power are those answering the description at the time of the death of the donee of the power, rather than at testator's death. See Harding v. Glyn, 1 Atk. 469, note; Re Saville, 14 Week. Rep. 603; Hoey v. Kenny, 25 Barb. 396.

But where such a power was given in the event of failure of a prior limitation of the remainder, it has been held that the property vested in those who were members of the class at testator's decease. See Pope v. Whitcombe, 3 Meriv. 689, 17 Revised Rep. 171, 686.

III. Instances of application of rule.

a. Preliminary statement.

Although, as above stated, the construction of a limitation to heirs, next of kin, etc., is not affected by the circumstance that the gift is contingent (Bird v. Luckie, 8 Hare, 301, 14 Jur. 1015; Tuttle v. Woolworth, 62 N. J. Eq. 532, 50 Atl. 445), and although it is immaterial whether such a limitation be regarded as an executory devise or a contingent remainder (Buzby's Appeal, 61 Pa. 111), the decisions which follow are arranged, for the purpose of facilitating the finding of parallel cases, with regard to the nature of the gift.

b. Where gift is immediate.

In Rayner v. Mowbray, 3 Bro. Ch. 234, where testator devised property in trust to permit his wife to receive the rents for her life, and after her decease to sell the same, and then as follows: "To divide and pay the monies arising by virtue of the sale of his said estate to and among all and every such person and persons who shall appear to be related to me only, share and share alike; and that such person or persons shall prove himself, herself, or themselves entitled to the same in six months after my said estates shall be so sold as aforesaid; save and except" a nephew,— it was said that though the distribution was deferred to the death of the wife, that did not prevent the interests from vesting at the death of testator.

In Masters v. Hooper, 4 Bro. Ch. 207, testator gave his residuary estate to A for life, then to B for life, "and after his decease, then the rest and residue of my said estate to be divided amongst all by relations, share and share alike." It was held that the relations referred to were not those living at the death of the last taker for life, but that the residue vested, sub-intention must spring from the will itself. When the doubt exists, the intention must be sought through a scrutiny and study of the provisions of the will and a consideration of the relevant and competent facts and circumstances; and, while judicial rules of construction may be called in aid, they may not frustrate the intention. Neither rules of construction nor the technical sense of words can prevail against the superior force of intention, the ascertainment and declaration of which is the whole province and duty of the court.

At the outset, therefore, the inquiry arises as to whether there arises from the language within the entire will a legitimate doubt as to the intention of the testatrix when she used the word

"heirs." The word has various meanings. It has the primary and correct meaning of designating those on whom the law, immediately on the death of an owner of real estate, casts the estate therein. Under that meaning it relates only to real estate, and describes the persons appointed by law to succeed to it in cases of intestacy. That meaning the courts will give it without question, unless there is in the will itself language or disposition which suggests that the purpose in the mind of the testator is not thereby fulfilled. It has, however, popular or colloquial meanings and with sensitive flexibility yields easily and quickly from its primary, legal meaning in favor of an inconsistent or opposing intention. Applied to the succession of personal esject to the life interests therein, in such of the testator's next of kin as were living at the time of his death.

In Doe ex dem. Garner v. Lawson, 3 East. 278, where testator devised property upon trust for his son for life, with remainder to his issue, and in case of his marriage with certain persons or his dying without issue, then to his nephew for life, and after his decease then "for and amongst such person and persons, and to his and their several and respective heirs as tenants in common, and not as joint tenants, as shall appear and can be proved to be my next of kin, in such parts and proportions as they would by virtue of the statute of distributions have been entitled to my personal estate if I had died intestate," it was held that as the persons who would have been entitled to his personal estate if he had died intestate would have been so entitled at the time of his death, the limitation over is to those who were his next of kin at the time of his death, and not at the time when it took effect, notwithstanding the words of description used being in the future, since words to postpone the vesting in possession of an interest are naturally prospective. And it was further held that there was no such inconsistency in the circumstance that an estate for life was given to one who was also entitled to a share of the remainder over in fee, as would get rid of the plain meaning of the words.

In Collisam v. Sams, Tamlyn, 346, a bequest upon trust for one during her natural life, "and after her decease upon trust to divide the same unto and amongst the next of kin in due course of administration," was construed as referring to the next of kin at the time of testator's death.

In Doe ex dem. Pilkington v. Spratt, 5 Barn. & Ad. 731, 2 Nev. & M. 524, 3 L. J. K. B. N. S. 53, testator devised lands to certain persons or the survivor of them during their natural lives, "and after the decease of all of them, to the male heir at law of me, the said William Spratt, his heirs and assigns forever." It was held that there was nothing to show that the testator did not mean by the words "male heir at law" what the law would strictly speaking intend, heir male at law at the time of his death, it being only conjectural that testator looked to the period of the actual possession, and not the vesting of the estate in remainder.

In Boydell v. Golightly, 14 Sim. 327, 9 Jur. 2, where testator devised his entire estate to trustees, directing them, inter alia, to apply such part of the income as they should think sufficient to the maintenance and support during his life of testator's son and heir apparent, with remainder to the first and other sons of such son in tail, with remainder to another person for life, with remainder to the first and other sons of such person in tail, etc., the ultimate limitation being to the testator's own right heirs, it was held that the ultimate trust vested on the testator's death in his son as his heir at law at his death.

In Jenkins v. Gower, 2 Colly. Ch. Cas. 537, 10 Jur. 702, where testator directed his trustees to pay the dividends of certain stock to his wife for life, and after her decease to pay over the trust estate as testator might by codicil appoint, and in default of such direction or appointment, then to transfer and make over the same unto such person or persons as would, under and by virtue of the statutes of distribution of intestates' estates, have been entitled to his personal estate in case he had died intestate, it was held that there was nothing in the context, or the circumstance that the widow took for life, to show that the persons entitled to take under the limitation over were to be ascertained at other than the time of testator's own decease.

In Rawlinson v. Wass, 9 Hare, 673, 16 Jur. 282, where testator devised his estate in trust for his daughter, who was his sole heir, for life, and from and after her decease to such persons as she should by will appoint, and, in default of such appointment, to testator's heirs and assigns ex parte materna as if he had died intestate, and by codicil empowered the trustees to sink any part of the personal estate or tate, it means next of kin. Tillman v. Davis, 95 N. Y. 17, 47 Am. Rep. 1. It not infrequently designates children. Heath v. Hewitt, 127 N. Y. 166, 13 L.R.A. 46, 24 Am. St. Rep. 438, 27 N. E. 959; Livingston v. Greene, 52 N. Y. 118; Scott v. Guernsey, 49 N. Y. 106; Thurber v. Chambers, 66 N. Y. 42. Legatees and devisees have been designated by it. Roland v. Miller, 100 Pa. 47; Re Hull, 30 Misc. 281, 63 N. Y. Supp. 725; Plummer v. Shepherd, 94 Md. 466, 51 Atl. 173; Clark v. Scott, 67 Pa. 446; Shapleigh v. Shapleigh, 69 N. H. 577, 44 Atl. 107; Greenwood v. Murray, 28 Minn. 120, 9 N. W. 629. We have, as the intention expressed by the instruments required, given the meaning of issue or descendants. Re Cramer, 170 N. Y. 271, 63 N. E. 279; Snider v. Snider, 160 N. Y. 151, 54 N. E. 676; Johnson v. Brasington, 156 N. Y. 181, 50 N. E. 859; Taggart v. Murray, 53 N. Y. 233; Kiah v. Grenier, 56 N. Y. 220.

Whenever it reasonably appears that words within a will were not used in their technical sense, but according to a vocabulary of the testator, they are to have the signification he designed for them if the nature of the estate which he meant to create is not prohibited by law. The provisions of the will under consideration indicate that the testatrix did not intend that the operative exercise of the power of appointment given Mrs. Wallace depended upon the survival beyond her life of one or more of her brothers or sisters. The disposition by the testatrix of the estate is proceeds of the sale of real estate in the purchase of an annuity for the daughter, it was held that the ultimate limitation must be construed as referring to the heir of the testator at the time of his death, so that the daughter was entitled to a conveyance of the estate by the trustees.

In Gorbell v. Davison, 18 Beav. 556, where a testator, after creating successive life estates, provided that at the decease of the last tenant for life the principal sum should be equally divided amongst his next of kin, but should no claimant appear after twelve months, that the principal sum should be equally divided amongst certain charitable societies, it was held that the claim being no part of the qualification necessary to constitute the next of kin legatees, the remainder vested in those who were his next of kin at the time of his decease; notwithstanding the fact that the life tenants were such next of kin.

In Moss v. Dunlop, Johns. V. C. (Eng.) where a testator devised his estate in trust to convert into money and invest, and out of the dividends and interest to pay a number of annuities, and upon further trust to dispose of any residue of income remaining after paying the annuities and also such sum or sums of money as might become available by reason of the determination of any of the annuities in such manner as testator might appoint, "and failing such appointment, to pay the same to my own next of kin for the time being, equally among them, share and share alike," it was held that there was no such clear, express, and positive necessity for construing the words used as referring to a future time as to overcome the general rule that the words "next of kin" mean next of kin at testator's death, although the effect of such construction was in effect to reduce the words "for the time being" to a nullity, since it is a matter of constant occurrence to find in an instrument more words than are necessary; but that, on the other hand, such construction is supported by the consideration that it would be extremely inconvenient to constitute a fresh class of next of kin, to be ascertained as each of the annuities fell in, by the absence of such words as "from time to time," in the direction to pay, and the inference from the words "to pay the same" as the whole was to be treated as a single fund, to go all together in one direction.

In Lee v. Lee, 1 Drew. & S. 85, 29 L. J. Ch. N. S. 788, 6 Jur. N. S. 621, 8 Week. Rep. 443, where a testator, after giving to his daughter, who was his sole next of kin at the time of his decease, a life estate, gave it after her death upon trust "to divide such residue unto and equally among my next of kin, but exclusive of my said nephew Leonard Lee, and my said nieces Mary Jane Lee and Emma Lee, according to the statute for the distribution of personal estates in case of a party dying intestate," it was held that, aside from the passage excluding the nephew and nieces, it was clear, both upon principle and authority, that the daughter, being the only child and next of kin of the testator at the time of his death, would have been entitled to take under the gift to the next of kin, notwithstanding the previous life estate given to her; neither the words "pay and divide," nor the words "between and amongst," which seem to import a plurality of next of kin, being sufficient to affect that conclusion. And it was further held that while the argument that the express exclusion of persons who would be members of the class if the daughter were excluded is a clear indication of intention that such class should take, would have considerable force if it might be assumed that the testator, when making his will, regarded it as certain that the state of his family would remain precisely the same at his death as at the date of his will, the assumption upon which such argument was based failed in the present case, it appearing that the nephew and nieces whom testator wished to exclude were the children of a brother who was living when the will was made, showing that he had in his mind the possibility of changes taking place in the state of his family by death; and therefore that the exclusion of the nephews and nieces did not afford any sufficient indication of testator's inconsistent with that intention. She gave sparingly and cautiously to her children. While the value of the estate is not made known by the findings, a very substantial part of it at least passed into the rest, residue, and remainder, of which only one half is given to a child, Mrs. Edson, who had a son, to whom she could give that which she had received. We may with reason and just cause believe that the testatrix did not intend to compel Mrs. Wallace to hand over or distribute her estate to those from whom she herself had withheld it. A careful reading of the provisions in favor of all the sons and daughters, except Mrs. Edson, is persuasive to the conclusion that she anxiously intended that an important part of her estate should not pass under the ownership, with its power to lose, spend, and squander, of her children, but should be preserved for the next generation at least. This conclusion is aided by the fact that she gave by the will to three of her grandchildren, viz., the son of Mrs. Smith and two married daughters of Charles. The findings of the referee establish the fact that Mrs. Wallace had no children, and that there are three other grandchildren, one of whom is the son of Mrs. Edson, and two, Madelaine Diehl and Theodore Diehl, are the children of Charles. The will shows the testatrix desired that her property should be deemed a general provision for the family, and that as such the one-half should be dispensed within the family by Mrs. Wallace. Another fact intention to exclude his daughter from taking under the gift to the next of kin.

In Thompson v. Smith, 27 Can. S. C. 628, a will by which testator, after giving his wife and daughter, who was his only child, an estate during their joint lives and the life of the survivor, provided: "I do further will and desire that at the decease of both the said Lissy Thompson and Mary Anna Thompson, the said residue of my real and personal property shall be enjoyed and go to the benefit of my lawful heirs," was construed, in accordance with the rule established in Bullock v. Downes, 9 H. L. Cas. 1, as ultimately limiting the property to those who were testator's heirs at the time of his death.

In Rees v. Fraser, 25 Grant, Ch. (U. C.) 253, a gift of testator's residuary estate to his wife, "and, on her decease, the same to go [sic.] my heirs and next of kin," was construed as limiting the property to persons answering the description at the death of the testator.

In Johnson v. Webber, 65 Conn. 501, 33 Atl. 506, where a testatrix, after creating a trust for the benefit of her granddaughters for life, and certain other trusts, provided, "and should there, upon the ending of all the trusts herein, remain anything not by preceding provisions finally and fully disposed of, I give, bequeath, and devise the same to my heirs at law," it was held that persons taking thereunder were the heirs at law of the testatrix upon her decease, since, had she desired such property to go to such persons as might be her heirs at law at the final termination of the trusts, she would naturally have used in describing them, language somewhat similar in character to that used by her in another provision in which property was limited at the expiration of a trust estate therein to her "then lineal descendants."

In Doe ex dem. Wright v. Gooden, 6 Houst. (Del.) 397, where testator, after devising various parcels of real estate to each of his sons for life, and at their decease to his daughters for life, added, "and at the death of my said daughters, I give my beforementioned lands to my heirs forever," it was held, in view of the disinclination of the law toward a construction which postpones vesting, and the fact that the result would be in the end to equalize the division of the estate among his children, that the remainder vested in such persons as were testator's heirs at law at the time of his own death, not such as should become his heirs at law on the death of the last surviving life tenant.

In Clark v. Shawen, 190 Ill. 47, 60 N. E. 116, testator, after giving his wife the use of his entire estate for life, directed that after her death it be divided "as hereinafter mentioned;" and, after making certain bequests to his various relatives, directed: "I will that the residue of my estate, if there be any left, be divided according to the statute of the state of Illinois amongst all of my heirs except those above named that I have excluded." It was held that futurity not being annexed to the substance of the gift, and there being nothing in the will to indicate that testator intended to refer to those who should be his heirs at any period subsequent to his death, but, on the other hand (as manifested by the excluding clause), that he evidently had in mind those who should be his heirs at the time of his death, and not those who should be his heirs at some future time, when his wife should die, the property devised by the residuary clause vested in those who were heirs of the testator at the time of his death, except such as were excluded by the express terms of the will.

In Mosier v. Bowser, 226 Ill. 46, 80 N. E. 730, where a testator limited a remainder after a life estate to relations of himself and his wife "according to their heirship," it was held that the heirs of the testator were determined as of the time of his death.

In Smith v. Winsor, 239 Ill. 567, 88 N. E. 482, testator gave to his wife, in case she should survive him, his entire estate for life, with full power to sell and convey and to use the proceeds or any part thereof in any way she should desire for her com-points to the conclusion that the testatrix did not in the eleventh paragraph use the word "heirs" in its technical significance. Paragraph twelfth is: "Twelfth: Any real or personal property remaining undisposed of by this my will, or to which my sons Thomas and Charles or either of them for any reason might otherwise, as heir at law or next of kin, become entitled, whether under the laws of the state of New York or any other state, shall vest in my said executors in place of my said sons, and shall be converted by my said executors into cash, and my executors are instructed to use the same for the purchase of annuities for each of my said sons Thomas and Charles." The third and only additional use in the will of the word is in the thirteenth paragraph, for or advantage, or for such charitable purposes as she should deem worthy, adding, "at and upon her death, the remainder of the said estate, if any, to descend to my heirs at law in proportion as designated and provided by statutes of the state of Illinois." He further provided that his wife should not be held accountable for the use or disposition of such estate or any part thereof, or the proceeds arising from any sale thereof. In case his wife should not survive him, he directed that his estate should descend to his heirs at law. It was held that the will evinced a clear intention that the persons whom the testator designated by the words "my heirs at law" should take a vested remainder in all his property, subject, however, to be defeated by the exercise of the power of disposition possessed by the widow.

In Bunting v. Speck, 41 Kan. 424, 3 L.R.A. 690, 21 Pac. 288, where a will provided, "I give to my wife . . . all my estate, real and personal, to have and to hold during her lifetime, and then they are to descend to my legal heirs," it was held that although the language used was not free from ambiguity, the word "then" did not fix the time when the remainder should vest at the death of the life tenant, but that it vested at the death of the testator.

In Weil v. King, 31 Ky. L. Rep. 1010, 104 S. W. 380, where testator, after giving his wife certain property for life, provided that at her death it should "be equally divided between my heirs per stirpes," it was held that the remainder vested in those who were testator's heirs at the time of his death.

In Merrill v. Wooster, 99 Me. 460, 59 Atl. 596, it is said that even if the legal title to a fund set apart by executors for the purpose of paying an annuity had been held by trustees expressly appointed, in trust for the life of the annuitant, a gift of the residuary estate to be divided equally between testator's heirs would be construed as a gift to those who were the heirs of the testator at the time of his death.

33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

which forfeits the benefit or share of any of her "heirs" who shall legally dispute or contest any of the provisions of the will. The manifest purpose of the testatrix in the twelfth paragraph required that the status of Thomas and Charles against which she was providing should be accurately expressed. If she were in the eleventh or thirteenth paragraph designating only those of that identical status of heir at law or next of kin, she would have used the identical expressions. Bundy v. Bundy, 38 N. Y. 410, 422. It is probable rather than improbable from the thirteenth paragraph, considered by itself, that the testatrix intended the forfeiture therein prescribed to apply to all persons benefited by the will who might legally contest it. Inasmuch as the

In Crisp v. Crisp, 61 Md. 149, a devise in trust for the benefit of testator's wife during her natural life, which at her death was to "go to and become the property and estate of such person or persons as would, by the now-existing laws of the state of Maryland, be entitled to take an estate in fee simple in lands by descent from me, and the heirs, executors, and administrators of such person or persons, per stirpes, and not per capita," was, in view of the general rule that the law favors the vesting of estates, and the fact that there was nothing in the language of the will or the surrounding circumstances to indicate that the testator intended to fix on any future period for the vesting of the gift, construed as having reference to those who were testator's heirs at the time of his death,—especially as, by the residuary clause of his will, testator gave the residue "to be divided among my legal heirs, under the laws of the state of Maryland, in the same way that it would without a will."

In Childs v. Russell, 11 Met. 16, a provision by which the testator directed his executor to invest his residuary estate to raise a fund out of which an annuity given to his wife should be paid during her natural life, "and after her decease, should she survive me, I will and order that all the rest, residue, and remainder of my estate, real, personal, or mixed, and of whatsoever name or nature, shall be divided among my heirs according to law, excepting the share which will by law descend to my daughter," which share was directed to be held in trust for her during her lifetime, and at her decease to be equally divided among her children,—was construed as vesting a right to the distributive shares in those who were testator's heirs at the time of his death; the court emphasizing the fact that while the estate was to remain in the hands of the executor, qua executor, for distribution, charged with the payment of the annuity, it was the subject of the bequest, so that it was to be regarded as an immediate gift, the time for payment of which only being postponed. The court further rejected the argument that inaswill raises a doubt as to the intention of the testatrix, and, for the reasons stated, fair grounds for holding that she intended that Mrs. Wallace should be free to select from the family the beneficiaries under her will, aid in reaching the correct conclusion may be sought in the established rules of construction. Such a rule is, the courts will with alacrity and satisfaction lay hold of slight expressions as a ground for avoiding a construction or decision which excludes the issue of a deceased child from participation in a general family provision. Re Paton, 111 N. Y. 480, 18 N. E. 625. It is apparent from the will that the general purpose of the testatrix was to include her grandchildren in the distributees of her estate, and, the will permitting, we reach the conclusion, in accord with that purpose, that Mrs. Wallace may, in fulfilment of the intention of the testatrix, exercise the power of appointment for the benefit of any descendants of the testatrix.

Second. Did the legacy to Marguerite Wetherill Buckwell lapse by reason of her death prior to that of the testatrix? It is argued in the negative that the words "and I hereby give and bequeath such sum of five thousand dollars to her" effect a gift or legacy, absolute, and unaffected by the preceding words of the paragraph, upon the principle that when two clauses in a will are irreconcilable, so that they cannot possibly stand together, the one which is posterior in position shall be considered as indicating a subsequent intention, and pre-much as the annuity was to be paid from the fund, and not from the income, so that it might happen that the whole fund would be exhausted, such provision rendered the gift of the residue contingent, so as to postpone the vesting to the happening of the event.

In Brown v. Lawrence, 3 Cush. 390, where a testator revoked by codicil a devise to a son and his heirs, and gave him in lieu thereof a life interest in the real and personal property theretofore devised to him, "so that no more than the income, interest, or rent of any portion of my real or personal estate, and not the principal of said personal or fee of said real estate, may come to the said Samuel, my son, which, at his decease, it is my will that the said real and personal estate shall then go to the legal heirs," it was held that the heirs referred to were those of testator himself, and were ascertained at the moment and by the event of the testator's decease.

In Abbott v. Bradstreet, 3 Allen, 587, it was held that no contrary intention can be found in the fact that those to whom a life estate is given are among testator's heirs at law, or that a bequest is given to another heir at law in full of any share to which such person may be entitled out of the estate, which will preclude a bequest of a fund at the decease of testator's last surviving child, "to go and descend to my heirs at law," from being construed as referring to those who are heirs at the time of the testator's decease; but that, on the other hand, the testator's use of the words "go and descend" strengthens such construction.

There is nothing in a testamentary provision by which, after devising the residue of his real estate to his daughters and the survivor of them until death or marriage, testator continued: "After the marriage or death of my surviving daughter taking under this item, the estate herein devised shall descend to those persons who may then be entitled to take the same as my heirs," to preclude the application of the rule that a devise to heirs is ordinarily understood to refer to those who are such at the time of testator's death, as the word "then" is not inserted by way of description of the persons who are to take, the word "surviving" not being superadded, but by way of defining the time when they shall come into the enjoyment of that which is devised to them; and the application of such rule is fortified by the use of the word "descend," which ordinarily denotes the vesting of the estate by operation of law in the heirs immediately upon the death of the ancestor. Dove v. Torr, 128 Mass. 38.

The construction of a testamentary provision by which testator, after creating an estate for life in his residuary estate, gave and bequeathed such residue after the death of the life tenant "to my legal heirs as the law provides, other than those hereinbefore mentioned," resulting from the application of the rule which considers the persons referred to as heirs as those who were such at the time of the testator's decease, is fortified by the circumstance that the latter part of the clause quoted excludes the tenant for life, which would be superfluous if the vesting of the remainder were postponed until her death. Minot v. Harris, 132 Mass. 528.

There is nothing to preclude the operation of the established principle that when a bequest is made to one or more for life, and remainder to the testator's heirs, the bequest is to those who are the heirs at the time of his decease, unless there are words indicating a clear intention that it shall go to those who may be in that relation at the happening of the contingency upon which the estate is to be distributed, in a testamentary provision by which a testator in a will not drawn by a lawyer directed his executors to pay the income from his residuary estate to his wife during her life, "and at her decease to divide the principal thereof equally between my blood relations of the degree which the law permits." Cummings v. Cummings, 146 Mass. 501, 16 N. E. 401.

In Keniston v. Mayhew, 169 Mass. 166, 47 N. E. 612, it was held, construing a bequest by which a sister was given the re-will, unless the general scope of the will leads to a contrary conclusion; and, as a second step in the argument, the statute (2 Rev. Stat. 2d ed. pt. 2, chap. 6, title 1, § 52) providing that whenever a testator gives a legacy to a child who dies during the lifetime of the testator, leaving a child who survives the testator, the legacy shall not lapse, but shall vest in the surviving child is invoked. This position cannot be maintained. The language of the codicil clearly and plainly expresses the intention that the bequest should become effective only in case the legatee survived the testator. The words above quoted are not a clause or a bequest independent of the words immediately preceding them.

There are not, within the principle involuntary estate during her lifetime, with power of disposition, "at her decease to go to my nearest of kin," that the nearest of kin should be determined as of the death of the testatrix, and not as of the death of the life tenant, although such life tenant was one of the next of kin.

In Pierce v. Knight, 182 Mass. 72, 64 N. E. 692, where testator directed whenever the income of the estate should exceed the annuities directed to be paid, such surplus should be divided by his executors and trustees "among my heirs at law in such way and in such proportion as may seem to them most in accordance with my wishes, devoting the sum or sums in preference to the purchase of land and homestead for the young married persons among my heirs," it was held that although there were among the persons who were the testator's presumptive heirs when he used this language, and who became his heirs at his death, none who could be called young married persons, this did not make it reasonably certain that the testator did not use the phrase "my heirs at law" and "my heirs" in their usual sense, where, when the provision was written, he had a nephew of twenty-nine who had been married but a few months, a niece of twenty-nine who had been married but a few days, and another niece who had been married five years, and his brothers and sisters had other marriageable children, so that a death of a brother or sister before that of testator would place among his heirs persons who would answer to the description.

In WELCH v. BLANCHARD, the general rule was held to apply to a provision whereby testator gave one sixth of the residue of his estate to his son outright, and five sixths thereof to trustees to pay the income thereof to all his daughters in equal shares, and to the issue of any deceased daughter (such issue taking their mother's share), adding, "after the decease of the survivor of my daughters, the trust fund created by this item shall be distributed to those persons who may then take the same as my heirs;" notwithstanding the fact that the gift over was made only by invoked, two disposing clauses. The paragraph is free from contradictory or inconsistent parts and constitutes one disposition. So clear is this that it is enunciation rather than construction to say that the testatrix, fearing that the direction to the executors to pay, in case Mrs. Buckwell survived, was not a complete testamentary giving, added the words quoted, which were inoperative unless the payment, depending upon the survivorship, was made. The five thousand dollars was not bequeathed to Mrs. Buckwell within the meaning of the statute (2 Rev. Stat. § 52), which, therefore, has no application. The courts below erred in holding that the legacy did not lapse.

As to the other questions presented, we a direction to distribute, where the scheme of the will was to create life estates in five different funds, and as the life estate or last life estate in each fund came to an end, the principal of that fund was to pass to or be distributed among testator's heirs, as it is hardly conceivable that the testator should have intended that these several gifts over to heirs should be to three or four or possibly five sets of different hypothetical heirs.

There is nothing in the testamentary provision by which a testatrix gave all her estate to her sisters, to be used and controlled by them until the death of the survivor, "when, if anything remains, it shall then be divided among the nearest of kin," to take the case out of the general rule that the death of the person whose next of kin is mentioned determined the membership of the class, in the absence of provision to the contrary. Clark v. Mack, 161 Mich. 545, 28 L.R.A.(N.S.) 479, 126 N. W. 632.

In McDaniel v. Allen, 64 Miss. 417, 1 So. 356, where a testator gave his residuary estate to his wife "during the term of her natural life, and upon her death to be divided equally among the heirs of my body," it was held, in accordance with the principle that no remainder will be construed to be contingent which may, consistently with intention, be deemed vested, that the remainder, limited by the testator to his heirs at law was vested, and not contingent; and therefore that those who were alive at his death took the estate, and not those only who survived the tenant for life.

In Smith v. Allen, 32 App. Div. 374, 53 N. Y. Supp. 114, where a testator gave his residuary estate to his wife during widowhood, and upon her death or marriage to "such person or persons as would be legally entitled to succeed to and inherit the same in case I died intestate," it was held that the gift being direct and immediate, and not merely by a direction to distribute and divide at the termination of a precedent estate, the intention of the testator was to create a vested remainder, to take effect concur in the conclusions of the Appellate Division.

That part of the interlocutory and final judgments adjudging that the legacy of $5,000 bequeathed to Marguerite Wetherill Buckwell does not lapse and form a part of the residuary estate of Margaretta M. Diehl, but that said legacy vested in the surviving child of Marguerite Wetherill Buckwell, the defendant Isabel Bingham Buckwell, and that additional part of the final judgment adjudging that the plaintiffs pay to the guardian of the person and property of the defendant Isabel Bingham Buckwell, after security given, the sum of $4,- 500, together with the interest or income on the sum of $5,000 from the 13th day of April, 1909, and that the plaintiffs pay to Frederick A. Drake, Esq., guardian ad litem for the infant defendant Isabel Bingham Buckwell, the sum of $500 heretofore allowed to him as guardian ad litem out of the said Isabel Bingham Buckwell's share or portion of the estate, should be reversed. In all other respects said judgments should be affirmed, with costs to the plaintiffs and to the respondent Lillian Purcell, to be paid out of the estate.

Haight, Vann, Werner, and Hiscock, at the time of his death, although the enjoyment by the legatees was to be postponed until the widow should remarry or die.

In affirming this decision in 161 N. Y. 478, 55 N. E. 1056, the court of appeals said: "There can be no doubt as to the intention of the testator. Were there persons in being at his death who were entitled to the estate on the termination of the life estate of the widow? Under the will he gave, devised, and bequeathed 'to such person or persons who would be legally entitled to succeed to and inherit the same in case he died intestate, and to their heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns forever.' Who would inherit in case he had died intestate? Surely his heirs at law and next of kin then in being. He not only gave the remainder to them, but he gave it to their heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns. This clearly constituted a vested remainder under the statute."

In Rives v. Frizzle, 43 N. C. (8 Ired. Eq.) 237, where testator gave certain personal property to his wife for life, and provided that after her death it should "be equally divided between by lawful heirs," except a share given in trust for a daughter, who was excluded from taking any other share, it was held that the limitation not being to such persons "as may be my heirs at the death of my wife," but to "my lawful heirs" simpliciter, it imports those who were the heirs at the testator's death, who took in right then, though they were not to take in possession until the termination of the life estate.

In Walker v. Dunshee, 38 Pa. 430, a devise to testator's three children in tail, with cross remainders in tail, remainder to his right heirs and to the right heirs of his wife as tenants in common, forever, was construed as vesting the remainder on testator's death in the next of kin of himself and his wife, after excluding their children.

In McCrea's Estate, 5 Pa. Dist. R. 448, a bequest of a sum of money in trust to pay the income to testator's wife for life, and then to his sisters or the survivor of them, "and at the death of my said wife and sisters to pay over the same to my right heirs." was construed as referring to the heirs of the testator living at the date of his death.

In Kenyon's Petition, 17 R. I. 149, 20 Atl. 294, it was held that no contrary intention which would preclude the application of the rule was manifest in a will by which a testator gave the residue of his estate to a trustee, to have and to hold for and during the natural life of testator's son, in trust for such son, with power to sell, mortgage, or lease the same with the son's written consent for the purpose of paying off encumbrances, making repairs, improving the investment, or, should the income prove insufficient, for the purpose of raising money for the necessary support or the advancement of the son; and further provided: "After the decease of said [son] I give and bequeath all the property affected by the above trust which should then remain to my own right heirs;" notwithstanding the circumstance of the giving of the power of disposal to the trustee, the fact that the son was testator's sole heir at the time of his death, and the fact that the limitation over was of such property as should remain.

In Tucker v. Tucker, 63 Vt. 104, 25 Am. St. Rep. 743, 21 Atl. 272, where a testator, after giving his sister the use and occupancy of the residue of his estate during her natural life, directed that it should be distributed at her decease among his lawful heirs, it was held that, as no estate will be held contingent unless very decided terms are used in the will, or it is necessary to so hold it in order to carry out the other provisions or implications of the will, the words "amongst my lawful heirs" had reference to those persons who were the lawful heirs of testator at the time of his death, and not those who might be such at the time of the death of the life tenant.

In Jones v. Knappen, 63 Vt. 391, 14 L.R.A. 293, 22 Atl. 630, where a testator, after giving his wife the use and income of his estate during her natural life, continued: "At her decease I give, devise, and bequeath all my estate that may be remaining, as follows," giving certain sums to individual legatees, and the residue to the next of kin of himself and his wife, one half to the next of kin of each, to be distributed according to the law of intestate concur with Cullen, Ch. J., Gray, J., concurs with Collin, J.

Judgment of Appellate Division and that Special Term modified, first, so that, instead of declaring that the power of appointment given by the eleventh paragraph of the testator's will may be effectually exercised for the benefit of any issue or descendants of Margaretta M. Diehl, it be adjudged and declared that it may be exercised for the benefit of any of the heirs of said Margaretta M. Diehl, such heirs to be ascertained at the death of the donee of the power, Margaretta Wetherill Wallace; second, that, instead of adjudging that the legacy of $5,000 bequeathed to Marguerite Wetherill Buckwell did not lapse, it be adjudged and declared that said legacy did lapse and fall into and become part of the residuary estate of Margaretta M. Diehl; and the direction that the legacy be paid to the guardian of the person and property of defendant Isabel Bingham Buckwell, and Frederick A. Drake, guardian ad litem, is reversed; and, as modified, the said judgments are affirmed, with costs to all parties who have appeared and filed briefs in this court, payable out of the estate.

states, it was held that the language used being as consistent with an intention to postpone the enjoyment only as to postpone the vesting of the remainder, his next of kin took a vested interest at the time of his death.

c. Where gift is contingent on future event.

1. Remainders.

In Harrington v. Harte, 1 Cox, Ch. Cas. 131, where testatrix gave a fund after the death of her daughter to such persons as the daughter should appoint, and in default of such appointment, to such persons as should then, by virtue of the statute of distributions of intestates' estates, be entitled to testatrix's personal estate in case she had died intestate, the question was raised whether the funds should go to such persons as were next of kin to the testatrix at the time of her death, or such as were so at the death of the first taker; but counsel gave up the point, and admitted that the word "then" was to be taken as an adverb of relation, and not of time, and that the fund must therefore go to such persons as were next of kin at the time of testatrix's death.

In Holloway v. Holloway, 5 Ves. Jr. 399, where a testator gave property upon trust for a daughter for life, and after her decease to pay the principal unto such child or children as she should leave at the time of her decease, in such shares and proportions as she should think proper to give the same, further providing, "and in case she shall die leaving no child, then as to £1,000 out of the said £5,000 in trust for the executors, administrators, or assigns of my said daughter Hindes, and as to the £4,000 remainder of the said £5,000 in trust for such person or persons as shall be my heir or heirs at law,"—it was held that neither the language of the will nor the circumstances that the daughter would take as an heir was sufficient to give the words any other than their prima facie construction; heirs at law at testator's own death.

In Pope v. Whitcombe, 3 Meriv. 689, 17 Revised Rep. 171, 686, where testator gave the residue of his estate to his wife for life, with remainder to his son if he should attain twenty-one, but in case of his son's death before twenty-one and without issue, directed his wife to dispose thereof among his, the testator's, relations in such manner as she should think fit, it was held that the property vested in those who were the testator's next of kin at the time of his death, though in uncertain proportions.

In Lasbury v. Newport, 9 Beav. 376, where testator, after giving each of his two daughters life estates, with remainder to their children, directed that, in default of children, the trustees should stand seised and possessed in trust for his next of kin under and according to the statute of distribution of estates and effects of persons dying intestate, the whole thereof to be considered as personal, and not as real estate, it was held that there being no reference to anything future, the daughters, who were his only children, and sole next of kin at his death, took under the ultimate limitation.

In Urquhart v. Urquhart, 13 Sim. 613, 8 Jur. 161, where testator directed one half of the income from his residuary estate to be paid to his daughter, who was his nearest of kin at his death, and the other half to his wife, during their joint lives; and that if his daughter survived her mother, or married and left issue, then that the whole of the capital should be paid to her after his wife's death; but if she died first, without marrying or leaving issue, then that the trustees should accumulate the interest of the residue, so far as it was not directed to be paid to his wife; and that on her death one half of the principal should be divided amongst his nearest of kin; it was held the words "nearest of kin" must be given their ordinary meaning, as referring to those who were such at testator's death, unless it should appear on the face of the will that he meant to use them in a different sense; that neither the previous provision for the daughter, who was his nearest of kin at his death, nor the direction for the accumulation of her moiety during the life of his wife, nor the fact that the phraseology used was applicable to a plurality of persons, and not to a single individual, was enough to show that testator did not mean those who should be his nearest of kin at the time of his death.

In Wrightson v. Macaulay, 14 Mees. & W. 214, 15 L. J. Exch. N. S. 121, where a testator devised property to his son and heir at law for life, remainder to his first and other sons in tail, remainder to his daughters in fee, and upon default of issue, then upon certain other limitation, the ultimate limitation being to the use of the testator's own right heirs being of the name of Heber, and his heir, and their heirs and assigns forever, it was held that the estate vested at the death of the testator in his son and heir at law, and not at a subsequent period, in accordance with the rule of law that estates should be construed to vest at the earliest possible period.

In Nicholson v. Wilson, 14 Sim. 549, where a testator bequeathed a sum of money in trust for a daughter for life, and from and immediately after her decease to such of his children as should be living at that time, "and if all my said children shall be then dead, then I give and bequeath the same unto my personal representative or representatives, and do direct my said trustees and the survivor of them, his executors and administrators, to transfer the same accordingly," it was held that, notwithstanding the use of the word "then," the ultimate beneficiaries were to be determined as of the time of his death, and not as of the time of the death of the life tenant.

In Ware v. Rowland, 2 Phill. Ch. 635, 17 L. J. Ch. N. S. 147, 12 Jur. 165, a testator, after creating a trust, subject to an annuity to his wife, for his daughter, who was his only surviving child at the date of his will, and his sole heiress at law and next of kin at the time of his death, during her life, and after her death to distribute the principal among his daughter's children, further directed that, in the event of failure of the preceding limitations, the trustee should sell the principal fund and pay certain legacies, if the legatees should severally be alive at that time, adding: "And all the rest and residue of the said principal fund, with interest and dividends, I give and bequeath to and amongst my heirs at law, share and share alike." It was held that the word "then" referred to the event, and not to the time; and that the ultimate limitation was to be determined as of the time of testator's death, notwithstanding the use of the plural in the phrase "my heirs at law, share and share alike;" the solution of the apparent inconsistency being found in the fact that the testator would naturally use such terms with respect to an event which might not take place until some distant period, when it would be uncertain who would stand in the place of such heirs, or the fact that he might have contemplated the possibility of his daughter's death in his own lifetime.

In Baker v. Gibson, 12 Beav. 101, it was held, construing the provisions of a will by which a testatrix, having three daughters, gave one third to each for life, with remainder to their children respectively, with cross remainders between them, and ultimate limitation to her own "next of kin and legal personal representatives," that it was firmly settled that the class was to be ascertained at the death of testator, and not at the death of the tenant for life.

In Bird v. Luckie, 8 Hare, 301, 14 Jur. 1015, a testator devised his estate upon trust for the benefit of his grandson for life, with remainder to his issue upon attaining twenty-one or marrying, and in case the grandson should die under the age of twenty-one without lawful issue, then upon trust to pay and apply the surplus rents and profits, after the payment of certain annuities, unto and amongst testator's next of kin in such proportions and manner as provided by the statute of distributions until the death of the last of the annuitants, and, upon failure of the preceding limitations over, to divide the estate upon the death of the last of the annuitants unto and among testator's said next of kin in the proportions and manner aforesaid. The grandson was the next of kin of the testator at the time of making his will, and at his death. It was held that the context of the will contained nothing varying the construction by which the next of kin meant is the person or persons answering the description at the time of testator's death, the mere circumstance that the gift was not immediate, but was contingent upon a future event, not being sufficient to render the description applicable only to such person or persons as should happen to form the class at the time of the occurrence of the event; and it was further held that there was nothing in the extrinsic circumstance that the grandson was the only living descendant of testator, who was a widower, and had collateral kinsmen who were well known to him, to warrant a different construction, although the effect was to take the bulk of the property out of testator's family, and give it to the father of the grandson; that the argument that such construction was to allow in effect no operation to the gift to the next of kin, as the testator was when he made his will, and remained, a widower, while of weight in some cases, was of no force as applied to the will under consideration; and that the reference in the will to a plurality or possible plurality of persons as the testator's next of kin made no difference, as the testator might have contemplated the possibility of the grandson's death in his own lifetime.

In Re Barber, 1 Smale & G. 118, where testator, after bequeathing his personal estate upon trust to pay the income therefrom to three several persons, one of whom was his sole next of kin at the time of his death, during their lives and the life of the survivor, and after the decease of the survivor to pay the principal to the children of one of them upon their attaining the age of twenty-one, further provided that, in default of such children, "then the said trust moneys shall go to and be divided among all and every of my next of kindred who shall be in equal degree, and those who shall legally represent them, according to the statute of distribution of intestates' effects in case I had died possessed thereof and intestate," it was held that there was nothing on the face of the will to induce the court to give the words "next of kindred" any other than their natural construction, as meaning those who were such at the death of testator, notwithstanding the fact that his sole next of kin at such time was the object of a distinct provision, or the fact that testator used the plural number, as it is possible that, though he knew that at the date of his will he had but one next of kin, he might have supposed that, at the time of his decease, he might have several.

In Cable v. Cable, 16 Beav. 507, testator gave his residuary estate in trust for his wife for life, remainder to his children, living at his decease, but in case he should have no child at his death, then and in such case he directed that the trust fund should, from and immediately after his wife's decease, become the property of the person or persons who should then become entitled to take out administration on his effects as his personal representative or representatives, according to the provision of the statute of distribution of intestates' effects, and in the proportion pointed out by the said statute, in case he had died intestate and unmarried. It was held that the word "then" must be construed as relating to the event, and not the time of distribution; and that the ultimate limitation was to those who were next of kin at the death of testator, and not at the death of the life tenant; since there is always the difficulty in fixing the death of the tenant for life as the period at which the next of kin of a testator are to be determined, that the words "if the testator had died then" must be introduced; and since the latter construction would produce a contradiction between the members of the sentence, as in that case the fund could not be divided in the same proportions as directed by the statute; that the word "unmarried" strengthens the construction, as it seems introduced to exclude the widow, who was otherwise provided for, and would, but for this, be entitled under the statute at the death of the testator, but not at her own death.

In Markham v. Ivatt, 20 Beav. 579, a testamentary provision by which a leasehold was bequeathed upon trust for testatrix's daughter, who was her sole next of kin, and to convey it as she should by deed or will appoint, and, in default of such appointment, then upon further trust to dispose thereof to and amongst the nearest kindred of testatrix precisely in the manner directed by statute made for distribution of intestate's effects, was construed as a gift to those who were next of kin at the time of the testatrix's death.

In Starr v. Newberry, 23 Beav. 436, where testator gave the residue of his personal estate in trust for his wife, and on her death or marriage in trust for his children during minority, and to them absolutely upon attaining the age of twenty-one, and upon failure of such limitations, to pay such trust moneys "to such person and persons as might be legally entitled to the same under the statute of distributions," it was held that there was a clear and distinct expression that, in the event stated, testator intended the property to go as if he had died intestate; and therefore that the class was to be ascertained at the time of his death, and not the death of his only child.

In Bullock v. Downes, 9 H. L. Cas. 1, testator left his residuary estate in trust to pay the dividends to his son for life, and after the son's decease to pay any widow of the son an annuity, and the residue to his son's children, and in case there should not be any child of the son, "then to stand possessed of the same in trust for such person or persons of the blood of me as would, by virtue of the statutes of distributions of intestate's effects, have become and been then entitled thereto in case I had died intestate." It was held that neither the consideration that the son was himself one of the next of kin, nor the use of the words "then entitled," as describing the person to take in the event of the son dying without issue, was sufficient to affect the general rule of construction that the next of kin referred to are prima facie those at testator's death, and not those who may happen to answer that description at the termination of the preceding particular interests.

In Re Lang, 9 Week. Rep. 589, 4 L. T. N. S. 577, a testator gave property to his daughter for life, with remainder to her issue, and if there should be no child of the daughter who should attain twenty-one or leave issue, then "unto my own personal representatives and next of kin forever, to be assigned, distributed, and paid according to the statute of distributions." At the date of the will and of the testator's death the daughter was his sole next of kin. It was held there was no indication of a gift to a class living at the death of the daughter, rather than an intention that the property was to go as in case of intestacy, and that although it was not to be supposed that the testator intended to designate his daughter by such a periphrasis, such fact was not inconsistent with an intent to leave the law to take its effect.

In Royds v. Royds, 1 New Reports, 516, 8 L. T. N. S. 199, where the bequest was to testator's daughter for life, remainder to her children, and in default of such children or their issue, "then to pay the same according to the statutes of distribution of intestates' effects," it was held that the next of kin at the time of testator's death were clearly entitled; and that it was not an inconsistency that the testator might have meant that his next of kin should participate in a particular portion of his estate, although he had left a residuary legatee who might probably have taken a large share of that estate.

In Michell v. Bridges, 13 Week. Rep. 200, testator gave his real and personal estate upon trust for his wife for life and after her decease for his daughter for life, and for her husband and children, and in case the daughter should die without lawful issue attaining the age of twenty-one, directed that the personal estate should be in trust "for the person or persons who, under the statutes made for the distribution of the estates of intestates, would then be entitled thereto if I were to die possessed thereof and intestate, and to be divided between or among them, if more than one, in the shares in which the same would be divisible under the same statute." It was held that, with respect to the words "if I were to die," they were an hypothesis not as to death only, but as to death under particular circumstances; that the case was governed by Bullock v. Downes, supra, and the persons entitled to take were the next of kin at the death of testator.

In Mortimore v. Mortimore, L. R. 4 App. Cas. 448 (which affirms L. R. 7 Ch. Div. 322, 47 L. J. Ch. N. S. 134, 37 L. T. N. S. 520, 26 Week. Rep. 134), testator created trusts for each of his daughters for life, remainder to the children of each after her decease, and in case any should die without leaving issue her surviving, then to the survivor or survivors for life, and from and immediately after the decease of the last surviving daughter, to pay and divide the principal among her children, "and if there shall be no such children, that the sum be paid to such person or persons as will then be entitled to receive the same as my next of kin under the statute for the distribution of intestates' estates." The testator's daughters were his sole next of kin at the time of his death. It was held that the case was governed by the decision in Bullock v. Downes, supra; that even though the word "then" be regarded as meaning at the expiration of the preceding limitation, it simply has reference to the time of ascertaining the members of the class, and not the time as of which such membership is to be determined; and that the phrase "my next of kin under the statute for the distribution of intestates' estates" describes the class which, according to the statute, must be ascertained at the death of the testator.

In Re Ford, 72 L. T. N. S. 5, testator devised various parcels of his real estate upon trust for divers of his children for life, remainder to the children or child of each, who, being a son or sons, should attain twenty-one, or, being a daughter or daughters, should attain that age or marry, and in default of issue, to the others of testator's children successively for their lives, and for their respective children, and if all the testator's children should die without leaving issue who should acquire a vested interest, then in trust for testator's own right heirs according to the nature of the said property. The will contained a declaration that it should not be lawful for any son or daughter to sell or encumber his or her life interest, and that if any of them should so sell or encumber the interest should thereupon cease and be held in trust for his or her brother and sisters and his or her issue as if he or she had died. It was held that neither the absence of a reference to the statute concerning distributions, nor the provision against alienation or encumbrance of the respective life estates, was a sufficient reason for departing from the general rule that membership in a class is to be ascertained at the time of testator's death, and not at the period of distribution, even though the persons who thus become entitled under the ultimate limitation take particular interests under the will.

In Re Frith, 85 L. T. N. S. 455, it was held that there was nothing to make the case an exception to the general rule that the heir means the heir of testator at the time of his death, in a will by which a testator, after giving his eldest son (who was his heir at law) a life estate in certain property, directed that when his son's children should have all departed this life, then that such property should be sold and the proceeds equally divided "among my then surviving grandchildren, share and share alike, and in case no grandchildren of mine be then living, it shall become the property of the heir at law."

The time for ascertaining the persons to whom a trust fund is ultimately limited by a will which gives a life interest to testator's nephew and certain contingent interests to the children or issue of the nephew on their attaining twenty-one, or, in the case of daughters, marrying, and declares that if no child or other issue of the nephew shall ever attain a vested interest, the fund is to be held "in trust for such person or persons as, on the death of my said nephew Samuel Eyres Wilson, will be entitled to (sic) as my next of kin under the statute for the distribution of intestates' estates,"—is at the death of testator, and not that of the nephew, though the effect of such construction is to vest the absolute title in the nephew, subject to be divested in the event of any child attaining a vested interest; since the only persons who can be entitled as "next of kin under the statute" must, according to the express language of that statute, be ascertained at testator's death; and the clear words of the gift to such persons cannot be cut down by the phrase, "on the death of my said nephew," which, if it refers to the time, and not to the event, must be taken as referring only to the time when the persons entitled will come into possession. Re Wilson [1907], 2 Ch. 572.

In Re Ferguson, 28 Can. S. C. 38, a testator devised the bulk of his estate to executors, to be held for the use of his wife and daughter jointly so long as both survive and his widow remain unmarried, and in the event of the widow remaining unmarried and surviving the daughter, for her use for life, and in case the daughter survived her mother, then for the use of the daughter as her separate estate, with power to dispose of the same by will in case she should marry, and further directed: "In case my daughter shall have died without leaving issue her surviving, and without having made a will as aforesaid, my trustees shall, after the death of my wife, if she survive my said daughter, sell all my estate, real and personal, and divide the same equally amongst my own right heirs who may prove to the satisfaction of my said trustees their relationship within six months from the death of my wife or daughter, whichever may last take place." It was held that although the clause in question was not free from doubt, that upon the whole there did not appear, either in the will or from the fact the daughter was testator's right heir, any sufficient indication that the expression was used in other than its natural sense, as referring to those entitled to take at testator's death.

In Mays v. Carroll, 14 Ont. Rep. 699, testator, after devising his property in trust for his daughter for life, with remainder to her children, provided: "And if she have no children, then the said property to fall to my next of kin who may be living on this continent." In another clause of the will he provided that should his daughter become the mother of an illegitimate child, "then, notwithstanding anything heretofore provided, I will and direct that neither she . . . nor any of her children shall receive any portion of my property; and in such case my whole property shall be given to my said wife absolutely, or if my said wife at that time be dead, then the property to go to my nearest of kin, as above provided." The daughter was testator's sole next of kin at the time of his death. The word "then" being plainly not used in either of the clauses above quoted as an adverb of time, and the clause last quoted being regarded simply as excluding the daughter in the contingency specified, it was held that there was nothing in the will sufficient to take the case out of the general rule that next of kin are to be ascertained as of the time of testator's death.

In Jost v. McNutt, 40 N. S. 41, testator created a trust to pay the income to his wife during her life, and after her death to his son, and after his death to divide the principal equally among the son's children as they should respectively attain the age of twenty-one. The trustees were further authorized to advance not to exceed a certain sum from the principal to set up the son in business. Testator further provided: "But if he shall die childless, then it is my will that said principal sum . . . be divided as follows: one third thereof to my heirs at law and the remaining two thirds thereof" for certain charitable purposes. It was held that notwithstanding the use of the word "then," which was construed as referring to the event, and not the time, and the fact that the son was testator's sole heir at law at the time of his death, and the fact that testator manifested an intention to prevent the capital from coming into the hands of the son, the limitation over must be construed as to those who were testator's heirs at the time of his death.

In Nicoll v. Irby, — Conn. —, 77 Atl. 957, where a testator gave his entire estate to trustees in trust for the support and maintenance of a brother, and after his death to his children, and in the event of the death of the brother without children, then to testator's own heirs, it was held that the language used being entirely consistent with an intent that the heirs should be determined as of the date of testator's death, the provision would not be construed as giving the remainder to those persons who, at the brother's death, were testator's next of kin and heirs at law, where the latter construction would render the provision obnoxious to the statute of perpetuities.

In Harrison v. Jones, 52 Ga. 599, 9 S. E. 527, it was held, in construing an antenuptial settlement in trust for the separate use of the wife during her life; then for the use of the husband during his life; then for the use of the children, if any, in fee; and if no children, then and in that case upon his death for the use of the wife's right heirs by blood forever,—that there was nothing in the settlement to indicate that the heirs were to be looked for at the death of the husband, rather than at the death of the wife.

In Kellett v. Shepard, 139 Ill. 433, 28 N. E. 751, where a testator, after giving his daughter a life interest in a share of his estate, provided that "after her death it shall descend and go in reversion to her child or children, should she have any, but in case she die having no issue, in such case to go to and descend in reversion to my heirs at law," it was held not only was there nothing to show an intention upon the testator's part to designate those who should be his heirs at law at the date of his daughter's death as the persons who were to take the interest set apart for her use during her life, but that it was testator's actual intention to use the word "heirs" as referring to those who were his heirs at his death. Such intention was deduced from the fact that the specific provisions of his will were in the interest of his son and daughter and such other children as he might have at his death; and the fact that a fund the income of which was set apart for the support of his widow during her life was to go after her death in reversion to "my heirs at law," since it could not be supposed that he intended the expression to have one meaning when applied to those who should take at the termination of the daughter's life estate, and another meaning when applied to those who should take at the termination of the widow's life estate; and in the further circumstances that, in a recapitulation of the provisions of his will, testator made no provision whatever in the event of his daughter's death without issue, so that, had such recapitulation been the only provision in the will in regard to her share, it would have passed as intestate property at the death of the daughter without children to those who were the testator's heirs at law at his decease.

In Minot v. Tappan, 122 Mass. 535, where a testator devised property upon trust for his son for life, and if he should die leaving a widow, to such widow for life, and if such son should die leaving no widow, but leaving children, then to such children, and "in default of any such child, children, or issue, then living, then in trust to convey and transfer the same to my heirs at law to hold same, to them, their heirs and assigns, forever," it was held that there being no words of contingency, such as "if they should be living at his death," or "to such of my heirs as should then be living," which would naturally be used if the intention was to limit the devise or bequest to such class as should be then living, that neither the fact that the life tenant was one of testator's heirs at law at the time of his decease, nor the employment of the phrase "convey and transfer," afforded any decisive indication that testator intended the limitation to his heirs at law to import those who should be such at the death of the life tenant without issue, rather than those who should be such at the time of testator's own death.

There is nothing to take the case out of the general rule that, under a limitation over to testator's heirs at law, the persons to take are those who answer the description at the time of his death, in a testamentary provision by which testator gave the income of a trust fund to his wife until her death or remarriage, and in either event to his son and daughter, with remainder to their issue, or, in default of issue, to testator's heirs at law, and further provided that in case his wife should survive their children and their issue, the trust fund might be disposed of by her by will, and in default of such disposition, then to testator's heirs at law. Whall v. Converse, 146 Mass. 345, 15 N. E. 660.

In Rotch v. Loring, 169 Mass. 190, 47 N. E. 660, testator, after giving his wife the right to occupy certain real estate for her life, or as long as she might desire, in the third article of his will created a trust for the benefit of each of his daughters, and further provided, "upon the decease of each of my said daughters, the deposit made as aforesaid for her benefit shall be transferred, conveyed, assigned, and paid over to her children then living, and the issue of any deceased child by right of representation; to have and to hold the same to them and their respective heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns forever. And in default of any lawful issue then living of such daughter, then the same shall be conveyed, assigned, transferred, and paid over to my heirs at law, as part of the residue of my estate, in the manner hereinafter directed concerning the same." In the fourth article of his will, testator created trusts for the benefit of his two sons, the income to be paid to them during their lives, and the principal upon the death of each to be paid over to the children of such deceased son then living and to the issue of any deceased child by right of representation, "and in default of any issue or children of any sons then living, then in trust to convey, assign, transfer, and pay over . . . to my heirs at law as hereinafter provided." By the residuary clause of his will, in which he enumerated as part of his residuary estate "all such estate, property, funds, and moneys as shall, from time to time, become part of the residue of my estate under the provisions of this my will," the testator directed that the residue should be "divided into so many equal shares or parts, that there may be one share set apart and appropriated for the benefit of each of my children then living, and one share or part for the benefit of the lawful issue then living of every deceased child of mine," such issue to take the share which his parent if living would have taken; "and I hereby give, devise, and bequeath one of the said shares or parts of the said residue of my estate to be set apart as aforesaid to each of my sons living at the time of my decease." And he further proceeded to give the share of each of his daughters living at his decease, and the share of each and every of the female issue living at his decease of any of his children who should die before himself, to trustees. One of the sons having died without issue, the question arose as to the construction of the limitation over to testator's heirs in such event, as described in the third article of the will. It was held that the phrase "then living," used in the residuary clause, must be taken as intended to refer to the only period of time mentioned,—“the time of my decease;” and that it was the testator's intention that the limitation over in question should be to those who should be his heirs at law at the time of his death, and not at the time of the death of the son.

The same will was again before the court in Rotch v. Rotch, 173 Mass. 125, 53 N. E. 268, in which the question was as to the meaning of the limitation over in the event of the death of a daughter without issue, and it was held that there was nothing in the language of the whole will nor in the circumstances of the testator to show that the phrase "to my heirs at law" was used with different meanings in the various provisions of the will; and a clause providing, "it is my will that the cestuis que trust to whom income is payable under this will for their respective lives, or for any less period, are not to have or exercise any right or power of disposing of their respective interests, title, or property in their respective trust estates by will or testamentary appointment, nor to sell, pledge, assign, or transfer the same; it being my intention that said annuitants or cestuis que trust shall take an interest for life or term of years as the case may be, with remainder to their or my heirs respectively, as the case may be," was held not to vary the construction by which the heirs were to be determined as of the time of the testator's decease: since, if testator had desired to make it impossible for any of them to have the disposition of any part of what he himself should leave in trust, the construction that he meant by the words "to my heirs at law," heirs to be determined as of some other time than as of that of his own death, would not have made that intent effectual; and since the direction that when a fund which he had put in trust had fulfilled all the possible purposes of the trust, and was not then otherwise limited, it should go to those who, when he died, were his heirs at law, tended to carry out to the end the scheme of equality among his children manifested by other provisions of the will, which giving the ultimate remainders to those who should be his heirs when the several trusts should terminate would defeat.

In Boston Safe Deposit & T. Co. v. Parker, 197 Mass. 70, 83 N. E. 307, where a testator gave a share of his estate upon trust to pay the net income to a daughter for life, and at her decease to distribute and divide the principal among her children or the descendants of any deceased children, and in default of children living at the time of her death, "then to divide and distribute said estate among my heirs at law," it was held that the word "then" was used conjunctively, and not as an adverb of time; that the fact that the testator had made ample provision for those who were his heirs at the time of his death was not sufficient to show that the phrase "heirs at law" was used in other than its usual meaning; and that the case was one where the testator, having exhausted his specific wishes by previous limitations, was content thereafter to let the law take its course.

In Jewett v. Jewett, 200 Mass. 310, 86 N. E. 803, it was held that no contrary intent which would take the case out of the general rule was manifested by the language of a will in which a testatrix, after creating a trust, and directing that the income should be paid primarily to her daughters, but in certain events in part to her sons and in part to descendants of any of her daughters until the decease of the last survivor of her daughters, further provided that the trustees should, "on the decease of the last survivor of my said daughters" . . . 'convey, assign, deliver, and distribute the whole remaining trust property to the then surviving descendants of my said children respectively . . . and in case of there then being no surviving descendants of any of my said children, then the trust property is to go to my heirs, and in either case the trust is to cease;" notwithstanding a provision that the share of the income which was to be paid to her daughters or to their female descendants should be paid to them or for their benefit, independently of their husbands; and notwithstanding that her heirs at her death were her children, that an absolute bequest was made to her son, and that life estates were given to her daughters.

33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

In Harris v. McLaran, 30 Miss. 533, where a father executed a deed of trust of certain slaves for the benefit of his daughter during her lifetime, and after her death to belong to her child or children, adding, "but should she die without living issue, then and in that case the slaves before named and their increase shall return to my lawful heirs," it was held that the fact that the daughter would take under the limitation over to grantor's heirs was not of itself sufficient to warrant the supposition that the grantor meant such limitation over to be to an artificial class.

In Tuttle v. Woolworth, 62 N. J. Eq. 532, 50 Atl. 445, a testator, after creating a trust first for the use of his wife during widowhood, and thereafter to his daughter for life, and at her death to convey to her children, further provided that if the daughter should die "without issue her surviving, then I direct my executors to sell the said house and lot, and distribute the proceeds thereof among my heirs according to the laws of the state of New Jersey." He further bequeathed to his executors certain bonds and stocks in trust for his wife during her natural life, and after her death to set off the said bonds and stocks to his daughter or her heirs, and if the said daughter should die without issue, "then said bonds and stocks shall revert to my estate, and be distributed among my heirs in the manner provided by the laws of New Jersey respecting intestate estates." It was held that the fact that the daughter was one of testator's heirs and next of kin was not sufficient to restrict the class of heirs who are to take under such limitation over, to those living at the time of distribution, the court saying: "The objection from incongruity supposed to arise against holding that the previous tenant is entitled to any interest in an estate as next of kin, after the estate specially given to him by the will has terminated, is, as it seems to me, met and answered by the consideration that when the testator limits an estate to one of his next of kin and his children or issue, and then directs that, on failure of this limitation, his heirs or next of kin shall take according to law, he discloses clearly that, if the special and immediate limitation fail, as it may, then he had no intentions or wishes to change the disposition which the law itself would have made for him in regard to this part of his estate, and that, on the failure of his special purpose, he desires that he should be considered as making no provisions of his own about the disposition of his estate, but as expressly leaving that disposition to be made by the laws as if he had died intestate. When there is the further express direction in the will, as there is in this case, that the estate shall be distributed among testator's heirs (or next of kin), in the manner provided by law respecting intestates' estates, the conclusion seems unavoidable that the testator, as to the estate limited over, intended the same persons to receive the estate as would have received it at his death, by law, had he died intestate as to its future disposition after the failure of the particular estate. If this be the correct view, the previous gift to one of the next of kin cannot, of itself, be sufficient to exclude him from the portion which, as next of kin, would have come to him by law, or show that the testator intended to restrict the operation of the laws relating to distribution of intestates' estates, by referring them to a time subsequent to his death."

In Wadsworth v. Murray, 161 N. Y. 274, 76 Am. St. Rep. 265, 55 N. E. 610, where a testator, after creating a trust for the benefit of his grandson during his natural life, disposed of the real estate and its proceeds in the trust after the death of the grandson as follows: "And in case the said [grandson] . . . shall die leaving lawful issue him surviving, such issue shall take an estate in fee in the real estate hereby devised in trust for him, and the entire and absolute estate and interest in such accumulations as are hereinbefore provided for. And in case the said [grandson] . . . shall die leaving no lawful issue him surviving, then, and in that case, the estate in said lands, and the entire and absolute estate and interest in such accumulations, shall descend to and vest in my heirs at law in the same manner that it would have descended to and vested in them if this will had not been made,"—it was held that, without resorting to the rule of construction that where, on the termination of a life estate, a remainder is limited to the heirs of testator, the will is deemed to speak as of the time of his death, and his heirs at that time take a vested remainder, the language of the will manifested an intention that the heirs should be determined as of the time of testator's death.

In Jones v. Oliver, 38 N. C. (3 Ired. Eq.) 369, where a testator devised certain property to his wife for life, and at her death to the heirs of her body, adding: "But in case there should be no such heirs lawfully begotten as aforesaid, then and in that case I give and bequeath the whole of my estate as aforesaid to be equally divided among the next of kin of myself and of my said wife," it was held that there was nothing in the language of the will to induce the supposition that the testator meant to exclude any of the persons who were next of kin of himself or of his wife at his death in favor of persons who might happen to answer the description at the death of his wife without having issue; although it was said that if the wife had been one of the next of kin herself, the argument would be strong that the next of kin at her death were in the testator's contemplation.

In Riehle's Appeal, 54 Pa. 97, a devise in trust for testator's daughters for life, with remainder to their children, "but in case both or either of them, my said two daughters, depart this life without leaving any child or lawful issue surviving her or them, then the part or share of such of them so dying to go and be inherited by my right heirs forever, agreeably to the intestate laws of Pennsylvania," was construed to give each of the daughters an estate for life with remainder to her children and issue, if any, in fee, with an executory devise on her death without issue to testator's right heirs under the intestate laws at the time of his death. The gift thus incidentally characterized by the court as an executory devise would seem however, more properly to be regarded as creating a contingent remainder.

There is nothing in the language of a testamentary provision by which certain property was devised in trust for the benefit of a son for life, and from and immediately after his decease, then in trust for the use and behoof of all and every child and children of the said son that should then be living, and the lawful issue of them as should then be deceased, their respective heirs and assigns forever, "and for want of such a child or children or lawful issue, then in trust for the use and behoof of my right heirs forever," which qualifies the natural meaning of the word "heirs" as referring to those who were such at the time of testator's death, the word "then" obviously being used not as an adverb of time, but as a conjunction signifying "in that event or contingency." Buzby's Appeal, 61 Pa. 111.

In Stewart's Estate, 147 Pa. 383, 23 Atl. 599, where testatrix after giving successive life estates in a moiety of her property to a sister and niece, with remainder to the issue of the niece, or, in event of the niece dying without issue in the lifetime of another sister, to such persons as such other sister should by will appoint, further provided that if, at the death of the niece having no issue, such other sister should be herself then dead, "I then give, devise, and bequeath the said moiety of the residuary estate to my right heirs according to the intestate laws of the state of Pennsylvania," it was held that there was nothing to take the case out of the general rule.

In Stokes v. Van Wyck, 83 Va. 724, 3 S. E. 387, where a testator, after devising lands to his daughter and her husband during their joint lives and during the life of the survivor, with remainder to their issue, if any, further provided: "But if my said daughter should die without leaving such issue, then my will and desire is that after the death of my son-in-law [naming him] . . . that the said land and plantation should pass and descend to my heirs according to the laws of descent in Virginia, and their heirs forever," it was held that the heirs taking under the limitation over were those who were such at the time of testator's death, upon the ground that such is the ordinary signification of the term "heirs," and that any ambiguity should be determined in favor of vesting, notwithstanding the use of the word "then," which evidently means "in that event," or the fact that the daughter was testator's sole heir at the time of his death, or the fact that he employed the plural word "heirs."

In Allison v. Allison, 101 Va. 537, 63 L.R.A. 920, 44 S. E. 904, it was held that there was nothing contrary to the rule of construction that heirs are to be determined at the time of testator's death, in the language of a will by which the residuary estate was given in trust for a daughter during her natural life, "and at her death to be equally divided among her children, should any survive her; if she should die without issue, or if her surviving child or children should die before becoming of age, then the property bequeathed for the benefit of my daughter is to be divided among my heirs at law according to the laws of the state of Virginia."

2. Executory limitations.

In Wilkinson v. Garrett, 2 Colly. Ch. Cas. 43, 15 L. J. Ch. N. S. 416, 10 Jur. 560, a testator devised property upon trust to pay an annuity to his widow, and subject to such annuity, upon trust for his only son when he should attain the age of twenty-five years, and in case he should die after the age of twenty-one, but before the age of twenty-five, then upon trust for such persons as the son should appoint, and in default of such appointment, or in the event of the son's death before attaining the age of twenty-five without lawful issue, "then upon trust as to my said real and personal estate for my own heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns according to the notice thereof respectively." The testator's son and widow were at his death his next of kin according to the statute of distribution. It was held that there was no sufficient indication in favor of any other persons than those who would be entitled to the property under the ultimate limitation at the time of testator's death to justify the court in supposing that he intended to benefit any other class of persons; but that, on the other hand, it might conjecture that the testator contemplated the possibility of the son dying in his lifetime, leaving children, or of testator having other children living at his death, or that he might have had an intention in favor of his widow which would be disappointed by construing the words to refer to the death of the son.

In Seifferth v. Badham, 9 Beav. 370, 15 L. J. Ch. N. S. 345, 10 Jur. 892, where a testator gave his residuary estate in trust, first for his wife during widowhood, and after her decease or marriage to apply the income for the maintenance and education of his children until they should attain the age of twenty-one, when the share of each should be transferred to him or his issue, and if all testator's children should die without issue, then upon trust to release testator's real estate unto and to the use of his heir at law, and to assign his personal estate unto and equally between his next of kin according to the statute of distributions, it was held that there was nothing on the face of the will, or in the fact that testator's children were his heirs at law and next of kin at the time of his death, to alter the plain construction of the language under which the words mean the next of kin at the time of testator's death.

In Murphy v. Donegan, 3 Jones & L. 354, where a testatrix bequeathed all her personal estate upon trust for her granddaughter (not, however, naming her as such) until she should become of age or be married, when the trust fund was to be handed over to her, further providing, "in case said Elizabeth shall die under age, unmarried, I leave, devise, and bequeath the said principal money and interest to my next of kin, share and share alike, as tenants in common, and not as joint tenants and if but one, the whole to such one," it was held, that, as testatrix had made no mention of the relationship which subsisted between herself and the beneficiary, but described her as the child of certain parents and as the niece of other persons, it could not be assumed that she had a knowledge that the granddaughter was her next of kin; and that, as the gift itself provides for the two events of the next of kin consisting of several persons or of one person only, there is nothing to show an intention to use the words "next of kin" in any other than their natural import as designating those living at the death of the testatrix.

In Holloway v. Radcliffe, 23 Beav. 163, testator gave his estate to his wife for life, and from and after her decease to his son, if then living, upon his attaining the age of twenty-one, but in case of the son's death in the lifetime of the wife, or before attaining the age, of twenty-one, the estate was directed to be sold, "and as to the money to arise from such sale or sales, after payment of all expenses attending the same, I give and bequeath one moiety or equal half part thereof unto and equally amongst my legal personal representatives, in such and the like manner as if the same had been to be paid under the statute of distribution; and as to the other moiety or equal half part thereof, I give and bequeath the same unto and equally amongst the legal personal representatives of my said wife, to be paid in manner aforesaid." The son was testator's sole next of kin at the time of his death. It was held that the persons entitled to take were to be ascertained at the death of testator, the master of the rolls saying: "By referring to the statute, to point out the persons who are to take, the testator has expressed that those are to take whom the statute of disitribution designates, that is, certain persons who are living at the death of the person whose estate is to be distributed. Prima facie, therefore, this is the meaning of the testator. There certainly might be words introduced which would specify some other time as the period at which the class was to be ascertained, but there are none here. The case would have been much varied if the words had run 'in such and the like manner as if the same had been then, or at that time, to be paid under the statute of distribution,' or even if the words 'were then' had been substituted for the words 'had been;' but it is simply 'in such and the like manner as if the same had been to be paid under the statute of distribution,' importing, as far as any time is thereby expressed, a past, rather than a present, ascertainment of the class. The words, therefore, designate the next of kin of the testator who survive him, according as the class is ascertained by the statute or distribution."

In Southgate v. Clinch, 27 L. J. Ch. N. S. 651, 4 Jur. N. S. 428, 6 Week Rep. 489, where a testator left a sum of money to be divided among his three children or the survivors of them upon attaining twenty-one, "but should neither of them attain the age of twenty-one years, I then request the said £2,000 3£ per cent consols to go to my wife for her natural life, and afterwards to my next heir at law," it was held that the person ultimately entitled was one who, at the death of the testator, was his heir at law, notwithstanding that person was one of the children provided for originally out of the fund, since such provision is not inconsistent with his also taking a benefit out of that fund larger or other than the previous one in different exents.

In Harrison v. Harrison, 28 Beav. 21, where a testator, after giving his residuary estate to his widow during widowhood, with remainder to testator's child or children attaining the age of twenty-one, or their issue, provided that, in default thereof, "then and in such case my said trustees and trustee shall stand seised and possessed of my said real and personal estate and effects, from and immediately after the decease or marriage again of my said wife, in trust for such person or persons as shall be my next of kin, according to the statute for the distribution of intestates' effects, his, her, or their heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns, absolutely and forever,"—it was held that there was nothing to take the words "next of kin" out of their ordinary significance as applying to persons who were such at the time of testator's death, there being no absurdity in the bequest of the remainder to children who were testator's next of kin and the ultimate gift to them in event of death under twenty-one, as practically the estate would go through any child so dying to the same person as if testator had not inserted the provision.

In Fletcher v. Fletcher, 3 De G. F. & J. 775, testator gave his residuary estate upon trust to pay an annuity to his widow during her life, and after her death to divide the trust fund among such of his children as should attain the age of twenty-one years, or their issue, "and in case there shall be no child or the issue of any child of my body living at the time of my decease, then upon trust for such person or persons who, at the determination or failure of the preceding trusts of this my will, would be entitled under the statute of distributions to the said trust estate and premises as my next of kin in case I had then died possessed thereof intestate and without leaving any wife me surviving, in the same shares and proportions as such persons, if more than one, would be entitled thereto by virtue of the same statute. It was held that there being a provision for the maintenance of the children, which, as there was no trust for accumulation, must have been intended to take effect during her life, the words "after the decease of my wife" cannot receive a strict construction; that as the testator must be taken to have contemplated his wife's surviving him in accordance with the rule that the death of a legatee in testator's lifetime is not considered to be contemplated unless no other construction will satisfy the words, the words carefully excluding the wife from the ultimate gift point to a distribution in her lifetime, and show that testator meant the whole fund to go to those who were his next of kin at the time of his own death.

In Brabant v. Lalonde, 26 Ont. Rep. 379, testator, after giving his only child, a daughter, all his estate, subject to the use thereof by his wife until the daughter should become of age, or should marry, further provided: "In the event of my said daughter Rebecca Lalonde dying without leaving issue, then in that case all of my said property shall be equally divided between my nearest of kin, but with the condition that my said wife shall have and hold the same during her lifetime." It was held that the word "then," introducing the ultimate devise to the nearest of kin, was clearly not intended to be used as an adverb of time, and that the fact that the daughter to whom the fee was given in the first instance would take one third as one of the next of kin not show that testator intended that the persons to take under the limitation should be other than those answering the description of nearest of kin at the time of his death.

In Clifton v. Holton, 27 Ga. 321, where a testator provided that in case his son should die before arriving at twenty-one years of age, without issue, the property given him should go to testator's "blood relations of nearest kin, to be equally divided among them," it was held that such relations are to be ascertained and fixed at the time of testator's death, and not the death of his son; although it was stated to be a rather disputable point.

IV. Instances where application precluded by context of will or accompanying circumstances.

a. Preliminary statement.

The introductory observation which heads the division entitled "Instances of application of rule" may here be repeated, that although the construction of testamentary provisions of the sort under consideration is not dependent upon the character of the estate limited, they are herein arranged with regard thereto for the sake of convenience in reference.

It has been held, however that the fact that a defeasible fee is given to one who is the sole heir presumptive of the testator furnishes a somewhat stronger reason for holding that the heirs to whom the property is limited over upon certain conditions are to be determined as of the time of the death of the first taker, than when the first taker has only a life estate and the devise is of the remainder. Welch v. Brimmer, 169 Mass. 204, 47 N. E. 699.

b. Where gift is immediate.

In Harding v. Glyn, 1 Atk. 469, note, where testator gave his wife certain property, but desired her to give such property at or before her death unto and amongst such of his own relations as she should think most deserving, it was held that, in default of her performance of the power, the court would decree the property to be divided among such of the relations of testator as were his next of kin at her death.

In Say v. Creed, 5 Hare, 580, 16 L. J. Ch. N. S. 361, 11 Jur. 603, testatrix directed her trustees to convert her personal estate into money and invest it, and to pay the income therefrom to her mother for life, and from and after her mother's death to her sister for life, and to pay over the principal as testatrix should appoint, and in default of appointment, to pay it unto and amongst testatrix's next of kin in due course of administration, as the law directs in respect of intestates' personal estates. By codicil she directed that it should be paid to her next of kin on the part of her mother only, and not to any of her next of kin on the part of her deceased father. The sister of testatrix, who was the sole next of kin living at the time of her death, was also at the same time the only next of kin of the testatrix on her mother's side. The court, although recognizing the fact that, at the date of the codicil, the father and mother of testatrix were dead, and she had no nephew or nieces, or brother or sister, except the sister to whom the life interest was given, so that of necessity such sister, if surviving her, would be her only next of kin living at her death, while she described her next of kin in terms which import that she contemplated a plurality of persons under that description, as being indicative, though not conclusive, of an intent to exclude the sister,—expressly put its decision that the ultimate limitation was to the next of kin on the part of the mother living at the death of the sister upon the ground that testatrix, knowing at the date of the codicil that her sister, if she survived her, would be her next of kin ex parte paterna as well as ex parte materna, yet described the objects of her bounty as next of kin on the part of her mother, and not next of kin on the part of her father.

In Horn v. Coleman, 1 Smale & G. 169, 22 L. J. Ch. N. S. 779, 17 Jur. 408, 1 Week. Rep. 194, where testator created a trust for his sister and her husband for their lives, and after the death of the survivor of them directed the trustees to transfer the trust fund "unto such person or persons as shall, at the time of the decease of my said sister, . . . be entitled thereto as my next of kin under the statute made for the distribution of the effects of intestates," it was held that those entitled to take under the limitation were clearly those answering the description of next of kin at the time of the decease of the sister.

In Re Saville, 14 Week. Rep. 603, where the testator bequeathed a sum of money in certain events to his "relatives" and those of his wife, in such proportions as she would appoint, nevertheless two thirds thereof amongst his own relatives, and the remaining one-third amongst those of his wife, it was held that as the wife had a power of apportionment, but not of exclusive appointment, the class was to be ascertained at her death, and not that of testator.

In Re Morley, 25 Week. Rep. 825, construing a will by which a childless testator gave personalty upon trust to pay the income to his wife for life, and after her decease, subject to the payment of certain legacies, to pay and divide three-fifths parts or shares of the residue among such person or persons as, under the statute of distribution of the effects of intestates, would have become entitled on his late father's side to his personal estate at the death of his wife if he had died intestate, and to pay and divide the other two-fifths parts among such person or persons as, under the same statute, would have become entitled on his mother's side to his personal estate at the death of his said wife if he had died intestate, it was held that the words "at the death of my wife" clearly pointed to the time of ascertaining the class to take.

In Re McFee [1910] W. N. 186, 79 L. J. Ch. N. S. 676, 103 L. T. N. S. 210, testator gave his entire estate to trustees to pay certain legacies and an annuity to his brother during his life, and to accumulate the remainder of the income during the life of such brother, and upon his death to hold the estate and the accumulations of income thereof "in trust for such person or persons as shall, upon the death of my said brother, be my then next of kin according to the statutes for the distribution of the estates of intestates." The brother was his heir at law and sole next of kin at the time of his death. It was held to be the plain meaning of the will that persons entitled to participate under the ultimate gift would be the testator's next of kin under the statute of distribution if he had lived up to, and died immediately after, the death of his brother.

In Howell v. Ackerman, 89 Ky. 22, 11 S. W. 819, construing a gift to testator's wife for life, and after her death, "then one half of said property to go to my lawful heirs, and the other half of said property to the lawful heirs of my said wife," it was held that one who was the lawful heir of the testator at the time when the widow elected to take present cash value for her life estate in the proceeds of the property devised was properly entitled to a one-half of the residue of said proceeds.

In Cushman v. Goodwin, 95 Me. 353, 50 Atl. 50, a devise upon the decease of the survivor of testator's sisters, to whom he had given estates for life, of all his estate to his heirs then living, to descend and be distributed according to the statutes of the state, was construed apparently without controversy as a devise to testator's heirs living at the time of the death of the survivor.

In Leonard v. Haworth, 171 Mass. 496, 51 N. E. 7, an aged testator whose wife was seventy-two years of age and whose only next of kin was a sister of seventy-four, without living issue, and a brother having two unmarried daughters, after making certain specific bequests which practically exhausted his small personal estate, gave his widow the use of part of his real estate for life, and to his sister the use of the remaining portion thereof for life, and finally directed that "when my wife has deceased and her funeral expenses have been paid, and all the provisions named in this will had been carried out, I will what is left of my estate be divided among my nearest of kin." It was held that, in view of the circumstances that his wife and sister were both old and childless, and that he would naturally expect that they would live about the same length of time, and that when both should be dead there would be no living kin of his blood except his brother and his children; the fact that his sister's husband was alive, and had she taken a vested interest, the effect might be that a portion of testator's estate would not go to his kin, but to a stranger in blood; and the fact that there were no words specifically giving a remainder to next of kin, or explicitly giving the legal title to trustee during the life estates,—the intention of the testator was that those who should be his nearest blood relations at the death of the survivor of his wife and sister should then take what should be left of his property.

In Fargo v. Miller, 150 Mass. 225, 5 L.R.A. 690, 22 N. E. 1003, it was held that the time of ascertaining the next of kin of a testatrix who were to take under a clause by which the residuary estate was given, subject to legacies and trusts specified in the will, to the next of kin of testatrix's husband and to those of herself, in the proportion of one third to the former, and two thirds to the latter, was at the death of her father, who was her sole next of kin while he lived, and not at her own death, where she, in preference to all other legacies, provided in the will for his comfortable support for life, even to the extent of using the whole estate, if necessary, but in case of his marriage or death, directed distribution at once; whether or not the time would be thus fixed by the mere fact that he was sole next of kin.

In Wood v. Bullard, 151 Mass. 324, 7 L.R.A. 304, 25 N. E. 67, the language of a testamentary provision by which testator's widow, for whose benefit a trust had been created for life, was given power to dispose of the trust fund by will, and in case of her failure to make a will, one half of said trust fund was to be paid at her decease to his heirs at law then surviving, they taking by right of representation, and the other half to the heirs at law of the widow then surviving, they taking by right of representation,—was deemed to manifest an intention that the heirs referred to should be determined as of the time of the death of the widow, and not that of the testator, it being impossible to consider the remainder as vested, and it being apparent that testator was not willing that, in default of his wife's leaving a will, the fund should go as intestate property.

In Peck v. Carlton, 154 Mass. 231, 28 N. E. 166, it was held that the natural interpretation of a provision by which a testator, by the residuary clause of his will, left property upon trust to pay the income to his wife and other persons during her life, and as soon after the decease of his wife as should be expedient, to convert the estate into money, "and to pay over the proceeds of such sale and disposition to my legal heirs in the same proportion as they would have inherited the same in case I had died the survivor of my said wife, and intestate," was that the same persons are to receive the property, and to receive it in the same proportions, as if testator had died immediately after the decease of his wife; and that it was not to be construed simply as meaning that the widow should be excluded.

In Bisson v. West Shore R. Co. 143 N. Y. 125, 38 N. E. 104, it was held, construing a provision by which testator gave his wife an estate during widowhood, "and from and after her decease or marriage (which shall first happen) I give, devise, and bequeath all my said real estate unto my heirs and my said wife Maria Bernardino's heirs, their heirs and assigns forever, share and share alike," that the termination of the life estate given to the widow being the time fixed for the gift to take effect, then was the time when the persons would be ascertained who, coming under the description of heirs of testator, would be entitled to share with the heirs of his widow in distribution of the estate.

In Hoey v. Kenny, 25 Barb. 396, where a testator devised property to his widow for life, and by her to be divided and distributed by will among testator's relatives in such shares as she might see fit, it was held that since the wife's selection of the relatives might be among those who might be living at her decease, and would not be limited to those living at the testator's death, the law would, upon her failure to exercise such power, distribute the property among the relatives living at her decease.

In Re Southworth, 52 Misc. 86, 102 N. Y. Supp. 447, a direction that, upon the termination of a trust, the principal and any accrued interest remaining unexpended should be paid over to the testator's heirs, was held to manifest an intention that it should be paid to those who should be heirs at the time of distribution, since he could not have intended unexpended interest remaining at the death of the life tenant should vest before it was in existence.

In Re Bowers, 109 App. Div. 566, 96 N. Y. Supp. 562, where a testator created a trust in his residuary estate for the benefit of a certain person for and during her natural life, and further provided that, after the death of such person, the trustees should "transfer, set over, and convey my entire residuary estate, with all accumulations of income then on hand, to my heirs at law and next of kin, whomsoever they may be," it was held that the gift over being after the death of the life tenant, and being found only in the direction to convey, and in view of the employment of the phrase "whomsoever they may be," it was plainly testator's intention that the persons entitled under the limitation over could not be ascertained until after the death of the life beneficiary.

In Hostetter v. State, 26 Ohio C. C. 702, where a testator devised everything excepting household goods and furniture to his executors for the benefit of his widow during her life, and at her decease to convey certain of the realty as therein directed, and to convert the rest into money, and out of the estate to pay certain specific legacies, and directed: "On final settlement of my estate, all the rest and residue thereof to be divided and distributed and paid to my heirs at law in the same proportion that the same would have been paid to them if I had died without a will. All of the former legacies and specific and statutory devises to be paid after the death of my wife,"—it was held that in view of the testator's manifest intention to keep the estate intact until his widow's death, the several interests of the legatees could not be said to have vested prior to that time, the heirs at law were those who were such at the time of the authorized distribution.

In Barr v. Denney, 79 Ohio St. 358, 87 N. E. 267, where testator, after giving his wife his whole estate for life, except certain payments to be made to certain of his children in order to make them equal with others who had received advancements, provided: "After the death of my wife I desire that the whole of my property, both real and personal, be sold by my executor, and after expenses are paid, to distribute equally to my legal heirs," it was held that since there is no gift in presenti to testator's heirs, either by remainder or executory devise, and since the fund to be divided could not be created, nor the extent of the interest in it determined, until the termination of the life estate, the conversion of the property and payment of expenses, the most natural interpretation of the will was that the testator bequeathed nothing after the expiration of the life estate, and contented himself with the expression of his desire that the property should all be converted into personalty, and then distributed equally among those who might then be his legal heirs.

In Donohue v. McNichol, 61 Pa. 73, where a testatrix, after creating a trust for the benefit of her son during his life, and for the benefit of his issue during their lives directed: "And my said executor, after the death of such lawful issue of my said son John, is to give up and convey over unto my said lawful heirs all my real and personal estate, and in the event of the death of my said son John without lawful issue, that my said executor is to hold my said real and personal estate (if any) for the use, benefit, and behoof of my lawful heirs, their heirs and assigns forever. And upon the death of my said son John, as aforesaid, without lawful issue, my said executor is to give up and convey all my real and personal estate unto my said lawful heirs,"—the question was raised, but it was found unnecessary to decide whether the limitation was to the heirs of the testatrix at the time of her own death, or at that of the death of her son's unborn issue, as in either case the son, being the sole heir of his mother, would take, in the one case under the will, and in the other, on account of the remoteness of the limitation, as heir at law by descent.

In McKee's Estate, 198 Pa. 255, 47 Atl. 993, where testator, whose sole heirs at the time of his death were a son and daughter, after giving annuities to his sister and brother and to his son and daughter, directed: "On the death of my heirs herein named all property and bank stocks to be sold and divided among all the heirs,"—it was held that had testator intended that his son and daughter should take under such provision as his heirs, he would have provided for distribution immediately upon the death of the other beneficiaries, and limited to their lifetime the annuities given to his children; and therefore that it was reasonably clear that he intended that they or their representatives should not receive anything more from his estate than the annuities, and that his heirs were to be ascertained as of the period of distribution.

In Evans v. Godbold, 6 Rich, Eq. 26, a provision by which testator, after giving his wife the use of certain property for life, continued: "It is my will and desire that all the property I have loaned to my wife for her natural life after her decease be equally divided among my surviving heirs, share and share alike," was construed as a limitation to such persons as, at the termination of the life estate, should be his heirs.

In Forrest v. Porch, 100 Tenn. 391, 45 S. W. 676, where a testator devised certain land to his wife "to have and to hold as long as she lives; at her death the said land is to be divided between my heirs at law," it was held to be the obvious intention of testator that the land should be divided at the death of his widow among such persons as should then sustain to him the relation of heirs at law.

c. Where gift is contingent on future event.

1. Remainders.

In Doyley v. Atty. Gen. 4 Vin. Abr. 485, where testator gave his estate in trust for his niece for life, with successive remainders to her sons or daughters, and for want of such issue, to such of his relations on his mother's side who were most deserving, and in such manner as his trustees should think fit, it was held that, as to the personal estate, there should be no representation of those relations who died in the lifetime of the life tenant, for before her death no part thereof vested in any of the relations, and it was contingent whether they would be entitled thereto or not.

In Marsh v. Marsh, 1 Bro. Ch. 293, where testator gave his residuary estate to trustees to pay the interest to his son, who was his nearest of kin, and from and after the decease of the son to such son's eldest son and his heirs forever, and in case of their death without issue, unto testator's nearest relation, and to the nearest relation of such nearest relation, forever, it was said that the testator certainly meant that the nearest relation at the time of the decease of the son should take the property, and not the nearest at his own decease, it being impossible to suppose that he meant a reversion to his son.

In Long v. Blackall, 3 Ves. Jr. 486, 4 Revised Rep. 73, testator gave certain leasehold premises in trust for a son during his life, and after his decease for such of his male issue as should be his heirs at law at his death, in default whereof the property was similarly limited to a second and third son successively, and finally directed that, upon the failure of all these successive limitations, the trustees should be possessed of the said premises in trust for such persons as should then be the legal representatives of the testator; and he appointed his wife sole executrix. It was held that, in view of the fact that the testator had altered his will, which, as originally prepared, contained an ultimate limitation to the executors and administrators of the first son, it was quite impossible he meant it to vest in his wife, transmissible to those who should become her legal representatives; that, the property being personal in character, it would be too much conjecture to apply the words to an heir at law; and therefore that the ultimate limitation was to those who were the next of kin at the time of distribution. In commenting upon this case in Holloway v. Holloway, 5 Ves. Jr. 399, 5 Revised Rep. 81, 25 Eng. Rul. Cas. 687, it was said that the language of the will under construction put it out of the power of the court to put upon it any other interpretation; that the word "then" plainly proved that the personal representatives at the time of the death were not intended; and that if that word had not occurred, there was a great deal to show it could not be the intention, for there the wife was his executrix, and it would have been a strange and circuitous way of giving it to her.

In Jones v. Colbeck, 8 Ves. Jr. 38, 6 Revised Rep. 207, testator bequeathed his residuary estate upon trust, to convert it into money, invest the proceeds, and to pay the interest, after deducting an annuity, for the use of a daughter during her life, or until she should have a child or children, when it was to be applied toward their maintenance until they should respectively attain the age of twenty-one, when the principal was to be divided among them, and further provided that after the decease of said daughter and her children, in case they should all die under the age of twenty-one, that the residuum should go and be distributed among his relations in due course of administration. It was held that the ultimate limitation was to those who should answer the description, not at the time of his own death, but at that of his daughter or her issue under the age of twenty-one, upon the ground that it was hardly possible that the testator could mean to describe an only daughter by the terms "my relations," directing also the residue to be distributed among those relations; that it was impossible that he could take this strange, circuitous method of giving her the whole residue on the event of her dying without children, instead of directly saying so; and that if he had meant the limitation to be those who should answer the description at the time of his death, excluding his daughter, he would not have used an expression necessarily including her, but would have given expressly to those bearing certain definite relationships. This case is frequently cited as authority for the proposition that where the first taker is, at the time of testator's death, the sole member of the class to which the limitation over is made, the testator must be deemed to have intended the membership of the class to be determined as of the time of the happening of the event upon which the limitation was made; and as such is said by Stuart, V. C., in 1 Smale & G. 122, to have "the singular property of being often cited as an authority, always considered as open to observation, and never followed."

In Miller v. Eaton, G. Cooper, 272, 14 Revised Rep. 259, testator gave the interest of the residue of his personal estate to his widow for life, and after her decease a moiety thereof to each of his sons; and in case the elder should die in the lifetime of the widow, and the younger should be then living, then to such younger son; but in case it should happen that both sons should die in the lifetime of testator's wife, he directed that after her decease the trust fund should go to and be divided between his own next of kin. It was held that, as the testator had given the trust fund by express bequests to his sons who were his next of kin living at his death, he must therefore, when he used the term "next of kin," have meant his next of kin living at some other time than at his decease.

In Butler v. Bushnell, 3 Myl. & K. 232, where a testator bequeathed his residuary personal estate upon trust, subject to the life interest of his widow for her life for his daughters during their lives, and after their respective deceases in trust for the benefit of their children, and in case there should be no child or children of his daughters respectively, or if such children should die under age, then in trust for such person or persons as should happen to be testator's next of kin, according to the statute of distributions, it was held that it was the intention of the testator to limit the property over to those who should be his next of kin living at the death of each of the daughters without children, the court saying: "Where a testator gives property to a person for life, with remainder to his children, and if he should die without children, then over to his next of kin, it is not a probable intention that he should mean to include, as one of his next of kin, the person upon whose death without issue he has expressly directed that the property should go over. In looking to the cases, it appears to me that the court always considers whether the words of limitation are words of present intention, so that they are intended to take effect as soon as the testator's next of kin, living at his death, are ascertained; or whether they import a future period, and are referable to the event upon which the gift over is to take effect. The words 'such persons as shall happen to be my next of kin,' or 'such persons as shall or should be my next of kin,' indicate an intention to confine the gift to such persons as shall answer the description of the testator's next of kin at the death of the tenant for life."

33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

In Clapton v. Bulmer, 5 Myl. & C. 108, the testator having one child, a daughter, gave his residuary estate in trust for the daughter for life, and after her death to her children, but should she die without issue, then in trust to pay a certain sum to such person or persons as the daughter should by will appoint, and in case testator's wife should happen to survive the daughter dying without issue, to pay a sum of money to the wife, adding: "And I will and direct that my said trustees . . . do and shall assign and transfer the residue of such trust moneys of my personal estate unto the nearest of kin of my own family forever." It was held that, in view of the language of the will, the testator could not possibly intend his own daughter to take under the ultimate limitation, and therefore that the gift was to those answering the description at her death.

In Minter v. Wraith, 13 Sim. 52, a testator directed his entire estate to be held upon trust for his wife during her life, and from and immediately after her decease in trust as to a moiety thereof for his daughter Sarah, for and during her natural life, and from and after her decease to pay and divide the same among her children upon their attaining the age of twenty-one, and in default of the preceding limitation, then in trust to convey and assign such moiety to testator's "personal representatives." The other moiety was similarly limited to his daughter Jane, with remainder to her children upon attaining twenty-one, and in default of such, then to transfer and convey "the said last-mentioned moiety or one-half part of and in the said moneys, stocks, and funds, and of and in the said part or parts of my said real and personal estates remaining unsold, if any, unto my personal representatives, his, her, or their heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns." He further directed that his trustees should keep the share of his daughter Sarah in their hands "so long as she should continue to labor under her present affliction." It was held that, in view of the language showing testator considered it doubtful whether any of his property would remain unsold or not; the fact that he was looking to an event which would be posterior to his own death; the fact that the original devise had vested everything, real and personal, in the trustees, so that the subsequent direction was one by means of which the trustees should denude themselves of the trust; and in view of the description of the persons to whom the property was to be conveyed, which shows that the testator contemplated that the person or persons to take might either be one male, one female, several males, several females, or several males and females, and which therefore is inconsistent with any notion on testator's part that his two daughters would be those persons; and in view of the direction as to holding Sarah's share "so long as she should continue to labor under her present affliction" which is unaccompanied by any direction as to what should be done with respect to the whole of the property in case Sarah should become entitled to have the whole conveyed to her, in which case the trustees would denude themselves of the trust property altogether,—the ultimate limitation was not to testator's next of kin at the time of his own death, but to those persons who were his next of kin at the death of a daughter.

In Cooper v. Denison, 13 Sim. 290, 12 L. J. Ch. N. S. 404, a provision by which a testator bequeathed his residuary estate to his wife for life, remainder to his daughter absolutely, but if his wife survived his daughter, then at his wife's death one third part was to go according to her will and the other two thirds were to go and be paid "to my other the next of kin of my paternal line," was held to show that all the persons to take at the death of the widow were to be simultaneously ascertained, and therefore that the next of kin were to be ascertained at the time of the widow's death.

In Tiffin v. Longman, 15 Beav. 275, a testator, after giving his residuary estate in trust for his daughter, proceeded: "At the death of my daughter I will the whole property vested in the funds and otherwise to her issue, provided she should have any; and, if more than one child, in equal proportions between them. But provided my daughter should die without issue, I then direct that advertisements shall be inserted in the daily papers for the space of one week for the information of my relations, to whom, that is to say, to such and to such only as shall make their claim within two months after such advertisements, I leave the before-mentioned property, to be divided between them according to the discretion of my executors . . . Should I survive my daughter, I will my property to my relations above mentioned." It was held that although "next of kin" are to be ascertained at the death of the ancestor, the case of a gift "to relations" claiming at a particular period is not the same; and that the obvious intention was that on the death of the daughter without issue, the property should go to the relations of the testator then living, provided they claim within two months.

In Bessant v. Noble, 2 Jur. N. S. 461, testator created a trust for his daughter for life with remainder to her children, and in case she should leave no children, then in trust for testator's next of kin "in manner aforesaid." In the previous part of his will, testator had given property to his son Daniel, with the provision that in case Daniel should die under the age of twenty-five years without issue surviving "the property given to him shall be in trust for such person as, at the time of such failure of issue, shall be my next of kin according to the statute for the distribution of intestates' estates, and as if I had survived my son Daniel, in the like shares as they would be entitled to the same under 33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

the statute." He similarly provided with respect to property given to his son Thomas, that if he should die under twenty-five without issue surviving, it should be held in trust "for such persons as, at the time of failure of such issue, shall be my next of kin as if I had survived my said son Thomas John, and in the like shares as they would be entitled to the same under the statute for the distribution of intestates' estates." He further provided that in the event of the death of either of his sons in the lifetime of his wife, without child or children, the property given to him should "belong to such person as shall then be my next of kin, in manner aforesaid." It was held that the limitation over of the bequest to the daughter must be construed in the light of all the previous passages in the will which contain a limitation to next of kin, and accordingly that the phrase "in manner aforesaid" did not refer only to the manner of taking, as described by statute, but was of the essence of the description of the persons who were to be next of kin; and therefore that the time fixed for ascertaining the members of that class was at the death of the daughter, and not that of the testator.

In Wharton v. Barker, 4 Kay & J. 483, testator, after devising his estate upon trust as to one moiety for his daughter Mary for life, with remainder to her children, and as to the other moiety for his daughter Sarah for life, with remainder to her children, with cross remainders between them, proceeded: "And in case my said daughters Mary and Sarah shall both happen to die without lawful issue, or leaving such, all of them shall die under the age of twenty-one years without leaving any lawful issue, then I direct my said trustees, their executors, etc., to pay one equal half part of all the said trust moneys unto the person or persons that shall then be considered as my next of kin and personal representative or representatives, agreeable to the order of the statutes of distribution, and the whole of the other equal part or share unto the person or persons that shall then be considered the next of kin and personal representative or representatives of my late wife . . . agreeable to the order of the statutes of distribution." It was held, after an extensive review of the decisions bearing upon the question, that while it is the general rule, based upon the broad principle of construction by which all gifts to a class following after a bequest for life in the same property vest immediately upon the death of the testator, that where there is a limitation by will to one for life, and after his decease, then to the next of kin of testator, those who are to take under the designation "next of kin" are the persons who answer that description at the death of testator, and not those who answer that description at the death of the tenant for life, and while the operation of such rule of construction is not excluded by the mere circumstance that words of futurity are ed, or by the circumstance that the first class would be one of the class to take if the persons it comprised were to be ascertained at the death of the testator, yet that there was in the case before the court sufficient to show that testator intended the persons entitled under the ultimate limitation to be ascertained at the time of distribution. This conclusion is based upon the ground that it was extremely unlikely that the testator would take so circuitous a method of giving his daughter a residue in event of her dying without children, instead of directly saying so (although that reason, taken alone, would not be of sufficient weight to prevent the application of the general rule); upon the fact that the word "then," being twice used, and first as marking the conjunction of circumstances, and in the second instance be read as an adverb of time, the force of which cannot be justified by construing it as denoting the time when the inquiry was to be made; and upon the further ground that if the persons entitled to take under the bequest to the next of kin of his deceased wife were to be determined at the time of his death, it would have been more natural for the testator to limit the estate directly to his daughters, who, of course, were the sole next of kin of the deceased wife, instead of adopting a circuitous mode of expression.

In Lees v. Massey, 3 DeG. F. & J. 113, testator, by a will executed very shortly before his death, devised his real estate upon trust to pay a moiety of the rents to his wife for life, and to apply the other moiety toward the maintenance of his daughter, who was his only child; and after the decease of his wife, gave all the real estate to his daughter, her heirs and assigns forever; adding: "Provided, nevertheless, that in case of the decease of my said daughter . . . without lawful issue, and my said wife . . . her surviving, then and in such case I bequeath such last-mentioned estates to her, my said wife, for life, and after her decease to my relations, share and share alike." It was held that the limitations in the will were inconsistent with an intention that the class designated as "my relations," who were to take "share and share alike," should be ascertained at his own death; as he must have known that his daughter would be his sole heir and sole next of kin at that time.

In Re Greenwood, 31 L. J. Ch. N. S. 119, where testator gave a sum of money in trust for his daughter for life, and after her decease for the use of her husband and children, and in case she should not have any child or children, or that none of them should attain a vested interest in the trust fund, "then to assign and transfer the said stocks, funds, and securities, and all accumulations, if any, of the interest and dividends thereof, unto such person or persons as shall happen to be my next of kin according to the statute for the distribution of intestates' estates." Testator's next of kin at the time of his death were his four children. It was held, following Briden v. Hewlett, 2 Myl. & K. 90, 1 L. J. Ch. N. S. 114, and Butler v. Bushnell, 3 Myl. & K. 232, 3 L. J. Ch. N. S. 139, that it was not probable that testator should mean to include as one of his next of kin the person upon whose death without issue he had expressly directed that the property should go over; and therefore that the class entitled under the ultimate limitation was to be ascertained as of the date of the daughter's death.

A clear expression of intention of testatrix that the next of kin should be ascertained at the death of the tenant for life, and not at her own death, was held, in Travis v. Taylor, 14 Week. Rep. 909, to be manifested by a will by which testatrix, after giving a life estate to a niece, with remainder to her children, provided, "If my said niece shall happen to die without leaving lawful issue as aforesaid, that then the whole of my said estate and effects . . . shall go and belong to such person or persons as shall then be my next of kin in a course of administration according to the statute of distribution of intestates' personal effects."

In Clowes v. Hilliard, L. R. 4 Ch. Div. 413, 46 L. J. Ch. N. S. 271, 25 Week. Rep. 224, testator created a trust for each of his daughters for life, remainder to their respective issue, with cross remainders between them, the issue to take vested interests at twenty-one or marriage, and further declared that if all his daughters should die without having any child or issue who should acquire a vested interest in the premises, then that the trustees should stand possessed in trust "for such person or persons as would have been entitled to the residue of my trust estate under and according to the statutes of distribution in case I had then died intestate." The court, in holding that those who, as some of testator's next of kin, would be entitled under the limitation over if his four daughters, who were all living and unmarried, were dead without issue, had no such interest as entitled them to institute an action for administration, said that the gift was to those persons who might answer the description of the testator's next of kin at the period when all his four daughters should have died; and, as to three of them, without issue who should have acquired vested interests.

An artificial class was held, in Sturge v. Great Western R. Co. L. R. 19 Ch. Div. 444, to have been created by the provisions of a will by which testator directed property to be held in trust for the benefit of each of his children for life, with remainder to their issue, etc., and in default of the previous limitations "upon trust for the person or persons who, at the time of such respective decease of my children, shall, by virtue of the statutes for the distribution of the estates of persons dying intestate, be my next of kin; and if more than one, then in the shares, proportions, and manner prescribed by the said statutes," the court saying: "It appears to me that the corresponding words here, 'who, at the time of such respective decease of my children, shall,' etc., import that the class was to be ascertained at that time. It seems to me to follow as a matter of course that we have got an artificial class, artificial in the sense that you must suppose that the testator was looking to a class who would be ascertained at the time he designated and at no other time; and that although we find in this case a reference to the 'shares, proportions, and maner prescribed by the statutes,' yet those words must give way for the purpose of ascertaining the class at another point of time than that of the death of the testator, at which the statute would ascertain them."

In Valentine v. Fitzsimons [1894] 1 I. R. 93, where a testator directed that the residue of his property should, at the death of his wife, or at the expiration of ten years from his death, which ever should last happen, be held by his trustees on trust as to a moiety thereof for each of his sons absolutely, and in the event of either of the sons being dead or having encumbered the provision theretofore made for him by the will, then in trust for all or any of his relations by blood, then living, excluding such son, as the then trustees of his will should appoint, and in default of appointment, "in trust for the persons who would then be my next of kin according to the statutes of distribution of the personal estates of intestates if my son . . . were then dead, such persons, if more than one, to take as tenants in common in the share prescribed by the said statutes." It was held that as the word "then" was used, if not in the first instance, at least in the second, as an adverb of time, the next of kin were to be ascertained as of the date of ten years after the death of testator; and that the reference to the statute of distribution, not being to such statute as conferring title, was insufficient to limit the meaning of such word.

In Re Karn, 2 Ont. Week. Rep. 841, where testator devised certain real estate to his daughter for life, with remainder to his granddaughters, "but if my said granddaughter Louisa be not then alive, the same I give and bequeath to her children lawfully begotten, in fee, but failing such children then alive, to my own right heirs absolutely forever," it was held that the word "then," twice used, referred to the death of the daughter, and therefore that the right heirs intended were those existing at the date of her death.

In Haddock v. Perham, 70 Ga. 572, where a testator gave property in trust for a daughter for life, and at her death to go to her children, and if she should die without children, then to his heirs at law, it was said in passing that, in default of children, the estate would revert and pass in fee to such persons as might at that time be the heirs of testator; but this may hardly be regarded as an adjudication, the question before the court being whether the daughter took an estate tail.

33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

In Johnson v. Askey, 190 Ill. 58, 60 N. E. 76, where a testator, after giving his daughter, who was his sole heir, his entire estate, to be held in trust for her, provided: "Should my daughter die without issue, it is my wish that said estates, of every kind and nature soever, shall revert back to the heirs of myself and my wife, Elizabeth Johnson, deceased, as the law provides. Should my daughter die with issue, said heir or heirs shall inherit the estate herein given to my daughter,"—it was held that, in view of the circumstances that the testator's daughter was not possessed of average mental capacity, was wholly unfit to care for, preserve, and manage the estate, and the use of the word "heirs," which evidently refers to a class consisting of more than one person, it was clearly testator's intention that the remainder should not vest at the time of his death, but at the time of the death of his daughter.

In Bond v. Moore, 236 Ill. 576, 19 L.R.A. (N.S.) 540, 86 N. E. 386, where testatrix devised her entire estate to her son for life, and provided that "should he die without children, then the estate, or so much of it as may remain after his reasonable expenses for living, etc., shall go to my nearest relatives in such proportions as the law in such cases does provide," it was held that, as the son was himself the nearest relative of testatrix at the time of her death, the remainder would be considered as given to the persons answering the description at the termination of the estate for life.

In Sears v. Russell, 8 Gray, 86, an intention to refer to those who should be testator's heirs when the contingency should arise, and not to those who were his heirs at the time of his decease, in a testamentary provision by which testator, after creating trusts for the benefit of his children for life, and directing that, at the death of each, the trust property should be conveyed and transferred to his or her child or children then living, or to the issue of any then deceased, further directed that, in case of the decease of any one or more of the grandchildren "during the lifetime of such surviving son-in-law or daughter-in-law, the distributive share or shares of said grandchildren or either of them so deceasing without issue shall not pass to or vest in such surviving sons-in-law or daughters-in-law, but, on the contrary, I do hereby give and devise the same to my heirs at law," and further providing that nothing contained in the will should prevent or deprive any grandchild arriving at the age of thirty years, or at the time fixed for distribution, from making a will disposing of such property,—was held to be manifested by a clause by which a legacy was given to any son-in-law or daughter-in-law who should survive their respective wives or husbands, out of the devise in trust for the benefit of such deceased husband or wife, and in which testator stated, "and having thus provided for my sons-in-law and daughters-in-law as shall or may out-to my children, their husbands and wives, I deem it fit and proper that in case of the decease afterwards and without issue of any of my said grandchildren, they, the surviving sons-in-law or daughters-in-law, should not become seised or possessed, by tenancy or otherwise, of any right, property, interest, or estate in said distributive share or shares of said trust property belonging to such grandchildren, any law or usage to the contrary notwithstanding." And this view of the testator's intent was further held to be greatly strengthened by the use of the same words with a similar meaning in a preceding clause by which testator directed the trustees, in the event of the death of his daughter without issue, to convey the trust estate to his heirs at law, since, if the heirs referred to were those who were his heirs at the time of his death, it would follow that his daughter would have an equitable estate for life and also a vested right to a conveyance in fee of the same estate upon her own decease.

In Heard v. Read, 169 Mass. 216, 47 N. E. 778, construing a will by which a widower, about seventy-five years of age, gave a residuary estate in trust for his daughter, a childless widow, then over forty-two years of age, who was his sole heir presumptive, remainder to her issue, and if she should leave no issue surviving her, "the trust premises shall at her decease be divided into two equal parts or portions, one of which parts shall go to and be held by a certain person] . . . and the other part shall be divided among my heirs at law as though I died intestate," it was held that not only the particular phrases of the will, but its general purport in the event which had happened, of the daughter's death without issue, and which the testator must have contemplated, was inconsistent with any intention that the daughter, if she should leave no issue surviving her, should take as sole heir one half of the trust property, but that the testator had in mind his heirs at law living at the time of the decease of his daughter.

In Brown v. Wright, 194 Mass. 540, 80 N. E. 612, where the effect of a will and codicil was to give testator's son a life estate in $2,000, being a part of a trust estate, which life estate was subject to a life estate in the whole trust estate in testator's widow, with remainder to the son's issue, or, failing such issue, to testator's right heirs at law: and it was plain from the provisions of the will, as read in the light of the circumstances, that it was made in the expectation that the son would be testator's only child and sole heir presumptive, it was held that, there being no words of present gift to the heirs, but the gift to the heirs being made by way of a direction to pay over and distribute only, and the gift over being made after a life estate in the sole heir presumptive, the heirs were to be ascertained as of the date of the termination of the life estate; and that this conclusion was strengthened by the fact that there was in effect a direction to accumulate all income after the wife's death above the income on the sum given for life to the son.

In Boston Safe Deposit & T. Co. v. Blanchard, 196 Mass. 35, 81 N. E. 654, testator seventy-six years of age left as his only descendant a daughter who was a widow and childless and non compos mentis at the time the will was executed, and thereafter until her death. After creating a trust to pay over one half the net income to his wife and the other half to, or for the benefit of, his daughter, and making certain provisions in the event of the death of his wife or daughter, leaving issue, and directing that, in the event of either of them dying without leaving issue, the whole of the net income should be paid to the survivor, testator continued: "And upon the decease of such survivor leaving issue, to distribute the principal of the trust fund among my issue; and if, on the decease of such survivor, there should be no living descendant of mine, then to distribute said principal among my own right heirs, unless my adopted son, Thomas Blanchard, Jr., or some issue of his body, should then be living, and in that case pay over to him, if living, or to his issue if he be not then living, one half of said principal fund." It was held that, taking into account the situation of testator with reference to his wife, daughter, and other kindred at the time of the execution of his will, the fact that the will contains no words of present gift to the "right heirs" of testator, and the fact that the vesting of any interest in Thomas Blanchard, Jr., or his issue, is, by the clear terms of the will, made contingent upon one or the other being alive at the time of distribution, an intent was indicated that only upon the death of the surviving life tenant should the ultimate beneficiaries be ascertained.

In Hardy v. Gage, 66 N. H. 552, 22 Atl. 557, a testatrix, after creating a trust the income of one half of which was to be paid to her daughter during her life, and the income of the other half to the daughter's son up to the age of twenty-three years, and providing that if such son and any other child that might be born to her daughter should die before becoming twenty-three years old, then the income of the whole estate should be paid over to the daughter, and so much of the principal as the executors might judge necessary for her personal comfort, further provided that, in case the daughter's son and any other child which she might have should die before attaining the age of twenty-three that, upon the decease of the daughter, "all the said residue of my estate shall go and descend to my heirs at law." It was held that the daughter being the sole next of kin and heir at law at the time of the death of testatrix, it was unreasonable to suppose, in view of the direction to devote the income and so much of the principal as might be necessary for the comfort of the daughter in the event of the decease of the daughter's children in her lifetime, that testatrix meant to give the daughter the whole estate in such event, and therefore that the gift over must be construed as intending to refer to the persons answering the description of next of kin at the death of the daughter.

In Beers v. Grant, 110 App. Div. 152, 97 N. Y. Supp. 117, affirmed without opinion in 185 N. Y. 533, 77 N. E. 1181, it was held that, under the provisions of a will by which testator gave to trustees a portion of his residuary estate in trust for a daughter during her natural life, and after her death to her children, and in case of failure of children, to testator's heirs at law in such shares and proportions as, by the laws of the state of New York, they would take and inherit real estate of which he should die possessed and intestate, the daughter took no interest in the property as an heir at law of the testator, but that, upon her death without children, it became the duty of the trustee to pay over the trust fund, in the shares which they would have taken, to and among those who would have been testator's heirs at law had he died a moment after his daughter's death.

In Salter v. Drowne, 141 App. Div. 352, 126 N. Y. Supp. 686, testatrix devised a sum of money upon trust for her sister for life, and on the death of the sister, for her daughter for life, "and if my daughter be not living, or on her death, then to pay and divide such principal sum or the investment thereof to the issue of my daughter absolutely, and if none, then to my next of kin." She then devised certain real estate in trust for her daughter for life, and if her daughter should not be then living, or on her death, to convey such realty in fee to the daughter's daughter upon her attaining the age of twenty-one, and if she should not be then living, then to convey to her issue, and if none, "then to my heirs at law." Testatrix further created a trust in her residuary estate for her daughter for life, adding, "and if my daughter should not then be living, or on her death, to pay such principal sum, or the investments thereof, to the issue of my daughter and if my daughter shall leave no issue, then to my next of kin." The granddaughter died without issue in the lifetime of testatrix. The daughter was the sole heir and next of kin of testatrix at the time of her death. It was held that as there was no immediate gift of the remainder interests, but only a direction to the trustees to pay and divide in the future with respect to the trusts of the personal property, and to convey in the future with respect to the trust of the real estate; and as testatrix could not have intended to give her daughter a remainder limited upon her own life, but in all probability, the daughter having issue living at the time the will was made, the ulterior bequest to the next of kin of testatrix was considered by her, if at all, only as a remote possibility, as to which she did not have the particular individuals in mind; it was plain that testatrix did not intend that the remainder should vest upon her death, but that the persons entitled under the ultimate limitation should be those who would answer to that description after the death of the daughter.

In Peirce v. Hubbard, 152 Pa. 18, 25 Atl. 231, where a testator directed property to be held in trust for his daughter, "and in case of her death without issue or issues of her children, then reversible to my right consanguinary heirs," it was held that the devise over was to the persons who, at the daughter's death, were then the right heirs of testator.

In Everitt's Estate, 195 Pa. 450, 46 Atl. 1, construing a devise of testator's entire estate in trust for the benefit of his son, an only child, for life, with remainder to his children, "and in case he shall die leaving no children, . . . then all my estate shall go to and immediately become vested in my next of kin then living, share and share alike, including issue born to my brother George B. and his second wife, Rosanna," it was held to be clear that the testator intended only his next of kin who should be living at the death of his son to be the residuary legatees of his estate.

In Wood v. Schoen, 216 Pa. 425, 66 Atl. 79, a testator devised all his real estate to a trustee for the purposes named in his will. If he died without children, he directed his trustee to pay one half the proceeds to his wife for life and the other half to his three sisters and the survivor of them for life. Upon the death of his wife and sisters he devised one third of his estate to a nephew and niece, and the other two thirds to such child or children as he might leave, or their issue, adding: "And in default of such child or children or issue, then to those who would then be entitled thereto under the intestate laws of this state. And I authorize my said trustees aforesaid to convey and assure the same by proper assurances in law to said persons respectively." It was held that as the word "then" is used twice in the provision in question, it must have been employed the second time for a different purpose and with a different meaning than where first used, and so must be given its adverbial significance; and therefore that it was the intention of the testator, as disclosed by the will, to devise the two thirds of the remainder of his real estate to those who should be his heirs at the expiration of the particular estate, and not to those who were his heirs at the time of his death.

In Merrefield's Estate, 5 Pa. Dist. R. 463, where a testatrix, after giving a life estate in the income to her son, who was her sole heir at law at the date of her death, with remainder to his child or children upon reaching majority, provided that should her son die without issue surviving, then after his decease "all of my said residue to be equally divided amongst my heirs then living, absolutely, agreeable with the intestate laws of Pennsylvania," the fact that the son was given only the income for life was held to show that those who were to take the residue were to be ascertained at the time of his death, and not that of the testatrix. No allusion is made to the circumstance that the limitation was expressly to "heirs then living," although this would appear to furnish a better basis for the conclusion reached than the reason assigned by the court.

2. Executory limitations.

In Doe ex dem. King v. Frost, 3 Barn. & Ald. 546, where a testator having a son and married daughter who had five children devised to his son in fee, adding: "And if the said W. Frost [his son] should have no children, child, or issue, the said estate is, on the decease of the said W. Frost, to become the property of the heir at law, subject to such legacies as the said W. Frost may leave by will to any of the younger branches of the family," the will, in the light of surrounding circumstances, was held sufficiently to manifest an intention that the expression, "the heir at law," should mean the person who, at the time of the son's decease without issue, should then be the heir at law of the testator, it being clear that the son himself could not be meant as the heir at law, as then the devise over would be nugatory, and the power of leaving legacies unnecessary.

In White v. Springett, L. R. 4 Ch. 300, where testator gave his estate to such of his three grandchildren as should survive their father and attain twenty-five, but directed that in case two only of them should die in the lifetime of their father, or under twenty-five, and the amount to which the surviving grandchild would then become entitled should exceed a certain sum, then the excess should go to the person or persons exclusive of the surviving grandchild who, under the said statute for the distribution of personal estates of intestates, would, immediately after the decease of the survivor of my other two grandchildren, be entitled to my personal estate in case I had at such time died intestate," it was contended that it having turned out that the surviving grandchild was testator's sole next of kin at the time of the decease of the survivor of the other two grandchildren, and as such grandchildren were excepted from the class, the gift failed for want of a member of the class; but it was held that the testator, in the clause under discussion, did not say that the surviving grandchild was to be excluded from the class entitled, but that he had created for himself an arbitrary class, to be ascertained by applying the statute to a particular time in order to arrive at the particular class of persons, without any reference to any division of the estate, or any exclusion of the particular person from taking a share; and therefore that the persons entitled under the limitation were those who would have been next of kin had the surviving grandchild also been dead at the time when the class was to be ascertained.

In Welch v. Brimmer, 169 Mass. 204, 47 N. E. 669, testator gave his son, who was his only heir, a moiety of his estate, to be held in trust for him until he should attain the age of twenty-three, and added: "Provided, however, that in case my said son shall die having no issue him surviving, or such issue shall de cease during minority, then and in either of such cases my will is that my sister, Eliza Oliver, shall have and take the said moiety of my estate and its accumulations hereinbefore given to my said son, and if the said Eliza O. shall not then be living, I give said estate with its accumulations to the person or persons who shall be my heir or heirs at law." The other moiety of the estate was given to the sister for life, with remainder to the son or his issue, with a similar limitation over to testator's heir or heirs at law. It was held that the fact that the son, who was the sole heir presumptive of the testator when the will was made, was given a fee, furnished a somewhat stronger reason for holding that the heirs were to be determined as of the time of the death of the first taker than when the first taker has only a life estate and the devise is of a remainder; and that the repeated use by the testator of the word "shall" in the clause quoted, and the concluding portion of such clause, in which the word "then" relates to the time of the death of the son, tended to confirm the conclusion that the testator must have intended his heir or heirs living at the time of the death of his son.

In Pinkham v. Blair, 57 N. H. 226, it was held that where the only next of kin of testator at the time of his own decease were three children, to whom he devised his estate in fee, a provision that, in the event of the death of all his children without issue, "then my will is that said estate shall go to my next of kin, and their heirs and assigns forever," had reference to those who should be his next of kin at the time of the death of the last survivor of his children without issue.

In Delaney v. McCormack, 88 N. Y. 174, a testator gave his son the whole of his real estate for life, and absolutely and in fee in case the son married and had issue, but if he should die without having had lawful issue, the testator directed his executors who should then be surviving, or the last survivor of them, to sell his real estate and distribute the proceeds among the testator's "next of kin as personal estate according to the laws of the state of New York for distribution of intestate personal estate." It was held that the gift not being immediate, conditioned upon the death of the son without having had lawful issue, and the fact that as, at the death of the son, the land was to be converted into personalty, and distributed as such, the subject of the gift did not come into existence until after the son's death; as well as the incongruity of a construction which would give the property to the son, who was testator's sole next of kin at the time of his death, upon the death of such son without issue,—all went to show that the next of kin to whom the proceeds were to be distributed were those who were such at the date of the son's death.

In De Wolf v. Middleton, 18 R. I. 810, 31 L.R.A. 146, 26 Atl. 44, 31 Atl. 271, a will by which testator gave his daughters a defeasible fee, providing that if they should leave no surviving heir, his estate "on their decease" should "be divided among my heirs at law according to the statute of descents," was held to manifest an intent that testator's heirs should be ascertained as of the time of the death of the daughters, notwithstanding the use of the words "according to the statute of descents."

In Green v. Edwards, 31 R. I. 1, 77 Atl. 188, where testator, after giving equitable estates in fee tail to his three children, with contingent cross remainders to the survivors or their descendants if either child died without issue, provided that "in case of the death of all my said children without issue, they [the trustees] shall transfer and convey the estate held by them in trust to my heirs at law according to the statutes of descent and distribution then in force in the state of Rhode Island." It was held that a vested remainder was given to heirs at law to be then designated.

V. Exclusion of first taker from participation.

It should be pointed out that the question as to when a first taker who is also a member of the class to which the limitation over is made is to be excluded from participation is not peculiar to cases of the type under discussion, but is governed by much the same considerations as where the class is described by other words than those with the construction of which this note is concerned.

In Lee v. Lee, 1 Drew. & S. 85, 29 L. J. Ch. N. S. 788, 6 Jur. N. S. 621, 8 Week. Rep. 443, it is said that if a testator bequeaths property to a class by a particular description, and the question arises whether a certain individual who comes within the description ought or ought not to be excluded, it is not sufficient, in order to exclude him, to show the absence of a special intention to include him, but that a clear and unambiguous indication of an intention to exclude him must be shown; that there is no such absurdity or unreasonableness in a person taking a life interest by virtue of a particular gift to him nominatim and a further interest, either alone or jointly with others, as the case may be, under a gift of the same will to a class which, as described by the testator, merely includes him; especially since it is probable that the testator did not concern himself with the consideration of the question who would be his next of kin, but simply intended that, at all events, the first taker should have a life estate, then that the property should go to his next of kin, whoever he, she, or they might happen to be.

The fact that some of the persons who would fall within the class described, if ascertained at the testator's death, are tenants for life, will not prevent them from taking under the limitation. Mitchell v. Bridges, 13 Week. Rep. 200, 11 L. T. N. S. 727; Smith v. Winsor, 239 Ill. 567, 88 N. E. 482; Rotch v. Loring, 169 Mass. 190, 47 N. E. 660; Buzby's Appeal, 61 Pa. 111.

The fact that the first taker is sole member of a class to which a limitation over is made is no sufficient ground for excluding such person from participation, since the effect of a positive bequest is not to be controlled by inference and argument from the other part of the will. Jones v. Colbeck, 8 Ves. Jr. 38, 6 Revised Rep. 207; Murphy v. Donegan, 3 Jones & L. 534; Thomas v. Castle, 76 Conn. 447, 56 Atl. 854; Buzby's Appeal, 61 Pa. 111; Kenyon's Petition, 17 R. I. 149, 20 Atl. 294.

In Elmsley v. Young, 2 Myl. & K. 780, 4 L. J. Ch. N. S. 200, construing a settlement upon trust to pay the interest to one for life, remainder to his children, and if no child, to such person or persons as the settlor should appoint, and, in default of appointment, to such person or persons as should, at the time of the settlor's decease, be the settlor's next of kin, it was held to be too clear for argument that the life tenant should be included in the class of next of kin to whom the fund was ultimately limited.

The case of Pearce v. Vincent involved a will by which testator devised his real estate to a cousin, Thomas Pearce, for life, remainder to such of his relations of the name of Pearce, being a male, as the cousin should by deed or will appoint, and in default of such appointment, to such of his relations of the name of Pearce, being a male, as the cousin should approve of or adopt if he should be living at the death of the cousin; and in default of appointment or adoption, then testator devised the said estates and premises unto the next or nearest relation or next of kin of him, the testator, of the name of Pearce, being a male, or the elder of such male relations in case there should be more than one of equal degree who should be living at his, the testator's decease. The cousin was the nearest male relation of the testator living at his death. The question having arisen as to whether the cousin took under the ultimate limitation, before Sir John Leach, then master of the rolls, he directed the case to be sent to a court of law, inasmuch as the question affected real estate. The case was accordingly submitted to the court of exchequer, which (see 1 Crompt. & M. 598) expressed the opinion that the cousin took an estate in fee simple under the ultimate limitation. This conclusion, however, seemed to the master of the rolls (2 M. & K. 800) inconsistent with the limited power of appointment given to the first taker, inasmuch as it would give him the power of defeating the object of the appointment. He therefore directed a second case to be sent to the court of common pleas, which (see 2 Scott, 347, 2 Bing. N. C. 328) arrived at the same conclusion as the court of exchequer. The case was ultimately disposed of by Lord Langdale, M. R. in 2 Allen, 230, who said: "It is argued that [to be excluded from taking under the ultimate limitation] because the gift to Thomas Pearce for life, and the restrictions put upon him, in his character of tenant for life, are wholly inconsistent with an intention on the part of the testator to give him the absolute power over the estate. But the testator could not have had in his view and knowledge that the ultimate gift, which is limited to a person unascertained at the date of his will, would go to Thomas Pearce. The argument derived from intention does not apply in this case; and I am of opinion that, upon the true construction of the will, Thomas Pearce took under the ultimate limitation, not because he was the individual person intended by the testator to take, but because he answers the description of the person to whom the estates are ultimately given."

In Gorbell v. Davison, 18 Beav. 556, the testator, after limiting a remainder to next of kin, provided that, should no claimant appear after twelve months from the decease of the life tenants, the principal sum should be equally divided amongst certain charities, was not regarded as sufficient to exclude the life tenants, who were testator's sole next of kin at the time of his death, from taking a vested interest in the remainder, which might be claimed after their death by their representatives.

In Thompson v. Smith, 27 Can. S. C. 33, a will by which testator, after giving to his wife and daughter, who was his only child, an estate during their joint lives and the life of the survivor, provided: "I do further will and desire that at the decease of both the said Lissy Thompson and Maria Anna Thompson the said residue of my real and personal property shall be enjoyed and go to the benefit of my lawful heirs," was held to contain no indication of any intention, express or implied, to exclude the daughter from the class entitled to the fee.

In Rand v. Butler, 48 Conn. 293, where a testator devised property in trust for a grandson who was, at the date of the will and at the death of the testator, his only living issue and heir, and who was an imbecile, the income thereof to be expended for his support during his natural life, and on the decease of said grandson, then to deliver and transfer the property to testator's heirs at law, it was held that neither the fact that the property was put in the hands of trustees for the benefit of the grandson during his life, nor the fact that the testator speaks of his heirs in the plural number, while the grandson was his sole L.R.A. (N.S.) heir, was sufficient evidence of an intention to use the word "heir" in other than its usual and legal acceptation, to warrant the exclusion of the grandson from consideration, if the will should be so construed that the heirs must be ascertained at the death of testator.

In Fargo v. Miller, 150 Mass. 225, 5 L.R.A. 690, 22 N. E. 1003, it is said that whether, if the life tenant was the sole next of kin or heir of the testator when the will was made, and would continue to be such if he survived the testator, and this was known to testator, this fact alone would be sufficient to show that the testator did not include him in a bequest or a devise of a remainder to the heirs or next of kin of testator, cannot be considered as free from doubt.

In Harris v. McLaran, 30 Miss. 533, it is held that no inference of an intention to exclude the life tenant from the benefits of the limitation over could be drawn from a provision in a deed by which slaves were settled upon grantor's daughter for life, with remainder to her issue, and, in default of issue, then to grantor's lawful heirs.

In Wadsworth v. Murray, 161 N. Y. 274, 76 Am. St. Rep. 265, 55 N. E. 610, a provision that, upon the death of a grandson without issue, a trust fund of which he was the life beneficiary should descend to and vest in testator's heirs at law in the same manner that it would have descended to and vested in them if the will had not been made, and the said grandson had died without issue before testator's decease, was held not to exclude by implication the grandson from any share in testator's estate under a limitation over to testator's heirs at law in event of the death of another beneficiary without issue.

The fact that a limitation over to the heirs of a testator can take effect only after the death of certain persons who would be heirs at the time of testator's death is not enough to demonstrate an intention to exclude them from participation. Stewart's Estate, 147 Pa. 383, 23 Atl. 599.

See also, in this connection, Peck v. Carlton, 154 Mass. 231, 28 N. E. 166, set out under subdivision IV. b, supra.

On the other hand, an intention to exclude the first taker in ascertaining the membership of the class entitled under the limitation over was held to have been manifested in the following cases:

In Bird v. Wood, 2 Sim. & Stu. 400, 4 L. J. Ch. 86, 25 Revised Rep. 238, testatrix bequeathed property upon trust for her daughter for life, and after the death of her daughter, to transfer to such persons as her daughter should appoint, and, in default of appointment, then upon trust to assign and transfer the property unto testatrix's own next of kin according to the statute of distribution, to be considered as a vested interest from the time of testatrix's death, except only as to any child that might be afterward born of her daughter, and it was held that the daughter could not be such next of kin, for the persons intended were to take at her death; and the persons intended must have been living at the death of the testatrix, for their interests were then to be vested; and therefore that the persons who, at the testatrix's death, would have been her next of kin if her daughter had been then dead without children, were plainly intended. This case has been distinguished in subsequent decisions as having been decided on a ground which, though it appears in the statement of facts, is not touched upon in the judgment. This ground is that the exception showed what was the class of persons out of whom the exception was made, and the exception being of "any child that might be afterward born" of the daughter, it was plain that the next of kin at the death of the daughter were the persons entitled.

In Briden v. Hewlett, 2 Myl. & K. 90, a testator gave his personal estate to trustees to invest and to pay the interest to his mother, who was his sole next of kin, for her life; and after the decease of his mother, he gave the principal to such person or persons as she should by her will direct and appoint; "and in case my said mother shall die without a will, then to such person or persons as would be entitled to the same by virtue of the statute of distributions." The court said: "It is impossible to contend that this testator meant to give the property in question absolutely and entirely to his mother, because he gives it to her for life, with a power of appointment. In case of her death without a will, the testator gives his property to such person or persons as would be entitled to it by virtue of the statute of distributions. Entitled at what time? The word 'would' imports that the testator intended his next of kin at the death of his mother. It is clear that he meant to exclude his mother from the class who were to take in the event of her intestacy; and no question can, in this case, be raised between the next of kin, exclusive of the mother, at the time of the death of the testator, and the next of kin at the time of the death of the mother; for these are here the same persons."

In Say v. Creed, 5 Hare, 580, 16 L. J. Ch. N. S. 361, 11 Jur. 603, the fact that testatrix, knowing that the life tenant, if she survived her, would be her sole next of kin ex parte paterna as well as ex parte materna, limited the remainder to her next of kin ex parte materna, was held to show an intention to exclude the tenant for life; such exclusion being accomplished by holding that the members of the class were to be ascertained at the time of the death of the life tenant.

The express exclusion of persons who would be members of a class to whom a limitation over is made at the termination of a life estate if the life tenant were excluded may be taken as indicative of an intention to exclude the life tenant, where the context of the will or the circumstances under which it is executed show that the testator, when making it, regarded it as certain that the state of his family would remain precisely the same at his death as at the date of his will; but where such a provision is susceptible of explanation as having been intended to meet the possibility of changes in the class before testator's death, it may well be questioned whether such provision affords a clear and unambiguous indication of an intention to exclude the life tenant from taking. Lee v. Lee, 1 Drew. & S. 85, 29 L. J. Ch. N. S. 788, 6 Jur. N. S. 621, 8 Week. Rep. 443.

In Nicoll v. Irby, — Conn. —, 77 Atl. 957, where testator created a trust for the benefit of his brother so long as he should live, and after his death for the support and maintenance of any children, heirs of his own body, who should survive him, till the youngest of them should attain the age of thirty years, when the trust property was to be divided among them, and in the event of the brother dying without children, heirs of his own body, then to testator's own heirs, adding, "it is my will that no adopted child shall receive aught under this will," it was held that the testator's manifest unwillingness that the remainder estate should go to the life tenant's natural heirs, or to those whom he might make his heirs by will, and the fact that the language used assumes that the heirs designated will, or may, be in existence at the time the payment was to be made after the brother's death, together with the use of the plural "heirs," and the provision that they are to share alike, indicated an intention on the part of the testator to exclude the life tenant from the heirs who were to take.

In Smith v. Winsor, 239 Ill. 567, 88 N. E. 482, testator gave to his wife, in case she should survive him, his entire estate for life, with full power to sell and convey and to use the proceeds or any part thereof in any way she should desire for her comfort or advantage, or for such charitable purposes as she should deem worthy, adding: "At and upon her death the remainder of the said estate, if any, to descend to my heirs at law in proportion as designated and provided by statutes of the state of Illinois." He further provided that his wife should not be held accountable for the use or disposition of such estate or any part thereof, or the proceeds arising from any sale thereof. In case his wife should not survive him, he directed that his estate should descend to his heirs at law. It was held that while the fact that the life tenant was to have the use of all the property during life was not alone sufficient to indicate an intention to exclude the life tenant from the class to whom the remainder is limited, but that, taken in connection with the provision giving the estate to testator's heirs at law in the contingency of his surviving his wife, and the fact that the power of disposition given her was limited to the right to use it for her own support, comfort, and enjoyment, or for such charitable purposes as she should deem worthy, showing that testator did not contemplate that she would have power over the property for any other purpose, the intention of the testator was manifest that the widow should not take under the ultimate limitation, but that, subject to her use and disposition, it should pass to his heirs at law who were of his blood.

In Walker v. Dunshee, 38 Pa. 430, it was held that testator's children were to be excluded from participation in the ultimate limitation of a devise to them in tail, with cross-remainders in tail, remainder to testator's right heirs and to the right heirs of his wife, as tenants in common, forever.

VI. Instances in which members of class are ascertained at testator's death, but take only in event of surviving distribution.

This subdivision may be prefaced with much the same statement as the one preceding, that the decisions which follow should be regarded only as instancing the application to cases of the type falling within the scope of this note of general principles common to all testamentary gifts to a class.

In Spink v. Lewis, 3 Bro. Ch. 355, where testator directed his residuary estate to remain invested for the space of ten years, when the fund thus accumulated should be divided into six parts, one sixth thereof to be paid to a nephew or to his legal representatives, and the other five parts thereof to be divided among such next of kin and legal representatives as should then be living, under the usual and due course of representation, it was said to be plain that the testator meant by "next of kin" some class of persons of whom it was doubtful whether they would live ten years, and that the only next of kin of the testator living at his death having died before the end of the ten years, the disposition of the five sixths lapsed.

In Bishop v. Cappel, 1 De. G. & S. 411, where the testator provided that a moiety of his personal estate given to a brother should "not be left to him and his heirs forever, but for the term of his natural life; and after his decease to go to . . . his wife; and at her decease to go to such of my relations as shall survive them, share and share alike," it was held that, although the construction of the provision was doubtful, it would be construed as a limitation over to such of the persons entitled at testator's death to his personal estate under the statute of distributions as should be living at the expiration of the life estates.

In Eagles v. Le Breton, L. R. 15 Eq. 148, 42 L. J. Ch. N. S. 362, where testatrix, after devising all her real estate to her sisters as tenants in common, directed: "At the death of my sisters . . . the residue of my property is to pass to my relatives in America," it was held that the class was to be determined at the death of the testatrix, but that they took as joint tenants; which therefore limits the donees to those members of the class who should survive the termination of the life estate.

In Re Nash, 71 L. T. N. S. 5, where testator gave his residuary estate to his wife for life, directing that after her decease a certain legacy be paid, "and that the nearest relatives then living (to be hereafter named in a codicil) shall receive the benefit equally among them after the aforesaid sum has been paid," it was held that, testator having left no codicil to his will, the class was to be ascertained at his death, but that only such of them were to take as survived the tenant for life.

In Re Winn [1910] 1 Ch. 278, a testator seventy-three years old when he made his will, and whose next of kin at the time the will was made and at the time of his death were his nephews and nieces, directed a certain sum to be held in trust for each of his nieces for life, and for the husband of each for life in the event of her leaving no issue, remainder to any child or issue, and in the event of the death of any niece without issue, or of the death of such issue before becoming entitled to the principal, "upon trust for my next of kin, whoever they may be, living at the time of the trusts failing as aforesaid, except the children or other descendants of my late nephew Thomas Winn, deceased, whose children are hereinbefore, as well as by other means, amply provided for." Sums equal to those thus given in trust were then given upon similar trusts in favor of each of his nephews and their issue, "and with the like gift over in favor of my next of kin, except as aforesaid, for want of issue respectively, as hereinbefore mentioned." He also directed his trustees to hold a further sum upon trust in favor of T. T. and his children and issue, and in case of the death of the said T. T. without issue living to acquire a vested interest, then such sum to go as T. T. should appoint, "and in default thereof, to my next of kin except as aforesaid." The six nephews and nieces were made residuary legatees. It was held that, looking at the will alone, it was rather to be supposed that the testator contemplated that, in respect of the final limitation of the various trust funds, the same class would take, subject, however, in each case, to their surviving the failure of the preceding trusts, rather than he meant that in case of each of the trust funds there would be a different class to take under the ultimate limitation in favor of the next of kin; such conclusion being supported by the similarity of the ultimate limitation of the gift to T. T.; and therefore that the natural construction was, in the case of all the legacies, that the limitation was to those of the testator's next of kin at the time of his death who should survive the failure of the preceding trusts. And it was further held that no inference to the contrary could be drawn from the expression "whoever they may be," since such expression may be explained either as meaning a doubt in testator's mind as to who will be his next of kin, or as meaning that he is in doubt as to which of the next of kin may survive the period; and since to hold that the class is to be ascertained at the failure of the prior trust in respect of each trust fund would be in effect to strike out the word "living." And further, that no such inference could be drawn from the exception of the descendants of his deceased nephew, as the same exception is made in the limitation over of the sum bequeathed in trust for T. T., where the class must be ascertained at testator's death; or from the fact that the residuary legatees would have been the testator's next of kin if he had died immediately after making his will.

In Re Wilson, 53 Misc. 238, 104 N. Y. Supp. 480, where testator, after creating a trust for the use of a certain person for life, directed that, on her decease, the trust fund "be paid to the heirs of my body then surviving, they to share alike," it was held that the heirs of the testator were determinable at his death, but that it was clearly his intention that the title should not vest until the death of the life tenant.

In Gourdin v. Shrewsbury, 11 S. C. 1, testator gave his residuary estate to his executors to sell and reinvest the proceeds in stock, which stock was given to testator's two daughters during their natural lives, share and share alike, the share of the one first dying to go to her surviving children, and in default thereof, and subject to a provision for any husband, to her sister. He further provided that at the death of the survivor of the two daughters, the stock and property immediately bequeathed to her, or which she might take at the death of her sister, should go to her surviving child or children, and in default thereof, and subject to a provision for any husband, to the child or children of her deceased sister, if living at the death of the daughter so surviving, "and if there be no child of her deceased sister, then the said remainder shall go to my legal representatives in fee simple." It was held that, as the will manifested the intention that after the direct line of descent should be exhausted during the lifetime of the two daughters, the estate should go to the collateral line, the words "my legal representatives" had reference to those answering such description who should be living at the death of the daughter last dying.

In Barber v. Crawford, 85 S. C. 54, 67 S. E. 7, the following provision: "If any of my children named in my said will or codicils to whom I have given my property should die without bodily heirs, it is my will that all of said property be equally divided among my surviving heirs, share and share alike," was construed in accordance with the rule that survivorship relates to the time of the testator's death only where there is no other period to which it may be referred, as an executory devise to those answering the description of surviving heirs at the time of the death 33 L.R.A. (N.S.) of the first taker, and not that of the testator.

E. S. O.

PENNSYLVANIA SUPREME COURT.

W. H. DENTZEL, Admr., etc., of G. A. Dentzel, Deceased,
v.

ISLAND PARK ASSOCIATION et al.,
Appts.

(229 Pa. 403, 78 Atl. 935.)

Sale — delivery f. o. b. — passing of title.

Title passes upon delivery by the seller of machinery to the carrier f. o. b. at the place of manufacture, if it is not expressly reserved, although the purchase price has not been paid and the seller is to assist in setting it up.

(January 3, 1911.)

Note. — Passing of title by delivery f. o. b.

The earlier cases on this subject are gathered in a note in 62 L.R.A. 798 et seq. Only cases subsequent to this note are included herein.

Where the term f. o. b. is used in an executory agreement for the sale of an article, if there is no express provision as to the retention of title, such term will be construed to require the seller to deliver the subject-matter of the sale without expense to the buyer at the place mentioned, and at the time of such delivery the title passes from the seller to the buyer, providing payment is made or waived where the sale is for cash. Hoffman v. Gosline, 96 C. C. A. 318, 172 Fed. 113; St. Louis Hay & Grain Co. v. American Cast Iron Pipe Co. 167 Ala. 442, 52 So. 904; Kilmer v. Money-weight Scale Co. 36 Ind. App. 568, 76 N. E. 271; Samuel M. Lawder & Sons Co. v. Albert Mackie Grocery Co. 97 Md. 1, 62 L.R.A. 795, 54 Atl. 634; Vogt v. Schienebeck, 122 Wis. 491, 67 L.R.A. 756, 106 Am. St. Rep. 989, 100 N. W. 820, 2 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 814 (overruling Boyington v. Sweeney, 77 Wis. 55, 45 N. W. 938); Fromme v. O'Donnell, 124 Wis. 529, 103 N. W. 3; Murphy v. Sagola Lumber Co. 125 Wis. 363, 103 N. W. 1113; State ex rel. Pittsburgh Coal Co. v. Patterson, 138 Wis. 475, 120 N. W. 227; Badger State Lumber Co. v. G. W. Jones Lumber Co. 140 Wis. 73, 121 N. W. 933.

But a delivery f. o. b. on cars as agreed, where the sale is for cash, will not vest the title in the purchaser when payment is not made; in such case the seller may repossess himself of the goods sold. Berlowsky v. Rosenthal, 104 Me. 62, 71 Atl. 69.

In this connection, see note to McIver v. Williamson-Halsell-Frazier Co. 13 L.R.A.

APPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas for Somerset County in plaintiff's favor in an action of replevin to secure the return of certain machine sold by plaintiff to defendant Island Park Association. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. W. H. Ruppel and C. F. Uhl, Jr., for appellants:

The title to the carrousel vested absolutely in the Island Park Association at the time of shipment.

Eare, Contr. 399; Emery v. Scarlett, 8 Pa. Ct. 123; Andrews v. Weaver, 4 Montg. Co. Rep. 110; Leedom v. Philips, 1 Yeates, 27; Bowen v. Burk, 13 Pa. 148; Backen-
v. Speicher, 31 Pa. 324; Welsh v. Pa. 32 Pa. 12; Mackaness v. Long, 85 Pa. 38; Frech v. Lewis, 218 Pa. 141, 11 L.R.A. (N.S.) 948, 120 Am. St. Rep. 864, 67 Atl. 5, 11 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 545.

The fact that the plaintiff made no offer to return the hand money paid at the time the contract was signed, or to return the notes given as part payment for the machine, precluded the plaintiff from asserting title by an action of replevin.

Sloane v. Shiffer, 156 Pa. 59, 27 Atl. 67; Schofield v. Shiffer, 156 Pa. 65, 27 Atl. 69.

Messrs. Charles H. Edmunds, Ernest G. Kooser, and Edmund E. Kiernan for appellee.

Stewart, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This case called for binding instructions. The contract between buyer and seller was in writing, and so definite and explicit in its terms that it gave rise to no controversy whatever. It was not attempted to be shown that it had ever been rescinded or modified. G. A. Dentzel, whose legal

(N.S.) 696, as to right of purchasers of, or debtors levying on, goods sold for cash, delivered without payment; and notes in Frech v. Lewis, 11 L.R.A. (N.S.) 948, and People's State Bank v. Brown, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) 824, as to delay in attempting to obtain the property under such circumstances.

On the general doctrine, in State ex rel. Pittsburgh Coal Co. v. Patterson, the court said that "the general rule is, nothing appearing to the contrary, that in case of an executory contract for the sale and delivery of chattels f. o. b. cars at a particular point, the intention of the parties is presumed to be that the title shall pass upon such delivery occurring."

And in Fromme v. O'Donnell, as to the meaning of the term "f. o. b. cars at Milwaukee," the court said: "The quoted term unmistakably shows that the parties intended a change of title upon delivery. . . . It does not follow necessarily, however, that the amount to be paid for the material becomes then fixed. The general rule is that, as between vendor and vendee, the title to the subject of the transaction passes from the one to the other when the terms of sale are agreed upon, and everything the vendee has to do with the matter has been done.

Nothing appearing to the contrary, it is presumed that the price to be paid for the property is to be fixed theretofore, but it is perfectly competent for parties to so contract that the title shall pass to the vendee, and the property may be taken and appropriated by him, and the amount he shall pay be subsequently determined. . . . Whenever it is apparent that the parties intended at the inception of their contract of sale that the title to the subject thereof should pass to the vendee, and the measurement thereof be thereafter made, and the amount to be paid therefor determined according thereto, that will govern."

So, in Vogt v. Schienebeck, the court said: "A sale f. o. b. cars means that the subject of the sale is to be placed on cars for shipment without any expense or act on the part of the buyer, and that as soon as so placed the title is to pass absolutely to the buyer, and the property be wholly at his risk, in the absence of any circumstances indicating a retention of such control by the seller as security for purchase money, by preserving the right of stoppage in transitu."

Where a contract provides that delivery is to be made "f. o. b. New York city," a delivery to an express company at New York city, with directions to deliver the articles to the purchaser at his place of business at Baltimore, Maryland, charges of carriage to be there collected, is not sufficient to pass the title, in the absence of any evidence that such delivery was with the knowledge or request of the purchaser. International Money Box Co. v. Southern Trust & D. Co. 93 App. Div. 309, 87 N. Y. Supp. 881.

In Fruit Dispatch Co. v. Sturges, 7 Ohio C. C. N. S. 445, affirmed without opinion in 73 Ohio St. 351, 78 N. E. 1125, the foregoing general doctrine is qualified by holding that, in order for the title to pass, an article corresponding in quality and quantity with the description in the contract must be actually delivered. On this subject the court said: "Delivering perishable goods in carload lots f. o. b. shipping point means that the seller is charged with the responsibility of properly loading the car, and delivering it to the railroad company in proper condition. There the responsibility of the shipper ends, but if the shipper should fail in any particular in properly loading said car, and delivering it to the railroad company in right condition, and by reason of which failure, the goods are injured and destroyed in transit, the buyer is not bound to receive the same, nor does the property in the goods pass to him until the obligation of the shipper is discharged with reasonable care and diligence."

representative is the plaintiff in the action, was the seller, and the Island Park Association, one of the defendants, was the buyer. The contract provided that the former, for the sum of $5,500, was to manufacture for the latter a carrousel, with organ, motor, and attachments. The price was to be paid in instalments $250 on the signing of the agreement, $2,500 on the erection of the machine in the park, $900 in sixty days thereafter, and $950 in ninety days thereafter, notes to be given for the last three payments. The contract provided, among other things, that the seller was to "deliver the complete carrousel f. o. b. cars, Philadelphia, and send one man to erect and place in order;" the party of the second part agreeing "to pay freight charges." It is a general rule, not to be questioned, that when the contract in a sale of personal property calls for delivery f. o. b. at some particular place, and the seller there delivers the article in accordance with the stipulations, the title to the property at once passes to the buyer, unless otherwise provided. Schmertz v. Dwyer, 53 Pa. 335; Bacharach v. Chester Freight Line, 133 Pa. 414, 19 Atl. 409; Dannemiller v. Kirkpatrick, 201 Pa. 218, 50 Atl. 928. The rule yields where the contract reserves to the seller the right of property, notwithstanding the delivery to the carrier. Since delivery is after all a matter of intention on the part of the seller, even though the contract calls for delivery f. o. b. cars at a designated place of shipment, the seller may, before the delivery on board the cars, stipulate with the carrier that the latter is to carry it for him, thereby making the carrier the seller's agent in receiving the property. This follows when the seller takes from the carrier a bill of lading which secures the shipper against delivery, at the point of destination, to anyone except upon his order. When the contract, however, as here, shows an agreement to deliver f. o. b., with nothing to qualify it, the law will presume a delivery to have been in accordance with the stipulations, and cast the burden on the seller if he assert the contrary. There is not a particle of evidence in the case that this burden was discharged. No assertion of dominion over the property, so far as the evidence discloses, was made until after it reached its destination. The plaintiff does not pretend to say that he stipulated either with the defendant or the carrier that his right of property was not to be affected by the delivery to the latter. We find no copy of the bill of lading in the record; but it is distinctly stated in

And generally the title to articles purchased f. o. b. place of shipment, to be delivered at another place, does not pass until delivery at the latter place; and the right of inspection is also at the latter place. American Bridge Co. v. Duquesne Steel Foundry Co. 28 Pa. Super. Ct. 479.

So, where the purchaser reserves the right of inspection at another point than the place of shipment, of articles to be delivered f. o. b. at the latter place, title to the articles sold passes only conditionally upon delivery to the carrier, and is subject to the right of the purchaser to reject the articles upon inspection if they do not conform to the contract. Weil v. Stone, 33 Ind. App. 112, 104 Am. St. Rep. 243, 69 N. E. 698.

And where a contract for the sale of goods of a specified quality, to be delivered f. o. b. place of shipment, contains no provisions as to time or place of payment, inspection, or acceptance, title passes conditionally upon delivery to the carrier; but the purchaser has the right of inspection, to be exercised within a reasonable time after the articles arrive at their destination, and the right to reject same if they do not correspond with the description. Eaton v. Blackburn, 52 Or. 300, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) 53, 132 Am. St. Rep. 705, 96 Pac. 870, 97 Pac. 539, 16 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 1198.

Where articles are sold f. o. b. place of destination, title does not pass until delivery at such place, and the loss of the articles during transportation falls upon the seller. Hunter Bros. Mill. Co. v. Kramer Bros. 71 Kan. 468, 80 Pac. 963.

But where the meaning of the term f. o. b. at place of destination as used in a contract of sale is doubtful, the construction placed upon it by the parties, if they have construed it, will be adopted. Thus, where lumber was sold f. o. b. place of destination, with a provision that in transportation it should be stopped at the works of a creosoting company and turned over to the company for treatment, to be paid for according to the measurements and inspection of this company, the title passes upon delivery to the creosoting company. Barnett & Record Co. v. Fall, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 131 S. W. 644.

The presumption that title passed upon delivery to a carrier designated by the government, under a contract by it for the purchase of goods, and the acceptance by the government of the bills of lading made to the consignee or his order, is not rebutted by the fact that in the contract, composed of different instruments, there was a provision that the goods were to be delivered f. o. b. place of destination, the meaning of the term, as construed with other portions of the contract, indicating that it referred to the payment of freight by the seller, which was to be included in the purchase price, rather than the place at which delivery and the passing of title was to be consummated. United States v. Andrews, 207 U. S. 229, 52 L. ed. 185, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 100.

A. G. S.

the charge of the court, as though it were an uncontroverted fact in the case, that the carrousel "on the 19th June was put on board cars of the Pennsylvania Railroad and shipped to defendant the Island Park Association." The learned trial judge adds: "That did not make it, because of this contract, the property of the Island Park Association, at that time, because it was yet subject to the payment of the $2,500 cash upon the erection of the machine upon the premises of the defendant, and a number of days' work, as has been detailed to you, was left to be done on the machine in its erection before it was ready for complete delivery to the Island Park Association." This was error. If delivery on board of cars was delivery to the Park Association, as it presumably was, and as it certainly was if the direction was to ship to the defendant association, it is wholly immaterial that the price had not been paid, or that, under the contract, the seller was yet to put the machine in place. The delivery was a parting with the dominion, and that fact of itself passed the title to the property. In Scott v. Wells, 6 Watts & S. 357, 40 Am. Dec. 568, it was held to be a general rule that wherever there has been an absolute delivery pursuant to a bargain perfect in its members, the ownership of the property is vested by it, and, although the terms of sale be cash, a subsequent delivery without payment passes the property. The right of reclamation after delivery exists only in case of fraud or deceit in the purchase, or in procuring the possession. Smith v. Smith, 21 Pa. 367, 60 Am. Dec. 51. "Where a delivery to a carrier is equivalent to a delivery to the buyer, the condition as to payment or security may be waived by an unconditional delivery to the carrier; but such condition is not waived if the delivery to the carrier is merely conditional, as where the carrier is instructed not to deliver the goods unless payment is made. The seller may also reserve the right of property in the goods notwithstanding delivery, by taking a bill of lading in such form as to indicate an intention to so reserve the right." 35 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 330, and the authorities there cited. Here the seller did nothing of this kind. Not a single circumstance was shown from which an inference of conditional delivery could be derived. The machine when put on board was complete. Nothing remained to be done to perfect it. It was deliverable; and its price was fully ascertained and fixed. That the seller was to contribute the labor of an expert to put it in place and running order did not make it any the less deliverable as a piece of property. The law governing cases of this character was so recently and fully discussed in Dannemiller v. Kirkpatrick, 201 Pa. 218, 50 Atl. 928, by our Brother Mestrezat, that further discussion here is not required. This may be a hard case; but, if so, the responsibility rests not with the law, but upon the losing party, who failed to adopt the easy precautions it afforded for his protection. The court's refusal to give binding instructions for the defendant is the subject of the first assignment, and that assignment is sustained.

33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

We now reverse the judgment on the verdict, and enter judgment for the defendant.

WASHINGTON SUPREME COURT.

GEORGE M. McDONALD & COMPANY,
Appt.,
v.

GEORGE R. JOHNS et al., Respta.

(— Wash. —, 114 Pac. 175.)

Mortgage — priority — pre-existing debt.

A mortgage to secure a pre-existing debt is not within the protection of a statute giving mortgages priority as against bona fide purchasers from the date they are filed for record, so as to entitle it to priority from the time of its record over an existing unrecorded mortgage.

(March 23, 1911.)

Note. — Protection under recording acts of mortgage given as security for pre-existing debt.

This note is limited to mortgages on real estate, mortgages on chattels being excluded. Cases like Vandoren v. Todd, 3 N. J. Eq. 397, and Martin v. Bowen, 51 N. J. Eq. 452, 26 Atl. 823, dealing with priority as between general assignments for the benefit of creditors and other unrecorded equities, are omitted.

Concerning discharge of antecedent debt as consideration sustaining one's character as a bona fide purchaser for value, entitled to protection of recording acts, see note to Western Grocer Co. v. Alleman, 27 L.R.A. (N.S.) 620.

As to holder of bill or note as collateral security, as a bona fide holder within the law as to negotiable paper, see note to Exchange Nat. Bank v. Coe, 31 L.R.A. (N.S.) 287.

A mortgage given to secure a pre-existing debt is usually considered as supported by sufficient consideration as between the parties, and as against subsequent purchasers and encumbrancers with notice, by record or otherwise. See, for example, Crooks v. Jenkins, 124 Iowa, 320, 104 Am. St. Rep. 326, 100 N. W. 82.

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court for Douglas County in defendant's favor in an action on certain promissory notes, and for the foreclosure of a mortgage to secure the payment of said notes. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. C. C. Bryant for appellant.

Messrs. Sam B. Hill and John W. Hanna, for respondents:

A pre-existing indebtedness is a valuable consideration for the execution of a mortgage as between the parties and all others who had no equitable interest in the property at the time of its execution.

Rea v. Wilson, 112 Iowa, 517, 84 N. W. 539; Chadwick v. Devore, 69 Iowa, 637, 29 N. W. 757; Meyer v. Evans, 66 Iowa, 179,

But a different question arises when it is sought to give such a mortgage precedence under the recording acts over prior unrecorded deeds, mortgages, and equities of various kinds, given bona fide for value.

By the weight of authority a mortgagee of real estate is not a bona fide purchaser for value within the meaning of recording acts, so as to cut off prior equities, where the mortgage was given merely to secure a pre-existing debt. Bybee v. Hawsett, 8 Sawy. 176, 12 Fed. 649, 11 Mor. Min. Rep. 594; Hill v. Hilt, 79 Fed. 826, affirmed in 29 C. C. A. 549, 56 U. S. App. 403, 85 Fed. 268; Wells v. Morrow, 38 Ala. 125; Saffold v. Wade, 51 Ala. 214; Coleman v. Smith, 55 Ala. 368; Alexander v. Caldwell, 55 Ala. 517; Bartlett v. Varner, 56 Ala. 580; Thurman v. Stoddard, 63 Ala. 336; Cook v. Parham, 63 Ala. 456; Thames v. Rembert, 63 Ala. 561; Craft v. Russell, 67 Ala. 9; Jones v. Robinson, 77 Ala. 499; Banks v. Long, 79 Ala. 319; Anthe v. Heide, 85 Ala. 236, 4 So. 380; Alston v. Marshall, 112 Ala. 638, 20 So. 850; Randolph v. Webb, 116 Ala. 135, 22 So. 550; Gewin v. Shields, 167 Ala. 593, 52 So. 887; Salisbury Sav. Soc. v. Cutting, 50 Conn. 115; Collins v. Moore, 115 Ga. 327, 41 S. E. 609; Harris v. Evans, 134 Ga. 161, 67 S. E. 880; Busenbarke v. Ramey, 53 Ind. 499; Davis v. Newcomb, 72 Ind. 413 (dictum); Durham v. Craig, 79 Ind. 117; Wert v. Naylor, 93 Ind. 431; First Nat. Bank v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. 129 Ind. 241, 28 N. E. 695; Citizens' Nat. Bank v. Judy, 146 Ind. 322, 43 N. E. 259; Adams v. Vanderbeck, 148 Ind. 92, 62 Am. St. Rep. 497, 45 N. E. 645, 47 N. E. 24; Warford v. Hankins, 150 Ind. 489, 50 N. E. 468; Phelps v. Fockler, 61 Iowa, 340, 14 N. W. 729, 16 N. W. 210; Smith v. Moore, 112 Iowa, 60, 83 N. W. 813; Stone v. Welling, 14 Mich. 514; Boxheimer v. Gunn, 24 Mich. 372; McGraw v. Solomon, 83 Mich. 443, 47 N. W. 345 (case of chattel mortgage, but dictum as to real estate); De Mey v. Defer, 103 Mich. 239, 61 N. W. 524; Maynard v. Davis, 127 Mich. 571, 81 N. W. 1051; Whittacre v. Fuller, 5 Minn. 508, Gil. 401; Harney v. Pack, 4 Smedes & M. 33 L.R.A.(N.S.)

23 N. W. 386; Johnston v. Robuck, 104 Iowa, 523, 73 N. W. 1062; Duncan v. Miller, 64 Iowa, 223, 20 N. W. 161.

A pre-existing indebtedness is not such a valuable consideration as will constitute the mortgagee a bona fide purchaser, in the sense to cut off prior equities.

Citizens' Nat. Bank v. Judy, 146 Ind. 322, 43 N. E. 261; Rea v. Wilson, 112 Iowa, 517, 84 N. W. 539; Port v. Embree, 54 Iowa, 14, 6 N. W. 83; Phelps v. Fockler, 61 Iowa, 340, 14 N. W. 729, 16 N. W. 210; Koon v. Tramel, 71 Iowa, 132, 32 N. W. 243; Edwards v. McKernan, 55 Mich. 520, 22 N. W. 20; Maynard v. Davis, 127 Mich. 571, 86 N. W. 1051; Meyer v. Evans, 66 Iowa, 179, 23 N. W. 386; DeMey v. Defer, 103 Mich. 239, 61 N. W. 524; Henriques v. Ypsi-

257; Pope v. Pope, 40 Miss. 516; Perkins v. Swank, 43 Miss. 360; Hinds v. Pugh, 48 Miss. 268; Schumpert v. Dillard, 55 Miss. 348; Wheeler v. Kirtland, 24 N. J. Eq. 552; Mingus v. Condit, 23 N. J. Eq. 313; Pancoast v. Duval, 26 N. J. Eq. 445 (deed given as security); Reeves v. Evans, — N. J. Eq. —, 34 Atl. 477; Martin v. Bowen, 51 N. J. Eq. 452, 26 Atl. 823; Dickerson v. Tillinghast, 4 Paige, 215, 25 Am. Dec. 528; Manhattan Co. v. Evertson, 6 Paige, 457; Westervelt v. Haff, 2 Sandf. Ch. 98; Hiscock v. Phelps, 49 N. Y. 97; De Lancey v. Stearns, 66 N. Y. 157; Cary v. White, 52 N. Y. 138; Young v. Guy, 87 N. Y. 457; Re Rochester, 136 N. Y. 83, 19 L.R.A. 161, 32 N. E. 702; Breed v. National Bank, 57 App. Div. 468, 68 N. Y. Supp. 68 (semble), affirmed in 171 N. Y. 648, 63 N. E. 1115; O'Brien v. Fleckenstein, 180 N. Y. 350, 105 Am. St. Rep. 768, 73 N. E. 30; Wilcox v. Drought, 36 Misc. 351, 73 N. Y. Supp. 587 affirmed in 71 App. Div. 402, 75 N. Y. Supp. 960; Donaldson v. State Bank, 16 N. C. (1 Dev. Eq.) 103, 18 Am. Dec. 577; Southerland v. Fremont, 107 N. C. 565, 22 Am. St. Rep. 900, 12 S. E. 237; Lewis v. Anderson, 20 Ohio St. 281; Ashton's Appeal, 73 Pa. 153; Adamson v. Souder, 205 Pa. 498, 55 Atl. 182 (deed absolute on its face, intended as a mortgage); Marsh v. Ramsay, 57 S. C. 121, 35 S. E. 433; Brown v. Vanlier, 7 Humph. 239; Spurlock v. Sullivan, 36 Tex. 511; Steffian v. Milmo Nat. Bank, 69 Tex. 513, 6 S. W. 823; Watts v. Corner, 8 Tex. Civ. App. 588, 27 S. W. 1087; Stacey v. Henke, 32 Tex. Civ. App. 462, 74 S. W. 925; Moody v. Martin, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 117 S. W. 1015.

Contra: Partridge v. Smith, 2 Biss. 183, Fed. Cas. No. 10,787; Frey v. Clifford, 44 Cal. 335; Work v. Brayton, 5 Ind. 396; Wright v. Bundy, 11 Ind. 398; Babcock v. Jordan, 24 Ind. 14 (these early Indiana cases have been overruled by later cases in the same jurisdiction); Dorr v. Meyer, 51 Neb. 94, 70 N. W. 543; Evans v. Greenhow, 15 Gratt. 153; Gilbert Bros. v. Lawrence Bros. 56 W. Va. 281, 49 S. E. 155.

And therefore the lien of his mortgage

Anti Sav. Bank, 84 Mich. 168, 47 N. W. 704; Burrough v. Ploof, 73 Mich. 607, 41 N. W. 704; Martin v. Bowen, 51 N. J. Eq. 432, 26 Atl. 823; Van Heusen v. Radcliff, 7 N. Y. 580, 72 Am. Dec. 480; Reeves v. Evans, — N. J. Eq. —, 34 Atl. 477; Shirk v. Thomas, 121 Ind. 147, 16 Am. St. Rep. 331, 22 N. E. 976; Anniston Carriage Works v. Ward, 101 Ala. 670, 14 So. 417; Warford v. Hankins, 150 Ind. 489, 50 N. E. 468; Adams v. Vanderbeck, 148 Ind. 92, 2 Am. St. Rep. 497, 45 N. E. 645, 47 N. E. 24; Summers v. Brice, 36 S. C. 204, 15 S. E. 374; Steffian v. Milmo Nat. Bank, 69 Tex. 513, 6 S. W. 823; Funk v. Paul, 64 Wis. 35, 54 Am. Rep. 576, 24 N. W. 419; 1 Jones, Mortg. § 460; Re Rochester, 136 N. Y.

83, 19 L.R.A. 161, 32 N. E. 702; Goetzinger v. Rosenfeld, 16 Wash. 392, 38 L.R.A. 257, 47 Pac. 882; Hicks v. National Surety Co. 50 Wash. 16, 126 Am. St. Rep. 883, 90 Pac. 515.

Dunbar, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Incorporated in the record in this case is a very lucid and forceful opinion rendered by the trial judge, and a very succinct statement of the facts, which we will adopt, there being no question raised as to the facts found by the court. Johns and wife, whom we will hereafter refer to as Johns, were indebted to appellant in the principal sum of $2,210, evidenced by three will be postponed to that of a prior, but unrecorded, mortgage. Bybee v. Hawckett, 3 Sawy. 176, 12 Fed. 649, 11 Mor. Min. Rep. 594; First Nat. Bank v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. 129 Ind. 241, 28 N. E. 635; Phelps v. Fockler, 61 Iowa, 340, 14 N. W. 729, 16 N. W. 210; Koon v. Tramel, 71 Iowa, 132, 32 N. W. 243; Smith v. Moore, 112 Iowa, 60, 83 N. W. 813; Boxheimer v. Gunn, 24 Mich. 372; Westerwelt v. Haff, 2 Sandf. Ch. 98; Dickerson v. Tillinghast, 4 Paige, 215, 25 Am. Dec. 528; Cary v. White, 52 N. Y. 138; De Lancey v. Stearns, 66 N. Y. 157; Re Rochester, 136 N. Y. 83, 19 L.R.A. 161, 32 N. E. 702; Wilcox v. Drought, 36 Misc. 351, 73 N. Y. Supp. 587; affirmed in 71 App. Div. 402, 75 N. Y. Supp. 960.

And to the right of a prior mortgagee to have the description of real estate intended to be mortgaged corrected. Busenbarke v. Ramey, 53 Ind. 499.

But it was held in Hayner v. Eberhardt, 37 Kan. 308, 15 Pac. 168, that a recorded mortgage given as security for a pre-existing debt would take priority over an earlier unrecorded mortgage, under a statute providing that every instrument in writing affecting real estate, "certified and recorded in the manner hereinbefore prescribed, shall, from the time of filing the same with the register of deeds for record, impart notice to all persons of the contents thereof; and all subsequent purchasers and mortgagees shall be deemed to purchase with notice."

It will also be postponed to a vendors' lien. Wells v. Morrow, 38 Ala. 125; Craft v. Russell, 67 Ala. 9; Jones v. Robinson, 77 Ala. 499.

But a deed of trust given to secure a pre-existing debt of the grantee in a recorded deed will take precedence over a vendors' lien, where the trustee, vested with full power to close the trust, has started proceedings to do so, whether in a legal forum or not, before the vendor has filed a bill to foreclose his lien; at least, where the trust deed stipulated for delay on the part of the creditor. Sharp v. Fly, 90 Baxt. 4.

33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

It will also be postponed to the right of the equitable owner of land, though the legal title and apparent ownership was in the mortgagor. Banks v. Long, 79 Ala. 319; Anthe v. Heide, 85 Ala. 236, 4 So. 380; Reeves v. Evans, — N. J. Eq. —, 34 Atl. 477; Lewis v. Anderson, 20 Ohio St. 281 (where mortgagor, a partner, had legal title to land belonging to the partnership); Adamson v. Souder, 205 Pa. 498, 55 Atl. 182; Spurlock v. Sullivan, 36 Tex. 511.

And to a wife's prior equity in the land arising because of its having been purchased by the mortgagor, her husband, with money belonging to her separate estate. Banks v. Long, 79 Ala. 319.

And to the equity of one whose money the mortgagor used, in whole or in part, in purchasing the land, under an agreement, not carried out, to have the title conveyed to such person furnishing the money in proportion to his interest. Anthe v. Heide, 85 Ala. 236, 4 So. 380.

A mortgagee who purchases at a foreclosure sale under his own mortgage, received as security for pre-existing debt, is not a purchaser for value as against the real owner of the land, who had been induced by fraud to deed it to the mortgagor, even though such mortgagee was ignorant of the fraud. Gewin v. Shields, 167 Ala. 593, 52 So. 887.

So, also, the lien of a mortgage given to secure a pre-existing debt will be postponed to the rights of one in possession of land under a prior parol sale of the land by the mortgagor. Collins v. Moore, 115 Ga. 327, 41 S. E. 609.

And to the right of a prior grantee of the land holding under an unrecorded deed. Cary v. White, 52 N. Y. 138.

A mortgagee in good faith, for a pre-existing debt from a fraudulent grantee of land conveyed to such grantee without consideration, will not be protected against a judgment creditor of the grantor, whose judgment was rendered after the giving of the fraudulent deed, but before the giving of the mortgage. Mingus v. Condit, 23 N. J. Eq. 313.

Where a creditor of a fraudulent grantee promissory notes, all executed and delivered at times prior to May 5, 1908. On May 5, 1908, Johns executed and delivered to appellant a mortgage on certain lands specified. Johns was also at the same time indebted to Bechtol, one of the respondents, in the sum of $662.16, evidenced by a promissory note executed and delivered at a time prior to May 4, 1908. On May 4, 1908, Johns executed and delivered to Bechtol a mortgage on the same lands which have been mortgaged to appellant, and above described. Both mortgages were given to secure the payment of a pre-existing indebtedness, and no new or additional consideration or extension of time of payment was given as an inducement to the execution of either of said mortgages. The Bechtol mortgage was executed and delivered first. The McDonald mortgage was recorded first. Quoting from the opinion of the court: "Upon these facts the ultimate question is: Which of these mortgages has the prior lien on the land in said sections 25 and 30? McDonald claims to be a bona fide purchaser (encumbrancer) without notice of the Bechtol mortgage prior to the execution and delivery of his own. I will assume (without finding or deciding at this time) that he had no notice. The law upon which his claim to priority must rest is found at § 4441, Pierce's Code, and reads:

of real estate takes from him a mortgage on such estate as a further security of the previous debt, but without notice of the fraud, such creditor is not protected against the prior equity and legal lien of judgment creditors of the fraudulent grantor, whose judgments were recovered subsequent to the fraudulent conveyance, but prior to the mortgage. Manhattan Co. v. Evertson, 6 Paige, 457.

It was stated by the court in Wheeler v. Kirtland, 24 N. J. Eq. 552, that "an equitable mortgage for a precedent debt has no equity superior to that of a valid subsequent judgment at law. Between such contestants, the first perfected legal lien should prevail. The rule is otherwise with regard to bona fide purchasers or equitable mortgagees, where the consideration of the mortgage is paid at the time it is given. Equity, in the latter case, regards the equitable mortgagee as a bona fide purchaser."

Under a statute providing that where, on appeal from a judgment, an undertaking is given to stay execution, the court may, by an order directing the entry, "secured on appeal," to be made in the docket, cause the real property on which the judgment is a lien to be exempted therefrom, and that "thereupon such judgment shall cease, during the pendency of such appeal, to be a lien upon the property so exempted, as against purchasers and mortgagees in good faith," a mortgage, though given for a pre-existing debt, which was executed after the judgment, but while the land was exempted from the lien of such judgment by the entry indicated above, will be superior to such lien. Union Dime Sav. Inst. v. Duryea, 67 N. Y. 84.

A mortgage to secure an antecedent debt, which is filed before the actual entry of a judgment which was filed soon afterward on the same afternoon, will not have priority over the judgment, but their liens will be equal. Goetzinger v. Rosenfeld, 16 Wash. 392, 38 L.R.A. 257, 47 Pac. 882.

But had the mortgage been given for a present valuable consideration, equity would give it priority over the later filed judgment, though both were filed on the same day. Ibid.

33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Under a mechanics' lien statute providing that liens for repairs and alterations shall not be valid against a bona fide purchaser or mortgagee before such lien is filed in the office of the clerk of the proper county, a mortgage given for a precedent debt on property on which alterations were being made, which was executed and recorded without notice of such alterations, is a mortgage in good faith, within the meaning of said act, so as to entitle it to priority over a mechanics' lien subsequently filed, since the statute protects the mortgage if given bona fide before the filing, whether for value or not. Reed v. Rochford, 62 N. J. Eq. 187, 50 Atl. 70.

A deed absolute on its face, but intended as a mortgage, will be considered as a mortgage, and when given to secure a pre-existing debt, is not protected by the recording acts in jurisdictions where a mortgage would not be. Wells v. Morrow, 38 Ala. 125.

In Young v. Guy, 87 N. Y. 457, the owner of land and another entered into a contract in writing for a sale of the former's land to the latter, whereby a certain sum was to be paid down at the date of the agreement, and at a later named date the vendor was to give the vendee a warranty deed, a further sum was to be paid to the vendor, an existing mortgage on the premises assumed by the vendee, and a purchase-money mortgage given for the balance. This arrangement was carried out. But between the date of the making of the agreement (which was not recorded) and the date of the giving of the deed, etc., the vendor gave a mortgage, as security for a pre-existing debt, to a third person, who took in ignorance of the contract of sale; which mortgage duly recorded on the day after its execution. The vendee also took his deed, and made the further cash payment on the purchase price without actual notice of the mortgage, but paid the amount of the purchase-money mortgage to an assignee of the vendor after actual notice. In an action to foreclose the mortgage given for the pre-existing indebtedness, it was held that it would be postponed to the purchase-money paid at the date of the giving of the deed, as the

All deeds, mortgages, and assignments of mortgages shall be recorded in the office of the county auditor of the county where the land is situated and shall be valid as against bona fide purchasers from the date of their filing for record in said office; and when so filed shall be notice to all the world.' Of course, the term 'bona fide purchaser' means bona fide mortgage or encumbrancer as well; else the statute would have no application to mortgages at all. Hence the statutory phrase will be used in that sense herein. This statute is for the protection of those who become bona fide purchasers subsequent to a given conveyance or mortgage, and has nothing to do with those who becomes such prior thereto. In other words, the recording act reaches forward with its benefits, and not backward. It imposes upon any given mortgagee the duty of making a public record of his mortgage, for the information, guidance, and protection of those who at a subsequent time may have occasion to deal concerning the land, failing in the discharge of which duty he shall lose the priority otherwise to be accorded to him. But a mortgagee owes no such duty to those who precede him, and as against them he neither gains nor loses anything by recording his mortgage, except in those states where the statutes expressly provide otherwise."

vendee had no actual notice of its existence when such payment was made; but that the vendee was liable to such mortgagee to the amount of the purchase-money mortgage paid after actual notice of the prior mortgage given for the pre-existing indebtedness.

Effect of additional consideration—extension of time.

A mortgagee in a mortgage given as security for a pre-existing debt is a holder for value when there is some additional consideration, such as an extension of time of payment. Thurman v. Stoddard, 63 Ala. 336; Cook v. Parham, 63 Ala. 456; Thames v. Rembert, 63 Ala. 561; Craft v. Russell, 67 Ala. 9; Downing v. Blair, 75 Ala. 216, overruling Pepper v. George, 51 Ala. 190; Jones v. Robinson, 77 Ala. 499; Whitfield v. Riddle, 78 Ala. 99; Alston v. Marshall, 112 Ala. 638, 20 So. 850; Randolph v. Webb, 116 Ala. 135, 22 So. 550; Gilchrist v. Gough, 63 Ind. 576, 30 Am. Rep. 250; Port v. Embree, 54 Iowa, 14, 6 N. W. 83; Koon v. Tramel, 71 Iowa, 132, 32 N. W. 243; Hinds v. Pugh, 48 Miss. 268; Schumpert v. Dillard, 55 Miss. 348; Cary v. White, 52 N. Y. 138; O'Brien v. Fleckenstein, 180 N. Y. 350, 105 Am. St. Rep. 768, 73 N. E. 30; Farmers' & M. Nat. Bank v. Wallace, 45 Ohio St. 152, 12 N. E. 439 (where there was also a reduction in the rate of interest); Farmers' & M. Bank v. Citizens' Nat. Bank, — S. D. —, 125 N. W. 642; Steffian v. Milmo Nat. Bank, 69 Tex. 513, 6 S. W. 823; Watts v. Corner, 8 Tex. Civ. App. 588, 27 S. W. 1087; Farmers' Nat. Bank v. James, 13 Tex. Civ. App. 550, 36 S. W. 288; Ingenhuett v. Hunt, 15 Tex. Civ. App. 248, 39 S. W. 310.

But see, contra, Southerland v. Fremont, 107 N. C. 565, 22 Am. St. Rep. 900, 12 S. E. 237, where the extension of time did not result in any real loss to the mortgagee.

But the mere fact that, at the time of the giving of the mortgage, an extension of time of payment is allowed, does not make the mortgagee a purchaser for value, where the extension of time was not contracted for and did not form one of the 33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

considerations of the mortgage. Ingenhuett v. Hunt, 15 Tex. Civ. App. 248, 39 S. W. 310.

And the mere taking of collateral security on time does not of itself amount to an extension of time of payment of the principal debt, so as to suspend the right of action for the original debt or upon the original security until the collateral security shall become due. Cary v. White, 52 N. Y. 138.

—release of security.

A release of security for the old debt constitutes a valuable consideration. Alston v. Marshall, 112 Ala. 638, 20 So. 850; McCleery v. Wakefield, 76 Iowa, 529, 2 L.R.A. 529, 41 N. W. 210; Constant v. University of Rochester, 111 N. Y. 604, 2 L.R.A. 734, 7 Am. St. Rep. 769, 19 N. E. 631 (release of prior mortgage with accrued interest thereon); Lane v. Logue, 12 Lea, 681.

—compromise of debt.

So, a compromise of the debt by the acceptance of a smaller sum. Hinds v. Pugh, 48 Miss. 268.

—releasing personal liability.

And the acceptance of the mortgage as satisfaction of the debt, so that the mortgagee gives up all personal claim against the mortgagor. Ibid.

—new debt contracted.

Where a mortgage is given partly in consideration of a pre-existing indebtedness and partly to secure a new debt contemporaneously contracted, the mortgagee is protected by the recording acts to the extent of the new debt only. Wells v. Morrow, 38 Ala. 125; De Mey v. Defer, 103 Mich. 239, 61 N. W. 524.

Contra: Branch v. Griffin, 99 N. C. 173, 5 S. E. 393, 398, holding that the new advance is sufficient consideration to support the mortgage for the entire amount.

R. A. E.

In the opinion of the learned judge, there are collated and distinguished the principal cases on this subject, and the court concluded, as indicated, that the priority should be accorded to the party having received the first mortgage, and judgment was entered accordingly.

A review of the authorities convinces us that the judgment in this case should be affirmed. The doctrine of mortgages was originally, of course, purely equitable, and is yet as between the mortgagor and the mortgagee; and as between them it makes no difference whether the mortgage is recorded or not. The recording statutes were for the purpose, as is universally understood now, of giving constructive notice to innocent purchasers and encumbrancers; and the practical question in all these cases is: Who are innocent purchasers and encumbrancers? Pomeroy, in the second volume of his Equity Jurisprudence, 3d ed. § 749, says: "A conveyance of real or personal property as security for an antecedent debt does not, upon principle, render the transferee a bona fide purchaser, since the creditor parts with no value, surrenders no right, and places himself in no worse legal position than before. The rule has been settled, therefore, in very many of the states, that such a transfer is not made upon a valuable consideration, within the meaning of the doctrine of bona fide purchase,"—citing cases from Alabama, Arkansas, New York, Vermont, Massachusetts, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Kentucky, Illinois, Mississippi, Tennessee, Texas, and Indiana, to sustain the text. It is also stated by the author that the doctrine is not universal, but that the weight of authority is in accordance with the text announced. It is also said, in discussing the question, at § 747: "What constitutes a valuable consideration within the meaning of the doctrine which gives protection to a bona fide purchaser? No person who has acquired title as a mere volunteer, whether by gift devise, inheritance, postnuptial settlement on wife or child, or otherwise, can thereby be a bona fide purchaser. Valuable consideration means, and necessarily requires, under every form and kind of purchase, something of actual value, capable, in estimation of the law, of pecuniary measurement,—parting with money or money's worth, or an actual change of the purchaser's legal position for the worse." And ordinary examples are given, as a contemporaneous advance or loan of money, or a sale, transfer, or exchange of property, made at the time of the purchase or execution of the instrument; the surrender or relinquishment of an existing legal right, or the assumption of a new legal obligation which is in its nature irrevocable. Jones on Mortgages 6th ed. vol. 1, p. 433, also states that the weight of authority is to the effect that the equitable mortgage, the mortgage first given, will prevail over the subsequent mortgage, recorded prior to it. In People's Sav. Bank v. Bates, 120 U. S. 556, 30 L. ed. 754, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 679, a case which cannot be distinguished in principle from the case at bar, it was held that the doctrine that the bona fide holder for value of negotiable paper, transferred as security for an antecedent debt merely, and without other circumstances, is unaffected by equities or defenses between prior parties, of which he had no notice, does not apply to instruments conveying real or personal property as security, in consideration only of pre-existing indebtedness; the court quoting from 2 Leading Cases in Equity, 3 Am. ed. 104, where it is said: "Whatever the rule may be in the case of negotiable instruments, it is well settled that the conveyance of lands or chattels as security for an antecedent debt will not operate as a purchase for value, or defeat existing equities." "A creditor who takes a mortgage on realty merely as security for the payment of a debt or demand already due to him, and without giving any new consideration or being induced to change his condition in any manner, is not entitled to the protection accorded to a bona fide purchaser for value, as against prior liens or equities." 27 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 1191; 24 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 139.

33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Outside of general authority, this view of the law has been distinctly sustained by this court in Hicks v. National Surety Co. 50 Wash. 16, 126 Am. St. Rep. 883, 96 Pac. 515. That was where a surety company took a bill of sale as security for a pre-existing debt upon a breached contractor's bond, where a prior unrecorded bill of sale had been given, and it was held that the surety company was not an encumbrancer for value in good faith, and that its lien was inferior to that of a prior bill of sale valid as between the parties, although not executed so as to be valid as to creditors of the vendor or subsequent encumbrancers in good faith. The court concluded its announcement in that case by saying: "The instrument under which the appellant claims was taken as security for a pre-existing debt or a pre-existing contingent liability. Under such circumstances, does it come within the definition of an encumbrancer for value and in good faith, as that term is defined in law? Under the great weight of authority it does not." And the first case cited was People's Sav. Bank v. Bates, supra.

The judgment is affirmed.

Crow, Chadwick, and Morris, JJ. concur.

WASHINGTON SUPREME COURT.

L. B. WINSOR, Appt.,

v.

COMMONWEALTH COAL COMPANY et al., Respts.,

and

R. L. McCORMICK et al., Appts.

(— Wash. —, 114 Pac. 908.)

Usury — loan to corporation — attack by stockholder.

1. One seeking to set aside for fraud a contract by which he transferred corporate stock to his attorney, in consideration of the latter's securing money to relieve the business from financial difficulties, cannot set up usury in a transaction by which the attorney transferred a portion of the stock to persons who lent the money which he undertook to secure.

Corporation — agreement to pool stock — validity.

2. A contract by which the owner of the majority of the stock of a corporation agrees with one to whom he transfers a portion of his stock in consideration of a loan of money to finance the corporation, that the stock might be pooled for a term of years in order to control the management, is not against public policy.

Contract — partial invalidity — effect on remainder.

3. The invalidity in a contract for the transfer and pooling of corporate stock in consideration of a loan of money to finance the institution, of a provision which retains the owner in the board of directors and gives him employment as the sales agent of the corporation, does not necessarily invalidate the pooling agreement.

(April 10, 1911.)

CROSS APPEALS from a judgment of the Superior Court for Pierce County in an action for the annulment of a contract between plaintiff and defendant Peer for the transfer and pooling of corporate stock, and for the annulment of all contracts made by certain of the defendants pursuant to the original contract; plaintiff appealing from so much of the decree as denied the relief prayed for, and defendants McCormick et al. from so much as rescinded the pooling agreement. Modified and affirmed.

Note. — As to validity of agreements to control the voting power of corporate stock, see notes to Morel v. Hoge, 16 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1136, and Carnegie Trust Co. v. Security L. Ins. Co. 31 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1186.
33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Sullivan & Christian, Gordon & Askern, and Higgins, Hall, & Hal-verstadt, for appellants Winsor:

Purchases by an attorney from his client of property involved in litigation, and concerning which he was consulted, are prima facie invalid.

Snow v. Hazlewood, 85 C. C. A. 226, 157 Fed. 898; Re Egan, 22 S. D. 355, 117 N. W. 874; Sanford v. Flint, 108 Minn. 399, 122 N. W. 315; Morrison v. Smith, 130 Ill. 304, 23 N. E. 241; Palms v. Howard, 129 Ky. 668, 112 S. W. 1110; Phipps v. Willis, 58 Or. 190, 96 Pac. 866, 99 Pac. 935, 18 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 119; Moore v. Miers, 78 N. J. L. 201, 73 Atl. 33; Payne v. Avery, 21 Mich. 524; Ross v. Payson, 160 Ill. 349, 43 N. E. 399; Jennings v. McConnel, 17 Ill. 148; Alwood v. Mansfield, 59 Ill. 496; Laclede Bank v. Keeler, 109 Ill. 385; Elmore v. Johnson, 143 Ill. 513, 21 L.R.A. 366, 36 Am. St. Rep. 401, 32 N. E. 413; Roby v. Colehour, 135 Ill. 300, 25 N. E. 777; Rogers v. R. E. Lee Min. Co. 9 Fed. 721 and note, 2 Mor. Min. Rep. 71; Stubinger v. Frey, 116 Ga. 396, 42 S. E. 713; Crocheron v. Savage, 75 N. J. Eq. 589, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) 679, 73 Atl. 33, reversing 74 N. J. Eq. 629, 70 Atl. 353; Barrett v. Ball, 101 Mo. App. 288, 73 S. W. 865; Young v. Murphy, 120 Wis. 49, 97 N. W. 496; Klein v. Borchert, 89 Minn. 377, 95 N. W. 215; Merryman v. Euler, 59 Md. 588, 43 Am. Rep. 564; Carter v. West, 93 Ky. 211, 19 S. W. 592; Thweatt v. Freeman, 73 Ark. 575, 84 S. W. 721; Cline v. Charles, — Ky. —, 124 S. W. 347; Keenan v. Scott, 64 W. Va. 137, 61 S. E. 806; Sanguinett v. Rossen, 12 Cal. App. 623, 107 Pac. 560; Dunn v. Dunn, 42 N. J. Eq. 431, 7 Atl. 842; Landis v. Wintermute, 40 Wash. 673, 82 Pac. 1000.

The contract contains illegal provisions.

Hampton v. Buchanan, 51 Wash. 155, 98 Pac. 374; Guernsey v. Cook, 120 Mass. 501; Woodruff v. Wentworth, 133 Mass. 309; Forbes v. McDonald, 54 Cal. 98; Noel v. Drake, 28 Kan. 265, 42 Am. Rep. 162; Gage v. Fisher, 5 N. D. 297, 31 L.R.A. 557, 65 N. W. 809.

The contract is not divisible.

Trist v. Child (Burke v. Child) 21 Wall. 441, 22 L. ed. 623; Hazelton v. Sheckells, 202 U. S. 71, 50 L. ed. 939, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 567, 6 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 217; Crichfield v. Bermudez Asphalt Paving Co. 174 Ill. 466, 42 L.R.A. 347, 51 N. E. 552; Bishop v. Palmer, 146 Mass. 469, 4 Am. St. Rep. 339, 16 N. E. 299; Pueblo & A. Valley R. Co. v. Taylor, 6 Colo. 1, 45 Am. Rep. 513; Folmar v. Siler, 132 Ala. 297, 31 So. 719; Santa Clara Valley Mill & Lumber Co. v. Hayes, 76 Cal. 387, 9 Am. St. Rep. 211, 18 Pac. 391; Snyder v. Willey, 33 Mich. 483; McNamara v. Gargett, 68 Mich. 454, 13 Am. St. Rep. 555, 36 N. W. 218; Foley v. Speir, 100 N. Y. 552, 3 N. E. 477; Widoe v. Webb, 20 Ohio St. 431, 5 Am. Rep. 664; Sullivan v. Horgan, 17 R. I. 109, 9 L.R.A. 110, 20 Atl. 232; Potts v. Gray, 3 Coldw. 468, 91 Am. Dec. 294; Reed v. Brewer, 90 Tex. 144, 37 S. W. 418; Edwards County v. Jennings, 89 Tex. 618, 35 S. W. 1053; Giles v. De Cow, 30 Colo. 412, 70 Pac. 681; Hill v. Hill, 74 N. H. 288, 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 848, 124 Am. St. Rep. 966, 67 Atl. 406; Stanard v. Sampson, 23 Okla. 13, 99 Pac. 796.

The taking of the stock bonus is admitted. The sharing in the profits of the contract with Bates, Peer, & Peterson is admitted. This makes the loan usurious.

Pottle v. Lowe, 99 Ga. 576, 59 Am. St. Rep. 246, 27 S. E. 145; Harrison v. Stiles, 95 Ga. 264, 22 S. E. 536; Sherwood v. Roundtree, 32 Fed. 113; Ridgway v. Davenport, 37 Wash. 134, 79 Pac. 606.

A pooling agreement is prima facie unlawful and may be upheld, according to one line of authority, only by showing that the object of the "pool" is free from any fraud or self-interest detrimental to the minority stockholders. By the other line of authority such agreement can never be upheld.

Harvey v. Linville Improv. Co. 118 N. C. 693, 32 L.R.A. 265, 54 Am. St. Rep. 749, 24 S. E. 489; Morel v. Hoge, 130 Ga. 625, 16 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1136, 61 S. E. 487, 14 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 935; Cone v. Russell, 48 N. J. Eq. 208, 21 Atl. 847; Shepang Voting Trust Cases, 60 Conn. 553, 24 Atl. 32; Warren v. Pim, 65 N. J. Eq. 36, 55 Atl. 66, affirmed in 66 N. J. Eq. 353, 59 Atl. 773; Kreissl v. Distilling Co. 61 N. J. Eq. 5, 47 Atl. 471; Bridgers v. Staton, 150 N. C. 216, 63 S. E. 892; Sheppard v. Rockingham Power Co. 150 N. C. 776, 64 S. E. 894; Bridgers v. First Nat. Bank, 152 N. C. 293, 31 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1199, 67 S. E. 770; White v. Thomas Inflatable Tire Co. 52 N. J. Eq. 178, 28 Atl. 75; Clarke v. Central R. & Bkg. Co. 15 L.R.A. 683, 50 Fed. 338; Smith v. San Francisco & N. P. R. Co. 115 Cal. 584, 35 L.R.A. 309, 56 Am. St. Rep. 119, 47 Pac. 582; Theis v. Spokane Falls Gaslight Co. 34 Wash. 23, 74 Pac. 1004; 1 Thomp. Corp. §§ 889-901; 29 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. pp. 1077, et seq.; 3 Clark & M. Priv. Corp. § 657.

Messrs. James F. McElroy, Hayden & Langhorne, and Bates, Peer, & Peterson, for respondents Bates et al. and appellants McMurray et al.:

An attorney may acquire the property 33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

of his client where the transaction is fair and honest, and is not tainted with fraud, undue influence, or corruption.

Laclede Bank v. Keeler, 109 Ill. 385; Miles v. Ervin, 1 M'Cord, Eq. 524, 16 Am. Dec. 623; Mitchell v. Colby, 95 Iowa, 202, 63 N. W. 769.

The pooling agreement is valid, and not against public policy.

Faulds v. Yates, 57 Ill. 416, 11 Am. Rep. 24, 3 Mor. Min. Rep. 551; Smith v. San Francisco & N. P. R. Co. 115 Cal. 584, 35 L.R.A. 309, 56 Am. St. Rep. 119, 47 Pac. 582; Weber v. Della Mountain Min. Co. 14 Idaho, 404, 94 Pac. 441; Chapman v. Bates, 61 N. J. Eq. 658, 88 Am. St. Rep. 459, 47 Atl. 638; Cone v. Russell, 48 N. J. Eq. 208, 21 Atl. 847; Mobile & O. R. Co. v. Nicholas, 98 Ala. 92, 12 So. 723; Barnes v. Brown, 80 N. Y. 527.

The provisions are binding upon Winsor, who had delivered his stock to his agents, Bates, Peer, & Peterson, to accomplish the purpose intended.

Jones v. Brown, 171 Mass. 318, 50 N. E. 648; Rigg v. Reading & S. W. Street R. Co. 191 Pa. 298, 43 Atl. 212; Fitzsimmons v. Lindsay, 205 Pa. 79, 54 Atl. 488; Williams v. Montgomery, 148 N. Y. 519, 43 N. E. 57.

To set aside a contract with strangers, because of dealings between attorney and client, would throw open the door of fraud upon the rights of these appellants.

Bronson v. Chappell (Townsend v. Chappell) 12 Wall. 681, 20 L. ed. 436; McBlair v. Gibbes, 17 How. 233, 15 L. ed. 133; McNeil v. Tenth Nat. Bank, 46 N. Y. 325, 7 Am. Rep. 341; Anderson v. Armstead, 69 Ill. 452; Tootle v. First Nat. Bank, 6 Wash. 181, 33 Pac. 345; Bigelow, Estoppel, 5th ed. 560.

Mount, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff brought this action to annul a contract entered into by himself and Newton H. Peer, and to annul all contracts made by Bates, Peer, & Peterson pursuant to the original contract, upon the ground that Bates, Peer, & Peterson were attorneys for the plaintiff at the time the original contract was made, and that they overreached the plaintiff, and that, after they and their associates had obtained possession of the property described in the contract, they mismanaged the same, so that it was in imminent danger of being wholly lost. The defendants admitted the contract, but denied all the allegations upon which an annulment was based. Upon a trial of the case, the court concluded that Bates, Peer, & Peterson at the time of the contract was made were attorneys and confidential advisers of the plaintiff, and, the contract being in effect between attorneys and their clients, the burden rests upon the attorneys to show the fairness of the agreement, and "the evidence shows that the amount of compensation provided for in the agreement was just, fair, and proper, and it was the purpose of the attorneys in making the contract to deal fairly with their client." The court also found that the attorneys had fully executed the agreement, and that the provisions in the contract relating to the retention of the plaintiff as a trustee of the corporation, and in regard to the employment of the plaintiff as a sales agent, were against public policy and void, and for that reason concluded that the plaintiff had a right to rescind the provisions of the contract relating to the pooling of plaintiff's stock. A decree was thereupon entered to the effect that defendant Bates, Peer, & Peterson and their associates retain 355,000 shares of the stock of the Commonwealth Coal Company, and that new certificates for 336,589 shares be made out in the name of the plaintiff, and deposited with the defendant Scandinavian American Bank, to be held by it under an agreement for collateral security for a debt owing to the bank, and secondarily to secure a claim of defendant Richard Winsor; also that out of the stock adjudged to defendants Bates, Peer, & Peterson and their associates, 18,411 shares be held subject to the claim of said Richard Winsor, and that the pooling agreement be adjudged void in so far as it affected the stock awarded to plaintiff, as above stated. The plaintiff has appealed from that part of the decree denying the relief prayed for, and the defendants McCormick, McMurray, and Stevenson have appealed from that part of the decree rescinding the pooling agreement.

The record of the case is very voluminous, but the salient facts are briefly stated as follows: It appears that prior to December, 1909, the plaintiff owned the majority of the capital stock of the commonwealth coal company, a corporation organized under the laws of this state. This corporation was engaged in operating coal mines. The defendants C. O. Bates, N. H. Peer, and C. T. Peterson had been retained as attorneys for the Commonwealth Coal Company, and had frequently advised the plaintiff in regard to the business of this and other corporations in which the plaintiff was interested. In the summer of 1909, the Commonwealth Coal Company became embarrassed financially, and was unable to meet its maturing obligations. The plaintiff had unsuccessfully endeavored to dispose of his personal stock in order to raise funds with which to carry on the business of the corporation. The plaintiff owned 710,000 shares of the capital stock of the Commonwealth Coal Company, capitalized for 1,000,000 shares. This company on December 8, 1909, was in the hands of a receiver, because of its inability to meet its monthly pay roll. On that date the plaintiff entered into an option contract by which he agreed to sell 510,000 shares of his stock in the Commonwealth Coal Company to one A. C. Marconnier, in consideration that the latter would pay $43,000 indebtedness of said company. This contract was to be accepted by 10 o'clock the next morning. It was not so accepted. Whether Marconnier changed his mind, or whether plaintiff changed his mind, is not clear. At any rate, the contract was not carried out. Thereupon the plaintiff solicited his attorneys, Bates, Peer, & Peterson to assist him to finance the company in order to get the same out of the hands of the receiver. After some negotiations the contract in question was entered into as follows:

Memorandum of agreement made and entered into this 11th day of December, A. D. 1909, by and between I. B. Winsor, party of the first part and Newton H. Peer as trustee, party of the second part, witnesseth: That whereas the party of the first part is the owner of seven hundred ten thousand (710,000) shares of the capital stock of the Commonwealth Coal Company, a corporation duly organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the state of Washington, of the par value of one dollar ($1) a share; and whereas the said I. B. Winsor is president of said Commonwealth Coal Company; and whereas the said Commonwealth Coal Company is indebted to divers and sundry persons in the sum of approximately forty-five thousand dollars ($45,000), of which sum about five thousand dollars ($5,000) is for the October pay roll of said corporation, which is now part due and for which a lien has been filed; and whereas there will be due to the laborers in the mines of said corporation the November pay roll, amounting to about eight thousand dollars ($8,000) on the 20th day of December, A. D. 1909; and whereas the said Commonwealth Coal Company and the party of the first part are without funds with which to liquidate said amounts due on said pay rolls and the other indebtedness; and whereas they are desirous of obtaining the necessary funds to liquidate said indebtedness; and whereas the said party of the first part is the owner of more than a majority of the capital stock in said Commonwealth Coal Company; and

whereas most of the capital stock of said Commonwealth Coal Company owned by the party of the first part is now hypothecated with the creditors of said company as security for the payment of said indebtedness: Now, therefore, it is mutually understood and agreed between the parties hereto, as follows: The party of the first part, in consideration of the covenants and agreement hereinafter set forth to be performed on the part of the party of the second part, agrees as follows: That he will and does hereby transfer and set over unto the party of the second part three hundred fifty-five thousand (355,000) shares of the capital stock of the Commonwealth Coal Company, to be held and owned by the said party of the second part; and that he will deposit the balance of said capital stock owned by him, to wit, three hundred fifty-five thousand (355,000) shares with the party of the second part, to be pooled by the party of the second part with the stock owned by him, under a pooling agreement that the party of the second part shall vote at all stockholders' meetings all of said stock, to wit, three hundred fifty-five thousand (355,000) shares, owned by the said I. B. Winsor, either in the election of a board of trustees or officers or for any other purpose for which said stock shall be voted, it being distinctly understood and agreed, however, that the title to the said three hundred fifty-five thousand (355,000) shares so deposited with the party of the second part by the party of the first part under said pooling agreement shall be and remain in the party of the first part, subject only to the terms of said pooling agreement. It is further understood and agreed that all of said stock be transferred to the party of the second part under the terms of this agreement, subject only to the rights of the party with whom said stock is now hypothecated. And the said party of the second part, for and in consideration of the covenants and agreements to be performed by said party of the first part, as herein set forth, agrees to at once advance to the Commonwealth Coal Company, sufficient money to pay the October pay roll of the Commonwealth Coal Company and also, on or about the 20th day of December, A. D. 1909 advance to said Commonwealth Coal Company sufficient money to pay the November pay roll of said Commonwealth Coal Company, or so much thereof as may be necessary to take care of said November pay roll. The said party of the second part further agrees to advance at once any further sum necessary, not exceeding the sum of thirty-five hundred dollars ($3,500), to pay and take care of any floating indebtedness or liability of said Commonwealth Coal Company that it is necessary to pay at this time. It is further understood and agreed that the said I. B. Winsor shall resign his office as president of said Commonwealth Coal Company, and the vacancy caused by said resignation shall be filled by some party that is elected by the party of the second part or his associates, provided, however, that the said I. B. Winsor shall be retained on said board of trustees, and shall be retained on said board of trustees during the continuance of this agreement. It is further understood and agreed that as soon as practicable the mines of the Commonwealth Coal Company shall be opened and put in active operation, and the profits derived from the sale of the product of said mine, after paying all running expenses and fixed charges and such betterments as the board of trustees of said Commonwealth Coal Company shall direct, shall be applied to the payment of the said indebtedness owing by the Commonwealth Coal Company, in such manner and in such a way as the board of trustees may designate. It is further understood and agreed that the said I. B. Winsor shall be appointed salesman of the produce of said mine. It is further understood and agreed that the party of the first part shall obtain the resignation of the following named trustees of said Commonwealth Coal Company: George H. Tarbell, John W. Phillips, W. H. Pringle, and Corwin S. Shank, or any three of the same, and the vacancies caused thereby shall be filled by the said party of the second part or his associates.

33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

I. B. Winsor.

Newton H. Peer, as Trustee.

This contract was, in fact, the contract of Winsor and Bates, Peer, & Peterson. It was dictated in the presence of the plaintiff, and contained the offers made by the plaintiff to his attorneys at the time it was made. It was not signed until the 13th or 14th of December. At the time this contract was entered into, the corporation was in the hands of a receiver, and all of the stock mentioned was held by the Scandinavian American Bank as collateral security for debts owing to the bank by the coal company and by the plaintiff. The plaintiff thereupon gave to Peer an order on the bank for the stock mentioned in the contract. It was estimated by the parties to the contract that $30,000 would be sufficient to pay off the pressing debts and take the company out of the hands of the receiver. Bates, Peer, & Peterson thereupon solicited certain of their friends to loan money to the Commonwealth Company, promising them that the money would be repaid within a few months, and, as an inducement to them to make the loan, promised that all the stock should be placed in a pool for ten years in order that they might control the company, and that persons loaning money should share in the stock given to Bates, Peer, & Peterson by the contract. Under these promises, the defendants loaned money to the coal company, and advanced the same to Mr. Peterson as follows: R. L. McCormick, $8,000; J. L. McMurray, $15,000; N. H. Peer, $2,250; C. T. Peterson, $2,250; George Stevenson, $2,250,—making a total of $29,750. Mr. Peterson took his money, and, in company with the plaintiff, went to the mine, where $17,068.79 was used in paying labor claims for the mining company. The balance was turned over to the treasurer of the company. At the time these labor claims were paid, Mr. Peterson had no security from the company for this money. He thereupon had the claimants assign their claims to him, the plaintiff being present and assisting in making the payments and in taking these assignments. The receiver was subsequently discharged, and the new stockholders proceeded to reorganize the company by electing themselves and the plaintiff directors thereof. Upon this being done, application was made to the Scandinavian American Bank to release the capital stock held as collateral security, as above stated. A new contract was then entered into by the bank and the coal company, acting through its new officers, by which contract a part of the debt owing to the bank was paid and time was given upon the remainder. The bank, however, upon being informed that the plaintiff, I. B. Winsor, was retained upon the board of directors, refused to execute the new contract or release any of the stock held by it, until the plaintiff was without authority in the management of the company. The plaintiff thereupon agreed to retire from the board of directors temporarily, until the debt owing to the bank was paid, but that such retirement should not alter the other terms of the contract with Mr. Peer, —the contract in question. Thereupon the bank released 475,589 shares of stock, the greater part of which it was agreed by the contract should belong to Bates, Peer, & Peterson. Two hundred thousand of these shares were then divided between all the parties who had advanced money, according to the amount each one had advanced, and upon a basis of 16 cents per share. It was soon necessary for the company to have more money, and $15,000 more was loaned to the company by the same parties who had advanced the $29,750, as above stated. These parties thereupon insisted that Bates, Peer, & Peterson should, on account of this new loan, divide the 155,000 shares held by them. They thereupon consented, and, taking one half thereof to themselves, divided the other half among the parties who had advanced the last loan, according to the amount advanced by each. Thereafter the plaintiff, who had been employed as sales agent for the company, was discharged for inefficiency. Subsequently, interest on the bonded indebtedness of the mine became due, and was not paid, but so far as disclosed by the record, no foreclosure proceedings were instituted.

It is conceded that the defendant Richard Winsor has a secondary lien for about $40,000 on the stock held by the bank. There is no evidence that the coal company had been improperly managed by the new board of directors. The whole record shows that the plaintiff was fully advised and knew of all the conditions of the contract which he seeks to have declared void; that he was fully informed and knew what Bates, Peer, & Peterson were doing with the stock. We find nothing worthy of notice to the effect that Bates, Peer, & Peterson overreached the plaintiff, or, of any bad faith on their part. On the other hand, the great weight of the evidence shows that they did what the plaintiff desired them to do, and at all times kept faith with the plaintiff. It was specifically agreed that they should have 355,000 shares, to be held and owned by them for their work. It is extremely doubtful if this stock at that time had any real value. It is true that Bates, Peer, & Peterson divided this stock among the persons loaning money at the rate of 16 cents per share, but there was no market for it at that time at such price or at any other price, and there is no evidence in the record as to the value after that time. It is true there is a statement of assets and liabilities of the Commonwealth Coal Company which shows assets largely in excess of the liabilities, but there is nothing to show that this statement is correct, or even approximately so, in regard to the assets. But if the stock was valuable, the plaintiff knew that fact much better than anyone else, and it was his proposition to give that stock to his attorneys as compensation for their work. There was some effort made to show that the plaintiff was worried, and thereby unfit to attend to business transactions. He was no doubt worried, but he was fully competent to attend to his business, and knew his business at all times, and particularly when he entered into the contract in question.

It is argued by the plaintiff that the contract contained illegal provisions and was therefore void, as follows: "(1) That Peer, as part consideration for the transfer, should vote the plaintiff's stock; (2) that plaintiff should be retained on the board of trustees during the life of the agreement; (3) that the plaintiff should be appointed salesman of the produce of the mine; (4) that plaintiff should secure the resignation of three of the trustees, and the vacancies be filled by Peer and his associates." The first and fourth provisions named above were for the benefit of the persons whom Bates, Peer, & Peterson should interest in the company, and the second and third provisions were for the benefit of the plaintiff. We know of no rule of law which prevents one person from authorizing another to vote his stock. The Code provides that this may be done. Rem. & Bal. Code, § 3686. The plaintiff himself, after the contract had been executed and before the action was brought, expressly waived his right to be retained on the board of trustees. The plaintiff was appointed as sales agent, and served in that capacity for several months, and until he became inefficient; and he certainly was liable to be discharged for such cause. The vacancies were made on the board of directors. Even if the contract was illegal, and therefore might not have been enforced in the particulars named, the provisions for the benefit of the plaintiff were actually performed or waived. The plaintiff therefore has no cause for complaint upon that account.

The plaintiff also argues that the giving of the stock by Bates, Peer, & Peterson, to the parties who advanced the money for the loans, constituted usury. We think there was no usury in this. The stock given out actually belonged to Bates, Peer, & Peterson at the time. They certainly could dispose of it as they saw fit. But if the giving out of this stock by Bates, Peer, & Peterson did constitute usury, the plaintiff may not urge that question in this case, for he is not interested. We think the record shows that the contract sought to be avoided was fairly entered into, and was executed by the defendants Bates, Peer, & Peterson in good faith. This contract, in regard to pooling the stock, is as follows: "That he [plaintiff] will deposit the balance of said capital stock owned by him, to wit, three hundred fifty-five thousand (355,000) shares, with the party of the second part, to be pooled by the party of the second part with the stock owned by him, under a pooling agreement that the party of the second part shall vote at all stockholders' meetings all of said stock, to wit, three hundred fifty-five thousand (355,000) shares, owned by the said I. B. Winsor, either in the election of a board of trustees or officers or for any other purpose for which said stock shall be voted." The trial court rescinded this provision of the contract, upon the ground that the two provisions relating to the retention of the plaintiff as a member of the board of trustees and his employment as sales agent were against public policy. If these provisions were against public policy, it does not necessarily follow that the pooling agreement was also void or against public policy. This pooling agreement was made by the plaintiff, who, at that time, owned a majority of all the stock of the corporation. He made it for his own protection, and also for the protection of those who might thereafter acquire stock. Under this provision of the contract, the defendants Bates, Peer, & Peterson, with the knowledge and acquiescence of the plaintiff entered into a ten-year pooling agreement with minority stockholders, who acquired stock upon the assurance that the stock should remain in the pool, and not be offered for sale except to each other for that length of time, and that the plaintiff's stock should be voted by Mr. Peer. There appears to be nothing unfair or fraudulent in this agreement. Bates, Peer, & Peterson acquired their stock under this agreement and the defendants McCormick, McMurray and Stevenson acquired stock from Bates, Peer, & Peterson relying upon this provision of the contract. In fact, their testimony shows that, without such agreement, they would neither have loaned their money nor accepted the stock. It is therefore apparent that this provision of the contract should not now be rescinded, unless it is contrary to public policy or in some way tainted with fraud. The agreement to pool the stock was not against public policy, because there was nothing unlawful about it, and nothing which necessarily affected the rights of minority stockholders. Persons owning stock have the unqualified right to combine their interests to secure the management of the corporation, when such management is fair to all stockholders alike. Faulds v. Yates, 57 Ill. 416, 11 Am. Rep. 24, 3 Mor. Min. Rep. 551; Smith v. San Francisco & N. P. R. Co. 115 Cal. 584, 35 L.R.A. 309, 56 Am. St. Rep. 119, 4 Pac. 582; Weber v. Della Mountain Min. Co. 14 Idaho, 404, 94 Pac. 441; Chapman v. Bates, 61 N. J. Eq. 658, 88 Am. St. Rep. 459, 47 Atl. 638. If this agreement had been made for the purpose of depriving some stockholder of his rights in the company or of doing some other illegal act, a dil that rule would apply. But this contract seems to have been entered into for legal purpose and in good faith, and has been acted upon. The plaintiff is not now in a position to seek its rescission. The judgment of the lower court is therefore modified in so far as it rescinds the provision relating to the pooling agreement, but in all other respects it is affirmed; defendants to recover costs.

Dunbar, Ch. J., and Parker, Fullerton, and Gose, JJ., concur.

WEST VIRGINIA SUPREME COURT OF APPEALS.

O. G. AUGIR

v.

REBECCA R. WARDER et al., Appts.

(— W. Va. —, 70 S. E. 719.)

Pleading — lack of parties — demurrer.

1. A bill which on its face shows want of necessary parties is demurrable.

Mechanics' lien — foreclosure — contractor as party.

2. The principal contractor is a necessary party to a suit to enforce a mechanics' lien against the building of the owner, for material furnished by plaintiff to such contractor, to be used in the construction of the building.

Same — judgment against owner.

3. It is error to render a personal decree in such suit in favor of plaintiff against the owner, if there is no privity of contract between them.

Pleading — time for answer.

4. A defendant has a right to file his answer at any time before final hearing, but he cannot delay the hearing, unless, by affidavit filed, good cause be shown therefor.

(February 28, 1911.)

Headnotes by WILLIAMS, P.

Note. — Contractor as a necessary party to a bill to enforce a mechanics' lien.

The decided weight of authority supports AUGIR v. WARDER in holding that the principal contractor is a necessary party to a suit by a subcontractor or materialman to enforce a mechanics' lien. In general, the decisions to that effect are based upon equitable grounds, although, of course, much depends upon the particular statutes involved. This latter ground not only accounts to a great extent for the contrariety of decisions on the question, but prevents the formulation of general rules.

In Vreeland v. Ellsworth, 71 Iowa, 347, 32 N. W. 374, the court, in holding that 33 L.R.A.(N.S.)

APPEAL by defendants from a decree of the Circuit Court for Taylor County overruling a demurrer to a bill filed to enforce a mechanics' lien against certain property owned by defendant Mrs. Warder. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. A. W. Burdett, for appellants:

The contractor, Thomas, is a necessary party, and it was error of the court to decree as it did in his absence.

Central City Brick Co. v. Norfolk & W. R. Co. 44 W. Va. 286, 28 S. E. 930; Boisot, Mechanics' Liens, § 533; Davis v. John Mouat Lumber Co. 2 Colo. App. 381, 31 Pac. 187; Estey v. Hallack & H. Lumber Co. 4 Colo. App. 165, 34 Pac. 1113; Sayre-Newton Lumber Co. v. Park, 4 Colo. App. 482, 36 Pac. 445; Union P. R. Co. v. Davidson, 21 Colo. 93, 39 Pac. 1095; Lombard v. Young Men's Library Asso. Fund, 73 Ga. 322; Castleberry v. Johnston, 92 Ga. 499, 17 S. E. 772; Vreeland v. Ellsworth, 71 Iowa, 347, 32 N. W. 374; Tracy v. Kerr, 47 Kan. 656, 28 Pac. 707; Kerns v. Flynn, 51 Mich. 573, 17 N. W. 62; Northwestern Cement & Concrete Pav. Co. v. Norwegian-Danish E. L. A. Seminary, 43 Minn. 449, 45 N. W. 868; Ashburn v. Ayres, 28 Mo. 75; Wibbing v. Powers, 25 Mo. 599; Bombeck v. Devorss, 19 Mo. App. 38; Johnson-Frazier Lumber Co. v. Schuler, 49 Mo. App. 90; Sinnickson v. Lunch, 25 N. J. L. 317; Look-out Lumber Co. v. Mansion Hotel & Belt R. Co. 109 N. C. 659, 14 S. E. 35; Barnes v. Wright, 2 Whart. 193; Thomas v. Ownby, 1 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. (White & W.) 694; Austin & N. W. R. Co. v. Rucker, 59 Tex. 587.

Mr. John L. Hechmer for appellee.

Williams, P., delivered the opinion of the court:

O. G. Augir brought his suit in equity in the circuit court of Taylor county against Rebecca R. Warder, J. H. Warder, her husband, and others, to enforce a mechanics' where the account of the subcontractor against the principal contractor was "open, unliquidated, and unsettled," the principal contractor was a necessary party, said: "If the claim were liquidated, it may be that the principal contractor would not be a necessary party. But that question we need not determine. This is an open, unliquidated account,—a mere charge against the contractor. The burden of ascertaining whether there is any defense to the action ought not to be put upon the owner of the property. He is not presumed to have any knowledge upon the subject. Further than this, if the subcontractor establishes his lien against the property, and the owner is compelled to pay it, he has recourse on the principal contractor. He ought to be fur-lien against a certain house and lot owned by Mrs. Warder, situate in the city of Grafton; and on the 19th of January, 1905, the court decreed a sale of said house and lot, and also rendered a personal decree against Mrs. Warder for the amount of the lien. From this decree, she and her husband have appealed.

The bill alleges that the lien is on account of material furnished to one Henry Thomas, the builder of the house, under contract with J. H. Warder, the husband and agent of the owner; but Thomas is not made a party, and the bill is demurred to. The court overruled the demurrer, and this is assigned as error. The allegations in the bill show Thomas's relation to the transaction; and, if he is a necessary party, the failure to make him such may be raised by demurrer. Pappenheimer v. Roberts, W. Va. 702; Clayton v. Henley, 32 Gra 65.

Was he a necessary party? Mrs. Warder is not personally liable to the plaintiff for the material furnished to Thomas, because there is no privity of contract between them; but her property is liable. Consequently, she is interested in having the amount due from Thomas to plaintiff judicially determined in a manner binding both him and Thomas. This cannot be done if Thomas is not a party to the suit. She is also interested to know that the material on account of which the lien is claimed actually went into the construction of the house. Material might be furnished to finished with an adjudicated claim, and not with a mere open account." Wheelock v. Hull, 124 Iowa, 752, 100 N. W. 863, is to the same effect.

And in some jurisdictions the original contractor is held a necessary party to an action to foreclose a lien by a materialman or subcontractor, on the ground that the inquiry necessarily involves the contract relations and state of accounts existing between the contractor and the one seeking to enforce the lien, and that, without the establishment of that debt, there can be no right of recovery by a materialman, which renders his right to a lien dependent upon the establishment of his claim or debt against the contractor, for which purpose the contractor is an indispensable party. The following cases are to this effect: Davis v. John Mouat Lumber Co. 2 Colo. App. 381, 31 Pac. 187; Estey v. Hallack & H. Lumber Co. 4 Colo. App. 165, 34 Pac. 1113; Sayre-Newton Lumber Co. v. Park, 4 Colo. App. 482, 36 Pac. 445; Charles v. E. F. Hallack Lumber & Mfg. Co. 22 Colo. 283, 43 Pac. 548; Kerns v. Flynn, 51 Mich. 573, 17 N. W. 62; Godfrey Lumber Co. v. Kline, 160 Mich. 565, 125 N. W. 682; Northwestern Cement & Concrete Pav. Co. v. Norwegian-Danish E. L. A. Seminary, 43 Minn. 449, 45 N. W. 868; Emmet v. Rotary Mill Co. 2 Minn. 286; Gil, 248; Lookout Lumber Co. v. Mansion Hotel & Belt R. Co. 109 S. C. 658, 14 S. E. 35.

In Georgia, it is held that a materialman, in order to enforce his lien, must concurrently sue and obtain judgment against the original contractor, unless he has obtained a previous judgment against such contractor. This is upon the ground that a special judgment fixing a lien on the property of an owner, in favor of one as to whom no privity of contract exists, cannot be obtained until there is first a general judgment for the claim against the contractor. Mauck v. Rosser, 126 Ga. 268, 55 S. E. 32; Clayton v. Farrar Lumber Co. 119 Ga. 37, 45 S. E. 723; Royal v. McPhail, 97 Ga. 457, 25 S. E. 512; Castleberry v. Johnston, 92 Ga. 499, 17 S. E. 772; Lombard v. Young Men's Library Asso. Fund, 73 Ga. 322; 33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Philip Carey Mfg. Co. v. Viaduct Place, Ga. App. 707, 58 S. E. 274.

And upon the same grounds it was held in Gilliam v. Black, 16 Mont. 217, 40 P. 303, that a personal judgment must be obtained against the original contractor, and that for this purpose he is a necessary party to the foreclosure suit. Missoula Mercantile Co. v. O'Donnell, 24 Mont. 65, 60 P. 594, 991; and Wagner v. St. Peter's Hospital, 32 Mont. 206, 79 Pac. 1054, are to the same effect.

And in O'Neil Lumber Co. v. Greffet, Mo. App. —, 133 S. W. 113, it was said that where a materialman seeks to enforce a lien through the privity arising from an agreement between the original contractor and the owner, the former is an essential party.

In Barnes v. Colorado Springs & C. Dist. R. Co. 42 Colo. 461, 94 Pac. 570, the original contractor was regarded as a necessary party to a lien foreclosure action, though the specific question was not discussed.

In Wakefield v. Van Dorn, 53 Neb. 73 N. W. 226, where two contractors furnished materials toward the erection of an improvement, pursuant to separate contracts with the owner, it was held that the contractor was a necessary party to a suit by the other to establish and foreclose a mechanics' lien for the materials furnished by him, although the first had not filed a claim for a lien.

The following late cases construe the mechanics' lien laws which expressly require suits by a subcontractor or materialman to be brought against both contractor and owner jointly (no attempt has been made, however, to compile the statutes governing the question, except as they are shown in the adjudications). John E. Burns Lumber Co. v. W. J. Reynolds Co. 148 Ill. App. 356 (decided 1909); Porter v. Western Tube Co. 240 Ill. 151, 88 N. E. 472 (decided 1909); Grandquist v. Western Tube Co. 240 Ill. 132, 88 N. E. 468 (decided 1909); Harty Bros. & H. Co. v. Polakow, 237 Ill. 559, 86 N. E. 1085 (decided 1909); O'Brien v. Gooding, 194 Ill. 466, 62 N. E. 898 ( contractor who at the time was engaged in the erection of houses for different owners, and the sale of material being made on the contractor's own account, it might be that no one but himself would know what part of the material was used in a particular case; and therefore great injustice is liable to be done an owner by subjecting his property to a lien for material which was in fact used in the construction of his building, if the contractor is not made a party. In the present case Thomas does not even testify. Moreover, equity delights to do complete justice among all parties concerned in any litigation properly before the court, and thus prevent a multiplicity of suits. Consequently, having jurisdiction for the purpose of enforcing the lien, the court could decree, as between Thomas and the plaintiff, the amount due the latter by the former; and such a decree would be res judicata upon Thomas in any future suit that Mrs. Warder might bring against him to recover what she would be compelled to pay to discharge the lien. Equity would unquestionably subrogate her to the rights of plaintiff; and if the amount adjudicated in the mechanics' lien suit were not made binding on Thomas, she would be compelled to relitigate the question in such other suit, and might be defeated by Thomas's proving that he owed the plaintiff nothing. The same principle would apply, whether the lienor be a materialman, a subcontractor, or a laborer; and it is clear to us that in a suit by any of them to enforce a mechanical 1902); Western Sash & Door Co. v. Man, 65 Kan. 5, 68 Pac. 1080 (decided 1902); Tracy v. Kerr, 47 Kan. 656, 28 Pac. 17 (decided 1892); Barnes v. Wright, 2 Mart. 194, in which the reason for such a provision was stated as follows: "There is a great reason why the contractor should be made a party to the proceeding on sci. fa., though the judgment and execution on it can only affect the house. He alone knows the person who supplied the materials, the price at which they were to be furnished, and who did the work, and the price agreed on. If he contracted to finish the building for a certain sum, he may become liable to the owner, who has been compelled to lose his house or pay debts on it. Justice to the owner and to the contractor then requires that the debtor be a party to the sci. fa., as well as the owner of the building."

And where it is clearly the intention of the legislature that there shall be a complete determination in one suit of all matters in controversy, the principal contractor is held a necessary party. Giant Powder Co. v. San Diego Flume Co. 78 Cal. 193, 20 Pac. 419; Davis v. John Mouat Lumber Co. 2 Colo. App. 381, 31 Pac. 187; Union P. R. Co. v. Davidson, 21 Colo. 93, 39 Pac. 1095.

In Warner v. Yates, 118 Tenn. 548, 102 S. W. 92, in holding that both the principal contractor and the owner must be made parties to a proceeding to enforce a mechanics' lien, which, in Tennessee, is by suit against the debtor and attachment against the property, the court said: "The principal contractor is a necessary party, because he is the debtor sued, and the owner of the property, because it is sought to reach his or her property. They are both interested, and must have their day in court; otherwise, there would be a failure of due process of law. The principal contractor has the right to controvert the indebtedness claimed, and the owner of the property, the existence of the lien sought to be enforced, and the action cannot be maintained without establishing both the debt and the lien." And the same is true of a subcontractor. Lutt- 33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

rell v. Knoxville, La. F. & J. R. Co. 119 Tenn. 492, 123 Am. St. Rep. 737, 105 S. W. 565.

It has been held under a statute providing that the creditor may proceed "against the debtor and owner," that the principal contractor is a necessary party to a suit by a materialman to enforce a mechanics' lien. Sinnickson v. Lynch, 25 N. J. L. 317; Ayres v. Revere, 25 N. J. L. 474.

And under a statute providing that all persons having an interest in the controversy, and all persons claiming liens on the same property, "shall" be made parties to a suit to enforce a mechanics' lien, the principal contractor must be made a party to an action by a materialman to enforce a lien. Flake v. Central Hardware Co. — Miss. —, 51 So. 461. And this is true where the statute provides that "the parties to the contract shall, and all other persons interested . . . may be, made parties," and in addition it is made the duty of the principal contractor to defend the action, it being said that no valid judgment can be rendered in the absence of such party, even though there was a defect of parties, if such defect was not presented by demurrer or answer, as the rule whereby a defect of parties is considered waived if not so presented has no application in such case. Russell v. Grant, 122 Mo. 161, 43 Am. St. Rep. 563, 26 S. W. 958; Johnson-Frazier Lumber Co. v. Schuler, 49 Mo. App. 90; Steinmann v. Strimple, 29 Mo. App. 478.

But it has been held that the general rule as to waiver does apply where the lien claimant was one whose contract had been made, not with the principal contractor, but with a subcontractor under him, so that the principal contractor was not one of the "parties to the contract," and the subcontractor had been made a party. Horstkotte v. Menier, 50 Mo. 158; Fruin v. Mitchell Furniture Co. 20 Mo. App. 313; Luttrell v. Knoxville, La. F. & J. R. Co. 119 Tenn. 492, 123 Am. St. Rep. 737, 105 S. W. 565. See also Osborn v. Logus, as set out infra; Carney v. La Crosse & M. R. Co. 15 Wis. 504; Harbeck v. Southwell, 18 Wis. 418; and Fredrickson v. Riebsam, 72 ics' lien, the owner is vitally interested in having the amount judicially ascertained in a manner that shall be binding on both the lien claimant and his debtor. However, we find a contrariety of decisions on this question by the various courts of the country. But much of it is more apparent than real, because the decisions depend largely upon the statutes of the particular states. Some of the courts hold that the contractor is a proper, but not a necessary, party; others that he is not only a proper, but also a necessary, party. Many of the cases have been collated by Boisot, and are cited in a note to § 533 in his work on Mechanics' Liens. This author says: "According to most of the decisions, the contractor is a necessary party defendant to a suit to enforce the lien of a subcontractor or a materialman in the second degree, on the theory that he should have a right to dispute the account, and that his duty to the owner requires him to do so, if the account is incorrect." To the same effect is Phillips' Mechanics' Liens, § 397. See also the dictum of Judge English, who wrote the opinion in Central City Brick Co. v. Norfolk & W. R. Co. 44 W. Va. 286, 295, 28 S. 926.

We hold that Henry Thomas, the principal contractor, was a necessary party, and that the court erred in overruling the demurrer to the bill. Being a necessary party, the fact that he was a nonresident of the state at the time the suit was brought furnishes no excuse for failure to make hi-

Wis. 587, 40 N. W. 501, which are to the same effect, with the exception that the materials were furnished directly to the principal contractor.

In Rumsey & S. Co. v. Pieffer, 108 Mo. App. 486, 83 S. W. 1027, however, it was held that it was not sufficient merely to make the subcontractor with whom the materialman claimant had dealt, and the owner, defendants, but that the original contractor must also be made a party, in order that a defense might be interposed as provided by the statutory provisions requiring him to defend.

In Bombeck v. Devorss, 19 Mo. App. 38, a holding that a mechanics' lien cannot be enforced by a materialman, unless the contractors are made parties defendant, was based on that phase of the statute providing that "the parties to the contract . . . shall be made parties."

And in the following cases similar conclusions were based on that clause providing that the principal contractor must defend a suit to enforce a subcontractor's or materialman's lien, it being said that he is the only one who can defend, and that if he is not a party, the action must be dismissed: Ashburn v. Ayres, 28 Mo. 75; Wibbing v. Powers, 25 Mo. 599; Murdock v. Hillyer, 45 Mo. App. 287; Steinkamper v. McManus, 26 Mo. App. 51.

But in Osborn v. Logus, 28 Or. 302, 37 Pac. 456, 38 Pac. 190, 42 Pac. 997, where the lien law provided that all persons liable, and all holders of filed liens, "shall," and all other persons interested "may," be made parties, and that the contractor must defend at his expense any action brought upon a lien for labor and materials furnished him, the original contractor was held not an indispensable party to a suit by a materialman to enforce a lien. This decision was upon the grounds, first, that, the contractor being the agent of the owner (so held in Oregon for the purposes of the mechanics' lien act), his acts may be said to be the acts of the owner, thereby establishing a privity for the purpose of the lien between the owner and the materialman, so that there is privity of contract, and the 33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

presence of the contractor is not necessary to complete the direct relationship, and, secondly, because the word "shall" as used is not mandatory in the sense that the absence of a person liable would render the judgment nugatory, it being said that the intention of the legislature was merely to designate such parties as were necessary and proper for a complete determination of matters pertaining to the foreclosure. As to the provision requiring the contractor to defend, the court relied upon Horstkotte v. Menier, supra, holding to the effect that the provision recognizes the right of the owner to look to the contractor for protection, and that if he is not made a party, and the action proceeds to judgment without objection by demurrer or answer, the right to object is waived.

In Thomas v. Ownby, 1 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. (White & W.) 694, it was held that the principal contractor is a necessary party, unless the materialman alleges facts showing that the contractor has no interest in the controversy.

In Green v. Clifford, 94 Cal. 49, 29 Pac. 331, it was held that the principal contractor is not a necessary party to an action to enforce a lien, so far, at least, as the rights of the owner of the building are concerned.

Where no judgment of any kind is demanded against the principal contractors in a proceeding by a materialman to enforce a mechanics' lien, they are not necessary parties. Crawfordsville v. Barr, 65 Ind. 367; Hubbard v. Moore, 132 Ind. 178, 3 N. E. 534; Leeper v. Myers, 10 Ind. App. 314, 37 N. E. 1070 (in this case, however it appeared that the amount due and owing the materialman was settled, and it had been agreed between the parties that the owner should pay the materialman, who had released the principal contractor).

And where a personal judgment is not desired against the principal contractor, it is held that he is not a necessary party. McDonald v. Backus, 45 Cal. 262; Wood v. Oakland & B. Rapid Transit Co. 107 Cal. 500, 40 Pac. 806; Los Angeles Pressed Brick Co. v. Higgins, 8 Cal. App. 514, 97 a party to the bill. True, no personal decree could have been rendered against him, or publication, without his appearance; but he might have appeared in obedience to an order of publication, if one had been executed against him. He should have been given an opportunity to do so.

It was also error to render a personal decree against Mrs. Warder. There is no contractual relation between plaintiff and her, and the statute does not authorize a personal decree against her. It only makes the owner's property liable for the lien. Code 1906, chap. 75, § 3; Boisot, Mechanics' Liens, § 212; May & T. Hardware Co. v. McConnell, 102 Ala. 577, 14 So. 768; Hasset v. Rust, 64 Mo. 325. However, if she had admitted that there was a fund in her hands due to the contractor, the court might have been warranted in giving a personal decree against her not exceeding such fund. Taylor v. Netherwood, 91 Va. 88, 20 S. E. 888. But we are not required to decide this question, and therefore do not decide it. Mrs. Warder did not record her contract with Thomas. If she had desired to limit the liability of her property, so that it would not exceed what she had agreed to pay him, she should have recorded it. Williams & D. Co. v. Bailey, — W. Va. —, 70 S. E. 696.

On account of the errors herein noted, the decree complained of will have to be reversed. It is therefore not necessary to pass upon the question whether the court erred in not recommitting the cause after the answer of the Yates, the holders of the vendors' lien, was permitted to be filed. They had a right to file their answer at any time before final hearing. Code 1906, chap. 125, § 53; Keck v. Allender, 37 W. Va. 201, 16 S. E. 520; Kimble v. Wotring, 48 W. Va. 412, 37 S. E. 606. They did not ask to have the cause delayed. Appellants are the ones who are complaining, because the cause was not delayed by a recommitment, to ascertain the amount of purchase money due; yet they did not reply to the answer, and do not deny the correctness of the amount found by the court, which is much less than the amount of the vendors' lien reported by the commissioner. When the cause goes back, Mrs. Warder will have a right to file her replication, and thereby put in issue, if she desires to do so, the amount which she owes her vendors.

We will reverse the decree, and remand the cause for further proceedings, with leave to plaintiff to amend his bill, making Henry Thomas a party.

Brannon and Robinson, JJ., absent.

Pac. 414, 420; Cooper Mfg. Co. v. Delahunt, 36 Or. 402, 51 Pac. 649, 60 Pac. 1; Hand Mfg. Co. v. Marks, 36 Or. 523, 52 Pac. 512, 53 Pac. 1072, 59 Pac. 549.

So, the principal contractor is not a necessary party to a suit to enforce a mechanics' lien against property for materials furnished upon the joint credit of the contractor and the ostensible owner, who was, in fact, the agent of an undisclosed principal, if such agent had authority to bind the property. O'Neil Lumber Co. v. Greffet, — Mo. App. —, 133 S. W. 113.

And a head contractor who has assigned all his rights against the owner to a subcontractor is not a necessary party to an action by such subcontractor against the owner, to enforce his lien upon money due the head contractor. Kloeppinger v. Grasser, 25 Ohio C. C. 90.

And in Wood v. Oakland & B. Rapid Transit Co. 107 Cal. 500, 40 Pac. 806, it was held that the original contractor is not a necessary party to an action to foreclose a mechanics' lien, where the contract between the owner and such contractor was void.

Nor is the principal contractor a necessary party to an action to enforce liens for labor and materials furnished after the abandonment by the contractor of his contract. Green v. Clifford, 94 Cal. 49, 29 Pac. 331.

In Hilton Bridge Constr. Co. v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 145 N. Y. 390, 40 N. E. 86, where it was contended that the receiver of the insolvent principal contractor was a necessary party to a suit by a subcontractor, to enforce a materialman's lien, which cause of action depended upon payments made by the owner under the original contract, an order bringing such receiver in was affirmed on the ground that it was proper in order that the rights of all might be determined in one suit; but the court refused to say that the receiver was a necessary party.

And in Martens v. O'Neill, 131 App. Div. 123, 115 N. Y. Supp. 260, it was held that the original contractor was not a necessary party, first, because the statute did not enumerate him as such, and, second, because he was not united in interest with the owner. And Burgi v. Rudgers, 20 S. D. 646, 108 N. W. 253, and Maxon v. School Dist. No. 34, 5 Wash. 142, 31 Pac. 462, 32 Pac. 110, are to the same effect as regards the failure of the statute to make the contractor a necessary party.

Under a lien law which provides the manner in which a proceeding to foreclose a lien shall be instituted, but does not require the principal contractor to be made a party, and which directs that, upon the appearance of the claimant and the owner in court, the issues shall be joined, the principal contractor is not a necessary party, however proper it may be to call him in because he has an interest in the matter alleged. Foster v. Skidmore, 1 E. D. Smith, 719; Lowber v. Childs, 2 E. D. Smith, 577, 1 Abb. Pr. 415.

But in Austin & N. W. R. Co. v. Rucker, 59 Tex. 587, it was held that both the principal contractor and the subcontractor are necessary parties to a suit by the assignee of a laborer to foreclose a laborers' lien, although the statute does not declare who shall be made defendants in such suits. The court stated its reasons as follows: "The subcontractor is the principal debtor in this case, and the person to whom the facts necessary to be established to support or defeat the claims must be known, and of which the appellant [owner] is not presumed to have knowledge; and if the cause can be tried without making him a party, it may be that the appellant, for want of knowledge of the facts of the case, may have a lien foreclosed upon its property, when in fact no indebtedness such as would give the lien existed; and at the same time such judgment and the payment thereof would be no bar to a suit by the subcontractor against the contractor or the appellant. It would seem that such parties should be before the court, in actions of this character, as would enable the court to render a judgment binding upon the contractor, subcontractor, railway company [owner], and the laborer [claimant] alike. If the indebtedness is established as between the contractor and subcontractor, as well as between those persons and the railway company and the laborer, this gives protection to all, when the judgment is paid. This should be done in an action in which they are all parties, unless the claim of the laborer has been established, as against the other parties, by suit prior to the institution of suit to foreclose the lien given by the statute. If all the parties are before the court, all equities between them may be adjusted, and a judgment binding upon them all rendered. A payment under a judgment so rendered would, to its extent, protect a railway company against further demand by the contractor or subcontractor, as fully as would a payment by a person against whom a judgment in garnishment has been rendered protect him against his creditor whose debt he has paid. If the contractor and subcontractor are not made parties, such judgment would afford no protection against either of them, for they could not be bound by a judgment rendered in a cause to which they were not parties; and they would be permitted to show that the judgment against the railway company, in favor of the laborer, was erroneous, either for the reason that the services upon which the claim was based had never been rendered, or that, if rendered, they had been paid for. In such case a railway company could protect itself only by showing that the laborers' claim was well founded. Such burden should not be imposed, and multiplicity of actions encouraged, when the whole matter could be so easily settled in one suit in which all parties in interest are before the court." See, to the same effect, Eastern Texas R. Co. v. Davis, 37 Tex. Civ. App. 342, 83 S. W. 883; Walter v. Dearing, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 65 S. W. 380. In 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) connection with the foregoing Texas cases, see also Austin & N. W. R. Co. v. Daniels, 62 Tex. 70, which is sometimes cited as laying down a contrary doctrine, but in which, as a matter of fact, the question here under discussion was not involved, as both the original contractor and subcontractor were parties. The statement referred to is to the effect that the statutes of Texas create such privity between mechanics and laborers and the owner or employer as will entitle the former to maintain a direct action against the latter.

In Maneely v. New York, 119 App. Div. 376, 105 N. Y. Supp. 976, in holding that contractors were proper, but not necessary, parties, the court said: "It would seem, also, that, since the lien is claimed upon a fund primarily to the contractor and subcontractor, they are necessary parties to an action by a lienor of the subcontractor to foreclose his lien, in the sense that the court should not undertake to determine the plaintiff's claim to a fund due to them without hearing them, because, although the judgment would not be binding upon them, such course might lead to a multiplicity of suits and to conflicting determinations with respect to the validity of the lien, or the amount due to the lienor, and might subject the owner or city or the general contractor to a double liability to the lienor and to the subcontractor as well, and therefore there could not be a complete and final determination of the controversy binding on all parties in interest." This language, however, must be limited to a holding to the effect that in such case the contractor is a proper party, and should be brought in.

In Yancy v. Morgan, 94 Cal. 558, 29 Pac. 1111, it was held without discussion that the contractors were not necessary parties to a foreclosure suit. G. J. C.

GEORGIA SUPREME COURT.

W. H. P. HODGES, Plff. in Err.,
v.

PINE PRODUCT COMPANY.

(135 Ga. 134, 68 S. E. 1107.)

Water — pollution — damages.

The plaintiff brought suit against the defendant, making, among other allegations, substantially the following: The defendant is engaged in a certain business, in the op-

Headnote by HOLDEN, J.

Note. — Injury to fishing right as damages from pollution.

A riparian owner's exclusive right to fish in the water upon his own land does not include the right to destroy the fish he does not take. People v. Truckee Lumber Co. 116 Cal. 397, 39 L.R.A. 581, 58 Am. St. Rep. 183, 48 Pac. 374.

It was held in Fitzgerald v. Firbank eration of which it discharges into a ditch water which flows into a creek running through a tract of land owned by the plaintiff, part of which is used as a pasture. The water thus discharged is poisoned with gases and chemicals extracted from pine wood, and the water in such stream is thereby polluted and adulterated, rendering it unfit for the stock of the plaintiff to drink, and causing the plaintiff damages in specified ways. Held: (1) The adulteration of such stream by artificial means constitutes an invasion of the property rights of the plaintiff, for which he is entitled to nominal damages, even though he shows no special damages. (2) If one by artificial means pollutes the water in the stream on land of another, whereby the fishing privileges of the latter of a pecuniary value are destroyed or injured, he is entitled to recover damages. (3) If, by reason of the conduct of the defendant in polluting the stream, the land was rendered unfit or less valuable for use as a pasture, or other purposes for which it was adapted, with the stream running through it unpolluted, in the absence of other items of special damages, the measure of damages of the owner would be the diminution in the market value of the property, if the injury was of a permanent nature, or the diminution in the rental value, if the injury was of a temporary nature.

(September 23, 1910.)

ERROR to the Superior Court for Tattall County to review a judgment in defendant's favor in an action brought to [1897] 2 Ch. 96, 76 L. T. N. S. 584, 66 L. J. Ch. N. S. 529, that the exclusive right under a grant from a freeholder, to fish in a stream, was not a mere license, but a profit à prendre, and that therefore the grantee was entitled to maintain an action for damages against one whose act in casting silt into the river drove away the fish.

In West Muncie Strawboard Co. v. Slack, 164 Ind. 21, 72 N. E. 879, involving a suit by a riparian owner for an injunction and damages for the pollution of a stream, the refusal of the trial court to charge that the jury could not include in assessing damages any amount for any fish which were, or might have been, in the stream, was upheld upon the ground that such a charge might have misled the jury into assuming that the right to enjoy the waters of a stream for purposes of fishing was not a substantial right possessed by the plaintiff, and that an interference with it was no element of damage to the riparian land.

And in Tutwiler Coal, Coke & I. Co. v. Nichols, 145 Ala. 666, 146 Ala. 364, 119 Am. St. Rep. 34, 39 So. 762, involving an action for damages for the pollution of a stream, it was held that, although the plaintiff had no title in fish in the stream until they were caught, evidence was admissible to show that the fish had decreased in the stream, and that the plaintiff's catch had diminished, since the operation of the coal washer which was alleged to have been the source of the pollution, and also that dead fish were discovered in the stream.

In Threatt v. Brewer Min. Co. 49 S. C. 95, 26 S. E. 970, the owner of bottom lands upon a stream sued for an injunction and damages for the fouling of a stream by the deposit of tailings from a mine by an upper owner, and alleged, among other things, as injuries warranting the relief sought, that the fertility of the land was impaired and the crops destroyed, and that fish were killed or driven from the creek so that the plaintiff could not catch any. Apparently, the item of injury to the fish was set up more as a ground for injunctive relief, than for damages, but, at any rate, the court said that the matter of injury to the fish was almost too trifling to be noticed, pointing out that the plaintiff himself had never tried to catch a fish in the stream in six or seven years, and that he almost never saw anyone else try to do so. But the court said that, granting that he could have no property in such fish as swim in the stream, yet he had the right to have it free from defiling matter that would prevent fish entering the water running over his land, and that where it appeared that fish were accustomed to come into the stream before the fouling thereof drove them away, this constituted an element of injury to the plaintiff.

Where one seeking to recover loss of profits that might have been realized by the operation of his fishing weir, but for the casting of refuse into the stream by the defendant, fails to satisfy the burden of proof as to such damages, he is entitled to recover only the expense of removing the refuse. Lamond v. Seacoast Canning Co. — Me. —, 79 Atl. 385.

So, profits that might have been realized from the operation of an unobstructed fishing weir are not recoverable in an action for casting refuse into a stream, which surrounded and entered the weir, so as to prevent the entry of fish therein, where the plaintiff, having the burden to establish the prospective profits claimed to have been lost, fails to adduce any evidence from which such profits might be computed, such as the continuance of favorable conditions for fishing during the period of interruption, the continuance of the fish to run over the ground in abundance equal to that before the interruption, and the market price during such period. Ibid.

And to warrant the recovery of a penalty for throwing or depositing any deleterious substance into any lake or stream within the limits of the state, within the meaning of a statute entitled, "An Act for the Preservation of . . . Fish and Other Game," the quantity of deleterious substance thrown into a stream must be such as to have the effect of destroying the life, or disturbing recover damages for the alleged pollution of a water course. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. W. T. Burkhalter and Hines & Jordan for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. O'Byrne, Hartridge, & Wright and H. H. Elder's for defendant in error.

Holden, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff brought suit against the defendant for damages, making, among others, substantially the following allegations: Defendant is engaged in the business of extracting from wood, at its plant, "rosin, turpentine, creosote, etc., including all the poisonous gases and chemicals contained in pine wood." From an artesian well the defendant pumps everyday thousands of gallons of water, which is discharged into a ditch used to convey the water into Cedar creek. "The said poisonous gases and chemicals extracted from the said wood contaminate the said artesian water, as used and discharged from further service in said plant, and let flow by said defendant into a ditch and over lands and on into Cedar creek." Cedar creek runs through a described track of land of 1,000 acres, more or less, owned by the plaintiff, and is "especially adapted for fishing and water for the stock of petitioner." Prior the habits, of fish in some degree. Cartwright v. Canandaigua Gaslight Co. 32 Hun, 403.

In Oldaker v. Hunt, 31 Eng. L. & Eq. Rep. 503, 6 DeG. M. & G. 376, 1 Jur. N. S. 785, L. R. 3 Eq. 671, 3 Week. Rep. 296, affirming 19 Beav. 485, the court, while not deciding, the question, entertained serious doubt whether a right of fishery created by lease was "land," within the meaning of a statute providing that nothing in its authorization of the turning of sewerage into such places as might be fit or necessary should be construed to authorize the injury of any stream in which the owner of any "lands" should be interested, without his consent.

The lessee, in pursuance of statutory authority, of shellfish grounds in public waters, does not, by depositing shellfish thereon, abandon possession thereof, and he is entitled to recover from a manufacturer who causes damage to the shellfish and grounds by the pollution of the water. Payne v. Providence Gas Co. 31 R. I. 295, 77 Atl. 145.

So the owner of shellfish on beds leased to him by the state fish commissioners in pursuance of statutory authority is entitled to an injunction against a municipality, and to recover from it damages for the destruction of his crop of shellfish, which were killed by sewage flowing upon the bed as a result of the negligent manner in which the municipality repaired its sewers after a break had occurred therein. Bailey v. New York, 38 Misc. 641, 78 N. Y. Supp. 210.

It was held in Huffmire v. Brooklyn, 162 N. Y. 584, 48 L.R.A. 421, 57 N. E. 176, that the destruction of oysters by the casting of sewage upon them, though the sewer was constructed by a city under legislative authority, was as clearly a taking of the property of the owner of the oyster bed, for which he had a constitutional right to compensation, as if there had been a physical removal and conversion of the oysters.

And in Foster v. Warblington, [1906] 1 K. B. 648, 75 L. J. K. B. N. S. 514, 70 J. P. 233, 54 Week. Rep. 575, 94 L. T. N. S. 876, 22 Times L. R. 421, 4 L. G. R. 735, it was held that the owner of oyster ponds on the fore shore of a creek in a harbor was entitled to recover damages from a municipality which injured the oysters by increasing the flow of its sewage into the creek. To the same effect is Hobart v. Southend-on-Sea Corp. (1906) 75 L. J. K. B. N. S. 305, 70 J. P. 192, 54 Week. Rep. 454, 94 L. T. N. S. 337, 22 Times L. R. 307, 4 L. G. R. 757.

If one pollutes a stream leading to a private fish preserve upon the land of another, he is liable in damages for consequent injury to the fish. Smith v. Cranford, 84 Hun, 318, 32 N. Y. Supp. 375.

So, declaring that, while a landowner had no property in the waters of a stream as it passed through his land, he had a right to its use, the court in Seaman v. Lee, 10 Hun, 607, held that where he constructed ponds upon his land along the line of the stream for the purpose of propagating trout, he was entitled to enjoin an adjoining owner from fouling the stream, and to recover damages for trout killed by the pollution.

In Fischer v. Missouri P. R. Co. 135 Mo. App. 37, 115 S. W. 477, where the court enjoined as a nuisance the pollution of an artificial lake on the plaintiff's premises, by the casting of oil and shop refuse into a ravine leading to the stream, it was held that damages were recoverable upon the basis of a restoration of the property to its original condition, and that they should include, among other things, the cost of restocking the lake with fish, as well as the loss of income derived from letting fishing privileges to others for compensation.

For a general treatment of the question of the right to fish, see the note in 60 L.R.A. 481.

On governmental control over right of fishery, see the note in 39 L.R.A. 581.

See also the note on injunctions to restrain trespass upon or interference with oyster beds, in 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 205; the note on injunction against fishing in navigable waters, or against interference therewith, in 17 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1236; the note in the effect of license to plant shellfish, in 6 L.R.A.(N.S.) 247; and the note on the extension of fishing regulations to private beds, in 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 869.

L. A. W.

to the conduct of the defendant complained of, the plaintiff had fenced this tract of land. "Your petitioner is a sheep owner and stock raiser, and had this pasture especially prepared for his stock, consisting of sheep, cattle, hogs, goats, etc.; that their dependence for water was in said creek. Petitioner alleges, and shows to the court, that the said poisonous waters from defendant's plant has already destroyed all the fish in said stream; that your petitioner has no way to water his said stock in said pasture, because the said waters in the said creek have been poisoned by the said defendant.

. . . Your petitioner shows to the court that the said contaminated, poisonous waters kills vegetation and some trees." "That the said tract of land has been further damaged by the said poisonous waters, in the opinion of this plaintiff, by the said waters killing some of the small growth and timber and grasses growing thereon," and an offensive odor comes from the stream. Other allegations of the petition will be hereinafter stated. To the order of the court sustaining the general and special demurrers of the defendant, and dismissing the petition, the plaintiff excepted.

1. While the petition was subject to some of the grounds of special demurrer, as will be hereinafter pointed out, we do not think it was subject to general demurrer. Civil Code 1895, § 3879, provides: "The owner of land is entitled to the free and exclusive enjoyment of all water courses, not navigable, flowing over his land; and the diverting of the stream, . . . or the adulterating thereof, so as to interfere with its value to him, is a trespass upon his property." Section 3057 provides: "Running water, while on land, belongs to the owner of it, but he has no power to divert it from the usual channel, nor can he so use or adulterate it as to interfere with the enjoyment of it by the next owner." And § 3061 is as follows: "The owner of a stream not navigable is entitled to the same exclusive possession thereof as he has of any other part of his land; and the legislature has no power to compel or interfere with him in its lawful use, for the benefit of those above or below him on the stream, except to restrain nuisances." A private nuisance gives a right of action to the person injured thereby, and the fact that the act may be otherwise lawful does not keep it from being a nuisance. See Civil Code 1895, §§ 3858-3861. Any unlawful interference by one with the enjoyment by another of his private property gives a cause of action. Civil Code 1895, § 3874. In 2 Farnham on Waters, § 462, pp. 1565, 1566, it is said: "The right to have a natural water course continue its physical existence upon one's property is as much property as is the right to have the hills or forests remain in place. . . . Such flow and use belong to the land through which it passes, as an incident, convenience, or easement, which inseparably connects itself therewith as a part thereof, and frequently gives or adds value thereto; and is a private property right in the proprietor thereof, within the protection of the constitutional provision that private property shall be forever held inviolate, subject to the public welfare, and shall not be taken for public use without compensation being first made. The property, therefore, consists, not in the water itself, but in the added value which the stream gives to the land through which it flows. This is made up of the power which may be obtained from the flow of the stream, from the increased fertility of the adjoining fields because of the presence of the water, and of the value of the water for the uses to which it may be put. The right to the continued existence of these conditions is property, to protect which the owner may resort to any or all the instrumentalities which may be employed for the protection of private property rights." According to the allegations of the petition, the defendant, in the operation of its plant, was continuously adulterating the waters of the stream passing through the land of the plaintiff, and the plaintiff was entitled to recover whatever damages he sustained by reason thereof. Horton v. Fulton, 130 Ga. 466, 60 S. E. 1059; Satterfield v. Rowan, 83 Ga. 187, 9 S. E. 677; Price v. High Shoals Mfg. Co. 132 Ga. 246, 22 L.R.A.(N.S.) 684, 64 S. E. 87; Parker v. American Woolen Co. 105 Mass. 591, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 584, 81 N. E. 468; H. B. Bowling Coal Co. v. Ruffner, 117 Tenn. 180, 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 923, 100 S. W. 116, 10 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 581. There was an illegal invasion of the property rights of the plaintiff, and he was entitled to recover nominal damages, if he sustained no special damages. Price v. High Shoals Mfg. Co. supra.

2. The pollution of a stream by one riparian owner, so as to pollute the water as it passes through the land of a lower riparian owner, gives a right of action to the latter. If no measure of damages is furnished beyond the mere commission of the tort, nominal damages may be recovered. In the present case there is no allegation of diminution of market value of the land, or of its rental value. The only suggestion in that direction is an allegation that the plaintiff has been damaged in being deprived of the use of his pasture at least $100 a year. This is not a sufficient allegation as to rental value. The plaintiff relies upon items of special damages sought to be set up by him. One of these is comprised in allegations to the effect that the fish in the creek which passes through the plaintiff's land, down to its mouth at the river, had been totally destroyed, and that the fish in the river had been practically destroyed; also, that the plaintiff had been deprived of his fishing privileges in the creek passing through his land, which he had enjoyed all his life, and which had been valuable to him; and that thereby he had been damaged in the sum of $300. This allegation also states that the privilege was valuable to him, his family, and his settlement. Of course, the statements of value to his family and his settlement are wholly irrelevant, and furnish no ground for recovery. The allegation is also imperfect in not distinctly alleging the value of the fishing privilege owned by the plaintiff; but the demurrer does not rest on either of these last two points. While, therefore, the allegation is imperfect, it amounts to a statement that the plaintiff owned a fishing privilege in the creek passing through his land, which had a pecuniary value; that this had been destroyed by the conduct of the defendant; and that the plaintiff had been damaged in the sum of $300. Game running wild upon the plaintiff's land is not owned absolutely by him, and fish swimming in a stream running through his land are not his absolute property. He cannot recover the value of fish destroyed in the stream, or game killed on the land, by reason of the pollution of the stream, but a fishing privilege shown to have a pecuniary value is a property right, for the destruction of which damages are recoverable. As against the demurrer filed, it was error to strike the allegations on the subject of the plaintiff's fishing privilege and its destruction or injury by the defendant. As the plaintiff alleged an injury to his fishing privilege of pecuniary value, the allegation that the fish in the stream on his land were destroyed should not have been stricken. See, in this connection, 9 Cyc. Law & Proc. pp. 988-991, 1000; 23 Am. Dig. Century ed., "Fish," § 11. There was no allegation that there was any injury to or destruction of plaintiff's hunting privileges of any pecuniary value, and the allegation that game was destroyed should have been stricken. The demurrer admitted the facts alleged for the purpose of the argument. What the evidence may show will develop on the trial.

3. The petition also alleged: "Your petitioner shows that he has been actually damaged the cost of building his said pasture fence around the said 1,000 acres of land in the sum of $500, or some other large sum. Your petitioner further shows that, in addition to this damage, he has been damaged in being deprived of the use of said pasture at least $100 a year, and this damage is a continuous one; that the said damage in being deprived of the use of said pasture will amount to at least $1,500." The demurrer to this paragraph should have been sustained, as the damages alleged were not such as were recoverable. The measure of his damages would not be the expense he incurred in building a pasture fence, as the pasture fence was not destroyed or injured by the pollution of the stream, nor would his measure of damages be the actual value of the pasture to him during any period. If, by reason of the conduct of the defendant in polluting the stream, the land was rendered unfit or less valuable for use as a pasture, or other purposes for which it was adapted, with the stream running through it unpolluted, in the absence of other items of special damages, the measure of damages of the owner would be the diminution in the market value of the property, if the injury was of a permanent nature, or the diminution in the rental value, if the injury was of a temporary nature. See Muncie Pulp Co. v. Keesling, 166 Ind. 479, 76 N. E. 1002, 9 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 530, and authorities cited in the note on page 534. It is also alleged "that the evaporation of the said waters from the said creek contaminated by the said poisonous gases and chemicals give out an odor in vapor when said stream is drying, or the waters evaporating, that is indeed offensive. Your petitioner shows to the court that the said contaminated poisonous waters kill vegetation and some trees." These allegations were too general in their nature, and were properly stricken on special demurrer. The petition further alleged: "Your petitioner shows that the said defendant operates its plant on Sunday in disregard of the laws of God and man, and setting an example to the said town of Collins to the injury of the morals and good citizenship of the inhabitants of that community, and especially the young boys therein." The demurrer to this allegation on the ground that it was irrelevant, and set up no liability "as against this defendant in favor of said plaintiff," should have been sustained. The fact that the conduct of the defendant operates "to the injury of the morals and good citizenship of that community, and especially the young boys therein," however reprehensible from a moral standpoint, gave to the plaintiff no legal right to damages because of such conduct, nor did the facts alleged illustrate any question involved in the case.

33 L.R.A.(N.S.)

The allegation that the plaintiff was entitled to punitive and exemplary damages because of the destruction of the fish in the stream should have been stricken on demurrer, as there were no allegations in the petition entitling the plaintiff to recover damages of this nature.

The petition alleged: "Your petitioner further alleges and shows that the said defendant first turned its said poisonous waters down alongside the Seaboard Air-Line right of way, and got into trouble by reason of the injury they were doing said parties, and the said defendant changed its said poisonous waste waters into Cedar creek to avoid the trouble damages they had incurred on themselves by turning water down alongside the said Seaboard Air-Line Railway. Your petitioner shows that the said defendant has no regard for the rights of other folks or the welfare of the people, and especially your petitioner." These allegations were demurred to on the ground that they were irrelevant, and the demurrer should have been sustained. Proof of these allegations would give the plaintiff no right to damages, and would illustrate no question involved in the case.

The third paragraph of the petition was not subject to the demurrer filed thereto. The thirteenth paragraph of the petition was subject to the demurrer filed thereto, and should have been stricken.

Judgment reversed.

All the Justices concur.

MASSACHUSETTS SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

OTTO FLEISCHNER

v.

CHARLES E. DURGIN.

(207 Mass. 435, 93 N. E. 801.)

Master — driver of automobile — Liability.

The owner of an automobile, who employs a chauffeur to take the car from the garage to a repair shop, is not liable for injury inflicted upon a stranger by his negligent handling of the car while he has gone on an errand of his own, requiring a journey six or seven times as long as was required by his employment, to a crowded part of a city, although, at the time of the injury, he was returning towards his original destination.

(January 5, 1911.)

EXCEPTIONS by plaintiff to rulings of the Superior Court for Middlesex County, made during the trial of an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by the negligence of defendant's servant, which resulted in a verdict in defendant's favor. Overruled.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Henry W. Beal for plaintiff.

Messrs. Bates, Nay, & Abbott and Robert E. Buffum for defendant.

Rugg, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff, while in the exercise of due care, and traveling on Dartmouth street opposite the Public Library, in Boston, was injured by the negligence of one Freeman, who was driving the defendant's motor car. Freeman was not in the general employ of the defendant, but on the day in question had been asked by him to drive the car from the Stevens garage in Winchester street, in the town of Brookline, to the shop of one Burlingame, on Aspinwall avenue, also in Brookline, and less than a mile away, for some repair. Late in the day, Freeman took the car, drove first to Coolidge Corner, a square in Brookline, not on the way to the Burlingame shop, where he had lunch. Then with a friend he drove the car about 6 miles further out of the way from the garage to the Burlingame shop, to a shop in Stanhope street, in Boston, for the purpose of getting a chain for his own uses. He had started to return to Brookline, and was bound for the Burlingame shop, when the accident occurred. The defendant gave no directions to go to Coolidge Corner or to Boston, and this ride was taken without

Note. — Liability of owner for injuries caused by automobile while being used by servant for his own business or pleasure.

The earlier decisions upon the question here considered are dealt with in the notes to Christy v. Elliott, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 215; Hayes v. Wilkins, 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1035; Jones v. Hoge, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 216; 3 L.R.A.(N.S.)

Danforth v. Fisher, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 93; Steffen v. McNaughton, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 382. The present note covers only the cases arising subsequently to the writing of those notes.

Where a city salesman is furnished an automobile for business use only, and is instructed to leave it at a garage, his employer is not liable for an injury occurring while the salesman, without the employers' his knowledge. Freeman had worked at the Stevens garage where the defendant kept his motor car, and once before had driven it to Boston, but under what circumstances does not appear.

The principles which govern the rights of the parties are settled. The master is liable for the act of a servant in charge of his vehicle when the latter is acting in the main with the master's express or implied authority, upon his business, and in the course of the employment, for the purpose of doing the work for which he is engaged. The master is not liable if the servant has abandoned his obligations, and is doing something not in compliance with the express or implied authority given, and is not acting in pursuance of the general purpose of his occupation, or in connection with the doing of the master's work. Under this rule the employer has been held responsible for wrongs done to third persons by his driver during incidental departures from the scope of the authority conferred by the employment, and upon comparatively insignificant deviations from direct routes of travel, but within the general penumbra of the duty for which he is engaged. Hayes v. Wilkins, 194 Mass. 223, 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1033, 120 Am. St. Rep. 549, 80 N. E. 449. The employment of Freeman was limited to a specific and short trip within a town. He took the car several miles out of the way, which was six or seven times as far as he had a right to go, to a crowded part of a large city, on an errand wholly of his own, and had only just commenced to return at the time the act occurred for which damages are sought in this action. He was acting in disregard of his instructions, and wholly outside his employment, and for a purpose having no relation, even remote, to the business of the master. The extent of the excursion which he undertook on his own account was so disproportionate to the length of the route he was authorized to go that it cannot be minimized to a deviation. It was in fact the chief journey. There is nothing to indicate that the defendant had any hint or ground for suspicion of this unwarranted use of his property. Under such circumstances he cannot be held liable. McCarthy v. Timmins, 178 Mass. 378, 86 Am. St. Rep. 490, 59 N. E. 1038; Storey v. Ashton, L. R. 4 Q. B. 476, 10 Best & S. 337, 38 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 223, 17 Week. Rep. 727; Mitchell v. Crassweller, 13 C. B. 237, 22 L. J. C. P. N. S. 100, 17 Eng. Rul. Cas. 252.

Exceptions overruled.

permission, has the machine out for the purpose of going to dinner. McIntire v. Hartfelder-Garbutt, — Ga. App. —, 71 S. E. 492.

And where an automobile which is used by a company to carry its employees to their places of employment, at the time an accident occurs is being used by an officer of the company for a pleasure trip, and is not being used about the business of the company, the company cannot be held liable. Powers v. Arnold Engineering Co. 126 N. Y. Supp. 839.

And where a son who was a clerk for his father, who dealt in automobiles, among other things, on a certain day was given a holiday, the father cannot be held liable for an injury which happened while the son for his own purposes, and without the express authority of his father, was driving a machine which the father had ordered put into the garage. Reynolds v. Buck, 127 Iowa, 601, 103 N. W. 946.

And it is immaterial that the car at the time was decorated in such a way that it might in a measure advertise the father's business. Ibid.

So, where a chauffeur has been instructed not to use a car without the owner's express orders, except for the purpose of going to his meals, and an accident occurs while he has the machine out with his companions, without the owner's consent, for 33 L.R.A.(N.S.)

the purpose, as the chauffeur testified, of taking a package to the laundry and getting a shave, neither of which he did, the evidence is insufficient to show that the chauffeur was acting in his employer's business, or within the scope of his employment. Douglass v. Hewson, 127 N. Y. Supp. 220.

And the mere fact that the owner of a car consents to the chauffeur's using it does not render him liable for an injury occurring while the car is being used by the chauffeur. Ibid.

The owner of a car, however, is liable for an injury done thereby, where, at the time, it was being run by one who was taking care of the car in return for the owner's teaching him to run it, although such person was, at the time, in the employ any pay of another person. Irwin v. Judge, 81 Conn. 492, 71 Atl. 572.

And an owner of a car is liable for an injury occurring while the car was being used by his minor son, who acts as chauffeur for the family, for his own pleasure, and with his father's consent, since the car was being used within the scope of the family uses for which it was kept. Daily v. Maxwell, — Mo. App. —, 133 S. W. 351.

For a note on liability of owner of automobile for negligence of borrower or hirer, see note to Hartley v. Miller, post, 81.

J. T. W.

MICHIGAN SUPREME COURT.

WILLIAM HARTLEY, Plff. in Err.,

v.

FRANK P. MILLER et al.

(— Mich. —, 130 N. W. 336.)

Automobile — loan — injury — liability of owner.

The owner of an automobile is not liable on the theory that it is a dangerous machine, for its negligent use to the injury of a stranger by one to whom he had loaned it and who was in complete control of its operation, although the owner is, at the time of the accident, present in the machine as a guest.

(March 13, 1911.)

Note. — Liability of owner for negligence of borrower or hirer of automobile.

This note does not include cases where the automobile had been borrowed or hired by the owner's servant. Cases passing upon that question are gathered in the notes to Christy v. Elliott, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 215; Hayes v. Wilkins, 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1035; Jones v. Hoge, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 216; Danforth v. Fisher, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 93; Steffen v. McNaughton, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 382; and Fleischner v. Durgin, ante, 79.

It may be stated that generally where the owner of an automobile merely lends or hires it out to another without more, he will not be liable for damage resulting from its use while under the control of the borrower or hirer.

Thus where two persons each own automobiles and have a mutual understanding whereby they use each other's car interchangeably, securing a chauffeur from a third party, the owner of one car is not liable for an injury which happens while the other has it out under such agreement, and while it is being operated by the chauffeur, hired by the latter. Freibaum v. Brady, 128 N. Y. Supp. 121. The court said: "There is nothing in the record to sustain the finding of the jury that the chauffeur, at the time the accident occurred, was acting as an employee of the defendant. The defendant did not employ, pay, direct, or control him in any way; in fact, he did not know that his car was being used at the time. His only connection with the accident was the fact that he owned the car and permitted his brother to use it. I know of no principle upon which, under such circumstances, he can be held liable; on the contrary, the authorities already cited are the other way. But, even if it be assumed that the chauffeur was employed and paid by the defendant, I do not think that would make him liable. The arrangement simply amounted to the loaning of the car with the driver, to the brother for his own use and purposes. The defendant would not be chargeable with the negligence of 33 L.R.A.(N.S.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Wayne County to review a judgment in favor of defendant Miller in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries for which he was alleged to be responsible. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. McHugh & Gallagher for plaintiff in error.

Mr. Albert McClatchey, for defendant in error:

No liability attaches to the owner of an automobile for the negligence of a person to whom it is loaned.

Doran v. Thomsen, 74 N. J. L. 445, 66 Atl. 897; Cunningham v. Castle, 127 App. Div. 580, 111 N. Y. Supp. 1057; Jones v. Hoge, 47 Wash. 663, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 216, the driver while thus running the car, for the reasons stated by Lord Cockburn in Rourke v. White Moss Colliery Co. L. R. 2 C. P. Div. 205, as follows: "When one person lends his servant to another for a particular employment, the servant, for anything done in that particular employment, must be dealt with as the servant of the man to whom he is lent, although he remains the general servant of the person who lent him."

To the same effect is Parsons v. Wisner, 113 N. Y. Supp. 922.

And where the owner or person in possession of an automobile merely permits another to use it, no relation of principal and agent is established such as renders the owner liable for an injury resulting from the other's negligent use of the machine. Lewis v. Amorous, 3 Ga. App. 50, 59 S. E. 338.

So, where a car is taken from the garage at which the owner left it, without the latter's knowledge, by one old enough to be responsible in the eyes of the law, the owner is not liable for a negligent homicide which occurs while the car is being operated by the person taking it. Ibid.

And where the twenty-year old son of the owner of an automobile is permitted to drive the car whenever he wishes, the owner is not liable for any injury resulting while his son has the car out for his own purposes, without the father's consent. Maher v. Benedict, 123 App. Div. 579, 108 N. Y. Supp. 228.

And where a father buys an automobile for the use of his family, and when he was at home his daughter had to ask permission to use it but when absent she used it without his permission, she is not his agent or servant where she takes it without his permission for her own pleasure, and he is not liable for an injury resulting from such use. Doran v. Thomsen, 76 N. J. L. 754, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 335, 131 Am. St. Rep. 677, 71 Atl. 296.

So, the mere fact that a chauffeur in taking out his master's automobile in obedience to a command of the master's family, for the entertainment of friends and guests of 125 Am. St. Rep. 915, 92 Pac. 433; Clark v. Buckmobile Co. 107 App. Div. 120, 94 N. Y. Supp. 771; Slater v. Advance Thresher Co. 97 Minn. 305, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 598, 107 N. W. 133; Indiana Springs Co. v. Brown, 165 Ind. 465, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 238, 74 N. E. 615, 6 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 656; Herlihy v. Smith, 116 Mass. 265; Christy v. Elliott, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 233, and note, 216 Ill. 31, 108 Am. St. Rep. 196, 74 N. E. 1035, 3 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 487; Wright v. Big Rapids Door & Blind Mfg. Co. 124 Mich. 91, 50 L.R.A. 495, 82 N. W. 829.

Stone, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This case is before us upon a case-made after judgment.

It appears that the plaintiff was a street car conductor in the employ of the D. U. R. in the city of Detroit. On Sunday, May 24, 1908, about 3:45 P. M., he was engaged in his duties as conductor on a Fourteenth avenue car, running east on Henry street from Grand River avenue to Cass avenue.

the family, disobeys the master's command not to take out the car unless the master accompanies it, does not show that he is acting outside the scope of his employment so as to relieve the master from liability for injury done by the negligent handling of the car. Moon v. Matthews, 227 Pa. 488, 29 L.R.A.(N.S.) 856, 136 Am. St. Rep. 902, 76 Atl. 219.

And where the owner of an automobile retained his chauffeur during a European trip, and an accident occurred while the machine was being driven by the chauffeur at the instance of the owner's married daughter, who had been accustomed, before her father's departure, to use the car, and who during his absence was an inmate of his household, it was held that the owner contemplated that his daughter should use the machine during his absence, and that the chauffeur was acting in the course of his employment in responding to her call, and that the owner was therefore liable for the damage resulting from the accident. Winfrey v. Lazarus, 148 Mo. App. 388, 128 S. W. 276.

In Simeone v. Lindsay, 6 Penn. (Del.) 224, 65 Atl. 778, the court in instructing the jury said: "If the automobile at the time of the accident was entirely operated and controlled by someone other than the defendant, the plaintiff could not recover. It is not, however, necessary that the defendant should have been the owner of the automobile, because if you believe that he had at the time of the accident control of the machine so as to be able to govern its management or operation, any negligence in operating the machine would be the negligence of the defendant."

And one who delivers an automobile to another under an agreement that the latter is to use it for hire and pay the purchase price to the first party out of the receipts is not liable for an injury resulting while it was being used by the purchaser, there being no relation of master and servant between the parties. Braverman v. Hart, 105 N. Y. Supp. 107.

The car was an open one with a running board on the right-hand side. The plaintiff was standing on this running board, collecting fares. The defendant Frank P. Miller, at this time was the owner of an automobile. On the night preceding the day in question the defendant August Lootens visited said Miller at his home and asked for the loan of his automobile on the succeeding day. Miller consented to let Lootens have the automobile on the following day. Accordingly, between 2 and 3 o'clock P. M., Lootens called at Miller's home for the automobile, and on his (Lootens') invitation, Miller entered the auto and rode to his (Lootens') home, Lootens operating the machine; and when they arrived there, Lootens and his company insisted upon Miller's accompanying them on the ride, and Miller finally acceded to their invitation and went with them. There were two front seats in the automobile. Lootens sat on the right-hand side, in the driver's seat, and operated the machine. Miller occupied the other front seat. It is admitted

But where the owner of an automobile rents it with a chauffeur for a certain time for a given price, he is liable for an injury resulting from the chauffeur's negligence, although the latter is bound to obey the orders of the hirer as to when and where to drive. Shepard v. Jacobs, 204 Mass. 110, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 442, 134 Am. St. Rep. 648, 90 N. E. 392.

And a company which hires electric vans for the purpose of delivering its express packages is not liable for an injury inflicted by a van operated by a chauffeur furnished by the bailor, either while on her way home for repairs, or while on the way to lunch, the injury appearing to have resulted from a defect in the steering gear, and the chauffeur not being a servant of the express company. Bohan v. Metropolitan Exp. Co. 122 App. Div. 590, 107 N. Y. Supp. 530.

Where there is a conflict upon the question of whether the operator of an automobile had hired it of the owner for his own use or whether he was acting as an employee of the owner, they are questions of fact for the jury, and their findings are conclusive. Ottomeier v. Hornburg, 50 Wash. 316, 97 Pac. 235.

The question of who is responsible for acts of a driver furnished with hired vehicle is covered in notes in 13 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1122, and 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 33. See also note to Burns v. Michigan Paint Co. 16 L.R.A.(N.S.) 816, on "Cartman as an independent contractor."

J. T. W.

that Miller had loaned the machine to Lootens; that he (Miller) accompanied the party on Lootens' invitation, and as Lootens' guest, and that Miller did not in any way participate in the operation or control of the automobile. Lootens had had considerable experience in the operation of automobiles, though he had never driven this particular machine before the day of the accident. After leaving Lootens' home, the party started on the drive, and finally reached Second avenue, and proceeded north along that thoroughfare toward Henry street, and came into collision with the motor car on which plaintiff was employed, striking him, at the corner of Second avenue and Henry street. There was some dispute as to the manner of, and responsibility for, the accident, but it is not material to the question presented here. When the testimony had been submitted, defendant Miller moved the court to direct a verdict of no cause of action as to him, on the ground that the evidence showed that at the time of the accident the automobile had been loaned by defendant Miller to defendant Lootens, and that the latter was at such time in actual, active control and operation of the automobile in his own behalf, and was not in any way operating the same as the agent or employee of the defendant Miller; that defendant Miller was, at the time of the accident, a mere guest in the automobile, and not in any way responsible for its operation or control. This motion was granted, and a verdict and judgment were entered for defendant Miller, and the case proceeded to a verdict and judgment against defendant Lootens in favor of the plaintiff. The plaintiff has appealed, and assigns error in granting defendant Miller's motion, and in directing a verdict of no cause of action as to defendant Miller.

It will be noticed that there is nothing in the record to show that Miller had ever operated the auto, or that he could operate it, or that he had any greater knowledge or skill than Lootens possessed as to its operation.

It should be borne in mind that the alleged cause of action arose before the statute of 1909, regulating motor vehicles, was enacted.

It is the contention of the plaintiff that, because defendant Miller was present and the machine was being used with his consent at the time of the injury complained of, he is liable; that an automobile being a dangerous machine, its owner should be held responsible for the manner in which it is used. It is the claim of defendant Miller that it is understood that the automobile had passed into the possession and control of defendant Lootens for the day, and that Miller did not have the right or authority to dictate or direct the manner in which the automobile should be operated; that it was as much in the control of Lootens for that day as it would have been had he been the absolute owner thereof; that an automobile is not a dangerous instrumentality, and under such circumstances there is no theory upon which Miller could be held liable for the negligence of Lootens. In our opinion this claim of defendant Miller is supported by the great weight of authority.

Doran v. Thomsen, 74 N. J. L. 445, 66 Atl. 897, is a leading case upon this subject. It was there held that the owner of a motor vehicle is not liable for an injury caused by the negligent driving of a borrower, if it was not used at the time in the owner's business. A number of cases are there cited, including Herlihy v. Smith, 116 Mass. 265. See also Cunningham v. Castle, 127 App. Div. 580, 111 N. Y. Supp. 1057, decided in 1908, where the same rule is applied, and where the authorities are reviewed at length.

The general proposition as to the responsibility for a tort is stated by Andrews, J., in King v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 66 N. Y. 181, 23 Am. Rep. 37, as follows: "Where one person has sustained an injury from the negligence of another, he must, in general, proceed against him by whose negligence the injury was occasioned. If, however, the negligence which caused the injury was that of a servant while engaged in his master's business, the person sustaining the injury may disregard the immediate author of the mischief and hold the master responsible for the damages sustained."

In Wyllie v. Palmer, 137 N. Y. 248, 19 L.R.A. 285, 33 N. E. 381, it was held that the doctrine of respondeat superior applies only when the relation of master and servant is shown to exist between the wrongdoer and the person sought to be charged for the result of some neglect or wrong at the time, and in respect to the very transaction out of which the injury arose. The following cases are also in point: Jones v. Hoge, 47 Wash. 663, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 216, 125 Am. St. Rep. 915, 92 Pac. 433; Slater v. Advance Thresher Co. 97 Minn. 305, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 598, 107 N. W. 133; Lotz v. Hanlon, 217 Pa. 339, 66 Atl. 525, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 202, 118 Am. St. Rep. 922, 10 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 731, and note; Reynolds v. Buck, 127 Iowa, 601, 103 N. W. 946.

The case is governed by the general rules of law governing the relation of master and servant, or principal and agent. The rule of law applicable to the care and protection of dangerous instrumentalities does not apply. Cunningham v. Castle, 127 App. Div. 580, 111 N. Y. Supp. 1057; Jones v. Hoge, 47 Wash. 663, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 216, 125 Am. St. Rep. 915, 92 Pac. 433.

Our examination has shown that the courts of last resort in all parts of the United States have, without exception, held that, in the absence of statutory liability, the owners of automobiles were not liable for the negligence of a borrower, where the machine was not used in the master's business. Counsel for plaintiff has cited the case of Ingraham v. Stockamore, in the supreme court of New York, reported in 63 Misc. 114, 118 N. Y. Supp. 399, in support of his position. This is not a court of last resort, and it stands alone in holding that, an automobile being a dangerous machine, its owner should be held responsible for the manner in which it is used, and that his liability should extend to its use by anyone with his consent. We do not understand this to be the law in any state, in the absence of statutory enactment.

We are of opinion that the circuit judge did not err in directing a verdict for the defendant Miller for the reasons stated by him, and the judgment below is affirmed.

MICHIGAN SUPREME COURT.

EDMUND L. EBERT, Appt.,
v.

JAMES H. CULLEN.

(— Mich. —, 130 N. W. 185.)

Statute of frauds — receipt for payment — sufficiency of contract.

Failure to mention the time for paying the balance of the purchase money in a receipt for a part payment towards the purchase price of real estate renders the receipt insufficient as a contract under the statute of frauds.

(March 13, 1911.)

Note. — Statute of frauds: necessity of specifying time of payment of purchase price in contract or memorandum for the sale of real property.

The decided weight of authority supports the rule that such an essential term as the time of payment of the purchase price must be stated in the contract or memorandum in order to render the contract enforceable as against a plea of the statute of frauds. A few cases, however, are to the effect that if the contract is entirely silent as to when the purchase money is to be paid a sale for cash will be presumed. But if the writings show a credit, even the 33 L.R.A.(N.S.)

APPEAL by complainant from an order of the Circuit Court for Wayne County, in Chancery, sustaining a demurrer and dismissing a bill filed to enforce specific performance of an agreement to sell certain lands. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Denton Guinness, for complainant:

The contract is sufficient under the statute to bind defendant.

Webster v. Brown, 67 Mich. 328, 34 N. W. 676; Browne, Stat. Fr. § 384; Reed, Stat. Fr. § 400; Fry, Spec. Perf. § 221, p. 16; Pomeroy, Spec. Perf. § 91, p. 133; 9 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 204; Atwood v. Cobb, 16 Pick. 227, 26 Am. Dec. 657; Hall v. Misenheimer, 137 N. C. 183, 107 Am. St. Rep. 474, 49 S. E. 104; Ellett v. Britton, 10 Tex. 212.

Messrs. Cullen, Casgrain, & Hanley for appellee.

Brooke, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Complainant filed his bill of complaint to enforce specific performance of an agreement to sell certain lands. The agreement is as follows:

Detroit, Mich.,

March 14, 1910.

Received of E. L. Ebert twenty-five dollars on sale to him or principal of the 2 feet N. E. cor. of Trowbridge and John R. price five hundred dollars.

[Signed] Jas. H. Cullen.

Defendant interposed a demurrer upon the following grounds: "(1) Because the alleged contract to sell, set up in complainant's bill, is not sufficient, under the statutes of the state of Michigan, to bind defendant to make the sale. (2) Because said bill of complaint is brought against James H. Cullen, trustee, and the alleged contract of sale therein contained is signed by James H. Cullen. (3) Because the said latter class of cases, in general, support the majority rule.

The salient terms of the statutes involved have been set out where given in the cases.

In Camp v. Moreman, 84 Ky. 635, 2 S. W. 179, where the statute provides that any contract for the sale of real estate or some note or memorandum thereof must be in writing, but that "the consideration need not be expressed in the writing," it was held that a memorandum for the sale of land need not express either the amount of the consideration or the time of payment, the court saying that the purpose of the statute, viz., to prevent the fee-simple title of land from passing by mere parol, was accombill does not show that the complainant has any interest in the subject thereof." From an order sustaining the demurrer, and dismissing the bill, complainant appeals.

Defendant urged in the lower court, and rests in this court, that this case is ruled by the decision in Gault v. Stormont, 51 Mich. 636, 17 N. W. 214. The alleged contract there considered was nearly identical with the one in the case at bar. It read:

Wyandotte,
April 26, 1881.

Received from George Stormont the sum of seventy-five dollars as part of the principal of ten hundred and fifty dollars on sale of my house and two lots on corner of Superior and Second streets in this city.

David Gault.

Witness: C. W. Thomas.

Commenting upon this agreement, Mr. Justice Cooley, speaking for the court, said: "There was no written evidence of the sale of the lots, except the receipt, which was given for the $75, and that was insufficient to answer the requirements of the statute of frauds; for, though it specified the purchase price, it failed to express the time or times of payment, and there is no known or recognized custom to fix what is thus left undetermined. A memorandum, to be sufficient under the statute, must be complete in itself, and leave nothing to rest in parol,"—citing cases. This case was cited and approved in Webster v. Brown, 67 Mich. 328, 34 N. W. 676, and in Dayton v. Stone, 111 Mich. 196, 69 N. W. 515, and was examined and distinguished without criticism in Ryan v. United States, 136 U. S. 68, 34 L. ed. 447, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 913.

Complainant contends, in effect, that we should overrule Gault v. Stormont. It is not apparent why this should be done. The cases of Munro v. Edwards, 86 Mich. 91, 48 N. W. 689; Proctor v. Plumer, 112 Mich. 393, 70 N. W. 1028; Campbell v. Davidson-Martin Mfg. Co. 126 Mich. 468, 85 N. W. 1093; Mull v. Smith, 132 Mich. 618, 94 N. W. 183, and Miller v. Smith, 140 Mich. 524, 103 N. W. 872, cited and relied upon by complainant, have been examined. They do not, in our opinion, modify or cast any doubt upon the correctness of the rule laid down in Gault v. Stormont.

The decree is affirmed.

ished when the land sold was sufficiently described in the writing to enable the conveyance to be decreed without resort to parol evidence for that purpose, and that those opinions to the effect that the entire contract must be set forth so as to enable the court to enforce its terms without the aid of parol proof do not conform to the correct rule.

And in Ellis v. Bray, 79 Mo. 227, a memorandum which merely acknowledged the receipt of a certain sum to apply on the purchase money on certain described lands was held sufficient under the statute of frauds, it being said that where a written memorandum, as here, does not purport to be a complete expression of the entire contract, the matter omitted might be supplied by parol, and therefore that the amount of consideration and the time or times when payable could be shown by parol. This case, however, is not good law, even in Missouri. It has been declared erroneous (Darnell v. Lafferty, 113 Mo. App. 282, 88 S. W. 784), and the general rule that the writing must contain all the essential terms of the complete contract, expressed with such a degree of certainty that they may be understood without recourse to parol, may be regarded as the accepted law of Missouri. See Ringer v. Holtzclaw, 112 Mo. 519, 20 S. W. 800; and Boyd v. Paul, 125 Mo. 9, 28 S. W. 171.

And in Texas, a memorandum, to be sufficient under a statute requiring definiteness as to parties and subject-matter, need not state consideration and time of payment, it being held that such facts may be proven by parol. Fulton v. Robinson, 55 Tex. 401.

Where the note or memorandum is entirely silent as to when or how the purchase money is to be paid, a sale for cash will be presumed, and the requirement that the terms and conditions of the contract be shown held sufficiently complied with as to payments. Eppich v. Clifford, 6 Colo. 493. And in Mull v. Smith, 132 Mich. 618, 94 N. W. 183, it was held that a memorandum of a contract of sale of land, which stated that the owner agreed to give a deed upon payment of a certain sum (which represented the balance unpaid of the purchase price), was an agreement to pay cash within a reasonable time, and sufficiently fixed the time of payment to comply with the statute of frauds. And in Ryan v. Hall, 13 Met. 520, where there was no stipulation in the memorandum for credit, and no time limited, it was held that the contract was to pay the whole amount in cash on demand, within a reasonable time. And in Smith v. Jones, 7 Leigh, 165, 30 Am. Dec. 498, where there was no time limit for paying the price, it was held that the sale was for cash, and that either party might presently or without delay insist on carrying the contract into execution. But it has been held that if the memorandum shows that the sale was upon credit, the terms of such credit must be stated. Eppich v. Clifford, 6 Colo. 493; Wood v. Midgley, 5 DeG. M. & G. 41, 2 Eq. Rep. 729, 23 L. J. Ch. N. S. 553, 2 Week. Rep. 301; Hussey v. Horne-Payne, L. R. 4 App. Cas. 311, 48 L. J. Ch. N. S. 846, 41 L. T. N. S. 1, 27 Week. Rep. 585, 6 Eng. Rul.

Cas. 155; Major v. Shepherd, 18 Manitoba L. Rep. 504.

But in Carroll v. Powell, 48 Ala. 298, a memorandum which failed to state whether the sale was for cash or on credit was held insufficient under a statute requiring the terms of the sale to be stated, it being said that it could not be presumed that the sale was for cash.

In Wright v. Weeks, 25 N. Y. 153, affirming 3 Bosw. 372, it was held that a memorandum of a sale of lands which stated the price and made it payable upon "the terms as specified," which terms were not set out in the memorandum, could not be made good, under a statute of frauds requiring the consideration to be expressed, by parol evidence of the time agreed upon for payment. The court, speaking through Denio, Ch. J., said: "It is the obvious sense of the enactment that all the material parts of such a contract should be embraced in the writing. The policy which the act is intended to enforce arose out of a distrust of oral testimony, by which it was supposed that contracts to sell land, among some other arrangements, might be falsely set up, or, when actually made, might be perverted or changed by fraud, perjury, or mistake. But if any of the material terms of the bargain could be left out of the writing and be supplied by parol, the greater part of the mischief intended to be guarded against would remain. Thus if, as in this case, the terms of payment were the only portions of the contract depending upon verbal testimony, they might be so stated as materially to diminish the value of the bargain to the vendor. . . . If a reference in a writing to a verbal agreement would let in that agreement, where the subject was one which the statute required to be in writing, it would be sufficient for parties desiring to avoid the trouble of reducing their bargains to writing, to sign a statement that they had contracted verbally respecting a given subject, and they would thus dispense with the statute." And Allen, J., in a separate opinion, said: "The statute was passed to prevent fraud and perjury, in the establishment of fictitious or misrepresented contracts: and its object can only be effected by requiring not only that the fact that such contract was made, to be evidenced by writing, but that the contract itself, the entire agreement with all its terms and conditions, shall be in writing. Fraud and perjury may be as successful and as dangerous in interpolating or misrepresenting terms and conditions, as in describing the parties or subject-matter of a contract. Hence, our statute requires the contract, or some memorandum expressing the consideration, to be in writing. It does not prescribe any particular form of words; but it does make the writing of the essence of the contract, and requires an agreement for the sale of lands to be written, and in such terms that it can be ascertained, to a moral or reasonable certainty, what the parties mean. If the agreement be vague and indefinite, so that the full im-tention of the parties cannot be collected from it, it cannot be said that the contract is in writing, and it is therefore void. . . . The contract relied upon by the plaintiff must stand or fall by itself. Construction and effect must be given to it per se, and without the aid of extrinsic evidence. There were terms upon which the conveyance was to be made, or for the payment of the purchase money, which were not stated in the memorandum; and, in order to a specific performance of the agreement, these terms are to be ascertained, and, as they cannot be spelled out from the paper writing, it follows that the agreement is void, and cannot be enforced by the court. Looking at the paper alone, we are compelled to say either that there was no perfect agreement made between the parties, or they have failed to make a perfect memorandum of it; and either view is fatal."

33 L.R.A.(N.S.)

And a similar conclusion was reached in Wood v. Midgley, 5 DeG. M. & G. 41, 1 Eq. Rep. 729, 23 L. J. Ch. N. S. 553, 2 Week Rep. 301, where "the terms [were] to be expressed in an agreement to be signed as soon as prepared." In this case, however, it was said that had the terms of the contract been concluded and had nothing remained but to reduce them to formal shape, instead of to be subsequently determined, the contract would have been enforced.

And in Queen's College v. Jayne, 10 Ont. L. Rep. 319, where the terms of the sale were not embodied in the writings, and it was known that the sale could not be for cash, but that terms of payment would have to be agreed upon, it was held that there was no enforceable contract.

And in Hussey v. Horne-Payne, L. R. App. Cas. 311, 48 L. J. Ch. N. S. 846, 4 L. T. N. S. 1, 27 Week. Rep. 585, 6 Eng. Rul. Cas. 155, where it appeared that the purchase price was to be paid in instalments which had not been agreed upon, it was held that the contract did not satisfy the statute of frauds. Here, too, it was said that had the writings stopped after naming the property, stating the price, and giving the names of the parties, it would have been implied that the purchase money was to have been paid in the usual way, namely, as soon as the title to the land could have been produced by the vendor and a conveyance offered, in which case the contract would have been complete and enforceable. But that there is no known and recognized custom by which the time of payment could be fixed when left undetermined by the contract, see Gault v. Stormont, 51 Mich. 636, 17 N. W. 214, as set out in EBERT v. CULLEN.

And in Major v. Shepherd, 18 Manitoba L. Rep. 518, it was held that specific performance of a contract evidenced by a memorandum providing that the purchase money was to be paid "as soon as a loan can be arranged" could not be had, as the contract was too indefinite, obscure, and uncertain as to time of performance. The court, after remarking that they could not make a contract, said: "Bargains concerning the sale of real estate frequently take place, which are reduced to writings that do not comply with the requirements of the law for the plain reason that some of the terms are not decided upon and must be left undefined in the written documents, which thus become merely memoranda of the agreements, to be carried out presumably in good faith, with or without further supplementary writings. For instance, the parties may agree upon the consideration, but may leave part of it payable at a future time, fixing neither the amount nor the time when payable, leaving those items to be settled by some future verbal or written agreement or adjustment. The statute of frauds has been so long in force and the decisions upon it are so multitudinous that, in the case of an incomplete contract such as this, it may be fairly and reasonably presumed that the parties designedly left it in that form without any intention of considering it more than a mere memorandum to refresh the memory or to form a basis for future agreement."

And in Nelson v. Shelby Mfg. & Improv. Co. 96 Ala. 515, 38 Am. St. Rep. 116, 11 So. 695, a memorandum acknowledging the receipt of one-third cash, and providing that bond for title would be delivered "on execution of notes for balance of purchase money," was held not to state the terms of the contract, as required by the statute of frauds, in that there was nothing to show the number of notes, when they were to be made payable, or whether they were to bear interest, and, if so, at what rate.

And in O'Donnell v. Leeman, 43 Me. 158, 69 Am. Dec. 54, a memorandum which stated that the land was sold for a specified sum, one-third cash down, but which made no reference as to when the residue was to be paid, was held insufficient as a memorandum, for failure to show all material conditions of the contract.

And in Elliot v. Barrett, 144 Mass. 256, 10 N. E. 820, a memorandum of a sale of land which contained the date of the sale, the name of the purchaser, and the price, was held insufficient in that the terms of sale (times for payment of definite amounts) were not specified.

And in the following cases it was held, without assignment of grounds, that a memorandum which does not state the time for payment is not sufficient to satisfy a statute of frauds requiring the terms of the contract to be stated in the memorandum: St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Beidler, 45 Ark. 17; Webster v. Brown, 67 Mich. 328, 34 N. W. 676; Harney v. Burhans, 91 Wis. 348, 64 N. W. 1031; Conrade v. O'Brien, 1 Pa. Super. Ct. 104; Greenlee v. Greenlee, 22 Pa. 225.

In Snow v. Nelson, 113 Fed. 353, 22 Mor. Min. Rep. 32, it was held that a memorandum of a contract of sale of mining property which leaves uncertain the time when the first payment is to be made is insufficient to take the contract out of a statute of frauds requiring it to contain the essentials of the contract, the decision being upon the ground that time is of the essence of contracts relating to the mining properties.

G. J. C.

MICHIGAN SUPREME COURT.

ANDREW T. SHERMAN, Plff. in Err.,

v.

GEORGE E. BURTON.

(— Mich. —, 130 N. W. 667.)

Physician — injured person — contract for percentage of recovery.

A contract by one injured by another's negligence, to pay his physician a percentage of the amount recovered against the one responsible for the injury, for his services in treating the injury, is against public policy and void where the parties contemplate that the physician shall be a witness for his employer in case suit is necessary.

(March 31, 1911.)

Note. — Validity of contract to pay attending physician percentage of damages recovered for personal injury.

In the earlier Michigan case, Thomas v. Caulkett, 57 Mich. 392, 58 Am. Rep. 369, 24 N. W. 154, upon which the decision in SHERMAN v. BURTON is based, the question was as to the validity of a contract by which one who had been injured in a railway accident employed a physician to lay the facts concerning his injuries before the railway company's counsel and medical advisers, upon the understanding that if the railroad company should pay $1,500, he should have $300, if $2,000, $500, and in similar way for a larger sum. The court, in holding the contract void, said: "The testimony of defendant, as well as of other witnesses, fails to indicate that plaintiff made any statements which were not accurate. But the contract must be measured by its tendency, and not merely by what was done to carry it out. There is no particular reason to suppose defendant got any more than he should have got. This, however, is not the test. When we come down to the real nature of this alleged contract, it is one which contemplated that plaintiff was to give his view of the facts relating to defendant's physical condition and injuries, as they had existed and been developed under his observation, and the medical bearing of these facts, and the extent of past or future dangers and sufferings. While it is probable, from the medical testimony, that the present condition and future prospects can be got at with considerable certainty, yet it is also possible that some complications may escape detection, and some appearances may be ambiguous, unless explained by previous symptoms or conditions. Beyond this there can be no doubt that suggestions may often ERROR to the Circuit Court for Wayne County to review a judgment in defendant's favor in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due under an agreement for professional services rendered by plaintiff to defendant. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Cullen Casgrain, & Hanley, for plaintiff in error:

A physician is entitled to compensation for his services, either for the reasonable value thereof, or according to the terms of any lawful agreement there might be between the parties.

22 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 789.

A contingent contract for payment is not void by reason of the contingent feature.

Hollywood v. Reed, 55 Mich. 308, 21 N. W.

313; Beebe v. Koshnic, 55 Mich. 604, 22 N. W. 59.

Mr. James H. Pound, for defendant in error:

The so-called contract is not a contract.

Wardell v. Williams, 62 Mich. 50, 4 Am. St. Rep. 814, 28 N. W. 796.

The agreement is against public policy and an inducement to perjury and crime, and as such this claim is wholly unenforceable in the courts of law in this state.

Thomas v. Caulkett, 57 Mich. 392, 58 Am. Rep. 369, 24 N. W. 154.

Blair, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Plaintiff brought this suit to recover the

be made by one physician which will aid others, to whom they might not have occurred from their own experience or observation. Under these circumstances, it is at least possible, if not probable, that the judgment ultimately formed will depend very much on the facts and opinions and the coloring of the statements furnished by the person relied upon as best informed. He puts himself in a position where both parties are expected to rely upon him, and to act on what he says. When, under such circumstances, he makes the disclosure of his knowledge and opinions the subject of a contract, whereby his compensation is to depend on the amount obtained by his employer by reason of the disclosure, it is plain that he puts himself in a position where it is his interest to exaggerate. If he were to explain to those whom he is to influence that he is acting under such an employment, and as a solicitor, then there would be nothing to put him on a different footing than other known agents. But no such explanation was contemplated, and none given. And, however honest a man's actual intentions may be, and however truthful he may be, there is a direct temptation to misrepresent, and a direct danger that the misrepresentation will operate injuriously to the parties dealt with. Such secret agreements by persons putting themselves in positions of confidence come within recognized prohibitory rules as tending to defraud."

So, also, in Laffin v. Billington, 14 N. Y. Anno. Cas. 360, 86 N. Y. Supp. 267, it was held that an agreement that the attending physician should receive for his fee 10 per cent of any amount realized out of an action for damages for personal injuries, which was to cover an unpaid balance of his bill for medical services and in full for expert testimony to be given upon the trial, was void as having a manifest tendency to pervert justice.

An agreement by which the amount of compensation to be received by an expert witness is made to depend upon the success of the suit has also been held void in Pol-lak v. Gregory, 9 Bosw. 116; and see dic-33 L.R.A.(N.S.)

tum to that effect in Johnson v. Pietsch, 94 Ill. App. 459.

And the same has been held of an agreement to pay a person, for his attendance as a witness, an amount contingent upon the success of the promisor. Dawkins v. Gill, 10 Ala. 206.

As to the validity of contracts to procure testimony, see notes to Goodrich v. Tenney, 19 L.R.A. 371, and Neece v. Joseph, 30 L.R.A.(N.S.) 278.

No right on the part of a physician to enhanced compensation for services rendered a lawyer in examining a client who claimed a right of action for personal injuries may be based on the theory that he might have been compelled to attend court as a witness. Henderson v. Hall, 87 Ark. 1, 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 70, 112 S. W. 171.

An agreement to pay a doctor for being a witness as to matters in regard to which the law and his duty as a citizen compel him to testify is invalid as being without consideration and against public policy. Burnett v. Freeman, 125 Mo. App. 683, 103 S. W. 121, same case on subsequent appeal, 134 Mo. App. 709, 115 S. W. 488.

But if a physician at the request of a party performs any extra service in order to qualify himself as an expert, it is entirely proper and legal to receive payment therefor or to make an agreement whereby he is to receive such payment. Lewis v. Blye, 79 Ill. App. 256.

A case which may be of interest in this connection is Perry v. Dicken, 105 Pa. 83, 51 Am. Rep. 181, in which it was held that an agreement to pay a lawyer a contingent fee for professional services upon the trial of an action was not invalidated by the fact that he was the principal witness in behalf of his client, there being nothing in the evidence to indicate that there was any corrupt intention to influence his testimony; although it is said that if it had appeared that the contingent fee was a reward for his services as a witness, the contract would be not only reprehensible, but highly immoral, against public policy, and therefore illegal and void.

E. S. O.

amount alleged to be due upon the following agreement in writing:

Detroit, Mich.

March 14th, 1906.

I, Geo. E. Burton of the city of Detroit, hereby agree as follows with Dr. A. T. Sherman of the same place. I will pay to said Dr. A. T. Sherman for professional services, one third of any sum which I may receive from the Detroit United Railway, as damages, arising out of an injury to me said D. U. R. December 7th, 1905. And I further agree to pay to said Dr. Sherman the sum of ninety dollars ($90) in addition to the above-mentioned one third if the amount received by me is two thousand or more dollars, that is, if the settlement is made outside of courts.

Geo. E. Burton.

The facts as stated by plaintiff are that he is a practising physician and was called to treat plaintiff December 10, 1905, for an injury to his knee, the result of a collision between cars of the Detroit United Railway Company; that the agreement was drawn at the urgent request of defendant and against the objection of plaintiff that he preferred to get pay for the work he did; that Mr. Martin, the claim agent of the Detroit United Railway Company, saw him with reference to the case several times at his office; that between the time he first attended defendant and the making of the agreement defendant told him that he was going to bring suit against the railway company: "When treating Mr. Burton, he told me he was contemplating bringing suit for the accident and, at his request, I took him to a lawyer, but that was after the signing of the contract. At Mr. Burton's request I had Dr. J. B. Kennedy examine him. The D. U. R. had Dr. Wyman examine him. I also called in Dr. Spademan and Dr. Walker at the request of Mr. Burton. I also called in Dr. McLean at Mr. Burton's request. . . . I never offered my influence with the Detroit United Railway, nor anything of that kind. I told Mr. Burton that if he thought Dr. Wyman could do more for him than I could, I was willing to give up the case and hand it over to Dr. Wyman, and have Mr. Burton pay me what was due me up to date. But he said no; he would not do that. This was two or three weeks before the settlement. . . . I gave Mr. Burton the bill, Exhibit 4, as he said he was figuring on a settlement with the Detroit United Railway, and he said the Detroit United Railway wanted a bill of me, and he said not to make the bill over $300. He said that the Detroit United Railway wanted a bill of me. I made the bill at the first instance and fixed the amount at his instance at $300. I drew it myself, it is in my handwriting."

33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Exhibit 4 is as follows:

"Detroit, Mich., June 1, 1906. Mr. George E. Burton, To Dr. Andrew T. Sherman, Dr., 205 Trumbull Av., corner Leverette, between Michigan Ave. and Baker St. To professional services: Calls, $225; plaster casts, $65."

"Before he closed the matter with the Detroit United Railway he came to my office and asked me if I would be satisfied if he settled for $1,800, and I told him it made no difference to me what he settled for, as long as he was satisfied; and later he informed me that he had settled the claim for $1,800. Later Mr. Burton paid me the $100 that he borrowed, and $290 for services. Ninety dollars of the $290 was paid after suit was commenced by me, and I claim that there is still due to me upon the principal of the contract $310."

The testimony in behalf of defendant tended to show that plaintiff suggested the making of the agreement; told defendant that he had a good case against the Detroit United Railway Company; told him that he had a very bad knee; spoke about tuberculosis in it; "said he was going to get me so many thousand dollars right away quick, from five to seven thousand dollars; but did not say how he was going to do it. I never knew about the contract until he put it under my nose. He said the leg might possibly run into that disease; that it would have to be amputated, which alarmed me. Before signing the contract, he never mentioned it to me. It was all done about 10 o'clock one morning. He said he had great weight with the Detroit United Railway; he had somebody in the office connected there that would give information, and that they were very willing to settle any cases where they were at fault, and by being a business man, drawing a salary as I am, would be of influence; that I had a good, big shove;" that it was finally agreed to destroy the agreement, and plaintiff reported that he had done so and put in the bill, Exhibit 4, to show the amount actually due him, and the payment thereof was a full settlement between them. Mr. Martin, the claim agent, testified that plaintiff told him he had no interest in the case whatever; this was denied by plaintiff.

The circuit judge directed a verdict in favor of defendant upon the ground that the agreement was in contravention of public policy, within the principle of Thomas v. Caulkett, 57 Mich. 392, 58 Am. Rep. 369, 24 N. W. 154. Plaintiff brings the record to this court for review upon writ of error.

We concur in the opinion of the circuit judge that the principle of Thomas v. Caulkett applies to this case. The good faith of the parties to the contract is not the test of its validity; but, as said in the case referred to, "the contract must be measured by its tendency, and not merely by what was done to carry it out."

At the time the agreement was made, the parties contemplated that unless a settlement were made a suit would be instituted against the railway company, and the agreement expressly provided that, if the matter was settled out of court for $2,000 or over, the plaintiff should receive $90 in addition to one third of the amount received. The amount which the defendant could obtain from the railway company must depend principally upon the nature, extent, and character of his injuries, to be determined by the testimony of experts like the plaintiff, and in no small degree by their opinions, incapable of conclusive refutation before a jury on nonexperts. We think it necessarily follows from the circumstances of the case as disclosed by the plaintiff and the agreement that the parties contemplated that the plaintiff should be a witness in case of suit and should give a history of, and opinion upon, the case in the event of a proposed settlement. The plaintiff's interest in the amount of the damages furnished a powerful motive for exaggeration, suppression, and misrepresentation,—a temptation to swell the damages so likely to color his testimony as to be inimical to the pure administration of justice, and therefore invalid.

The judgment is affirmed.

WASHINGTON SUPREME COURT.

C. F. LATHROP, Appt.,

v.

JOHN C. SUNDBERG et al., Respts.

(— Wash. —, 113 Pac. 574.)

Libel — professional capacity — violation of statute.

1. An osteopath doing business as a doctor without a license, contrary to statute, cannot recover damages for libel upon him in his professional capacity, since he will not be permitted to recover for loss of earnings which he received by violation of law.

Same — character of acts.

2. An osteopath practising as a doctor without a license cannot recover damages for libel upon him in his common-law right to do business as an osteopath, since that was not the character in which he was attempting to carry on the business.

Same — theory of action — change.

3. An osteopath cannot, under a charge of libel in calling him a quack and charlatan, recover damages on the theory that the libel was in fact against osteopathy as a profession, and that he was injured as a member of the profession.

33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

(February 7, 1911.)

Note. — Right to recover for slander or libel affecting one in his business or professional capacity, as affected by his own violation of law in respect thereof.

There is a familiar principle in the law to the effect that a plaintiff cannot found an action upon any cause or subject-matter which renders it necessary for him, in order to maintain the action, to prove that he was engaged in a violation of law. Hence, the general rule to be formulated by the proper application of this principle to actions of slander and libel is to the effect that no action will lie for defamatory words either spoken or written, which merely relate to the conduct of a party while engaged in some unlawful business, or in the pursuit of some profession without having complied with the requirements of the law. Besides LATHROP v. SUNDBERG, the following additional cases are among those which support the rule as stated: Hargan v. Purdy, 93 Ky. 424, 20 S. W. 432 (cited and discussed in LATHROP v. SUNDBERG); Perry v. Man, 1 R. I. 263 (one convicted of selling spirituous liquors in violation of license law designated "convicted felon" in a circular); Dauphin v. Times Pub. Co. 18 Reporter, 10, Fed. Cas. No. 3,584a (agent of Louisiana lottery, suing for libel); Skirving v. Ross, 31 U. C. C. P. 423 (physician practising without having registered in conformity with statute, suing for slander); Collins v. Carnegie, 1 Ad. & El. 695; 3 Nev. & M. 703, 3 L. J. K. B. N. S. 190 (physician unlawfully practising called among other characterizations, "a quack and imposter"); Hunt v. Bell, 1 Bing. 17; J. B. Moore, 212, 25 Revised Rep. 561 (exhibitor of sparring matches not allowed to recover for alleged libel as to his conduct of such business); Manning v. Clement, 7 Bing. 362, 9 L. J. C. P. 60, 5 Moor & P. 211 (rule inferentially sustained by holding evidence admissible to show that the plaintiff in an action for libel was not engaged in the lawful manufacture of biters, but made a composition of a very different description).

It is no matter how sever and unreasonable the strictures may be upon his conduct and motives, said Greene, Ch. J., in charging the jury in Perry v. Man, supra, if they apply to him as a man engaged in an illegal traffic. A man whose business is in violation of law cannot apply to the law to protect him from strictures on his illegal conduct.

One who is engaged in the business of selling the milk of cows fed on the refuse of distilleries, in contravention of an ordinance of the board of supervisors of a city

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of Superior Court for King County in defendants' favor in an action brought to recover damages for the alleged publication of a libel. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. P. W. Willett, for appellant:

It was not necessary for plaintiff to prove his qualifications, for the law presumes that anyone engaged in an occupation does so legally, and that he possesses sufficient qualifications as such.

Adams v. Lawson, 17 Gratt. 250, 94 Am. Dec. 455; McKelvey, Ev. 53; Goggans v. Monroe, 31 Ga. 331.

Plaintiff was not prohibited by law from following his occupation and was empowered by the common law to pursue this system of healing.

State v. Carey, 4 Wash. 424, 30 Pac. 729; forbidding such business, can maintain no action for libel, where the articles complained of appertained solely to the illegal character of his business. Johnson v. Simonton, 43 Cal. 242, wherein Wallace, Ch. J., was clearly of the opinion that the illegality of the plaintiff's business was a complete answer to his complaints.

The business of pretending to heal absent patients by supernatural powers, without medicine or surgery, is fraudulent, and not protected by the law against libel, although many persons claim to have been benefited by the treatment. Weltmer v. Bishop, 171 Mo. 117, 65 L.R.A. 584, 71 S. W. 167.

It has been held not actionable to charge a person who is not legally authorized to practise physic or surgery, and to receive compensation therefor, with ignorance of the healing art, or with having destroyed human life by lawful but misapplied efforts to preserve it. March v. Davison, 9 Paige, 580.

In Trimmer v. Hiscock, 27 Hun, 364, the defendant, when sued for an alleged slander of the plaintiff in his business as a hotel keeper, was held to be precluded from raising the question of the right of the plaintiff to maintain the action, for the reason that he had not procured a statutory license to keep a hotel, because he had admitted in his answer that the plaintiff was the keeper of a public inn or hotel, and ran it for profit, and as a means of livelihood for himself and family.

In White v. Carroll, 42 N. Y. 161, 1 Am. Rep. 503, it was said that the legislation of the state had so far and continuously recognized and regulated the practice of the allopathic system or school of medicine, as the only legal system or school of medicine, that it was questionable whether any person calling himself, or called by others, a physician, and not licensed as an allopathic physician, could, previous to the act of 1844, have maintained an action against anyone for calling him a quack.

And Richards v. Judd, 15 Abb. Pr. N. S. 184, is interesting in this connection, 33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Hayden v. State, 81 Miss. 291, 95 Am. St. Rep. 471, 33 So. 653, 15 Am. Crim. Rep. 522; State v. Herring, 70 N. J. L. 34, 56 Atl. 670, 1 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 51; State v. Liffing, 61 Ohio St. 39, 46 L.R.A. 334, 76 Am. St. Rep. 358, 55 N. E. 168, 15 Am. Crim. Rep. 516; State v. Lawson, — Del. —, 65 Atl. 593; Nelson v. State Bd. of Health, 108 Ky. 769, 50 L.R.A. 383, 57 S. W. 501; State v. Biggs, 133 N. C. 729, 64 L.R.A. 139, 98 Am. St. Rep. 731, 46 S. E. 401; State v. McKnight, 131 N. C. 717, 59 L.R.A. 187, 42 S. E. 580.

Messrs. McBurney & Cummings, for respondents:

A person cannot recover for a libel published concerning him in his professional capacity when he is practising that profession illegally.

Hargan v. Purdy, 93 Ky. 424, 20 S. W.

though not directly in point. Here the defendant had published that the plaintiff was a quack and his "Golden Remedies" nonsensical quackery. In an action for the alleged libel, the plaintiff, when a witness, was asked as to the ingredients of his wonderful medicines, but would answer no further than to say that their compound was a secret. His complaint was thereupon stricken out, and upon his appeal it was said: "It is impossible to read the vulgar, and in many respects shameful, assertions and instructions that accompany the compounds of plaintiff, without being struck with the vileness of the impostures. That he can bring an action of libel for injury alleged to be done to his trade in his medicines, by denouncing them as arrant quackery, and at the same time protect himself against exposure by claiming them to be valuable secrets, is a proposition that cannot be maintained."

But where the conduct of the plaintiff in connection with the transaction to which the publication relates is open to comment and criticism for the reason that he participated in acts which are contrary to law, and in consequence thereof no action can be maintained for a libelous publication which relates solely to the plaintiff's connection with such unlawful acts, nevertheless there is a limit beyond, such immunity from liability for defamatory words cannot be carried. Unless the matters set forth in a declaration are of a nature which indicates that the plaintiff's acts and conduct in connection therewith necessarily involved moral turpitude, or might fairly be held to affect his general character in any particular, a publication which holds a party up to contempt and reproach as wanting in integrity, or as otherwise culpable in his general conduct or character, is actionable, although it may also relate to the plaintiff's participation in any illegal transaction. A person does not necessarily forfeit all legal claim to protection against defamatory matter affecting his character, because he has been guilty of a single illegal act.

432; March v. Davison, 9 Paige, 580; 25 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 329; 18 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 947; Starkie, Slander & Libel, 5th ed. 522; Tarleton v. Lagarde, 26 L.R.A. 327, note.

Gose, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

There was a former appeal in this case. See Lathrop v. Sundberg, 55 Wash. 144, 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 381, 104 Pac. 176. The complaint alleges that the plaintiff, upon the date hereinafter stated, was and is an osteopath, graduated from a school of osteopathy, holding a degree of that school, and practising his profession as such in the Eitel Building in Seattle; that about the 16th day of March, 1908, the defendants published in a newspaper in that city, of and concerning him, in his business and professional capacity, the following libel: "We, the following reputable physicians and dentists, occupying offices in the Eitel Building, endeavoring to uphold the honor and dignity of our professions, and desiring to encourage only the best and most desirable tenants for our office building, and thereby conserve the best interests of the public at large, are most emphatically opposed to the indiscriminate rental of offices in this building to osteopaths, neuropaths, autopathists, chiropractors, umtomtereists, unprofessional masseurs, criminal practitioners, 'medical institutes,' advertising 'specialists,' patent medicine fakers, quacks, charlatans, and other fraudulent concerns. We therefore demand the removal of all such persons now holding offices in this building, and the exclusion therefrom of all such undesirable tenants in the future,"—thereby intending to and charging him with being a "quack and a charlatan" in his business and professional capacity, and diminishing his earnings to the extent of $300 per month. His damages are laid at $75,000. Issue was joined and the case proceeded to trial. After the plaintiff had testified, the court withdrew the case from the jury, and en-

Thus, in Chenery v. Goodrich, 98 Mass. 224, where the plaintiff, acting on certain facts, and in conformity to what he supposed to be the law and usage in similar cases, got the storekeeper of a warehouse at a customhouse to change a receipt so as to express the correct date of the importation of goods, in order to save an unjust payment of double duties thereon, and the collector of customs afterwards nullified the storekeeper's action, and decided that the receipt as first dated was correct, demanding the additional duties, which were paid under protest, it was held that a publication made with the intent to cause it to be believed that the plaintiff fraudulently induced the storekeeper to alter the receipt, so as to avoid the payment of the additional duties, and to bring the plaintiff into hatred, contempt, and ridicule, was libelous. Mr. Chief Justice Bigelow said: "Now, although it may be true that the alteration of the receipt was erroneous, and that, by the true construction of the acts of Congress, the original date was correct, it by no means follows that the plaintiff was guilty of a violation of law in any such sense as to justify or excuse the defendant in holding him up, in connection with the transaction, to public hatred, contempt, and ridicule. . . . Now, although the plaintiff, acting on certain facts, and in conformity to what he supposed to be the law and usage in similar cases, may have committed a violation of law, or participated in the illegal act of another, it by no means follows that his general character for commercial integrity and fair dealing was thereby forfeited, or so far affected that he could not maintain an action for a publication which held him up to the public as wanting in the qualities and characteristics of a merchant of integrity and honor. Greville v. Chapman, Dav. & M. 552, 53 L.R.A.(N.S.)

Q. B. 731, 13 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 172, 8 Jur. 189. Such, we think, was the fair import of a portion of the written words which are set forth in the declaration. For the publication of these, this action can be maintained, although it may be also true that it appears from the declaration that the publication related to the plaintiff's conduct in a transaction which was unlawful."

In Greville v. Chapman, supra, which was an action for a libel in imputing that plaintiff had entered a horse to run for certain stakes at Epsom races, and had afterwards fraudulently withdrawn him for the purpose of obtaining an unfair advantage over other persons with whom he had laid wagers on the expected race, it was held that he could recover. Lord Denman, Ch. J., said: "The objection to his right of suing, from being engaged in horse racing, appears on the record; but in truth it is wholly groundless. For even if running a race without fraud were altogether prohibited by the law, still the party infringing its provisions would not thereby be deprived of all protection to his character in other matters connected with the transaction . . . but, moreover, the fact of engaging in a horse race is not in itself an illegal act."

And Best, Ch. J., in Yrisarri v. Clement, 3 Bing. 432, 2 Car. & P. 223, 4 L. J. C. P. 128, 11 J. B. Moore, 308, while recognizing the general rule, as stated at the beginning of this note, said that an action for libel could be maintained where the publication complained of imputed misconduct to one in a matter independent of the illegal transaction, even though arising out of it. Thus it was said that a foreigner had no right to negotiate a loan in England for the use of a state which had separated itself from, and was at war with, one of England's allies (such state not being at the time recognized by England), without the permission tered a judgment of dismissal. The plaintiff has appealed.

The appellant testified that, while pursuing his calling as a barber, he read four typewritten lessons a week for fifty-two weeks from an osteopathic correspondence school, embracing the subjects of anatomy, physiology, and pathology; that with such preparation he began practising as an osteopath in February, 1906, moved into the Eitel Building the latter part of that year, and remained there until after the publication of the article we have set forth, and that he had upon his office door the words "Dr. C. F. Lathrop, Osteopathic Physician," while in that building. The appellant earnestly insists that he should have been permitted to offer further evidence tending to show that he is an osteopath, and that his case should have been submitted to the jury. We think the learned trial court took the correct view of the case. When he withdrew it from the jury, it appeared from the testimony of the appellant himself that he was pursuing his practice in a manner forbidden by the laws of the state. Section 3, p. 50, Laws 1901, makes it a misdemeanor, punishable by fine or imprisonment or by both, for a person to maintain "an office or place of business with his or her name and the words . . . 'Doctor' . . . in public view," without having obtained and filed a license, as provided by law. In State v. Pollman, 51 Wash. 110, 98 Pac. 88, it was held that a prefix or qualifying words to the title "Physician" did not relieve a party from the penalty of the statute; that the abbreviation "Dr." offended the law to the same extent as the word "Doctor;" that the purpose of the statute is to protect the people against deception; and that "it is practitioners of the regular schools, rather than the others, that the ill and infirm seeking relief usually expect to find when entering a room whose door has lettered upon it the name of a person, preceded by the title 'Dr.,' or followed by the letters 'M. D.,' or 'Physician and Surgeon.'" of the English government; and where a letter in an English newspaper not only strongly animadverted upon the illegality of such a transaction but went beyond that, and imputed a moral fraud to the party engaged in the transaction, it was held to be libelous and actionable.

In Crane v. Darling, 71 Vt. 295, 44 Atl. 359, where the license of a physician to practise medicine was recorded before the speaking of the slanderous words complained of, it was held that he could maintain an action therefor, notwithstanding the fact that the actionable words had reference to the time when he was practising without having recorded his license, and a statute imposed a fine for so practising, where the slander charged him with incompetency in a particular case, as well as with general professional misconduct and dishonesty in his practice.

So, in Jones v. Stevens, 11 Price, 235, where the objection was made that an attorney could not recover for a libel upon him as an attorney, because he was not proved to be an attorney at the time of the grievances charged, Wood, Baron, said: "There can be no doubt, however, that he was an attorney at that time, for it was proved by the book of admissions produced by the proper officer. But then it was said, that he had not taken out and entered his certificate in due time, according to the provisions of the 37th of Geo. III., chap. 90, and therefore could not maintain this action. If he had not complied with the regulations of that statute, that would not have the effect of taking away from him altogether his character of an attorney. The consequence of that omission would be, that he might be subject to a penalty, and that he could not bring an action for fees and disbursements; because, under those circumstances, he would be disabled from so doing by the provisions of that statute; but still he is not to be subjected, in addition to such penalty and disability, to be aspersed and ruined in his character of an attorney."

In Moises v. Thornton, 8 T. R. 303, 3 Esp. 4, where a physician brought an action of slander against one who called him a quack, etc., he was nonsuited because he did not produce the necessary evidence to prove the averment in his declaration to the effect that he was "a physician and had duly taken the degree of doctor of physic."

And in Morris v. Langdale, 2 Bos. & P. 284, where the slanderous words were spoken of one engaged in the business of stockjobbing of which there were two species, one of infamous practice and the other honest, and no averment in the plaintiff's declaration showed which was his species of business, the declaration was held to be bad.

But in Fry v. Bennett, 28 N. Y. 324, affirming 3 Bosw. 200, which was an action for libel, it was held that it was not necessary for one to aver or prove that he had taken out the required license to give operative representations, since the law would presume that he had not violated certain statutes, and the failure to obtain the license, if any there was, was a matter for the defendant to allege if he would take advantage of it. And this seems to be the effect of Long v. Chubb, 5 Car. & P. 55.

As to the right of one not specially named to maintain an action for libel or slander, based on charges made against a class or group of persons to which he belongs, see the note to Levert v. Daily States Pub. Co. 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) 726, and the supplemental note thereto in 25 L.R.A. (N.S.) 382.

E. M. S.

As we have seen, the appellant fixes his actual damages at $300 per month. Without undertaking to define the words "quack" and "charlatan," the terms by which the appellant was characterized in the libel, it suffices to say that he was knowingly luring patients into his office by a method condemned by the penal laws of the state. This was a fraud and imposition upon the public, and the law will afford him no redress for the loss of earnings sought to be acquired in that manner. On the former appeal we said, speaking of the libel in question: "Clearly this is libelous per se, if published of and concerning the appellant, and he is engaged in a reputable practice, and that it was published of and concerning the appellant, and that his practice is reputable, was distinctly alleged in the complaint." He could not be engaged in a reputable practice while offending against the statute. As was said in Hargan v. Purdy, 93 Ky. 424, 20 S. W. 432: "If he was then undertaking to practise medicine in violation of the statute of the state, he could not, in contemplation of law, have been injured or sustained damage from being called an 'empiric' or 'quack;' or, at all events, he could not be heard in a court of justice to complain that words had been spoken or written of him having the simple effect to disable or deter him from violating a penal law." See also Marsh v. Davison, 9 Paige, 580.

He contends that he had a common-law right to practise osteopathy without a license; that he was libeled while pursuing that right; and that his damages should have been assessed by the jury. If he had advertised and practised as an osteopath, that question would be presented. He further complains that, as a matter of fact, the article was published of and concerning osteopathy as a profession, and that he, as a member of that profession, was damaged. The charge in the complaint, however, is not that he was damaged by a libel against the profession of osteopathy, but that "the defendants thereby intended to and did charge the plaintiff with being a quack and a charlatan." A litigant will not be permitted to recover damages because he has been prevented from pursuing his business in violation of the laws of the state.

The judgment is affirmed.

Dunbar, Ch. J., and Parker, Mount, and Fullerton, JJ., concur.
33 L.R.A.(N.S.)

ARKANSAS SUPREME COURT.

ST. LOUIS & SAN FRANCISCO RAILROAD COMPANY, Appt.,
v.

J. C. WILLIAMS, by Next Friend.

(— Ark. —, 135 S. W. 804.)

Negligence — railroad — leaving torpedo on track — injury to child.

A railroad company is not liable for injury to a child by the explosion of a torpedo which it finds upon the track, where it had been left to guard a train standing at a station against other incoming trains, although children were accustomed to play on the track at the place where it was left,— at least where the torpedo was picked up by the child before the necessity for its use had ceased.

(February 27, 1911.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Crawford County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. W. F. Evans and B. R. Davidson, for appellant:

The defendant company was not negligent in placing the torpedo on its track.

St. Louis & I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Monday, 49 Ark. 257, 4 S. W. 782; Cauley v. Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. 95 Pa. 398, 40 Am. Rep. 664; Buch v. Amory Mfg. Co. 69 N. H. 257, 76 Am. St. Rep. 163, 44 Atl. 809; McDermott v. Kentucky C. R. Co. 93 Ky. 408, 20 S. W. 380; Morgan v. Pennsylvania

Note.—As to liability for injury to children from explosives left accessible to them, see notes to Akin v. Bradley Engineering & Machinery Co. 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 586, and Finkbeiner v. Solomon, 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1257; and see also the later case, Olson v. Gill Home Invest. Co. 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 884.

For explosives as attractive nuisance, see note to Cahill v. E. B. & A. L. Stone & Co. 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1094, 1127.

The question which sometimes arises in connection with the liability for injury to a child from explosives, as to whether the intervening act of a child will break the causal connection between defendant's negligence and the injury, is considered in the note to United States Natural Gas Co. v. Hicks, 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 249.

R. Co. 19 Blatchf. 239, 7 Fed. 78; Gillespie v. McGowan, 100 Pa. 144, 45 Am. Rep. 365; McClaren v. Indianapolis & V. R. Co. 53 Ind. 319; Walsh v. Pittsburg R. Co. 21 Pa. 463, 32 L.R.A. (N.S.) 559, 70 Atl. 926; Hughes v. Boston & M. R. Co. 71 N. H. 279, 93 Am. St. Rep. 518, 51 Atl. 1070; Carter v. Columbia & G. R. Co. 19 S. C. 23, 45 Am. Rep. 754; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Hart, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 1123, 70 S. W. 830.

Mr. Sam R. Chew, for appellee:

It was appellant's duty so to use and operate its property as not to do harm to its neighbor or the public, and especially to nonthinking, impulsive, playful, irresponsible children.

1 Thomp. Neg. §§ 758, 759; Shearm. & Redf. Neg. § 688; Harriman v. Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. 45 Ohio St. 11, 4 Am. St. Rep. 507, 12 N. E. 451; Olson v. Gill Home Invest. Co. 58 Wash. 151, 27 L.R.A. (N.S.) 884, 108 Pac. 140; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Coolidge, 73 Ark. 112, 67 L.R.A. 555, 108 Am. St. Rep. 21, 83 S. W. 333, 3 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 582; Southwest-ern Teleg. & Teleph. Co. v. Bruce, 89 Ark. 581, 117 S. W. 564; St. Louis & Southwest-ern R. Co. v. Mackey, — Ark. —, 129 S. W. 78.

McCulloch, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff, J. C. Williams, then eleven years of age, was injured by the explosion of a torpedo picked up on the railroad track of defendant by his younger brother, Ellis Williams, and sues to recover damages. The boys lived with their parents a short distance from the railroad track in the city of Fayetteville, Arkansas. They saw the brakeman of a train place the torpedo on the track, and the younger one went out on the track and picked it up and carried it to plaintiff, requesting him to "mash it," which he proceeded to do, placing it on a rock and striking it with an ax. Some of the particles struck plaintiff in the eye and destroyed the sight.

There was no dispute as to the material facts. The defendant operates a branch line known as the "St Paul Branch," which runs east from the main line at Fayette Junction, about 2 miles south of the passenger station at Fayetteville. Another branch, called the "O. & C.," runs west, leaving the main line a short distance south of the station. The trains from these branches come in on the main track to reach the Fayetteville station, which is used by all of defendant's trains on the main line as well as on the branch lines. The track between Fayette Junction and the Fayetteville station has frequent curves, and there are obstructions which prevent a view up and down the track for any considerable distance. When the trains come in from the branch lines, while using the main line at the station for discharging passengers, baggage, express, etc., it is necessary to protect them by the use of torpedoes from other trains likely to come in. The undisputed evidence shows that this has been the custom for many years, and that it is considered necessary by those who have been operating trains there. It is explained that, where a brakeman gets off to protect a train with a flag, it is necessary to use a torpedo for protection while he goes back to his train.

The track near the place where the plaintiff was injured was on a high dump, and is curved, so that it has always been found necessary to place a torpedo at that place. It is not a crossing; but there was testimony tending to show that people walk the track a good deal along there, and that children play on or about the track. On the occasion in question, the mixed train from St. Paul Branch came in, being due at 3:45 P. M., and when it came up the main line Raedles, a brakeman, got off and placed a torpedo on the track, as usual, leaving it there when he was called to his train, as a signal to the other incoming trains. A train from the O. & C. Branch was due at 3:55, and another train on the main line was due from the south at 4:10 P. M. It was always considered necessary to put a torpedo on the track at that place to protect the St. Paul train from those trains while it was discharging passengers, baggage, etc., at the station and getting back to the switch. Raedles used a torpedo of approved pattern commonly in use. It had a lead strip attached to it, by which it was fastened to the rail, so that it would be exploded by the wheels of a passing train. The boys saw Raedles put the torpedo on the track, and in a short time thereafter, about fifteen minutes, the younger boy, Ellis, went over and picked it up and carried it to his brother, who exploded it, as already stated. The injury occurred in a very unusual and unexpected manner. Witnesses stated that torpedoes had been placed along there for ten years or longer, and that an accident had never before happened on that account. The use of torpedoes in that way is shown to be customary in railroading, yet experienced railroad men testified that they had never heard of anyone being injured as a result of that practice.

We need not spend any time in discussing the question of contributory negligence, or whether the negligence of defendant's servants, if there was any negligence, was the proximate cause of the injury. The question of negligence of the plaintiff in exploding the torpedo was properly submitted to the jury, and, considering the plaintiff's age and inexperience, we think the jury were justified in finding that he was not guilty of negligence. In the case of Pittsburg Reduction Co. v. Horton, 87 Ark. 576, 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 905, 113 S. W. 647, the court distinctly recognized the principle that negligence in unnecessarily leaving an explosive exposed so that children could have access to it would be the proximate cause of an injury resulting therefrom, under circumstances similar to the facts of this case, citing Harriman v. Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. 45 Ohio St. 11, 4 Am. St. Rep. 507, 12 N. E. 451. The court there held that where the explosive was picked up by a child incapable of committing an act of negligence, and he immediately carried it to his companion, who exploded it, the causal connection with the original act of negligence in leaving the explosive exposed was not broken by an intervening act of negligence, and that it was a result to be reasonably anticipated, so as to make the injury the proximate result of the original act of negligence. The real question with which we must deal in this case is whether or not there is any evidence of negligence on the part of defendant's servants in leaving the torpedo on the track. Did they violate any duty which they owed to children who might come on the track?

Cases may readily be found where it is held to be negligence to leave explosives or other dangerous substances exposed so that injury may result therefrom. These are cases, however, where the method of using the substance is found to be negligent, or where there is negligence in unnecessarily leaving the substance exposed. We are not aware that any court has ever held that the necessary use in a careful manner of a dangerous substance in the operation of a lawful business constitutes negligence. There are many legitimate enterprises, the operation of which is necessarily dangerous. This is especially true of the operation of a railroad, which is necessarily a place of danger at all times. The locomotives, standing cars, hand cars, cattle guards, turntables, and numerous other things which could be mentioned, are in a sense dangerous; yet they are necessary, and may be used without rendering the company liable for damages. It is only the negligent use, or use in a negligent manner, which is actionable when injury results.

Railroad companies have the right to the exclusive possession of their own premises, including the right of way, except at 33 L.R.A.(N.S.)

crossings or about stations, where people have a right to go. The servants of the company are not required to anticipate the presence of trespassers except as to keeping a lookout in the operation of trains, which is now required by statute. Children may be trespassers the same as adults, and, except in the operation of trains, where the lookout statute applies, servants of the company are not required to anticipate their presence where they have no right to be.

What is known as the doctrine of the "Turntable Cases" forms an exception to this rule; but that is where an owner permits to remain unguarded on his premises something dangerous which is attractive to children, and from which an injury may reasonably be anticipated. The doctrine is stated by the court in Brinkley Car Works & Mfg. Co. v. Cooper, 60 Ark. 545, 46 Am. St. Rep. 216, 31 S. W. 154, as follows: "The owner of land is not required to provide against remote and improbable injuries to children trespassing thereon. But he is liable for injuries to children trespassing upon his private grounds, when it is known to him that they are accustomed to go upon it, and that, from the peculiar nature and exposed and open condition of something thereon which is attractive to children, he ought reasonably to anticipate such an injury to a child as that which actually occurs."

The doctrine of those cases proceeds entirely on the theory of negligence in using, or unnecessarily leaving exposed, the dangerous substance or machinery. In the Cooper Case, just referred to, the charge of negligence was that the defendant allowed to remain unguarded on its premises, which were frequented by children, a pool of hot water concealed by trash and bark, and the plaintiff, a child six years old, unwittingly walked into it and was scalded. When the case came back to this court on second appeal (70 Ark. 331, 57 L.R.A. 724, 67 S. W. 752), Judge Riddick, delivering the opinion, said: "We hold that if the company owning the premises had notice that children did frequent the place of this pool, or were from the nature of the surroundings likely to do so, and if it carelessly left a pool of hot water there concealed in such a way that one would reasonably expect it to occasion injury to such children, the company would be liable for damages to a boy who, by reason of its concealed nature, walked into the pool of hot water and was burned."

The doctrine was first announced by the Supreme Court of the United States in Sioux City & P. R. Co. v. Stout, 17 Wall. 657, 21 L. ed. 745, a case where a child six years of age got his foot mashed while playing with a turntable on the premises of a railroad company. The court stated the facts and the rule applicable thereto as follows: "As it was in fact on this occasion, so it was to be expected, that the amusement of the boys would have been found in turning this table while they were on it or about it. This could certainly have been prevented by locking the turntable when not in use by the company. It was not shown that this would cause any considerable expense or inconvenience to the defendant. It could probably have been prevented by the repair of the broken latch. This was a heavy catch which, by tripping into a socket, prevented the revolution of the table. There had been one on this table weighing some 8 or 10 pounds, but it had been broken off and had not been replaced. It was proved to have been usual with railroad companies to have upon their turntables a latch or bolt, or some similar instrument. The jury may well have believed that, if the defendant had incurred the trifling expense of replacing this latch, and had taken the slight trouble of putting it in its place, these very small boys would not have taken the pains to lift it out, and thus the whole difficulty would have been avoided. Thus reasoning, the jury would have reached the conclusion that the defendant had omitted the care and attention it ought to have given, that it was negligent, and that its negligence caused the injury to the plaintiff."

In Catlett v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 3 Ark. 461, 38 Am. St. Rep. 254, 21 S. W. 1692, a boy sued for damages received while he was attempting to swing on the side of a moving train in the railroad yards at Winne, Arkansas. The boys were accustomed to steal rides on the trains at that place, and this was well known to the train men, who took no steps to prevent it. Sometimes they paid no attention to boys riding, and sometimes they made them get off. The doctrine just referred to was urged by able counsel, but the court rejected it. Chief Justice Cockrill, delivering the opinion of the court, said: "The appellant argues that a slow-moving train is 'dangerous machinery,' alluring to boys; and that it is therefore negligent of the company to fail to take precaution to keep them off such trains. That is the argument made to sustain a class of cases known as the 'Turntable Cases,' the leading one of which is Sioux City & P. Co. v. Stout, 17 Wall. 657, 21 L. ed. 745. . . . Whatever its merits may be, it has never been extended to such length as to control a case like this. . . . The youth of the person injured will sometimes excuse him 33 L.R.A. (N.S.) from concurring negligence, but no amount of youthful recklessness can supply the place of proof of negligence on the part of a defendant sought to be charged on account of negligence." The point of that case undoubtedly is that there must have been some act of negligence in the use of the dangerous substance or machinery, or in leaving it unguarded when not in use. Other cases illustrate the doctrine in the same way. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Hart, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 1123, 70 S. W. 830; Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Shields, 47 Ohio St. 387, 8 L.R.A. 464, 21 Am. St. Rep. 840, 24 N. E. 658; Harriman v. Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. 45 Ohio St. 11, 1 Am. St. Rep. 507, 12 N. E. 451; Olson v. Gill Home Invest. Co. 58 Wash. 151, 27 L.R.A. (N.S.) 884, 108 Pac. 140.

In the Harriman Case, above cited, which is strongly relied on by learned counsel for plaintiff, the trial court sustained a demurrer to the complaint, which alleged that the servants of the railway company "wantonly placed said torpedoes upon the track of its road in an exposed place, where, if left undestroyed and unguarded, they would be likely to cause injury to others. That there was no reason for making use of said torpedoes at said time or place, nor was there any necessity of giving danger signals; but the same were used in mere wantonness, and with a view that said train, on being moved forward, would pass over and explode the same. That said defendant, so using said torpedoes in the manner aforesaid, so carelessly and negligently conducted itself in the management and care of its road, and management of its said train, that it negligently and carelessly failed to explode and destroy all of said torpedoes so placed on its track, and negligently and carelessly left upon its road exposed and unexploded, and in plain view, one of said torpedoes, at a point and place upon its road over which the inhabitants living along the line of said road, and other persons, were for years daily accustomed to travel and pass, and over which children were accustomed to go without hindrance; and all with the full knowledge of defendant. And that said defendant negligently, carelessly, and in wilful disregard of the safety of those who the defendant well knew were in the daily habit of using said road as a pathway, permitted said unexploded torpedo to remain upon its road undestroyed and unguarded from the reach and observation of all passers-by." The supreme court held that the complaint stated a cause of action, and that the demurrer should have been overruled.

Now, applying the law announced in the foregoing cases to the facts of the present case, it is readily seen that no case of negligence has been made out against defendant. Its servants were using the torpedo in the customary way, as a signal to expected trains. No negligence is shown in placing it there, or in leaving it after the necessity for its use had ceased. The little boy Ellis picked up the torpedo a few minutes after it was placed there, and before the expected train came along to explode it. To hold that, under those circumstances, the servants of the company were guilty of negligence, would be to deny the company the right to use torpedoes at all. The undisputed evidence shows that it was necessary for the safety of trains to use them at the time and place named, and no negligence is shown in the method of using them, or that they were left unguarded after the necessity for their use ceased.

The case should not have been submitted to the jury. The judgment must therefore be reversed; and, as the facts were fully developed in the trial, no useful purpose will be served in remanding for a new trial.

Reversed and dismissed.

NEBRASKA SUPREME COURT.

IDA KURPGEWIT

v.

EDWARD KIRBY, Appt.

(88 Neb. 72, 129 N. W. 177.)

Trespass to person — aggravation — damages.

1. The facts set forth in the opinion held to show a wanton and wilful trespass upon the person of the plaintiff, accompanied by such circumstances of aggravation as justifies the inclusion of mental suffering, humiliation, and disgrace as proper elements of compensatory damages.

Definition — aggravation.

2. Matter in aggravation is something done by the defendant upon the occasion of the commission of the principal trespass, which is of a different legal character from, but not inconsistent with, the trespass.

Damages — measure — discretion of jury.

3. Where there is a direct invasion of personal rights under circumstances showing malice, or a wilful and wanton disregard of another's right to personal security, the amount of compensatory damages is not susceptible of exact computation, and must usually be left to the sound discretion of the jury.

Headnotes by LETTON, J.
33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Appeal — excessive damages.

4. Where, in such a case, considering all the circumstances, the verdict is for such amount as clearly shows it is the result of passion or prejudice, it cannot be upheld, and a remittitur will be required, and the case reversed and remanded for a new trial.

(Rose, J., dissents.)

(December 10, 1910.)

Note. — Mental anguish as element of damages for trespass on the person of a woman affecting her character or reputation for chastity.

It is generally held that a recovery for mental anguish may be had where such suffering is the result of a wanton or intentional trespass on the person of a woman.

Thus, in an action for damages caused by an indecent assault upon a woman, recovery may be had for anguish of mind resulting therefrom. Wolf v. Trinkle, 103 Ind. 355, 3 N. W. 110; Fay v. Swan, 44 Mich. 544, 7 N. W. 215; Ford v. Jones, 62 Barb. 484; Eaton Thrift, — R. I. —, 69 Atl. 764; Newell Whitcher, 53 Vt. 589, 38 Am. Rep. 703.

And a recovery for such damages may be had against a common carrier for an indecent assault committed by its servant upon a woman passenger. Campbell v. Pullman Palace-Car Co. 42 Fed. 484, affirmed in 1 U. S. 513, 38 L. ed. 1069, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1151; Craker v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. Wis. 657, 17 Am. Rep. 504.

And in cases for indecent assaults, damages of this kind may be recovered, although the assault was not accompanied by a battery. Leach v. Leach, 11 Tex. Civ. App. 699, 33 S. W. 703.

And in Ragsdale v. Ezell, 20 Ky. L. R. 1567, 49 S. W. 775, which was an action for hugging and kissing a woman against her will, by reason of which she was greatly excited and suffered a nervous shock, exemplary damages were allowed and a verdict of $700 was held not excessive, but no specific mention of mental anguish was made.

So recovery for shame and mortification resulting may be had in an action against a physician and an unmarried and unprofessional man, where the former took the latter with him to attend the plaintiff during her confinement. DeMay v. Roberts, Mich. 160, 41 Am. Rep. 154, 9 N. W. 146.

And in an action by a parent for battery on his daughter under circumstances aggravated and injurious to the parent's feelings and derogatory to the character of his family, recovery may be had for injury to the feelings of the parties and character of the family. Trimble v. Spiller, 7 T. Mon. 394, 18 Am. Dec. 189.

And in an action for depriving a husband of his wife's comfort, etc., and seducing her, recovery may be had for mental anguish. French v. Deane, 19 Colo. 504, 24 L. R. 387, 36 Pac. 609.

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Madison County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for assault and battery. Affirmed on condition.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. E. D. Kilbourn, H. H. Kilbourn, and M. F. Harrington for appellant.

Mr. Willis E. Reed, for appellee:

Practising any fraud or deception upon a person by which his or her consent is gotten to an undue liberty to his or her person is an assault.

1 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 805.

A wrongdoer is liable for the natural results of his trespass, and a jury may take into account the disgrace as well as physical suffering because of it.

In an action for assault and battery on a woman, alleging that it was with the intent and for the purpose of having sexual intercourse, failure to specifically instruct as to future mental pain and anguish is not error where there is no evidence tending to show that the injured person will suffer any such pain and anguish in the future. Luttermann v. Romey, 143 Iowa, 233, 121 N. W. 1040.

And it was held in Haupt v. Swenson, 125 Iowa, 694, 101 N. W. 520, in an action of simple assault upon a pregnant woman that the damages recoverable for mental suffering were such only as were the direct result of the assault upon the woman, apart from any alleged injury to the child.

In Atkins v. Gladwish, 25 Neb. 390, 41 N. W. 347, in an action for an indecent assault on a woman, an instruction that the jury might compensate the plaintiff for loss of good name, honor, and reputation, which included also mental anguish, was held erroneous, since the action was not for defamation of character.

In cases of seduction.

It is held, both in actions by one who has been seduced and in those brought by a parent, or one standing in loco parentis for the seduction of a child, that mental suffering constitutes an element of damages.

Thus, in an action for seduction brought by an unmarried woman she is entitled to recover for the mental suffering caused by the seduction. Gemmill v. Brown, 25 Ind. App. 6, 56 N. E. 691; Lampman v. Bruning, 120 Iowa, 167, 94 N. W. 562; Wilson v. Shepler, 86 Ind. 275; Simons v. Busby, 119 Ind. 13, 21 N. E. 451.

And there are dicta in Breon v. Henkle, 14 Or. 494, 13 Pac. 289, that where a statute intends giving an unfortunate woman an action for seduction where her consent to sexual intercourse has been secured through hypocrisy and artifice, she may recover for the mental anguish resulting.

And it is held that a parent may recover in an action for the seduction of his daughter, as an element of damages, the injury resulting to his feelings from the disgrace caused. Patterson v. Thompson, 24 Ark. 55; Simpson v. Grayson, 54 Ark. 404, 26 Am. St. Rep. 52, 16 S. W. 4; Robinson v. Burton, 5 Harr. (Del.) 335; Herring v. Jester, 2 Houst. (Del.) 66; Kendrick v. McCrary, 11 Ga. 603; Taylor v. Shelkett, 66 Ind. 297; Grable v. Margrave, 4 Ill. 372; 38 Am. Dec. 88; Ball v. Bruce, 21 Ill. 161; Garretson v. Becker, 52 Ill. App. 257; Mighell v. Stone, 175 Ill. 261, 51 N. E. 906; Palmer v. Baum, 123 Ill. App. 585; Pruitt v. Cox, 21 Ind. 15; Felkner v. Scarlet, 29 Ind. 154; Wilhoit v. Hancock, 5 Bush, 567; Emery v. Gowen, 4 Me. 33, 16 Am. Dec. 233; Cook v. Bartlett, 179 Mass. 576, 61 N. E. 266; Stoudt v. Shepherd, 73 Mich. 588, 41 N. W. 696; Fox v. Stevens, 13 Minn. 272, Gil. 252; Russell v. Chambers, 31 Minn. 54, 16 N. W. 458; Ellington v. Ellington, 47 Miss. 329; Morgan v. Ross, 74 Mo. 318; Comer v. Taylor, 82 Mo. 341; Rollins v. Chalmers, 51 Vt. 592; Clark v. Clark, 63 N. J. L. 1, 42 Atl. 770; Middleton v. Nichols, 62 N. J. L. 636, 43 Atl. 575; Magee v. Holland, 27 N. J. L. 86, 72 Am. Dec. 341; Hogan v. Cregan, 6 Robt. 138; Stiles v. Tilford, 10 Wend. 339; Kerns v. Hagenbuchle, 28 Jones & S. 228, 42 N. Y. S. R. 699, 17 N. Y. Supp. 369; Holliday v. Parker, 23 Hun, 74; Knight v. Wilcox, 18 Barb. 212; Badgley v. Decker, 44 Barb. 577; Scarlett v. Norwood, 115 N. C. 284, 20 S. E. 459; Ingwaldson v. Skrivseth, 7 N. D. 388, 75 N. W. 772; Parker v. Monteith, 7 Or. 277; Breon v. Henkle, 14 Or. 494, 13 Pac. 289; Phelin v. Kenderdine, 20 Pa. 354; Milliken v. Long, 188 Pa. 411, 41 Atl. 540; Love v. Masoner, 6 Baxt. 34, 32 Am. Rep. 522; Clem v. Holmes, 33 Gratt. 722; 36 Am. Rep. 793; Riddle v. McGinnis, 22 W. Va. 253; Barbour v. Stephenson, 32 Fed. 66, affirmed in 140 U. S. 48, 35 L. ed. 338, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 690; Andrews v. Askey, 8 Car. & P. 7; Hope v. Davidson, 33 U. C. Q. B. 550; Tullidge v. Wade, 3 Wils. 18; Dodd v. Norris, 3 Campb. 519, 14 Revised Rep. 832; Bedford v. McKowl, 3 Esp. 119; Terry v. Hutchinson, L. R. 3 Q. B. 599, 9 Best & S. 487, 37 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 259, 18 L. T. N. S. 521, 16 Week. Rep. 932.

Fay v. Swan, 44 Mich. 544, 7 N. W. 215; Sloan v. Edwards, 61 Md. 89; 5 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 11; West v. Forrest, 22 Mo. 344; Hawes v. Knowles, 114 Mass. 519, 19 Am. Rep. 383; Merest v. Harvey, 5 Taunt. 442, 1 Marsh. 139, 15 Revised Rep. 548.

Mental suffering and humiliation are proper to be considered, regardless of whether actual physical injury has been done.

Stewart v. Maddox, 63 Ind. 51; Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Fix, 88 Ind. 381, 45 Am. Rep. 464; Chicago, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Holdridge, 118 Ind. 281, 20 N. E. 837; Pennsylvania Co. v. Bray, 125 Ind. 229, 25 N. E. 439; Smith v. Holcomb, 99 Mass. 552; Hamilton v. Third Ave. R. Co. 53 N. Y. 25; Sprenger v. Tacoma Traction Co.

15 Wash. 660, 43 L.R.A. 706, 47 Pac. 17; Eddy v. Syracuse Rapid Transit R. Co. 50 App. Div. 109, 63 N. Y. Supp. 645; Ray v. Cortland & H. Traction Co. 19 App. Div. 530, 46 N. Y. Supp. 521; Sutherland, Damages, ¶ 943; Thomp. Neg. ¶ 3288; Ballou v. Farnum, 11 Allen, 73; Young v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 107 N. C. 370, 9 L.R.A. 669, 22 Am. St. Rep. 883, 11 S. E. 1044; Lucas v. Flinn, 35 Iowa, 9; Indiana R. Co. v. Orr, 41 Ind. App. 426, 84 N. E. 33; Goddard v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 57 Me. 202, 2 Am. Rep. 39; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Brett, 61 Tex. 483; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Gilbert, 64 Tex. 536; Bass v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 42 Wis. 654, 24 Am. Rep. 437.

Letton, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff is a young married woman living upon a farm with her husband. The

The court in Riddle v. McGinnis, 22 W. Va. 253, said: "It has long been well settled that in an action for seduction, and also in other actions for wilful and wanton injuries done to the person and reputation, as for assault and battery, libel, slander, false imprisonment, malicious prosecution, and the like, the plaintiff is entitled to recover damages not only for expenses incurred by him, but for the loss of his time, his bodily sufferings, and if the injury was wilful, for his mental anguish also (Sweeney v. Baker, 13 W. Va. 158, 31 Am. Rep. 757; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 267); and verdicts of juries awarding to the party injured, exemplary or punitive damages, have uniformly been sustained by the courts, except in cases where the damages were so enormous as to satisfy the court that the verdict was the result of 'prejudice, partiality, passion, or corruption.' Especially has this been done, and the verdicts upheld, in actions for seductions where the loss of the daughter's services and the value thereof have always been regarded as innocent legal fictions, used to give the court jurisdiction, while the real measure of damages was the shame, mortification, disgrace, dishonor, and mental suffering inflicted upon the parent by the wrongful act of the seducer."

And a recovery for mental anguish may be had although the daughter is of age. Lipe v. Eisenlerd, 32 N. Y. 229.

And an action for seduction may be maintained by a grandmother for the seduction of her granddaughter, and recovery may be allowed for the grief and affliction suffered in consequence of the act. Anderson v. Aupperle, 51 Or. 556, 95 Pac. 330.

And a brother in whose family his sister lives may recover for the distress of mind caused by her seduction. Paterson v. Wilcox, 20 U. C. Q. B. 385.

And a brother-in-law may also recover under such circumstances. Wilson v. Sproul, 3 Penr. & W. 49.

And one who has adopted in its infancy the child of a friend may recover, in an action for debauching her and getting her with child, for damages, in addition to the mere loss of service. Irwin v. Dearman, 11 East, 23, 10 Revised Rep. 423.

And in an action by the guardian of a minor for the latter's abduction recovery may be had for the mental pain inflicted upon the child. Brown v. Crockett, 8 La. Ann. 30.

And injury to the parents' feelings need not be separately averred in the declaration. 33 L.R.A.(N.S.)

Rollins v. Chalmers, 51 Vt. 592; Phillips v. Hoyle, 4 Gray, 568; Hatch v. Fuller, 131 Mass. 574; Lunt v. Philbrick, 59 N. H. 59. The court in the last case said: "General damages are such as may be presumed to result necessarily from the wrong complained of. The plaintiff's suffering from wounded feelings, including a sense of personal and family disgrace, being inferred as a natural and necessary consequence of the seduction of his daughter, a special averment of such damage is unnecessary."

And a parent may recover, in an action for the seduction of his daughter, for the anxiety of mind caused him as the parent of other children whose morals may be corrupted by the example set before them in the family. Stevenson v. Belknap, 6 Iowa, 97, 71 Am. Dec. 392.

And, in an action by a father for harboring, secreting, and concealing his minor daughter, and for persuading her to remain absent from his family against his will, recovery may be had for sorrow and distress of mind suffered by him. Stowe v. Heywood, 7 Allen, 118.

And in an action by a parent for the debauchment of his daughter where the debauchment was accomplished by force and arms, recovery may be had for mental anguish, although there was no seduction. Mohelsky v. Hartmeister, 68 Mo. App. 318.

Proof of unchastity, in actions by the parent for the seduction of his daughter goes only in mitigation of damages, and it is only where she was so notoriously unchaste prior to the seduction that the act added nothing to her parent's suffering that no damages could be awarded beyond what is suffered by the master as distinguished from the parent. Simpson v. Grayson, 54 Ark. 404, 26 Am. St. Rep. 52, 16 S. W. 4.

This note does not cover the question of whether mental anguish constitutes an element of damages in an action for breach of promise to marry, the plaintiff in which has been seduced.

For a note on right to recover for physical injury resulting from fright caused by a wrongful act, see note to Huston v. Freemansburg, 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 49, and the supplemental note thereto accompanying the case of Chittick v. Philadelphia Rapid Transit Co. 22 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1073.

For a note on right to recover for mental suffering caused by an assault where no bodily injury is inflicted, see note accompanying the case of Small v. Lonergan, 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 976.

J. T. W.

defendant is a widower, a farmer residing in the same neighborhood. On the night of August 9, 1906, somewhere between the hours of 9:00 and 11:00 o'clock, and after the plaintiff's family had retired, the defendant came to her home and stated that Mrs. Stubbert, a neighbor who lived with her husband about 2½ miles away, was about to be confined and was very sick; that two other women of plaintiff's acquaintance were at her home, and that they had requested that the plaintiff come over at once to assist. After some conversation the plaintiff took her three months' old infant and started for Stubbert's with the defendant, in his buggy. When they arrived close to the Stubbert home, which stood back from the road and was reached by a lane, the defendant drove beyond the lane in the direction of his own home, and, upon plaintiff stating that that was the Stubbert place, he turned back and was about to drive beyond the lane again, when the plaintiff jumped from the buggy with her infant and went to the house. She knocked at the door, and when it was opened asked Mrs. Stubbert if the other women whom defendant represented had sent for her were there, and was told they were not. She then asked if Mrs. Stubbert was sick, and was informed that there was nothing the matter with her. Upon thus finding out the deception which had been practised upon her, she went into the house and became very much agitated and alarmed, crying and lamenting her condition, and foreseeing neighborhood gossip. The defendant, in the meantime, had stopped his team near the house, and after some conversation with Mr. Stubbert had come into the room. Some conversation then was had as to her going home. Mrs. Stubbert suggested that her son Frank, a young man, take her home, but plaintiff testifies she was afraid to go with him on account of the defendant saying he would meet them at the corner. Mrs. Stubbert then sent Frank for the plaintiff's husband, who came and took her home. It was proved that in the conversation with Mr. Stubbert, defendant used language implying that plaintiff was a lewd and immoral woman. It was also shown that after this event gossip was rife in the neighborhood with respect to plaintiff's character, and that some of these rumors and stories had been communicated to her, but the court instructed the jury to disregard all the evidence with regard to such matters, except as to what was said to plaintiff herself by others. These are, in substance, the facts testified to by the plaintiff.

The defendant admitted that the story by which he procured the plaintiff to leave home and ride with him that night was false, and the only explanation he offers for his despicable conduct is that he had been drinking that day, and that it was his intention in this way to play a joke on the Stubberts, who had been married late in life. He denies any improper advances or that he laid hands on the plaintiff, except that he put the corner of her apron over the baby's face to protect it from the cold. The petition pleads the fraud and deception whereby plaintiff was decoyed from her home, an assault when she left the buggy, the derogatory statements as to her character made by defendant to Stubbert, loss of reputation and mental anguish, humiliation, mortification, and disgrace by reason of the position she was placed in, and consequent gossip in the community. The answer is a general denial. The plaintiff apparently is not very ready in her use of English. Her testimony is meager, and much of it was drawn out by the use of leading questions. There is absolutely no evidence of any physical injury either direct or indirect to her person. The evidence clearly shows that she wept and was greatly agitated after she had been informed of the deception practised upon her, and it is further shown that, in consequence of being told by neighbors that her reputation was suffering on account of the night ride with the defendant, she became somewhat nervous and suffered to some extent from sleeplessness. In this state of the evidence the court gave the following instructions among others:
23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

"No. 7. If you find for the plaintiff you will assess her damages at only such sum as you believe and find, from a full and fair consideration of all the facts and circumstances in evidence before you, will compensate her for the physical and nervous pain, mental distress and agony, if any you find, resulting from such deceit and unlawful acts of the defendant, which you find were committed by him, and, in determining the amount of such damages, you will also consider mental pain and suffering, resulting from communications, which you find were made to her, that she was a subject of public notoriety and scandal in the community where she lived, naturally resulting from such wrongful act of defendant, such damages, however, in no case to exceed the sum of $25,000.

"No. 8. You are instructed that this is not an action for slander or libel, but an action for damages by reason of the alleged assault and assault and battery, and deceit practised upon plaintiff by defendant to induce her to accompany him from her home, and if you find for the plaintiff, in determining the amount of her damages, you will in no manner consider or allow any sum as damages by reason of any alleged injury to her character and reputation by any statements concerning the same made by defendant or other persons."

"No. 2, tendered by plaintiff. Notwithstanding you may find from the evidence that the plaintiff bore no outward sign of physical suffering and pain, yet if you find from the evidence that plaintiff has by reason of defendant's acts and conduct toward and concerning plaintiff upon the night of July 27, 1906, suffered mental pain and anguish, your verdict should be for the plaintiff, and you should assess full damages therefor not exceeding the amount claimed in her petition."

Defendant's counsel insists that there was error in the giving of these instructions; that where the evidence shows mental anguish unaccompanied by any physical injury there can be no recovery, citing Atkins v. Gladwish, 25 Neb. 390, 41 N. W. 347, and a number of other cases mostly involving negligence or breach of contract. There is a decided conflict in the authorities as to whether in such cases there can be a recovery for mental suffering if unaccompanied by physical injury.

In states allowing punitive or exemplary damages, such suffering may usually be considered by the jury as an element of damages, but in states where only compensatory damages are allowed the prevailing rule, with some exceptions, seems to be that there must be some physical injury either directly or proximately caused by the wrongful act or omission before mental pain and anguish may be taken into account, although in telegraph cases this distinction does not seem to exist. The reason given for the rule usually is that, in the absence of any visible evidence of injury to the person, the opportunities for putting forth unfounded claims for damages would be so numerous, and the facilities afforded for depriving persons of their property by false charges would be so great, that the courts will not open the door to the train of evils that might in all probability be expected to enter if such a rule were adopted. We do not think it necessary to consider or distinguish the cases bearing upon this subject here. A number of them may be found collected and reviewed in note to West v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 7 Am. St. Rep. 530, in note to Green v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 1 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 349, and in note to Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Hayter, 77 Am. St. Rep. 856, which latter note, though dealing mainly with the subject of fright, includes many cases upon the general subject.

We consider the peculiar circumstances of this case to place it within the reason of another class of cases, where by an active and wilful or wanton act one has been injured in his personal rights and privileges, has been deprived of his liberty, or damaged in reputation, or outraged and humiliated in his personal self-respect or in the finer sentiments of his nature. Recovery for mental anguish, humiliation, and loss of reputation may be compensated without proof of actual pecuniary loss, in actions for libel and slander, where the matter is libelous per se (Laing v. Nelson, 40 Neb. 252, 58 N. W. 846; Boldt v. Budwig, 19 Neb. 739, 28 N. W. 280; Brooks v. Dutcher, 24 Neb. 300, 38 N. W. 780; Williams v. Fuller, 68 Neb. 354, 94 N. W. 118, 97 N. W. 246); in actions for malicious prosecution, which is held to be an attack on one's reputation (Miles v. Walker, 66 Neb. 728, 92 N. W. 1014; Minneapolis Threshing Mach. Co. v. Regier, 51 Neb. 402, 70 N. W. 934); in actions for criminal conversation (Smith v. Meyers, 52 Neb. 70, 71 N. W. 1006); for breach of promise (Musselman v. Barker, 26 Neb. 737, 42 N. W. 759); for digging up the dead body of plaintiff's son (Meagher v. Driscoll, 99 Mass. 281, 96 Am. Dec. 759); for wrongful ejection from cars, and for a conductor kissing a female passenger against her will (Smith v. Pittsburg, Ft. W. & C. R. Co. 23 Ohio St. 10; Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Fix, 88 Ind. 381, 45 Am. Rep. 464; Quigley v. Central P. R. Co. 11 Nev. 350, 21 Am. Rep. 757; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Flagg, 43 Ill. 365, 92 Am. Dec. 133); for being deprived of the remains by an undertaker to whose care the dead body of a daughter had been committed (Renihan v. Wright, 125 Ind. 536, 9 L.R.A. 514, 21 Am. St. Rep. 249, 25 N. E. 822); in an action for the abduction of a child (Magee v. Holland, 27 N. J. L. 86, 72 Am. Dec. 341).

The question whether such damages are of the nature of exemplary or compensatory is sometimes a very close one, but even in states which allow compensation only, damages are allowed which are not susceptible of precise computation and the amount of which must be left largely to the discretion of the jury, as witness the Nebraska cases above referred to. Note to Spellman v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 28 Am. St. Rep. 870; 1 Sutherland, Damages, §§ 95, 96. The subject is discussed at length in Smith v. Pittsburg, Ft. W. & C. R. Co. and in Quigley v. Lake Erie & W. R. Co. supra. The latter is a Nevada case, in which state it is held (Johnson v. Wells, F. & Co. 6 Nev. 224, 3 Am. Rep. 245) that ordinary mental anguish without physical injury is not a proper element of damages. If one is taken openly from his home by arrest under color of process, he may be permitted to recover damages for loss of reputation and mental suffering. What reason can there be for refusing a like compensation to one who is removed from her home by fraud and deceit, under circumstances which cast a cloud upon her reputation and caused unfavorable comment upon her character? Moreover, the acts of the defendant resulted in damage of precisely the same character as that which would have been caused by an oral or written attack on her reputation. Why should it not be compensated for in a like manner and to the same extent?

Conceding, for the purpose of argument, the soundness of the contention by defendant's counsel, that mental anguish without physical injury is not a proper element of damages in an action purely for assault, in this case the wrong was caused, and recovery is sought, not by and for the assault alone, but by the conjoined acts of deceit by which the plaintiff was induced to leave her home, the trespass upon her person by taking hold of her arm before reaching the Stubbert's home, the statements derogatory to her reputation made at the time by the defendant to Stubbert, and the mental suffering caused by the knowledge brought to the plaintiff as to the neighborhood gossip. We are of opinion that the argument does not fit the circumstances of this case, that Atkins v. Gladish, supra, is distinguishable, and that the jury properly took into account all the circumstances accompanying the transaction. As the case was submitted to the jury it was really an action for a trespass upon the person of plaintiff, a direct invasion of her personal rights; and the accompanying circumstances of mental suffering, humiliation, and injury to her social standing and reputation in the neighborhood constituted matter in aggravation. Matter in aggravation is something done by the defendant upon the occasion of the commission of the principal trespass, which is of a different legal character from, but not inconsistent with the trespass. Thus, upon a trespass for breaking and entering a house under a false charge that the plaintiff was concealing stolen property, whereby her quiet enjoyment was interrupted, and her character was injured, it was held that the trespass was the substantial allegation, and the rest matter of aggravation only. Bracegirdle v. Orford, 2 Maule & S. 77.

In trespass quare clausum fregit the gist of the action was the unlawful entry, but it was alleged in aggravation that the plaintiff's daughter was assaulted and ravished by the defendant. The assault was held to be merely matter of aggravation, and it was unnecessary to allege or prove a contract or loss of service. Bennett v. Alcott, 2 T. R. 31 L.R.A. (N.S.)

166; Donohue v. Dyer, 23 Ind. 521. See also East v. Cain, 49 Mich. 473, 13 N. W. 581, 14 N. W. 822. Anonymous, Minor (Ala.) 52, 12 Am. Dec. 31. The case is unusual in its facts, and we have devoted more time and labor to the investigation of the legal principles governing its disposition than perhaps was necessary or appears in this opinion.

We are satisfied the jury were entitled to consider the elements of damage submitted to them. In all cases of this class the damages are difficult of ascertainment, and must be left to the sound discretion of the jury. It is impossible to ascertain with any degree of precision what amount will compensate the plaintiff for the wrong suffered. Of course, if the verdict is for such an amount as to shock the conscience, or if it appears to be so disproportionate to the injury suffered that it appears to be the result of passion or prejudice, it cannot be upheld. The verdict for $3,000, however, seems to be excessive, and, considering all the circumstances, we think it must have been the result of passion or prejudice on the part of the jury. The plaintiff, therefore, will be required to remit the sum of $1,500 as a condition of affirmance, otherwise the case will be reversed and remanded for a new trial.

Rose, J., dissenting:

I dissent from the order requiring a remittitur as a condition of affirmance, for the reason that in my judgment the verdict is not excessive.

TEXAS SUPREME COURT.

MRS. M. W. CATHEY, Plff. in Err.,
v.

MISSOURI, KANSAS, & TEXAS RAIL-WAY COMPANY OF TEXAS.

(— Tex. —, 133 S. W. 417.)

Evidence — record copies — admissibility.

1. Record copies of reports by train men as to the time of passing of trains are not

Note. — Waiver of objection to testimony by cross-examination.

Cases are omitted where it was sought to rebut improper testimony, not by cross-examination, but by putting other witnesses on the stand. Only cases are included where the objection was raised and overruled on direct examination.

Majority rule.

By the weight of authority and of reason the objection that evidence offered is inadmissible in evidence upon the question of liability for setting out fire, where the reports are in existence, and not produced, and there is nothing to show that the testimony of those operating the trains could not have been produced.

Same. — inadmissibility — cross-examination — waiver.

2. One does not waive his objection to the incompetency of evidence which has been admitted by the court, by eliciting a repetition of it on cross-examination of the witness.

(January 18, 1911.)

ERROR to the Court of Civil Appeals for the Fifth Supreme Judicial District to review a judgment affirming a judgment of the District Court for Dallas County in admissible is not waived by the objecting party cross-examining the witness regarding the matter after the evidence has been admitted over his objection. Scarborough v. Blackman, 108 Ala. 656, 18 So. 735; Laver v. Hotaling, — Cal. —, 46 Pac. 1070; Ætna L. Ins. Co. v. Paul, 23 Ill. App. 611; Chicago v. Spoor, 190 Ill. 340, 60 N. E. 540; Metropolitan Nat. Bank v. Commercial State Bank, 104 Iowa, 693, 74 N. W. 26; Tabor v. Hardin, 9 Ky. L. Rep. 491; United R. & Electric Co. v. Corbin, 109 Md. 442, 72 Atl. 606; Barker v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 126 Mo. 143, 26 L.R.A. 843, 47 Am. St. Rep. 646, 28 S. W. 866.

Johnston v. Johnston, 173 Mo. 91, 61 L.R.A. 166, 96 Am. St. Rep. 486, 73 S. W. 202; Rourke v. Holmes Street R. Co. 221 Mo. 46, 133 Am. St. Rep. 468, 119 S. W. 1094; Costigan v. Michael Transp. Co. 33 Mo. App. 269; Pugh v. Ayres, 47 Mo. App. 590; Miles v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 76 Mo. App. 484; Pratt v. Missouri P. R. Co. 139 Mo. App. 502, 122 S. W. 1125 (dictum); Reynolds v. Publishers: Geo. Knapp & Co. — Mo. App. —, 135 S. W. 103 (admission of hearsay testimony); Marsh v. Snyder, 14 Neb. 237, 15 N. W. 341, distinguishing Cropsey v. Averill, 8 Neb. 151; Boylan v. Meeker, 28 N. J. L. 274; Finkelstein v. Keene Electric R. Co. 75 N. H. 303, 73 Atl. 705; Duff v. Lyon, 1 E. D. Smith, 536; Offitt v. State, — Okla. Crim. Rep. —, 113 Pac. 554; Horres v. Berkeley Chemical Co. 57 S. C. 189, 52 L.R.A. 36, 35 S. E. 500; Siebert v. Lott, 20 Tex. Civ. App. 191, 49 S. W. 783.

Thus, it has been held that the objection that evidence as to a custom among architects as to the amount of their compensation is inadmissible in a suit for compensation brought by an architect against one who had employed him, when there was no evidence that such custom was generally known to the public, is not waived by cross-examination regarding the matter, after the objection is overruled. Laver v. Hotaling, — Cal. —, 46 Pac. 1070.

In Laver v. Hotaling, supra, the court said: "It is urged that the existence of 33 L.R.A.(N.S.)

defendant's favor in an action brought to recover damages for the destruction of plaintiff's house by fire alleged to have been caused by the negligence of defendant's servants. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Carden, Starling, & Carden, for plaintiff in error:

A record kept by a station agent purporting to show the time of the arrival and departure of trains is not admissible in evidence for the purpose of showing such time or times, unless the party making the record is competent to testify that such record is correct, and they are properly identified and supported by the oath of the party making them as being correct.

the rule or custom of architects was developed on cross-examination of plaintiffs' witnesses; also that testimony concerning the same matter was given by a witness called by defendant, and hence that the latter cannot complain of the error. But the evidence of plaintiffs related to an alleged customary rule of charges, and we think defendant might, without waiving his objections, produce evidence either by cross-examination or from his own witnesses to exhibit the source of the alleged custom, and to show more clearly the incompetence of the plaintiffs' evidence in that behalf."

So, where plaintiff in an action for alleged libel has been allowed, in the first instance and before any other testimony has been given, to introduce witnesses to testify that plaintiff's general character for honesty and integrity was good, an objection to the admissibility of such testimony is not waived by cross-examination regarding such matter. Ætna L. Ins. Co. v. Paul, 23 Ill. App. 611.

In an action against a city by a landowner to recover damages caused by a viaduct in front of his land erected by the city, where by law such owner is not entitled to recover any damages caused by diversion of traffic, and where a witness for the plaintiff in testifying as to the damages stated the amount of damages, but did not specify any of the elements, the defendant city does not waive the right to object to such evidence, by eliciting on cross-examination the fact that the witness had included damages from the diversion of traffic as one of the elements in making up his estimate of damages, since his only purpose was to show that an improper element had been included. Chicago v. Spoor, 190 Ill. 340, 60 N. E. 540.

Asking a witness to repeat on cross-examination his account of an interview, improper because not part of the res gestæ, does not amount to a waiver of his right to urge an exception already saved to his direct testimony on the subject. Barker v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 126 Mo. 143, 26 L.R.A. 843, 47 Am. St. Rep. 646, 28 S. W. 860.

8 Enc. Pl. & Pr. p. 135; Ft. Worth & D. C. R. Co. v. Garlington, 41 Tex. Civ. App. 340, 92 S. W. 270; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Leggett, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 86 S. W. 1066; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Johnson, — Tex. —, 7 S. W. 838; Watson v. Miller, 82 Tex. 279, 17 S. W. 1053; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Christensen, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 78 S. W. 746; Cole v. Dial, 8 Tex. 347; Townsend v. Coleman, 18 Tex. 418, 20 Tex. 820.

Messrs. Thomas and Rhea, for defendant in error:

Record copies of reports by train men are admissible in evidence.

Missouri P. R. Co. v. Johnson, — Tex. —, 7 S. W. 838; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Williams, 38 Tex. Civ. App. 405.

The objection that a witness ought not to be permitted to testify to an impression which was not really a recollection is not waived by a cross-examination as to the source whence he derived his recollection. Pugh v. Ayres, 47 Mo. App. 590.

An overruled objection to the admissibility of declarations by a plaintiff, made to an agent of the defendant, which the latter was requested not to communicate to his principal, is not waived by cross-examination regarding the same. Miles v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 76 Mo. App. 484.

In an action for the price of a machine where the defense was a breach of warranty, the improper admission of evidence, under objection, on behalf of the defendant, that another machine sold by plaintiff to a third party was defective, was not waived by cross-examination respecting it. Marsh v. Snyder, 14 Neb. 237, 15 N. W. 341.

In a personal injury action against a street railway company, the improper admission, at the instance of the defendant, of the conductor's report of the accident, as a part of the conductor's testimony, is not waived by the plaintiff cross-examining the motorman, who has testified that the report stated the truth, as to his recollection of the report; since the witnesses' credibility was properly tested in this way after the report had been admitted as evidence before the jury. Finkelstein v. Keene Electric R. Co. 75 N. H. 303, 73 Atl. 705.

The error in allowing a witness to usurp the function of the jury by giving his opinion as to the amount of damage caused by a trespass is not waived by cross-examining the witness as to the items of this estimate of damage. Duff v. Lyon, 1 E. D. Smith, 536.

Testimony given on behalf of a defendant by a witness in a deposition, inadmissible because concerning hearsay and self-serving declarations made by another, is not made admissible because the plaintiff filed cross-interrogatories to the witness touching the matters about which she had testified in response to the direct interrogatories. Siebert v. Lott, 20 Tex. Civ. App. 191, 49 S. W. 783.

86 S. W. 38; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Startz, 42 Tex. Civ. App. 85, 94 S. W. 207; Rogers v O'Barr, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 81 S. W. 750; 9 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 918, 925; Post v. Kenerson, 52 L.R.A. Note (b) 577; Donovan v. Boston & M. R. Co. 158 Mass. 450, 33 N. E. 583; Firemen's Ins. Co. v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. 138 N. C. 42, 107 Am. St. Rep. 517, 50 S. E. 452; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Daniel, 122 Ky. 256, 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1190, 91 S. W. 691; Big River Lead Co. v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 123 Mo. App. 394, 101 S. W. 636; Mexican National R. Co. v. Musette, 7 Tex. Civ. App. 169, 24 S. W. 520; Gilmour v. Heinze, 85 Tex. 78, 19 S. W. 1075; Crystal Ice Mfg. Co. v. San Antonio

In Tabor v. Hardin, 9 Ky. L. Rep. 491, the court said: "It would be a severe rule which would hold that because a party cross-examines a witness upon evidence he has objected to, he thereby renders the evidence competent if the witness repeats it on the cross-examination, but this rule must be restricted to the cross-examination on the matter illegally drawn from the witness on the direct examination. If the party cross-examining interrogates as to new matter, he cannot then object to the answers, unless they really go to contradict the illegal testimony."

Minority rule.

But there are authorities which hold that an overruled objection to the admissibility of testimony is waived by eliciting a repetition of such testimony on cross-examination. Morrison Mfg. Co. v. Bryson, 129 Iowa, 645, 103 N. W. 1016, 106 N. W. 153; Gautieri v. Romano, 28 R. I. 246, note, 66 Atl. 652; Finnegan v. Waterhouse, — R. I. —, 67 Atl. 427; McClellan v. Carroll, — Tenn. —, 42 S. W. 185; Gammel-Statesman Pub. Co. v. Monfort, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 81 S. W. 1029; Sullivan v. Fant, 51 Tex. Civ. App. 6, 110 S. W. 507; Birkman v. Fahrenthold, 52 Tex. Civ. App. 335, 114 S. W. 428; Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Broom, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 114 S. W. 655; Eastham v. Hunter, 98 Tex. 560, 86 S. W. 323; Covington v. Sloan, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 124 S. W. 690 (citing no authorities); Trinity & B. Valley R. Co. v. Johnson, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 131 S. W. 1137.

Thus, it has been held that the error, if any, in allowing, over objection, a party to question one of his own witnesses concerning a memorandum used by such witness to refresh his memory, is waived by the opposite party asking the witness on cross-examination as to the whole matter. Morrison Mfg. Co. v. Bryson, supra.

So, it has been held that cross-examination as to the contents of a letter waives Brewing Asso. 8. Tex. Civ. App. 1, 27 S. W. 210.

On petition for rehearing.

The fact that plaintiff's attorney caused the witness to repeat and reread the testimony on cross-examination precludes him from complaining of the admission of said testimony in the first instance by the defendant over his objection.

Eastham v. Hunter, 98 Tex. 560, 86 S. W. 323; Birkman v. Fahrenthold, 52 Tex. Civ. App. 335, 114 S. W. 428; Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Broom, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 114 S. W. 655; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Pettit, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 117 S. W. 894; Gammel-Statesman Pub. Co. v. Monfort, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 81 S. W. 1029; Sullivan v. Fant, 51 Tex. Civ. App. 6, 110 S. W. 507; Kingsley v. Schmicker, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 60 S. W. 331; McDonald v. McCrabb, 47 Tex. Civ. App. 259, 105 S. W. 238.

an objection that verbal testimony as to its contents cannot be given where the letter itself is not produced or its absence accounted for. McClellan v. Carroll, — Tenn. —, 42 S. W. 185.

And that one whose objection to testimony has been overruled waives the objection by asking the witness on cross-examination to repeat what he said before, in the hope that the witness's testimony would be discredited by repeating it differently. Sullivan v. Fant, 51 Tex. Civ. App. 6, 110 S. W. 507.

And that in a suit for damages suffered in a horse trade, inadmissible testimony as to the market value of one of the horses is waived where on cross-examination the same testimony is elicited. Covington v. Sloan, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 124 S. W. 690.

And in Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. McCoy, —Tex. Civ. App. —, 117 S. W. 446, where a witness had testified as an expert, but cross-examination made it doubtful whether he was an expert, and a motion was made and overruled to strike out all his testimony as expert, it was held that the error, if any, was waived by further cross-examination which again brought out all the evidence which it had been sought to exclude.

The cases above from the Texas court of civil appeals which followed the minority rule must be considered overruled by CATHEY v. MISSOURI, K. & T. R. Co.

In Scott v. Union & P. Bank & T. Co. — Tenn. —, 130 S. W. 757, the court said: "While a cross-examination, with regard to incompetent testimony admitted over the objection of counsel, may be made, without waiving the objection, we do not think the cross-examiner can have a witness embody such testimony in his cross-examination, and yet rely upon his original objection," but how it is possible to cross-examine effectively, as to incompetent testimony admitted over objection, and yet embody such 33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Ramsey, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This suit was instituted in the district court of Dallas county by Mrs. Cathey against the Missouri, Kansas, & Texas Railway Company of Texas for the sum of $3,605 for the destruction of certain property belonging to her by fire, due to and occasioned by the negligence of certain employees of said company. On trial a verdict and judgment was rendered for the company. On appeal to the court of civil appeals for the fifth supreme judicial district the judgment of the court below was reversed. On rehearing, this reversal was set aside, and a judgment rendered affirming the judgment of the trial court.

1. In the opinion of the court of civil appeals it was correctly held that there was error in permitting the witness Tate-man to use the register purporting to show the time that passenger trains passed the testimony in the cross-examination, is a little difficult to see.

Where cross-examination supplies omissions.

While a party upon cross-examination does not necessarily waive his right to insist upon his objection to the evidence in chief, which he claims was incompetent, yet if the evidence in chief was immaterial, he cannot afterwards complain if his cross-examination has made it material. Leathers v. Bailer, 12 Ky. L. Rep. 190.

In an action upon the warranty of the soundness of a horse on its sale, the allowance of a hypothetical question, calling for the opinion of an expert as to the disease of which the animal died and as to whether it was sound on the day of sale, erroneous because it omitted to state the condition of the horse on that day, is cured when the other party on cross-examination supplies the omission and includes the omitted facts in his question. Van Hoesen v. Cameron, 54 Mich. 609, 20 N. W. 609.

Objections to competency of witnesses.

A timely objection to the competency of a witness is not waived by a cross-examination of such witness as to matters covered by the examination in chief after such objection is overruled. Goodlett v. Kelly, 74 Ala. 213; Scarborough v. Blackman, 108 Ala. 656, 18 So. 735; Johnston v. Johnston, 173 Mo. 91, 61 L.R.A. 166, 96 Am. St. Rep. 486, 73 S. W. 202; Gardner v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 124 Mo. App. 461, 101 S. W. 684; Bentley v. Bentley, 72 Neb. 803, 101 N. W. 976 (rule in case of depositions only was considered); Ogden v. Robertson, 15 N. J. L. 124; Boylan v. Meeker, 28 N. J. L. 274; Rogers v. Dibble, 3 Paige, 241; Neilson v. Bowman, 29 Gratt. 732; Calwell v. Prindle, 11 W. Va. 307; Carpenyards of the company at the place where the fire occurred on the date of such fire, and to read and state to the jury the time when the company's trains passed said yards, it appearing that while the witness had made such entries in said register on the date of the arrival and departure of such trains, that such entries were made from slips or cards prepared and furnished him by employees operating same, which cards were then in his possession, and not produced. In this connection it should also be stated that these agents were not shown to have left the employment of the company, nor was there any showing made that their testimony could not have been produced. It was not contended that Tate-man had any knowledge of the times of the arrival and departure of trains, except such as came to him from the original data, not produced, from which he states, and we assume states truly, he made up the register from which he testified. The time of the arrival of trains in Greenville, where the fire occurred, was a matter of first importance. The testimony of Tateman touching these matters was therefore undoubtedly material. That it was, under the circumstances, inadmissible cannot, we think, under the authorities, or on reason, be doubted. Missouri P. R. Co. v. Johnson, — Tex. —, 7 S. W. 838; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Leggett, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 86 S. W. 1066; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Christensen, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 78 S. W. 744; St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. McLeod, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 115 S. W. 85. The treatment of this question by the court of civil appeals in the original opinion filed in the case is so thorough and satisfactory that we do not need to say more on this point.

2. On motion for rehearing the court of civil appeals set aside its judgment on

tr. v. Ginder, 1 Wis. 243 (witness incompetent on the ground of interest).

—where witness is testifying at the trial.

Thus, it has been held that the objection that a witness, being a party, cannot testify against another as to the contents of letters received from a deceased person whose estate is interested in the result of the suit, is not waived by cross-examination regarding the matter after the objection is overruled. Scarborough v. Blackmar, 108 Ala. 656, 18 So. 735.

So the objection to the testimony of the surviving party to a cause of action, in his own behalf, which is forbidden by statute, is not waived by cross-examining him only as to matters covered by his examination in chief. Johnston v. Johnston, 173 Mo. 91, 17 L.R.A. 166, 96 Am. St. Rep. 486, 73 S. W. 202.

The objection that a witness, who is a party defendant, cannot testify as to a personal transaction with plaintiff's intestate, is not waived by a cross-examination of such witness even though the facts are more fully brought out on such cross-examination than they had been in chief, where the court, in accordance with equity practice, made no ruling, and permitted the defendant to testify, to the end that the question might be fully presented and determined by the appellate court. Donnell v. Braden, 70 Iowa, 551, 30 N. W. 777.

The objection that a husband cannot testify in favor of his wife is not waived by a cross-examination as to matters touched upon in the examination in chief after the objection is overruled. Gardner v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 124 Mo. App. 461, 101 S. W. 684.

But where the objection that a wife, who is a party to a suit, is incompetent to testify as to matters occurring between her and her deceased husband, is overruled, and she testifies, but the objection is thereafter sustained and the testimony excluded, the objection is waived where, after such exclusion, she is cross-examined as to such matters and the rejected evidence elicited anew; and such evidence cannot then be stricken out. Ables v. Ackley, 126 Mo. App. 84, 103 S. W. 974.
33 L.R.A.(N.S.)

—where testimony is taken by deposition.

At the taking of the deposition of the complainant in a suit for the specific performance of a contract instituted by him as purchaser against the heirs of the deceased vendor, the objection that such complainant cannot testify as a witness in his own behalf as to the terms of the contract between himself and the deceased vendor is not waived by a mere cross-examination of the complainant, coupled with a timely objection to his competency previously interposed. Goodlett v. Kelly, 74 Ala. 213.

So, at the taking of the deposition of a party to a suit in which the adverse party is the representative of a deceased person, the objection that such witness cannot testify as to transactions with the deceased is not waived by a cross-examination of such witness as to such matters. Bentley v. Bentley, 72 Neb. 803, 101 N. W. 976; Calwell v. Prindle, 11 W. Va. 307.

And where on the trial the evidence in chief is excluded on the objection of the personal representative, on the ground that the witness is incompetent, the cross-examination should also be excluded on the objection of the opposite side; since it falls with it. Bentley v. Bentley, supra.

So, should such cross-examination be excluded on the objection of the personal representative. Calwell v. Prindle, supra.

In Bentley v. Bentley, 72 Neb. 803, 101 N. W. 976, supra, the court said: "The notary has no power to exclude testimony, but must receive all that is offered, noting the objections and exceptions of the parties, to be ruled upon at the trial. The original hearing, and while adhering to its opinion that the testimony considered was inadmissible, ruled that since, on cross-examination, plaintiff in error caused the witness Tateman to repeat and reread the testimony theretofore objected to by her, that this constituted a waiver of her objection to same, and precluded her from complaining of the admission of the incompetent evidence. In support of this view the court cites the following authorities: Eastham v. Hunter, 98 Tex. 560, 86 S. W. 323; Gammel-Statesman Pub. Co. v. Monfort, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 81 S. W. 1029; Sullivan v. Fant, 51 Tex. Civ. App. 6, 110 S. W. 507; Birkman v. Fahrenthold, 52 Tex. Civ. App. 335, 114 S. W. 428; Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Broom, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 114 S. W. 655; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Pettit, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 117 S. W. 894; Kingsley v. Schmicker, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 60 S. W. 331; McDonald v. McCrabb, 47 Tex. Civ. App. 259, 105 S. W. 238. That some of these authorities do sustain this position, notably Sullivan v. Fant and Railway v. Petit, supra, does not admit of question. That the position is, however, unsound to our minds seems to be beyond dispute. Nor when read in the light of the facts and issues then before this court is this position sustained by the case of Eastham v. Hunter, 98 Tex. 560, 86 S. W. 323. A careful reading of the case, as contained in the official reports, and an inspection of the original record will demonstrate that the court was not then considering the admissibility of the testimony there discussed, but the language there used was with reference to its effect and probative force. In that case Hunter and others had sued Eastham and others for certain lands. An important issue in the case was: Was B. Eastham, then deceased, an innocent purchaser? To prove that B. Eastham did not have knowledge of such facts or any fact which would defeat his title, and the title of those claiming under him, as an innocent purchaser, the Easthams introduced one Pace, who testified that "at the time Eastham bought the land from me he did not know and did not have any knowledge, than that I had paid to Robert Hunter the full consideration named in the deed from Robert Hunter to me, but had reason to know that I had paid every cent called for in the said deed. If any part of the consideration named in the deed from Robert Hunter to me went to pay Robert Hunter's debt, Mr. Eastham did not know it." On cross-examination Pace only safe manner in which a defendant can proceed in such a case is to make his objection to each question on the direct examination, and to cross-examine upon the theory that the direct examination may be admitted by the trial court. If the direct examination, however, is excluded at the trial upon his objections upon the ground that the witness is incompetent, the cross-examination falls with it for the same reason, if objected to, and the plaintiff is not entitled to use it independently. A different rule would be decidedly unfair, since a party might fail to cross-examine because he believed the trial court would exclude the examination in chief, while, if the trial court admitted it in evidence, he would be deprived of the benefit of cross-examination entirely."

In Calwell v. Prindle, 11 W. Va. 307, supra, the court said: "I do not understand that it has ever been held that a party makes a witness, produced and examined by his adversary, his witness simply by cross-examining the witness as to matters and facts to which he has testified in his testimony given in chief. He does not, by such cross-examination, admit the competency of the witness to testify as to those matters, any more than he does the truth of his evidence, or his integrity of character."

The incompetency of a witness whose deposition is being taken by commission is not waived by putting in cross-interrogatories. Ogden v. Robertson, 15 N. J. L. 124.

33 L.R.A. (N.E.)

Where the incompetency of a witness is discovered only during the progress of the examination in chief at the taking of his deposition, an objection to his competency then raised is not waived by subsequent cross-examination of such witness; and the deposition may be suppressed. Rogers v. Dibble, 3 Paige, 241.

Where an objection to the competency of a party as a witness is written at the commencement of the deposition, the objection is not waived by cross-examination. Neilson v. Bowman, 29 Gratt. 732.

—where testimony in equity is taken before a master.

In a suit by a widow against the heirs of her deceased husband to set aside an antenuptial contract on the ground of misrepresentations by the deceased as to the extent of his property, where the matter was referred to a master merely to take proofs, an objection to the competency of the widow to testify in her own behalf as to transactions with the deceased, made at the taking of testimony before the master was not waived by a cross-examination of the widow; since the master was given authority merely to take proofs, and not to pass upon the competency of testimony, and he merely notes the objections as made and leaves their validity to be determined by the court. Achilles v. Achilles, 137 Ill. 589, 28 N. E. 45.

R. A. E.

testified upon the same subject as follows: 'Eastham did not know anything about the transaction until after it was completed, and at the time of my transaction with him we discussed the matter fully.' . . . At the time I traded with Robert Hunter I knew that Eastham knew nothing about it, but when I traded with Eastham I then explained to him the whole transaction.'"

On the evidence adduced on the trial, the court of civil appeals held in effect that, under the undisputed facts, Eastham was not an innocent purchaser, and that there was no evidence or not sufficient evidence on this question to form an issue for submission to the jury. This was the question and the sole question which Judge Brown was discussing in that portion of the opinion which is relied on to sustain the final conclusion of the court of civil appeals. When the opinion is read in the light of the facts, and with reference to the question before the court, that it does not sustain and support the conclusion which seems to have been understood by some of the courts is manifest.

It would indeed be a strange doctrine, and a rule utterly destructive of the right and all the benefits of cross-examination, to hold a litigant to have waived his objection to improper testimony because by further inquiry he sought on cross-examination to break the force or demonstrate the untruthfulness of the evidence given in chief, in the event, as would most usually occur, that the witness should on cross-examination repeat or restate some or all of his evidence given on his direct examination. In this case it was a matter of prime importance to the plaintiff in error to test the accuracy of Tateman's evidence, to show the inaccuracy of his means of information, and if it could be done to place before the jury the fact or any evidences of his unworthiness. In view of the fact that his testimony related to the movement of many trains, identified largely by names, it was practically impossible to conduct any intelligent or effective cross-examination without, as a basis of such inquiry, causing the witness to repeat, at least substantially, the testimony theretofore given by him. Believing and holding that the court of civil appeals erred in its judgment and opinion that the plaintiff in error had waived her objection to the incompetent evidence referred to above, its judgment is hereby reversed, and the cause will be remanded for further proceedings in accordance with law.

Petition for rehearing denied.
33 L.R.A.(N.S.)

WASHINGTON SUPREME COURT.

ROSCOE BRITTON, by Guardian ad Litem, Resp't.,

v.

WASHINGTON WATER POWER COMPANY, Appt.

(59 Wash. 440, 110 Pac. 20.)

Evidence — res gestæ — statements of person regaining consciousness.

1. Statements made by one rendered unconscious by a personal injury, immediately upon his regaining consciousness, eight days later, as to the cause of the injury, are admissible in evidence against one alleged to be responsible therefor, and the fact of the appearance of semiconsciousness before full consciousness returns goes to the weight of the evidence, and not to its admissibility.

Same — declarations of bystander.

2. The declaration of a passenger on a street car at a time when the conductor is attempting to drive a boy off the step, to the effect that he is off, before the conductor opens the door, is admissible in evidence as res gestæ, in an action by the boy to hold the company liable for injury alleged to have been caused by the conductor kicking him off the car.

Appeal — evidence — improper objections.

3. The objection that an answer of a witness was not responsive to the question propounded to him is not available on appeal, if not taken at the trial, where the answer was ruled out because inadmissible.

(August 1, 1910.)

Note. — Does the fact that one was not a participant or actor in an accident or affray render his statements or exclamations inadmissible as res gestæ.

The position taken in this case, that declarations of a character, and uttered under circumstances, which would make them otherwise admissible as res gestæ, are not to be excluded because they were uttered by a bystander who was not an actor or participant in the transaction, except as he was made such by the declarations themselves, is sustained by the great weight of authority, as shown in the note to Louisville R. Co. v. Johnson, 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 133.

The same position is taken, at least by a majority of the court, in Cromeenes v. San Pedro, L. A. & S. L. R. Co. — Utah —, 109 Pac. 10; and while there are expressions in the opinion of McCarthy, J., which, taken apart from the context, might be regarded as sustaining the contrary position, it is apparent from his opinion as a whole that the only sense in which the person whose statements or declarations are offered as res gestæ must be a participant or actor in the transaction is that the declarations or statements must be so contemporaneous, and so calculated to elucidate the event or transaction, as to be in themselves, as it were, a APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for Spokane County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries for which defendant was alleged to be responsible. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Post, Avery, & Higgins for appellant.

Messrs. Plummer & Latimer, for respondent:

The court did not err in permitting the plaintiff, when on the stand as a witness, over defendant's objection, to state what he told his mother concerning the accident, and how it happened, eight days thereafter.

Dixon v. Northern P. R. Co. 37 Wash. 310, 68 L.R.A. 895, 107 Am. St. Rep. 810, 79 Pac. 943, 2 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 620.

The court did not err in refusing to permit the defendant to prove that, at the time of the accident, when the conductor started to open the car door, someone on the rear platform, who was observing the transaction said, "The boy is off!"

Ibid.

Gose, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a suit to recover damages for personal injuries sustained by a minor. The part of the transaction, and thus make the person who uttered them an actor or participant therein. The question in issue in that case was the negligence of an engineer in charge of a train that ran over a boy in the street, and the declarations which the majority of the court held admissible, and the minority inadmissible, as res gestæ, were those of an eyewitness of the accident, who walked about a car's length, to where the engineer was standing, and said to him: "You have done a damn fine job. Why didn't you stop before you ran over him?" In arguing against the admissibility of these declarations as res gestæ, the minority opinion not only alluded to the fact that the witness did no act which contributed to the unfortunate occurrence, and was in no way connected with it, except as a mere spectator, but also to the fact that the statement made by him to the engineer did not tend to explain or illustrate any fact or circumstance leading up to or in any way connected with the accident. It is to be observed that the latter point in itself, if well founded, would have been sufficient to exclude the declarations as res gestæ, irrespective of the question whether they proceeded from a participant or actor in the transaction or not. The majority of the court were of the opinion that the declarations were in themselves properly admissible as res gestæ, and that they were not to be excluded because they were made by a mere bystander, who was otherwise not a participant or actor in the transaction. The opinion of McCarthy, J., on this point, 33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

fact asserted and relied upon for a recovery is that Roscoe Britton, a minor thirteen years of age, was stealing a ride on the step of one of the defendant's street cars, and that the conductor opened the door of the vestibule and kicked him off, causing him serious injury. There was a verdict and judgment for the plaintiff. The defendant has appealed. The admitted facts are that the appellant, at the time of the happening of the accident, was a common carrier of passengers for hire, and operating electric cars in the city of Spokane; that the car upon which the accident occurred has a vestibule, opening on each side onto steps used by passengers in entering and leaving the car; that the left door is kept closed, and the right one open, when the car is in service, and that the boy was stealing a ride on the step on the closed side of the car at the time he sustained the injury. The appellant asserts that the boy fell from the step, whilst he insists that he was kicked off the car by the conductor. This was the chief issue at the trial. It is conceded that, immediately after the accident happened, the boy was taken to his home in an unconscious condition.

The boy and his mother, who is also his guardian ad litem, were permitted to testify in substance that the boy remained uncon-seems to lend some support to the suggestion made in the note already referred to, that the view that declarant must have been an actor or participant in the transaction in the sense that he must have been the victim of the transaction, or have had some responsibility connected therewith, may have grown out of a misapprehension of the language employed by the courts in expressing the inherent necessity that the declarations must have been so close in point of time, and of so spontaneous and unreflective a character, and so calculated to elucidate the transaction, as to make the declarant, as it were, an actor or participant therein. It is to be observed, as pointed out in that note, that participation in this sense is essential in all cases to render the declarations admissible as res gestæ, whether the declarant was otherwise connected with the transaction or not; and therefore cases that merely insist upon participation in this sense do not lend any real support to the view that the mere fact that declarations or statements proceed from one not an actor or participant in the transaction renders inadmissible statements which would otherwise be admissible as res gestæ. The opinion of the chief justice in the Cromeenes Case approves the suggestion in the note that, if there is any difference at all in this respect between one who was an actor and participant and one who was not, it would seem to be in favor of the declarations of the nonactor or participant, assuming that they were otherwise proper matter of res gestæ:

G. H. P.

scious for a period of eight days, when he became conscious, and at once stated to the mother that the conductor kicked him off the car. The appellant contends that this was error. We think the statement was a part of the res gestæ. One exception to the rule excluding hearsay evidence is that, when something has occurred, startling enough to produce nervous excitement, spontaneous utterances of parties present are admissible in evidence as a part of the res gestæ. It is not always necessary that the statement be made at the exact time that the shock occurs. The material inquiry always is whether the statements offered as evidence were made at a time and under such circumstances as to induce the belief that they were not the result of reflection or premeditation. They derive their admissibility and credibility purely from the circumstances out of which they arise. "The utterance must have been before there has been time to contrive and misrepresent; i. e., while the nervous excitement may be supposed still to dominate, and the reflective powers to be yet in abeyance." 3 Wigmore, Ev. § 1750. "There is no imaginary line somewhere between a few hours and a few days, or a few weeks, on one side of which declarations in favor of a party are admissible in evidence, while on the other they are inadmissible. Unless such complaints form a part of the res gestæ, they cannot be admitted. And if they are so far detached from the occurrence as to admit of the deliberate design and be the product of a calculating policy on the part of the actors, then they cannot be regarded as a part of the res gestæ." Kennedy v. Rochester City & B. R. Co. 130 N. Y. 654, 29 N. E. 141. "The time of the occurrence of the principal act is sometimes, by reason of some special circumstance, extended forward so as to make it coincident and connected with subsequent declarations by constructive continuity of time; as, for instance, when the party making the declarations, having become unconscious at the very moment of the occurrence of the principal act, the declarations are made by him at the very moment of his regaining consciousness; under such conditions the act and the declarations are said to be simultaneous by relation, the declarations being spontaneous." 24 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law. 2d ed. p. 685. See also Walters v. Spokane International R. Co. 58 Wash. 293, 108 Pac. 593.

In the case last cited we said that it is not always essential that the declarations and principal occurrence shall concur in point of time, but that in many instances the fact that a considerable period of time has intervened does not destroy their admissibility as evidence. We further said that the circumstances of each case "should be carefully weighed by the trial judge in exercising his sound discretion." The controlling consideration in each case is, Was the declaration a spontaneous, impulsive statement of a fact? If so, it is a part of the occurrence and is admissible. Dixon v. Northern P. R. Co. 37 Wash. 310, 68 L.R.A. 895, 107 Am. St. Rep. 810, 79 Pac. 943, 2 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 620.

Tested by the principles we have stated, it is clear that the evidence was properly admitted. The declarations were made, as the witnesses assert, as soon as consciousness was restored. There had been no opportunity for reflection or deliberation. They were as much a part of the occurrence as if they had been made when the boy was raised from the street, immediately after falling. So far as he was concerned, there was no conscious intervening time between the injury and the declaration.

The appellant criticizes the form of the questions, and urges that the evidence does not show that the statement was made as soon as the boy regained consciousness. We do not think a fair reading of the evidence warrants the criticism. The fact that Dr. Martin testified that the boy was semiconscious on the fifth or sixth day after the accident does not make the declaration of the boy inadmissible. It goes to the weight, and not to the admissibility, of the declaration as evidence. But it is said: "If such evidence is admissible, then unscrupulous persons can dishonestly flood the record with evidence that can be neither combated nor anticipated, for the sole purpose of mulcting a defendant in damages." The answer is that no rule of evidence has been formulated by man that can prevent perjury. Litigants must, in the last analysis, rely upon the justice and good sense of juries. The authorities cited by counsel from other jurisdictions need not be reviewed, as they are not in harmony with the view hitherto taken by this court.

One of the respondent's witnesses upon direct examination stated that, when the boy was observed riding upon the step, the conductor pulled the bell cord and started to open the door, when someone said, "The boy is off!" This statement was stricken on motion of the respondent. The boy testified that, when he got onto the step, the door was closed, and that the conductor opened the car door and kicked him off. The appellant insisted at the time the statement was stricken, and insists here, that it was admissible as a part of the res gestæ. The learned trial court, however, ruled that it was inadmissible. In this, we think, he committed prejudicial error. If the declaration of the boy is admissible as forming a part of the occurrence, as we have held, it would seem to follow that the exclamation of a bystander, contemporaneous with the occurrence, is also admissible. The exclamations of the third parties present are as much a part of the res gestæ as those of the parties themselves. 3 Wigmore, Ev. § 1755; Johnson v. St. Paul & W. Coal Co. 126 Wis. 492, 105 N. W. 1048; Dale v. Colfax Consol. Coal Co. 131 Iowa, 67, 107 N. W. 1096; Harrill v. South Carolina & G. Extension R. Co. 132 N. C. 655, 44 S. E. 109; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Tullis, 41 Tex. Civ. App. 219, 91 S. W. 317; Seawell v. Carolina C. R. Co. 133 N. C. 515, 45 S. E. 850; Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Crosby, 53 Fla. 400, 43 So. 318; Wharton, Ev. § 262; 24 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. pp. 685, 686.

Johnson v. St. Paul & W. Coal Co. was an action to recover damages for personal injuries. The plaintiff, a hatch tender, alleged that he was struck by a sheave hook used to lower coal buckets into the vessel. A witness, having testified that he saw the boy fall, was permitted to state that a moment later he heard someone say: "The hook hit him!" The court said that the exclamation was clearly a part of the res gestæ. In Dale v. Colfax Consol. Coal Co. the plaintiff, a brakeman, attempting to alight to make a coupling, fell to the track, and was run over by the car on which he had been riding. The negligence charged was that the defendant's employees failed to stop the train after they knew of the plaintiff's peril. It was held, as bearing on the question whether the conductor had actual knowledge of the plaintiff's situation, that the statements of persons on the car in the presence of the conductor, and their acts within the scope of his observation, could be shown as tending to establish his actual knowledge. In Harrill v. South Carolina & G. Extension R. Co. a personal injury suit, the deceased was killed, while moving an engine over a bridge, by the falling of the bridge. The engine had crossed that part of the bridge over the water, and had reached the trestle on the ground, when bystanders exclaimed: "Jake is safe!" The trestle suddenly gave way, and the engine and tender were thrown back and fell into the water. It was held that the exclamation was competent evidence, going to show the dangerous condition of the bridge, the peril of crossing, and the effect the effort to cross had on the bystanders. In Walters v. Spokane International R. Co. we held that there was a large discretion in the trial judge in receiving and rejecting evidence of this nature. A due regard for the administration of justice, however, forbids that declarations forming a part of the occurrence out of which the cause of action springs shall be admitted as to one litigant and denied as to another. The exclamation was so clearly a part of the res gestæ, and so vitally affected the issue to which it referred, that its rejection was highly prejudicial. The respondent relies upon Dixon v. Northern P. R. Co. 37 Wash. 310, 68 L.R.A. 895, 107 Am. St. Rep. 810, 79 Pac. 943, 2 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 620. In that case it was said that "there is no showing that the stranger, who was not able to be found at the trial, was in any way connected with the accident." In the case at bar the evidence shows that there were passengers upon the car who were not produced as witnesses. The exclamation, "The boy is off!" shows that it was made under the pressure of excitement, and that it was the spontaneous, impulsive statement of one who believed that it expressed the truth.

The respondent asserts that the question is not properly before us, for the reason that the statement was not responsive to the question propounded to the witness. The record, however, shows that the appellant's counsel stated to the court that the exclamation was a part of the res gestæ, and reserved his exception to the ruling. Neither the objection to the statement nor the ruling of the court was placed upon the technical ground that the answer was not responsive to the question, but upon the broad ground that it was not competent. The appellant was not required to pursue the matter.

The judgment is reversed.

Rudkin, Ch. J., and Chadwick and Fullerton, JJ., concur.

SOUTH CAROLINA SUPREME COURT.

STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA

v.

ED. L. ABBOTT et al., Appts.

(— S. C. —, 70 S. E. 6.)

Criminal law — suspension of sentence — power of court.

1. A court has no power to suspend a sentence of imprisonment during the good behavior of the convict.

Note. — Power of court to suspend sentence or stay execution of sentence.

It may be stated generally that a court has power temporarily to suspend sentence in order to afford time for motions for new trials, appeals, etc., and to inform itself as to sentence to be pronounced. A conflict, however, exists as to the power of courts to suspend sentence indefinitely, some decisions holding such a suspension Same — effect — enforcement of sentence.

2. The invalidity of an attempt by a court to suspend a sentence of imprisonment during good behavior of the convict does not affect the validity of the sentence, and it may be enforced even though the time covered by the sentence has expired.

Same — shortening of term by statute — effect.

3. The right to require a convict whose sentence was illegally suspended by the court, to serve his full term of imprisonment, is not affected by the fact that, since suspension took effect, the legislature shortened the term for which persons convicted of the offense involved could be imprisoned, to a period less than that imposed by the original sentence.

(February 2, 1911.)

to be an infringement upon the executive power to reprieve and pardon.

Power to suspend sentence temporarily.

Little conflict exists upon the question of the power of courts to suspend sentence temporarily. It is generally held, without mention being made of statutory authority, that sentence may be suspended for a reasonable time. Ragland v. State, 55 Fla. 157, 46 So. 724; Harris v. Nixon, 27 App. D. C. 94; People v. Mueller (Ill. C. C.) 4 Crim. L. Mag. 725; People v. Reilly, 53 Mich. 260, 18 N. W. 849; State v. Addy, 43 N. J. L. 113, 39 Am. Rep. 547; United States v. Folsom, 8 N. M. 651, 46 Pac. 447; People v. Blackburn, 6 Utah, 347, 23 Pac. 759; United States v. Wilson, 46 Fed. 748.

And it is expressly held in some of the decisions that this right exists at common law. People ex rel. Dunnigan v. Webster, 14 Misc. 617, 36 N. Y. Supp. 745, affirmed in 1 App. Div. 631, 37 N. Y. Supp. 1148; People v. Graves, 31 Hun, 382; People v. Harrington, 3 N. Y. Crim. Rep. 139; People ex rel. Forsyth v. Court of Sessions, 141 N. Y. 288, 23 L.R.A. 856, 36 N. E. 386, 15 Am. Crim. Rep. 675; State v. Hilton, 151 N. C. 687, 65 S. E. 1011.

And courts have power to suspend sentence pending an appeal. People v. Felker, 61 Mich. 110, 27 N. W. 869; State ex rel. Cary v. Langum, — Minn. —, 127 N. W. 465; King v. Johnston, 16 Kan. C. C. 296.

And a court may suspend sentence after conviction, to ask advice of the upper court on points of law which arose upon the trial. People v. Barmo, 6 Park. Crim. Rep. 657.

And they may suspend sentence for the purpose of enabling the defendant to move for a new trial. Weaver v. People, 33 Mich. 296, 1 Am. Crim. Rep. 552; People v. Brown, 54 Mich. 15, 19 N. W. 571; People v. Kennedy, 58 Mich. 372, 25 N. W. 318; Re Strickler, 51 Kan. 700, 33 Pac. 620; Re Beck, 63 Kan. 57, 64 Pac. 971; State v. Schierhoff, 103 Mo. 47, 15 S. W. 151.

And to enable the court to determine what sentence should be imposed. People 33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

APPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the General Sessions Circuit Court for Spartanburg County, convicting them of gaming. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. C. P. Sims and H. E. DePass, for appellants:

Sentences, unless legally stayed,—that is, by appeal,—commence to run at once, and continue in full force from that date until they cease to operate by their own terms; and after the period or term of a sentence has expired the court loses further jurisdiction of the defendant, and all orders and judgments rendered in the case after the expiration of the term of the sentence are void.

Re Markuson, 5 N. D. 180, 64 N. W. 939; State v. Voss, 80 Iowa, 467, 8 L.R.A.

v. Kennedy, 58 Mich. 372, 25 N. W. 318; People v. Felker, 61 Mich. 110, 27 N. W. 869.

And for the purpose of awaiting the result of another pending trial of the defendant. People v. Robertson, 6 Cal. App. 514, 92 Pac. 498; Ex parte Williams, 26 Fla. 310, 8 So. 425.

But where trial of another indictment is not prosecuted with despatch, the court will not stay judgment on an indictment for not repairing a bridge. Rex v. Southampton, 2 Chitty, 215.

It is held that every reasonable presumption will be made on appeal in favor of the propriety of the court's actions in granting a suspension of sentence. Harris v. Nixon, 27 App. D. C. 94; Smith v. Hess, 91 Ind. 424.

And it was held in Webster v. State, 43 Ohio St. 696, 4 N. E. 92, that the circuit court had power to suspend sentence pending a hearing on error, and that this power was not defeated by a statute providing for the execution of the death sentence, unless suspended by the supreme court, or two judges thereof.

But it is doubtful whether a magistrate making a summary conviction can suspend the issue of the warrant of commitment. Re Lynch, 12 Can. C. C. 141.

And it has been held that the court of oyer and terminer ought not to delay sentence after a verdict of guilty, for the purpose of having the decision reviewed, except in cases of great doubt. Colt v. People, 1 Park. Crim. Rep. 611.

And it has been held that even in capital cases it is seldom necessary to delay the sentence, since the governor is authorized to act in such cases. Ibid.

And it has been held that in cases where the law gives the judges discretion over the quantum of punishment, they may suspend sentence, but that it is irregular in other cases to annex to the sentence any condition for its subsequent remission. State v. Bennett, 20 N. C. 170 (4 Dev. & B. L. 43).

767, 45 N. W. 898; Re Strickler, 51 Kan. 700, 33 Pac. 620; Weaver v. People, 33 Mich. 296, 1 Am. Crim. Rep. 552; Com. v. Foster, 122 Mass. 317, 23 Am. Rep. 326, 2 Am. Crim. Rep. 499; Re Webb, 89 Wis. 354, 27 L.R.A. 356, 46 Am. St. Rep. 846, 62 N. W. 177, 9 Am. Crim. Rep. 702; Neal v. State, 104 Ga. 509, 42 L.R.A. 190, 69 Am. St. Rep. 175, 30 S. E. 858; Miller v. Evans, 115 Iowa, 101, 56 L.R.A. 101, 91 Am. St. Rep. 143, 88 N. W. 198; Fults v. State, 2 Sneed, 232; State v. Crook, 115 N. C. 763, 29 L.R.A. 260, 20 S. E. 514; People ex rel. Forsyth v. Court of Sessions, 141 N. Y. 288, 23 L.R.A. 856, 36 N. E. 386, 15 Am. Crim. Rep. 675; Tuttle v. Lang, 100 Me. 123, 60 Atl. 893; People ex rel. Boenert v. Barrett, 202 Ill. 287, 63 L.R.A. 82, 95

Am. St. Rep. 230, 67 N. E. 23; People v. Blackburn, 6 Utah, 347, 23 Pac. 759; Re Flint, 25 Utah, 338, 95 Am. St. Rep. 853, 71 Pac. 531; People v. Kennedy, 58 Mich. 372, 25 N. W. 318; United States v. Wilson, 46 Fed. 748; People ex rel. Smith v. Allen, 155 Ill. 61, 41 L.R.A. 473, 39 N. E. 568; Weaver v. People, 33 Mich. 296, 1 Am. Crim. Rep. 552; People v. Morrisette, 20 How. Pr. 118, 2 Am. Crim. Rep. 475; Ex parte Clendenning, 1 Okla. Crim. Rep. 227, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1042, 97 Pac. 650.

Mr. J. C. Otts, for the State:

The attempted suspension of the execution of so much of the sentence as imposed imprisonment upon the defendants was void.

Ex parte Nixon, 2 S. C. 4; State v. Full-

And in White v. State, 134 Ala. 197, 32 So. 320, it was held that the mere prosecution of an appeal does not have the effect of suspending sentence, but that only an order of the court which pronounced sentence can suspend it.

Where a writ of error is taken out before sentence has been pronounced, an order staying proceedings until determination of the case on error will be denied, with permission, however, to take out a new writ of error if sentence is pronounced, and to file another application for a stay of proceedings. People v. West, 143 Mich. 586, 107 N. W. 283.

—indefinitely.

There is a conflict among the decisions as to whether a court has power to suspend sentence indefinitely.

Some cases deny the power of the court to suspend sentence indefinitely, since it infringes on the pardoning power vested in the executive branch of the government. Grundel v. People, 33 Colo. 191, 108 Am. St. Rep. 75, 79 Pac. 1022; Republic v. Pedro, 11 Haw. 287; People ex rel. Smith v. Allen, 155 Ill. 61, 41 L.R.A. 473, 39 N. E. 568; People ex rel. Boenert v. Barrett, 202 Ill. 287, 63 L.R.A. 82, 95 Am. St. Rep. 230, 67 N. E. 23; Gray v. State, 107 Ind. 177, 8 N. E. 16; Re Strickler, 51 Kan. 700, 33 Pac. 620; Tuttle v. Lang, 100 Me. 123, 60 Atl. 892; Com. v. Maloney, 145 Mass. 205, 13 N. E. 482; People v. Brown, 54 Mich. 15, 19 N. W. 571; Re Flint, 25 Utah, 338, 95 Am. St. Rep. 853, 71 Pac. 531; United States v. Wilson, 46 Fed. 748.

The court in People ex rel. Smith v. Allen, supra, said: "Our Constitution confers the pardoning power upon the executive branch of the state government, and the governor alone can prevent the infliction of punishment after a legal conviction. Courts may undoubtedly set aside verdicts of guilty, and grant new trials, or arrest the judgment; but they have no power to allow the conviction to stand, and at the same time defeat its operation by an indefinite postponement of sentence. If 33 L.R.A.(N.S.)

the conviction is wrongful, or the punishment fixed by the jury excessive, or if material and substantial errors have intervened in the finding and return of the indictment or upon the trial, the court has ample power, and it is its duty, to interfere; but when that relief is denied the prisoner, it is the plain duty of the court to pronounce judgment."

See also Ex parte Peterson, — Idaho, —, — L.R.A.(N.S.) —, 113 Pac. 729, holding that, by an indefinite suspension of sentence, the court loses jurisdiction of the defendant, and cannot thereafter order his commitment.

And a police magistrate has no such power. Blazier v. Keffer, — N. J. L. —, 75 Atl. 439.

In other cases it has been held that an indefinite suspension of sentence is within the power of the court. People v. Mueller (Ill. C. C.) 4 Crim. L. Mag. 725; State ex rel. Buckley v. Drew, 75 N. H. 402, 74 Atl. 875; State ex rel. O'Connor v. Drew, — N. H. —, 76 Atl. 191.

And in 9 Am. L. Rev. 600, an account taken from a newspaper is given of the suspension of sentence in a case of manslaughter, upon the defendant's own recognition, where the defendant was the wife of the deceased, and upon great provocation had thrown an instrument which resulted in her husband's death.

And judgment was suspended in Reg. v. Richardson, 4 Jur. 104, 8 Dowl. P. C. 511, upon condition that defendant should not again repeat the offense. No question of the court's power, however, seems to have been raised in the case.

It was held in State v. Brewer, — N. J. L. —, 59 Atl. 31, that a writ of error would not lie where the court had suspended sentence, since the writ lies only to review a final judgment.

The fact that the order of suspension, entered at the instance of the prisoner, after judgment and sentence, does not show that he was present, does not vitiate the trial, judgment and sentence. State v. Young, 50 W. Va. 96, 88 Am. St. Rep. 846, 40 S. E. 334.

McCord, L. 178; State v. Smith, 1 Bail. L. 283, 19 Am. Dec. 679; State v. Kitchens, 2 Hill, L. 612, 27 Am. Dec. 410; State v. Chancellor, 1 Strobb. L. 350, 47 Am. Dec. 557; 2 Hawk, P. C. chap. 21, § 1.

Woods, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Under a plea of guilty to an indictment for gaming against the defendants, Ed. L. Abbott and Frank Dearman, the following sentence was imposed by the Honorable R. C. Purdy, Presiding Judge, at the July term of the court of general sessions for Spartanburg county: "It is the sentence and judgment of the court that the defendants, E. L. Abbott and Frank Dearman, do each pay a fine of $60, and do each per-suspension upon suggestion of insanity.

The court has power to suspend sentence where there is reasonable ground to believe defendant insane. Ince v. State, 77 Ark. 416, 88 S. W. 818; People v. Knott, 122 Cal. 410, 55 Pac. 154; Williams v. State, 45 Fla. 128, 34 So. 279; State ex rel. Chandler, 45 La. Ann. 696, 12 So. 884; Bonds v. State, Mart. & Y. 142, 17 Am. Dec. 795.

And the power of the judge before whom an application for an examination as to the sanity of one convicted of a capital offense is authorized is necessarily implied from his authority to make the investigation. State v. Barker, 79 Neb. 361, 112 N. W. 1143, 113 N. W. 197.

And in some states it is provided by statute that in case a defendant is found insane after verdict, and before sentence, he shall be confined in an asylum until he becomes sane, when sentence shall be pronounced. State v. Helm, 69 Ark. 167, 61 S. W. 915.

It was held in State v. Brinyea, 5 Ala. 241, that if a person after verdict, and before sentence, becomes insane, it is a good reason to stay sentence.

And it was held in State v. Vann, 84 N. C. 722, that where the defendant in a capital case, after conviction, suggests insanity, the judgment must be suspended until this issue can be tried; and if such suggestion is made after judgment, execution must be stayed.

But where the jury have passed on the defendant's sanity, and no change in his condition is shown to have taken place, no reason for suspending sentence is shown. State v. Brinyea, supra; Nobles v. Georgia, 168 U. S. 398, 42 L. ed. 515, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 87.

And where the court is satisfied that there is no doubt as to the sanity of one who has been found guilty of murder, he may pronounce sentence, although a plea of insanity had been interposed after verdict. Bonds v. State, Mart & Y. 142, 17 Am. Dec. 795.

43 L.R.A. (N.S.)

form hard labor upon the public works of Spartanburg county for one year or each be imprisoned in the jail of said county, or the state penitentiary, at hard labor, for one year. Upon the payment of the fine imposed above this sentence will be suspended as to either or both defendants paying their fines, respectively, as to imprisonment during the good behavior of the defendants, respectively."

The defendants paid the fines imposed, and have since been at large. In July, 1910, orders were made by Hon. W. B. Gruber, Special Judge, reciting that it had been made to appear to the court that the defendants had violated the terms on which the sentence of imprisonment was suspended, and requiring the defendants to show

And after a conviction in a case where the jury have found the defendant sane at the time the crime was committed, the court will not entertain a plea that the defendant became insane after the commission of crime, which is offered when the defendant is called for sentence, where there are no corroborative affidavits filed or any fact stated which might move the court to further inquiry. Com. v. Buccieri, 153 Pa. 535, 26 Atl. 228.

It was held in Wilson's Case, 2 Pa. Co. Ct. 575, that, in case of the prisoner's alleged insanity, when the object was to stay the execution, the proper application was to the governor, who was the one empowered to act effectually in the matter.

And it was held in Cribb v. Parker, 119 Ga. 298, 46 S. E. 110, that after the date of the passage of an act providing for trials or inquisitions after conviction, as to the sanity of persons accused of capital offenses, a judge of the superior court could not entertain an original application for an inquisition, or grant an order suspending sentence.

And in this case it was held that even if the decision of a judge in refusing to entertain an application for an inquisition as to defendant's sanity would authorize the tender of a bill of exceptions, the judge, when signing such bill, has no authority to suspend sentence merely because the bill of exceptions has been signed. Ibid.

—power to suspend part.

A court cannot impose a fine at one term and defer sentence of imprisonment to a subsequent term. The judgment, when pronounced, must embrace the whole of the punishment. People v. Felker, 61 Mich. 110, 27 N. W. 869.

And a court, after sentencing a defendant found guilty on a number of counts of an information, cannot, after having sentenced him for one of the offenses, and after the defendant has served a part of the imprisonment, sentence him on the other offenses, since a single judgment should be cause "why the stay as to the sentence heretofore imposed should not be revoked and said sentence fully enforced." By their return, the defendants first took the position that there was nothing before the court to show that they had violated the condition on which the sentence had been suspended. Thereafter the court took testimony tending to prove that the defendants, since the sentence was imposed, had again violated the statute against gambling. As a further return, and as a ground for arrest of judgment, the defendants took the position that Judge Purdy had no authority to suspend the sentence during good behavior, and that the effect of his attempt to exercise such power, and the failure to enforce the sentence of imprisonment in consequence of such attempted suspension, was to make the sentence void, and leave the court powerless to enforce it at this time.

Critical comment on the numerous cases decided in the several states on the subject of the extent of the power of the trial court to suspend a sentence imposed on a convict would not be enlightening. They are irreconcilable in their reasoning and conclusions. Some courts hold that, under the common law, the trial court has the power to suspend a sentence imposed, whenever, in the opinion of the court, the ends of justice would be promoted by the suspension, and that this power is unaffected by the constitutional provisions vesting the declared. Re Beck, 63 Kan. 57, 64 Pac. 971; Com. v. Foster, 122 Mass. 317, 23 Am. Rep. 326, 2 Am. Crim. Rep. 499.

And where a court orders costs and a fine paid, and suspends further sentence, it amounts to a judgment, and the court cannot, at a subsequent term, impose further punishment. Com ex rel. Nuber v. Keeper of Workhouse, 6 Pa. Super. Ct. 420; Whitney v. State, 6 Lea, 247.

And an order that sentence be suspended on payment of costs so long as the defendant shall abate the nuisance of obstructing a culvert, and keep it clear, is a rendition of judgment; and the declaration that sentence was suspended is contrary to the fact, and no reserve power remains in the court further to punish the offender. State v. Addy, 43 N. J. L. 113, 39 Am. Rep. 547.

So, where the effect of a sentence as a whole is that the accused should be released upon payment of a certain sum, the recorder has no authority to add a further sum to the judgment, and provide that it shall be indefinitely suspended during good behavior. Gordon v. Johnson, 126 Ga. 584, 55 S. E. 489.

And under a statute giving a court power to impose a fine or an alternative sentence to hard labor, where a question of law is reserved, and a judgment of conviction entered, and fine assessed, the court cannot, at a subsequent term, after the appellate court has affirmed the judgment, sentence the defendant to hard labor. Ex parte State, 94 Ala. 431, 10 So. 549.

But where a requirement to pay costs is imposed at the term when a verdict is rendered, and further sentence is suspended, sentence may be pronounced at a subsequent term, since the costs are not a part of the sentence. Ex parte Williams, 26 Fla. 310, 8 So. 425; Gibson v. State, 68 Miss. 241, 8 So. 329; State v. Crook, 115 N. C. 760, 29 L.R.A. 260, 20 S. E. 513.

And a court may impose sentence on one count of an indictment, and suspend sentence on other counts, where the offenses set forth are distinct and such as another indictment would lie for. United States v. Blaisdell, 3 Ben. 132, Fed. Cas. No. 14,-608.

33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

—statutes regulating suspension.

In some states by statute the court, with the consent of the defendant, is authorized to place a case on file after conviction, in case of extenuating circumstances, pendency of like case on appeal, or other sufficient cause. Marks v. Wentworth, 199 Mass. 44, 85 N. E. 81; Com. v. Dowdican, 115 Mass. 133.

But the court cannot make an order without the defendant's consent, and thereby render him indefinitely subject to be sentenced. Marks v. Wentworth, supra.

In New York it is held that the court of special sessions has the power at common law to suspend sentence indefinitely or for a limited period; and that this power is recognized, if not expressly given, by statute. People ex rel. Dunnigan v. Webster, 14 Misc. 617, 36 N. Y. Supp. 745; People v. Graves, 31 Hun, 382; People v. Harrington, 3 N. Y. Crim. Rep. 139.

And in People v. Markham, 114 App. Div. 387, 99 N. Y. Supp. 1092, it was held that power to suspend sentence after conviction was conferred by statute.

And it was held in Ex parte Cameron, 81 Ala. 87, 1 So. 20, that by statute, where any question of law is reserved for the appellate court, execution of sentence must be suspended until the decision of the court.

And courts are authorized by statute in some jurisdictions to release a defendant after conviction, upon probation. King v. Bonnevillie, 38 N. S. 560; Spade v. State, 44 Ind. App. 529, 89 N. E. 604; Smith v. Hess, 91 Ind. 424; King v. Davies [1909] 1 K. B. 892, 78 L. J. K. B. N. S. 363, 100 L. T. N. S. 305, 73 J. P. 151, 25 Times L. R. 279, 21 Cox, C. C. 776.

Whether a petition for probation should be granted rests in the discretion of the trial court. People v. Bartley, 12 Cal. App. 773, 108 Cal. 868; People v. Johnson, 9 Cal. App. 233, 98 Pac. 682.

A statute authorizing a court to suspend sentence in a criminal case after conviction has been held not to encroach upon the constitutional power of the executive to grant reprieves and pardons. People v. Stickle, 156 Mich. 557, 121 N. W. 497; pardoning power in the governor, and requiring that the several departments of the government shall be independent of each other. People ex rel. Forsyth v. Court of Sessions, 141 N. Y. 288, 23 L.R.A. 856, 36 N. E. 386, 15 Am. Crim. Rep. 675; Weber v. State, 58 Ohio St. 616, 41 L.R.A. 472, 31 N. E. 116. Other courts deny that the judge of a trial court possesses such discretionary power to suspend sentence unless the power be conferred by statute. Gray v. State, 107 Ind. 177, 8 N. E. 16; Miller v. Evans, 115 Iowa, 101, 56 L.R.A. 111, 91 Am. St. Rep. 143, 88 N. W. 198; Neal v. State, 104 Ga. 509, 42 L.R.A. 190, 29 Am. St. Rep. 175, 30 S. E. 858; Re Markuson, 5 N. D. 180, 64 N. W. 939; Re Webb, 89 Wis. 354, 27 L.R.A. 356, 46 Am.

St. Rep. 846, 62 N. W. 177, 9 Am. Crim. Rep. 702; United States v. Wilson (C. C.) 46 Fed. 748; People ex rel. Boenert v. Barrett, 202 Ill. 287, 63 L.R.A. 82, 95 Am. St. Rep. 230, 67 N. E. 23. The Supreme Court of the United States, in Pointer v. United States, 151 U. S. 419, 38 L. ed. 217, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 419, referred to the question, but in the following language reserved its opinion: "It is necessary, however, in order to avoid any misapprehension, to say that this court must not be understood as expressing any opinion upon the question suggested by the words of that order, whether a court of the United States, in the absence of authority conferred by statute, has the power, after passing sentence in a criminal case, to suspend its execution indefinitely,

People ex rel. Forsyth v. Court of Sessions, 141 N. Y. 288, 23 L.R.A. 856, 36 N. E. 386, 15 Am. Crim. Rep. 675; People ex rel. Sullivan v. Flynn, 55 Misc. 639, 106 N. Y. Supp. 925.

The court in the first case said: "The power to suspend sentence and the power to grant reprieves and pardons are distinct and different in origin and in nature. It has never been supposed that the power of courts to suspend sentence was other than a judicial function. It has been frequently and constantly exercised by courts of record before and since the adoption of the Constitution. . . . Assuming the power to be, as it was at common law asserted to be, a power inherent in courts, no new power is conferred upon courts when the legislature in terms authorizes courts to suspend sentence."

But a constitutional provision that no power of suspending laws shall be exercised except by the legislature is violated by a statute permitting the court to release from custody one convicted of abandoning his wife, upon his entering into a recognizance to pay her a weekly sum. Ex parte Smythe, 56 Tex. Crim. Rep. 376, 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 854, 120 S. W. 200.

And where a statute provides that, in certain criminal cases, the court "shall have power . . . upon the entry of judgment of conviction of such person, to suspend such sentence and parole such person by an order of such court, duly entered of record as a part of the judgment," the order suspending sentence must be entered as part of the judgment, and the court has no power to make such order subsequently. State v. Smith, 173 Ind. 388, 90 N. E. 607.

And where a statute provides that the only ground upon which a judgment shall be arrested is that facts stated in the indictment do not constitute a public offense, an arrest of judgment will not be allowed on the ground that, at the time of trial and verdict, there was another indictment pending and undisposed of. Clampitt v. United States, 6 Ind. Terr. 92, 89 S. W. 666, 10 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 1087, 33 L.R.A.(N.S.)

So no suspension of sentence can be granted unless the defendant has reserved a question of law for the consideration of the appellate court, where a statute provides for the suspension of sentence pending the determination of questions of law reserved for the appellate court; and merely excepting to the judgment is not sufficient. Ex parte Knight, 61 Ala. 482.

And the record must show that the question was reserved at the time the ruling was made. Bolling v. State, 78 Ala. 469.

See also cases involving statutes under subdivision on "Power to sentence after suspension."

Power to sentence after suspension.

As to power to impose upon pardon conditions extending beyond term of sentence, see notes 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1064; 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 337; 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 110.

In the absence of a permissive statute, the indefinite postponement of sentence upon one convicted of a crime deprives the court of jurisdiction to pronounce sentence at a subsequent term. Grundel v. People, 33 Colo. 191, 108 Am. St. Rep. 75, 79 Pac. 1022; Republic v. Pedro, 11 Haw. 287; Com. v. Maloney, 145 Mass. 205, 13 N. E. 482; Com. v. Dunleavy, 16 Pa. Super. Ct. 380; Re Flint, 25 Utah, 338, 95 Am. St. Rep. 853, 71 Pac. 531; United States v. Wilson, 46 Fed. 748.

And where the court, without any legal cause therefor, passes the case over under an entry that, by agreement, the assessing of punishment and sentence is deferred to some future time, it loses its jurisdiction, and cannot pronounce sentence at a subsequent term. State v. Hockett, 129 Mo. App. 639, 108 S. W. 599; State v. Dibert, — Mo. App. —, 108 S. W. 600; State v. Jacobs, — Mo. App. —, 108 S. W. 601.

The court, in the first case, said: "It seems to us that it is an exercise of the power of pardon to withhold the sentence which the law imposes. The court is but the instrument,—the arm of the law. The only power to indefinitely stay the force of that arm is lodged with another depart-and until the court, in its discretion, removes such suspension. A decision of that question is not necessary to the disposition of this case upon its merits."

It seems to us clear that trial courts had no such general and unlimited power at common law. The common-law rule is thus stated by Blackstone: "A reprieve (from reprendre, to take back) is the withdrawing of a sentence for an interval of time, whereby the execution is suspended. This may be first ex arbitrio judicis, either before or after judgment; as where the judge is not satisfied with the verdict, or the evidence is suspicious, or the indictment is insufficient, or he is doubtful whether the offense be within clergy; or sometimes if it be a small felony, or any favorable circumstances appear in the criminal's character, in order to give room to apply to the Crown for either an absolute or conditional pardon. These arbitrary reprieves may be granted or taken off by the justices of goal delivery, although their session be finished and their commission expired; but they are rather by common usage than of strict right." 4 Bl. Com. chap. 31; 2 Hale, 1 C. 412. At common law there was no appeal, the trial court had no power to grant new trials in cases of treason and felony, and the punishments were often by branding or other physical infliction; and hence the temporary suspension of the sentence which would otherwise be fully suffered was necessary, to the end that the convict might not suffer the penalty without having consent of the government. If the power be granted, where is it to be limited? It is asserted to be a discretionary power. Therefore it would be in great part a power practically beyond control, and might be exercised in cases where the general good demanded the law's enforcement. If a court refuses to render a judgment in a civil case, it may be compelled to perform that duty; and we can think of no good reason why it should not be likewise compelled to pass a sentence in a criminal case."

And the court cannot pronounce sentence after an indefinite suspension of sentence, when every condition attached to it has been complied with, and the defendant discharged by order of the court, and the cause removed from the docket. State v. Hilton, 151 N. C. 687, 65 S. E. 1011.

But it has been held that where a defendant pleads nolo contendere, and is released in pursuance of an order that sentence be suspended on payment of costs, on condition that the defendant do not again commit the offense, the court does not lose jurisdiction, where a breach of the condition occurs. Philpot v. State, 65 N. H. 250, 20 Atl. 955; Sylvester v. State, 65 N. H. 193, 20 Atl. 954.

And it is held that a mere temporary suspension of sentence does not prevent the court from passing sentence at a subsequent term. United States v. Guiteau, 1 Mackey, 498, 47 Am. Rep. 247; Joiner v. State, 94 Ark. 198, 126 S. W. 723; Ledgerwood v. State, 134 Ind. 81, 33 N. E. 631; Clampitt v. United States, 6 Ind. Terr. 92, 89 S. W. 666, 10 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 1087; State v. Ray, 50 Iowa, 521; State v. Schierhoff, 103 Mo. 47, 13 S. W. 151; State v. Overton, 77 N. C. 485; State v. Miller, 6 Baxt. 513; Greenfield v. State, 7 Baxt. 18; United States v. May, 2 McArth. 512.

And one convicted at a regular term may be sentenced at an adjourned term. Williams v. Com. 29 Pa. 102.

And a court may pronounce sentence two years after verdict, where it was not before awarded, because of an appeal. State v. Watson, 95 Mo. 411, 8 S. W. 383. The 33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

court said: "After the motion for new trial is overruled, the defendant should be brought before the court, and given an opportunity to show cause, if any he has why sentence should not be pronounced. He may then present matters which will render it proper for the court to postpone a final disposition of the case until a future term of the court. It would be highly prejudicial to the administration of the criminal law, both as to the state and as to the defendant, to deny the court power to render final judgment at a term subsequent to conviction. The power to pass sentence is not confined to the term at which the defendant was convicted by any statute of this state, nor, we conclude, by the law, in the absence of any statute."

And a conviction will not be set aside although over a year elapsed between the conviction and sentence. People v. Reilly 53 Mich. 260, 18 N. W. 849.

And where, after a plea of guilty, a court of general jurisdiction ordered that the case be suspended for sentence, it may sentence the defendant at a subsequent term, although several years have elapsed. Re St. Hilaire, 101 Me. 522, 64 Atl. 882, 8 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 385.

And the fact that sentence was not pronounced for over a month after verdict will not avoid the conviction, where the defendant absented himself from court, and prevented earlier sentence. Sturgeon v. Gray 96 Ind. 166.

And under a statute which does not require that sentence be pronounced at the same term that judgment is entered, where the court adjourns without pronouncing sentence, it may pronounce sentence at a subsequent term. Thurman v. State, 5 Ark. 120, 15 S. W. 84; Greene v. State, 58 Ark. 290, 114 S. W. 477.

And where a statute stipulates for the lapse of a given period before sentence is pronounced, but contains no provision that it must be pronounced at the same term at which the trial is had, the court may award sentence at a subsequent term. People v. Felix, 45 Cal. 163.

So, under a statute providing that where ing an opportunity to apply for pardon or other relief provided by law. On this principle of implied power arising from necessity, it was held in this state to be within the power of the court to postpone until the next term of the court the imposition and execution of the sentence of burning in the hand, provided by law, so that the convict might apply to the governor for a pardon. State v. Frink, 2 Bay, 168. But the common-law power to suspend sentence has been expressly held in this state to be limited by this principle of necessity, as having application only to cases where but for a suspension, the convict would irretrievably lose some legal right. State v. Chitty, 1 Bail. L. 379.

Beyond the common law, and under the from any cause whatever, a verdict of conviction has been returned, and there is a failure to enter judgment and pronounce sentence during the term, the judgment may be entered and sentence pronounced at the next succeeding term of the court, unless a new trial has been granted, or the judgment arrested, or an appeal has been taken. The court has power to render judgment at a term subsequent to that when the defendant was convicted, although a defective appeal was taken. Ex parte Beard, 41 Tex. 234.

And where a statute merely provides that where a defendant is found guilty, the court shall render judgment, it may be rendered within a reasonable time; and a suspension by a justice of the peace until the day following a conviction will not deprive him of jurisdiction. Re Terry, 71 Kan. 362, 80 Pac. 586.

And where a pardon had been granted after conviction, upon condition that the defendant leave the state within two weeks, upon a failure to comply with such condition, the court will award sentence. State v. Fuller, 1 McCord, L. 178. To the same effect is State v. Chancellor, 1 Strobb. L. 350, 47 Am. Dec. 557.

So, where a defendant pleads guilty, and a verdict is rendered, but no sentence is pronounced at that term, a sentence may be awarded at a subsequent term, if the case has regularly been kept in court. Clanton v. State, 96 Ala. 111, 11 So. 299.

And where, after a conviction, the court adjourns without sentencing another judge, at a subsequent term, has power to award sentence. Charles v. State, 4 Port. (Ala.) 108.

And where the judgment awarded is invalid, the court may, at a subsequent term, render a judgment on the verdict for the penalty prescribed by law. Easterling v. State, 35 Miss. 210.

And an order-book entry that the court "now suspends the sentence herein, and cause continued for alias process," is not a final judgment, and the defendant may subsequently be sentenced. Shaffer v. State, 100 Ind. 365.

33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

statute law allowing new trials, there can be no doubt that the trial court may, in its discretion, suspend a sentence which a convict has not commenced to serve, pending a motion for a new trial either on the minutes of the court or on after-discovered evidence. This is on the principle that, under the statute, the sentence is imposed subject to the power of the court to grant a new trial, and the power of suspension of the sentence is incidental to the power to set aside the conviction and the sentence and to order a new trial. It is important to observe, however, that the exercise of this power is not demandable as a matter of course on notice of a motion for a new trial. On the contrary, the power is discretionary, and to be exercised with great

But where the trial judge suspended sentence until the next term, and allowed the defendant to go on his own recognizance of a nominal sum, a judge sitting temporarily at a subsequent term cannot sentence the defendant to the state prison, since such action is not supplying omissions of the trial judge, but is overruling his decision. Weaver v. People, 33 Mich. 296, 1 Am. Crim. Rep. 552.

And where sentence is delayed from time to time without the defendant's request, until the period of imprisonment to which he could have been sentenced has elapsed, the court has no jurisdiction thereafter to pass sentence. People v. Kennedy, 58 Mich. 372, 25 N. W. 318.

And a statute which provides that, after a conviction, the county attorney shall have the accused sentenced at the same term, unless, for reasons satisfactory to the court, the case is continued for sentence one term, but not longer, is merely directory to the county attorney, and even if it were held mandatory, the statute could not limit the discretion of the court. Re St. Hilaire, 101 Me. 522, 64 Atl. 882, 8 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 385.

Power to stay execution of sentence.

It is held by some decisions that a court has inherent power to stay the execution of sentence. State v. Vaughan, 71 Conn. 457, 42 Atl. 640; Re Collins, 8 Cal. App. 367, 97 Pac. 188.

And it was held in Weber v. State, 58 Ohio St. 816, 41 L.R.A. 472, 51 N. E. 116, that a court, unless otherwise provided by statute, has inherent power to stay the execution of sentence, in whole or in part; whether consented to by the prisoner or not.

And where the law upon conviction inflicts a specific and infamous punishment, the court has power to postpone punishment to enable the defendant to apply for a pardon. State v. Chitty, 1 Bail. L. 379; Allen v. State, Mart. & Y. 294.

But where the punishment depends upon caution, and only where, pending the hearing of the motion for a new trial, a prima facie showing is presented of merit in the motion, and of serious hardship to be expected as a result of a refusal to grant the stay. The necessity and propriety of great caution in the exercise of this discretionary power follows from the consideration that the solemn judgment of a court after a jury trial should not be suspended except for cogent reasons.

Attempts by courts to suspend the execution of sentence, or to postpone sentence beyond what is necessary to preserve the legal rights of the convict, or to make effective the power of the court to relieve from hardship pending a motion for a new trial, are violative of the Constitution as well as the statute law of the state. It is a function of the legislative branch of the government to affix punishment to conviction of crime, subject to the pardoning power of the governor. The legislative power to set punishment for crime is very broad, and in the exercise of this power the general assembly may confer on trial judges, if it sees fit, the largest discretion as to the sentence to be imposed, as to the beginning and end of the punishment, and whether it should be certain or indeterminate or conditional. But when the general assembly provides punishment, the trial court cannot set the provision aside. For example, the statute has affixed the penalty of death to conviction without recommendation to mercy of the crimes of the discretion of the court, no such power exists. State v. Chitty, supra.

In State v. Whitt, 117 N. C. 804, 23 S. E. 452, it was held that the court had power to suspend sentence on defendant's undertaking to pay costs, although he had served a part of his sentence.

And it was held in Fults v. State, 2 Sneed, 232, that a court has power to suspend the execution of judgment, upon a sufficient reason appearing.

And it has been held that the court may suspend the imposition of sentence or the execution thereof for an indefinite time. State ex rel. Buckley v. Drew, 75 N. H. 402, 74 Atl. 875; State ex rel. O'Connor v. Drew, — N. H. —, 76 Atl. 191.

But there are decisions to the contrary. State v. Voss, 80 Iowa, 467, 8 L.R.A. 767, 45 N. W. 898; O'Dwyer v. Kelly, 133 Ga. 824, 67 S. E. 106.

It was held in Miller's Case, 9 Cow. 730, that the court had the power to stay the execution of sentence in a capital case, notwithstanding the power to grant reprieves and pardons rested with the executive. The court said: "Far be it from me to call in question the wisdom of placing the power of granting reprieves and pardons in the executive. All that I contend for is, that although he indubitably has the ultimate or superior power, and that there is no power which can prevent him from relieving, yet that there is nothing in the Constitution annulling the qualified limited power of the judges. Constitutions, like laws, should receive such a construction as will advance the remedy and suppress the mischief. The object of this provision is to enable the executive, in all cases, to prevent injustice. The limited power of the judges is only to remove an obstruction of their own creating, in the way to the mercy seat,—a power necessary to enable the executive to exercise his prerogative upon every suitable occasion,—a power which has been sanctioned by the experience of our ancestors for ages, and which was the offspring of the imperious dictates of justice and humanity. That which I contend against is a harsh and rigid construction of the Constitution, which would insure a haste in shedding of blood, as foreign to the humane spirit of our Criminal Code as to the benign precepts of our religion."

33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

By some decisions, however, it is held that the act of a court after passing sentence, in suspending the execution of sentence, is an unwarranted interference with the powers and functions of the executive. Neal v. State, 104 Ga. 509, 42 L.R.A. 190, 69 Am. St. Rep. 175, 30 S. E. 858; Wall v. Jones, 135 Ga. 425, 69 S. E. 548; Re Webb, 89 Wis. 354, 27 L.R.A. 356, 46 Am. St. Rep. 846, 62 N. W. 177, 9 Am. Crim. Rep. 702; People v. Morrisette, 20 How. Pr. 118, 2 Am. Crim. Rep. 475.

And some courts hold that no inherent power exists in a court to stay execution of sentence. Ragland v. State, 55 Fla. 152, 46 So. 724; Tanner v. Wiggins, 54 Fla. 203, 45 So. 459, 14 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 718; Re Markuson, 5 N. D. 180, 64 N. W. 939.

And it was held in Miller v. Evans, 115 Iowa, 101, 56 L.R.A. 101, 91 Am. St. Rep. 143, 88 N. W. 198, that a court has no power to suspend sentence after it has been pronounced, except for the purpose of appeal.

And it is generally held that the court, upon a proper showing, has the power to grant a stay of execution of sentence, pending an appeal. Tanner v. Wiggins, 54 Fla. 203, 45 So. 459, 14 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 718; People v. Hobson, 48 Mich. 27, 11 N. W. 771; Lowenberg v. People, 5 Park. Crim. Rep. 414; King v. Johnston, 16 Can. C. C. 296.

And in State ex rel. Stafford v. Hawk, 47 W. Va. 434, 34 S. E. 918, 15 Am. Crim. Rep. 659, it was held that by statute the court should postpone the execution of its sentence until a reasonable time beyond the first day of the next term of the supreme court of appeals; and that where the time allowed, through no fault of the defendant, proved insufficient, he was entitled to a further extension of the time.

But the right of a defendant to a stay of execution of sentence in case of appeal is not an absolute one, and the court may murder and rape, and the court is obliged, to sentence the convict to death. So, also, if the statute provides that the punishment of some other crime shall be imprisonment, in the discretion of the court, for not less than six months nor more than twelve months, the court must, on conviction, actually impose a sentence of imprisonment for not less than six months, to be actually suffered, not to be suspended. Is it not perfectly obvious that when the court undertakes to suspend such a sentence, either during good behavior or at its own discretion, it really refuses to enforce the statute unless it shall at some future time conclude that it is proper to do so? Is it not equally obvious that the power to exercise discretion as to the en-and should refuse it, if clearly satisfied, upon an inspection of the record, that there is no merit in the appeal. State v. Waterman, — Minn. —, 127 N. W. 473; State v. Chounnard, 93 Minn. 176, 100 N. W. 1125; State v. Holong, 38 Minn. 368, 37 N. W. 587.

And where a statute provides that no judge, court, or officer other than the governor, can reprieve or suspend the execution of a judgment of death, a trial judge has no authority to order a stay of execution during an appeal. Opinion of Judges, 3 Okla. Crim. Rep. 315, 105 Pac. 684.

And where the Constitution confers upon the executive the exclusive power to remit fines and forfeitures, and to grant reprieves, commutations, and pardons, a statute authorizing the supreme court, on an appeal from a judgment of conviction, to suspend sentence of death and to remit forfeitures, is unconstitutional. Butler v. State, 97 Ind. 373.

But it was held in Parker v. State, 135 Ind. 534, 23 L.R.A. 859, 35 N. E. 179, that granting a stay of execution by an appellate court pending an appeal in a capital case is not a reprieve, within the meaning of a constitutional provision giving the governor power to grant reprieves.

In some states the power to stay execution of sentence is regulated by statute and the statutory requirements must be complied with. People v. Fritch, 161 Mich. 111, 125 N. W. 785.

And where a statute provides that for prudential reasons, and for the purpose of perfecting an appeal, sentence may be suspended for a period of not more than thirty days, a court cannot, after actually pronouncing sentence, order that it be suspended thirty days, for the purpose of allowing an appeal. Re Markuson, 5 N. D. 180, 64 N. W. 939.

Where a statute provides that no appeal from a judgment of conviction, unless it be one imposing a fine only, shall stay the execution of judgment, but that the defendant shall remain in custody unless admitted to bail according to another section, the court has no power, in a case where a judgment of imprisonment is entered, to order a stay of execution. State v. Murphy, 23 Nev. 390, 48 Pac. 628.

Except where the conviction is for treason or murder in the first degree, writs of error issue as of course; and in order for them to stay the execution of sentence, an express order must be obtained from a justice of the supreme or circuit court. People v. West, 143 Mich. 586, 107 N. W. 283.

It is true that in the case of Ex parte Bond, 9 S. C. 80, 30 Am. Rep. 20, it was held, contrary to the conclusion of the Supreme Court of the United States in Ex parte Lange, 18 Wall. 163, 21 L. ed. 872, that if the trial court imposed a sentence judgment of imprisonment is entered, to order a stay of execution. State v. Murphy, 23 Nev. 390, 48 Pac. 628.

Except where the conviction is for treason or murder in the first degree, writs of error issue as of course; and in order for them to stay the execution of sentence, an express order must be obtained from a justice of the supreme or circuit court. People v. West, 143 Mich. 586, 107 N. W. 283.

Power to enforce after stay of execution.

It is generally held that a court does not lose its power to enforce sentence by granting a stay of execution.

Thus, it is held that a court, by staying execution of sentence until the full expiration of the time for appeal, does not lose its power to enforce the sentence. People v. Walker, — Cal. —, 61 Pac. 800.

And after an order that execution of sentence be suspended until further order of the court, it has jurisdiction several years afterward to set aside the order, and commit the defendant. People v. Patrich, 118 Cal. 332, 50 Pac. 425.

And where a sentence of five years has been suspended on condition that the defendant pay costs, the court may, at a subsequent term, sentence him to one year's imprisonment, where he has failed to keep the condition imposed. State v. Whitt, 117 N. C. 804, 23 S. E. 452.

So, the court may revoke a suspension of sentence upon breach of the condition imposed, and sentence the accused at a subsequent term. Ex parte Moore, 12 Cal. App. 161, 107 Pac. 129; State v. Hatley, 110 N. C. 522, 14 S. E. 751; Re Lee, 3 Ohio N. P. N. S. 533, 16 Ohio S. & C. P. Dec. 259.

And it was held in Schaefer v. State, 27 Ohio C. C. 791, that a court might revoke the suspension of the execution of sentence at a subsequent term.

And an adjournment sine die of a justice's court does not prevent the court's right to enforce a sentence passed before the adjournment. Mann v. People, 16 Colo. App. 475, 66 Pac. 452.

But a court has no power, after imposing in excess of that provided by the statute, the error could be corrected only by appeal. But the case of Ex parte Bond is not this case. There the court, having the power to sentence, merely made a mistake in the degree of punishment; here the court in passing sentence exhausted its power, and undertook to exercise an entirely different power, for which it had no legal warrant,—the power to make the sentence inoperative. In the one case, the imposition of the excessive sentence was a mere error of law, to be corrected as other like errors, by appeal; in the other, the attempt to suspend the sentence was a nullity, because suspension of a sentence under conditions was without any foundation in judicial power. In this case the sentence was not suspended on the ground that such action was necessary to the preservation of any legal right of the defendants, or because of the pendency of a motion for a new trial, but merely as an act of clemency to the defendants; and it follows that the attempt to suspend was beyond the authority of the court and without legal effect. The result is that the sentence must be regarded as legal and valid, and the clause of suspension mere surplusage, having no force.

The remaining question is whether the court was without power to enforce the sentence after the expiration of the one year for which the convicts would have suffered imprisonment had they not been illegally set at large under the suspension clause. As the point has not been decided in this state, and the views of the courts of other states are irreconcilable, we are entirely free to adopt the rule which seems to us logical and reasonable. Some cases hold that the sentence not being legally stayed by the attempt to suspend, it begins its operation when it is pronounced, and ends when the time of imprisonment therein mentioned has expired, although no imprisonment be suffered. Re Webb, 89 Wis. 354, 27 L.R.A. 356, 46 Am. St. Rep. 846, 62 N. W. 177, 9 Am. Crim. Rep. 702; Re Markuson, 5 N. D. 180, 64 N. W. 939. The rule insisted on by some other courts is that the court loses jurisdiction after it has discharged the prisoner, although the discharge was in violation of the Constitution and statute law of the state. United States v. Wilson (C. C.) 46 Fed. 748; Grundel v. People, 33 Colo. 191, 108 Am. St. Rep. 75, 79 Pac. 1022; People ex rel. Boenert v. Barrett, 202 Ill. 287, 63 L.R.A. 82, 95 Am. St. Rep. 230, 67 N. E. 23.

The reasoning of the cases first cited we think sophistical, because it rests upon the false assumption that a sentence necessarily begins to run and to be satisfied the moment it is pronounced. The execution of a sentence may be postponed by appeal, by escape, and by the other causes; but the time of delay in the execution is not counted as a part of the time of imprisonment fixed by the sentence. No more can the delay due to the release of the convict under a void order of the court, attempting to suspend the sentence, be so counted. The sentence is satisfied, not by the lapse of time after it is pronounced, but by the actual suffering of the imprisonment imposed by it. The rule is that jurisdiction remains in a court to enforce its valid judgments according to law, against those who are parties to them (O'Dwyer v. Kelly, 133 Ga. 824, 67 S. E. 106; Ex parte Moore, 12 Cal. App. 161, 107 Pac. 129); and therefore we think the reasoning in the second class of cases also unsound. This conclusion is supported by high authority. The following cases hold that, as the attempt to suspend was of no effect, the sentence is not satisfied until it has been actually suffered: Neal v. State, 104 Ga. 509, 42 L.R.A. 190, 69 Am. St. Rep. 175, 30 S. E. 858; Gray v. State, 107 Ind. 177, 8 N. E. 16; Miller v. Evans, 115 Iowa, 101, 56 L.R.A. 101, 91 Am. St. Rep. 143, 88 N. W. 198; State v. Cockerham, 24 N. C. (2 Ired. L.) 204.

The appellants further contend that even if this conclusion be correct, the sentence of one year's imprisonment cannot now be enforced against them, for the reason that, since the sentence was pronounced, the punishment for gaming has been reduced by statute. This position would be sound if the court were now called upon to pass sentence upon the defendants; but that is not the case. Judge Gruber had no power to pass sentence or to change the sentence a fine and imprisonment, to order the defendant into custody nearly two years afterwards, no mittimus or other precept in execution of the sentence having been issued or prepared at the time sentence was pronounced and the court thereby having surrendered further control over the defendant. Tuttle v. Lang, 100 Me. 123, 60 Atl. 892.

It is expressly provided in Rhode Island that defendants who are committed to the control of probation officers continue to be subject to the authority and direction of the court placing them under such control. And the appellate court will not consider a petition for habeas corpus, based upon the officer's conduct, until such conduct has been brought before the lower court. Scamporrino's Petition, 30 R. I. 587, 76 Atl. 761.

For a note on power to commit after expiration of term of sentence, see note to Ex parte Clendenning, 19 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1041.

J. T. W.

which had been pronounced by Judge Purdy. All that Judge Gruber could do, and all that he attempted to do, was to enforce the sentence which had been imposed by Judge Purdy. The statute did not purport to affect sentences already pronounced. The court is not unmindful that a case might have arisen in which hardship would have resulted from holding that an attempt of the court to suspend a sentence already pronounced was without authority and of no effect. Fortunately no hardship results in this case, for the evidence taken in the mayor's court, which was before Judge Gruber, showed clearly that the defendants had been caught gambling, and had thus violated the condition upon which Judge Purdy had attempted to suspend the sentence.

It is the judgment of this court that the judgment of the Circuit Court be affirmed.

INDIANA SUPREME COURT.

FERDINAND EFFINGER, Appt.,

v.

FORT WAYNE & WABASH VALLEY TRACTION COMPANY.

(— Ind. —, 93 N. E. 855.)

Interurban railway — frightening horse — liability for injury.

1. An interurban electric railway company may be liable for injury to one driv-

Note. — Frightening horse on highway by locomotive, car, or train running parallel therewith.

This note includes cases of fright by locomotives, cars, or trains on steam railroads in or alongside of public streets and highways, as well as cases of fright by interurban and suburban electric cars in or alongside of public highways, but does not include the frightening of horses by street cars, for which see notes to Hoag v. South Dover Marble Co. 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 283, and Doster v. Charlotte Street R. Co. 34 L.R.A. 481.

The classes of cases covered by the following notes are also excluded from this note: Liability for discharge of steam near street or highway so as to frighten horses, see note to Ft. Wayne Cooperage Co. v. Page, 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 946; duty of a railroad company to give crossing signals for the benefit of persons near to a crossing, but who are not about to use the same, including duty as to persons on a parallel road, not intending to cross track, see notes to Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Saunders, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1000, and Warn v. Chicago G. W. R. Co. 31 L.R.A.(N.S.) 667.

As to the liability of a railroad company for injuries caused by a horse taking fright at a car or locomotive standing on or near a highway, see note to Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Gee, 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 111.

As to liability of railway company for ing on a highway running parallel to its tracks, by the fright of his horse and overturning of the carriage, where its motor-man in charge of the car, upon approaching the traveler at high speed, sees that the horse is frightened and that the roadway is narrow, with a ditch on either side, and refuses to slacken his speed upon signal, the result of which is that the horse becomes unmanageable and causes the injury.
33 L.R.A.(N.S.)

Pleading — definiteness — sufficiency.

2. One injured by the fright of his horse while driving on a roadway running parallel to an electric railway track, through the negligent operation of the car, need not, in order to hold the railway company liable for the injury, allege that he would have controlled the horse and avoided the injury had the speed of the car been slackened, if he alleges that the accident would have been avoided in such event.

Same — proximate cause.

3. A definite charge that the negligence of a street car company in refusing to stop its car when the one in charge of it saw a horse on a road running parallel to its track frightened at the approaching car, and its driver in peril, was the proximate cause of the resulting accident, is not necessary where the accident is alleged to have been caused by the negligence of the corporation.

(February 2, 1911.)

frightening horses by escape of steam from engine standing on highway crossing, see note to Weller v. Lehigh Valley R. Co. 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1202.

As to duty to give signals upon approaching overhead crossing, see notes to Johnson v. Southern P. R. Co. 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 307, and Barton v. Southern R. Co. 22 L.R.A.(N.S.) 915.

Ordinary operations.

A railroad company is not liable for injuries resulting from the fright of horses on highways parallel with its tracks at the ordinary appearance of moving locomotives, cars, or trains, or the noise naturally incident to their ordinary operation under prudent and careful management. Southern R. Co. v. Flynt, 2 Ga. App. 162, 58 S. E. 374; Ohio Valley R. Co. v. Young, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 158, 39 S. W. 415; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Hord, 39 Tex. Civ. App. 319, 87 S. W. 848.

Nor is a railroad company, merely by reason of its failure to give any signal when approaching a place where a parallel highway is adjacent to its track, liable for injuries to one traveling on such highway at that place, resulting from the fright of his horse at a train. Melton v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 99 Mo. App. 282, 73 S. W. 231.

As said in Southern R. Co. v. Flynt, supra: "The law simply imposes upon rail-

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Appellate Court, affirming a judgment of the Circuit Court for Wells County, sustaining a demurrer to complaint in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by the negligent operation of defendant's car. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Levi Mock, John Mock, and George Mock, for appellant:

The court erred in sustaining the demurrer.

Defendant must use ordinary care in running its cars, so as to avoid injury to those having an equal right to use the public highway in close proximity to its road.

Indianapolis Traction & Terminal Co. v.

road companies the duty of operating trains relatively to adjacent highways so as not unnecessarily to interfere with the rights of individuals traveling such highways, or to endanger such travelers by unusual and unnecessary noises. The duty of keeping a lookout and of giving warning is limited to the track and the public crossing. It does not extend to travelers on adjacent highways."

So, in the following cases, railroad companies have been held not liable for injuries resulting from the fright of horses on streets or highways in or parallel with which their tracks run, caused as indicated: Hahn v. Southern P. R. Co. 51 Cal. 605 (blowing off steam, necessary in the prudent management of locomotive, when opposite team); Bailey v. Hartford & C. Valley R. Co. 56 Conn. 444, 16 Atl. 234 (sounding in reasonable manner whistle on passenger train at regular whistling post, as signal of its approach to a grade crossing); Douglas v. East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. 88 Ga. 282, 14 S. E. 616 (headlight of train rapidly and quietly approaching from behind one driving at night, suddenly flashing out); Southern R. Co. v. Chance, 7 Ga. App. 650, 67 S. E. 836 (usual and necessary noise made by application of steam or more steam to freight engine, preparatory to ascending grade); Lamb v. Old Colony R. Co. 140 Mass. 79, 54 Am. Rep. 449, 2 N. E. 932 (smoke of engine of train passing in opposite direction occasioned by "firing up," where "firing up" at that point was necessary in the practical running of the train, and an ordinary incident of running it); Fouhy v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 1 Sadler (Pa.) 377, 17 W. N. C. 177, 2 Atl. 536 (ringing of bell on engine of approaching train, where it was not shown that the bell was rung in an unusual manner or at an improper place); Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. v. Stinger, 78 Pa. 219 (locomotive whistle blown in the ordinary manner and at the usual place, as a necessary warning to travelers and a bridge tender of the approach of the train to several crossings and a drawbridge).

And in Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Hodges, 33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Smith, 38 Ind. App. 160, 77 N. E. 1140; Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Juday, 19 Ind. App. 436, 49 N. E. 843; Louisville N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Stanger, 7 Ind. App. 179, 32 N. E. 209, 34 N. E. 688; Billman v. Indianapolis, C. & L. R. Co. 76 Ind. 166, 40 Am. Rep. 230; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Schmidt, 81 Ind. 264; Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Trowbridge, 126 Ind. 391, 26 N. E. 64; Indianapolis Street R. Co. v. Bolin, 39 Ind. App. 169, 78 N. E. 210; McIntyre v. Orner, 166 Ind. 57, 4 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1130, 117 Am. St. Rep. 359, 76 N. E. 750, 8 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 1087; Christy v. Elliott, 216 Ill. 31, 1 L.R.A. (N.S.) 215, 108 Am. St. Rep. 196, 74 N. E. 1035, 3 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 487; Ft. Wayne Cooperage Co. v. Page, 170 Ind. 585, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) 946, 84 N.

76 Tex. 90, 13 S. W. 64, it was held that a railroad company operating trains through a city street is not liable for injuries to one driving along a narrow space between its track and the curbing of the street, by the fright of his horse at steam and smoke blown from a passing engine, where the engineer was managing the train with such care and prudence as a reasonably prudent man would have observed under the circumstances, and the escaping smoke and steam were not unnecessarily or negligently let off or blown from the engine.

A railroad company is not liable for injuries to one driving on a country road parallel with its track, and on top of an embankment at the side of a deep cut, through which the track runs on a curve, occasioned by the fright of his horse at the blowing of a locomotive whistle and the emission of steam and smoke, where the engineer blew the whistle as he approached the cut, and the smoke and steam escaped from the locomotive, drawing a train, when it was entering and when in the cut, and only 400 yards from the station where it had just stopped. Webb v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. 202 Pa. 511, 52 Atl. 5.

And a railroad company is not liable for injuries to one driving along the highway parallel with and close to its track, through a narrow canon, occasioned by the fright of his team at an engine backing toward them from ahead, and making only the ordinary noise of an engine as it rolls over the rails, where those in charge of the engine did not see him, and before entering the canon he had seen the engine standing at a water tank therein. Fares v. Rio Grande Western R. Co. 28 Utah, 132, 77 Pac. 230, 3 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 1065.

Where an engineer in charge of a locomotive drawing a train has blown his whistle for the crossing when 40 or 50 rods from a team on a parallel highway, and, thinking that the team was about to turn and take the crossing ahead of the train, has blown one blast for brakes when about 400 or 500 feet from the team, and the team has not been excited by, or appeared to notice, such blowing of the whistle, the railroad com-

E. 145; Wright v. Compton, 53 Ind. 337, 2 Mor. Min. Rep. 189; Island Coal Co. v. Gemmitt, 19 Ind. App. 21, 49 N. E. 38.

Messrs. Eichhorn & Vaughn, Barrett & Morris, and Samuel L. Morris, Jr., for appellee:

Failure of appellant to allege that the object or act done had a tendency to, or was likely to, frighten a horse of ordinary gentleness, is bad on demurrer.

Keeley Brewing Co. v. Parnin, 13 Ind. App. 592, 41 N. E. 471.

A railroad company is entitled to operate its railroad in the usual manner, without becoming liable to travelers upon highways running parallel with the railroad.

New York, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Martin, 5 Ind. App. 673, 72 N. E. 654; Lamb v.

Old Colony R. Co. 140 Mass. 79, 54 Am. Rep. 449, 2 N. E. 932.

Where a horse is being driven or is running uncontrolled along a highway parallel to a railway, though it gives unmistakable evidence that it is alarmed at an approaching car, the motorman in charge is not negligent in failing to diminish the speed of the car.

Doster v. Charlotte Street R. Co. 117 N. C. 651, 34 L.R.A. 481, 23 S. E. 449; Terre Haute Electric R. Co. v. Yant, 21 Ind. App. 490, 69 Am. St. Rep. 376, 51 N. E. 732; Folz v. Evansville Electric R. Co. 40 Ind. App. 307, 80 N. E. 868.

The complaint, to be sufficient to withstand a demurrer, must aver that the running of the car was unusual, unneces-ary is not liable for an injury to the driver of the team, after he has turned away from the track, and into an adjoining field on the opposite side of the highway, caused by the fright of the team at two blasts of the whistle of the locomotive, given for "off brakes," when at least 120 feet from the team, unless the engineer, in the exercise of reasonable prudence, knew or should have known that the blowing of the whistle might frighten the team. Ochiltree v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 93 Iowa, 628, 62 N. W. 7, rehearing denied in 96 Iowa, 246, 64 N. W. 788.

A railroad company is not liable for injuries to one driving on a highway parallel with its tracks, caused by the fright of his horse at the noise and dust caused by the use of an air brake to prevent a collision, if such noise and dust were necessarily incident to the prudent and careful operation and movement of a train. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Street, — Ky. —, 129 S. W. 570.

And a railroad company which, pursuant to its charter, has purchased a turnpike road running parallel with its proposed railroad, assuming the liability of the turnpike company, and has laid out and constructed its road upon a line in some places in close proximity with the turnpike, is not liable for injuries to one traveling upon the turnpike, by the fright of his horse at a passing train on the railroad, unless such injuries were caused by some wrongful or negligent act of the company, its agents or servants. Coy v. Utica & S. R. Co. 23 Barb. 643.

Where there is no showing that a railroad company owning and operating a bridge knew that a person was driving along a wagon way thereof, used as a public toll bridge, when it ran one of its trains on the overhead railway across the bridge, or that it was under any duty to such person not to cross the bridge thus with its train at the time and under the existing circumstances, it is not liable for an injury sustained by him in consequence of his horse becoming frightened by the passage of the train. Levin v. Memphis & C. R. Co. 109 Ala. 332, 19 So. 395.

43 L.R.A. (N.S.)

And a railroad company authorized by statute and city ordinances to operate steam engines in and along a certain city street is not liable for injuries to a pedestrian on the sidewalk of that street, struck by a horse being driven along the street and frightened, when directly opposite a dummy engine which had been standing in one place for a half hour, by a sudden puff of steam from the safety valve thereof. Howard v. Union Freight R. Co. 156 Mass. 159, 30 N. E. 479.

A railroad company is not liable for injuries to one traveling on a highway parallel with its track, caused by the running away of his team when frightened by the whistling of the locomotive of a passing train, where the signal causing the fright was given in the usual way and for a necessary and lawful purpose, and those in charge of the train were not aware of the presence of the team in the vicinity. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Walkenshaw, 71 Kan. 742, 81 Pac. 463.

Nor is a railroad company liable for injuries to one driving on a parallel highway 300 feet from its track, where his horse was frightened by whistling for a crossing and station ahead, and the company's employees in charge of the train did not see the driver, and did not whistle wantonly, negligently, or unnecessarily. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. McCandless, 123 Ky. 121, 93 S. W. 1041.

A railroad company is not liable for injuries sustained by one driving on a parallel, adjacent highway, in consequence of the running away of his horse when frightened by the whistle of a passing locomotive, which was the usual and customary signal for a near-by crossing, given in the usual and customary manner, unless the employees in charge of the engine, after seeing that, if they continued to blow, it would cause the horse to be frightened, failed to cease blowing. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Smith, 107 Ky. 178, 53 S. W. 269.

And a railroad company is not liable for injuries to one riding a horse along a highway parallel with its track, caused by the running away of the horse when frightened sary, and improper; and that failure to check the speed of the car was the proximate cause of appellant's injuries.

Terre Haute Electric R. Co. v. Yant, 21 Ind. App. 491, 69 Am. St. Rep. 376, 51 N. E. 732; Folz v. Evansville Electric R. Co. 40 Ind. App. 307, 80 N. E. 868.

Morris, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This suit is brought by appellant against appellee. The circuit court sustained a demurrer to the complaint for want of facts. Appellant declined to plead further. Judgment was thereupon rendered in favor of appellee, from which judgment this appeal is prosecuted.

The only error assigned is in sustaining by a train, and its being struck by the train at a near crossing, unless the engineer knew, or, by the exercise of ordinary care, could have known, that the horse was frightened and running away, and the circumstances were such as to induce a person of reasonable prudence to believe that he would attempt to cross the track in front of the train, or come in contact with it at the crossing. Conway v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 135 Ky. 229, 119 S. W. 206, 122 S. W. 136.

In Whistenant v. Southern States Portland Cement Co. 2 Ga. App. 598, 59 S. E. 920, it is held that a corporation operating a private line of railroad parallel with and close to a public highway is not liable for the fright of a horse on such highway and consequent injuries, caused by the mere operation of an engine without any unusual or unnecessary noise, although the engineer in charge of the engine, after seeing the frightened and unmanageable condition of the horse, made no effort or attempt to slow down or stop the engine, but continued to operate it back and forth near the horse, in carrying out the work in which he was engaged.

Negligent or unnecessary act or omission.

Where, however, the fright and consequent injury are caused by some negligent or unnecessary act or omission of the company or its servants, it is liable therefor. Thus, a railroad company using a track passing along a public street in a city is liable for injuries resulting from the fright of horses in the street, if the engineer in charge of a passing engine negligently and unnecessarily permits steam to escape against the horses when the locomotive is opposite them (Hahn v. Southern P. R. Co. 51 Cal. 605); or if, by needlessly or negligently sounding the whistle, he causes them to take fright and run away (Weil v. St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. 64 Ark. 535, 43 S. W. 967).

And a railroad company is liable for injuries to one riding in a wagon on a city street running alongside its track, where it the demurrer. The complaint, omitting formal parts, is as follows: "The plaintiff complains of the defendant for complaint in the above-entitled cause, and for cause of action says and avers: That the defendant, the Ft. Wayne & Wabash Valley Traction Company, is a corporation, organized and doing business under the laws of the state of Indiana. That the business of said corporation is that of a common carrier, and in its said capacity of a common carrier it operates a line of railway between the city of Ft. Wayne, Indiana, and the city of Bluffton, Indiana, over which line of railway cars are propelled by means of electricity, said cars being what are commonly called interurban railway cars, and said line of railway being commonly called unlawfully and unnecessarily blows the whistle on an approaching train, frightening the horse and causing it to run away. Georgia R. Co. v. Carr. 73 Ga. 557.

Or where the engineer, when opposite the horses, unnecessarily or negligently sounds his whistle and opens the cylinder cocks and allows steam to escape, in violation of an ordinance, frightening the horses, whereby the driver is thrown to the ground and run over. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Steckman, 125 Ill. App. 299, affirmed in 224 Ill. 500, 79 N. E. 602.

Where an engineer in charge of a locomotive saw a traveler driving along a public road near the railroad right of way, and blew his whistle, either knowing or having reasonable grounds to believe that to sound it in the manner and at the time he did would frighten the team and endanger the driver, the railroad company is liable for injuries occasioned by the fright of the team at the sound of the whistle. Ft. Worth & D. C. R. Co. v. Partin, 33 Tex. Civ. App. 173, 76 S. W. 236.

And a railroad company is liable for injuries to one traveling on a parallel highway between a deep ditch and its track caused by the fright of his team at the negligent sounding of the whistle of, and an emission of steam from, one of its locomotives, in an unusual manner, and not at a customary place, where the position of the traveler could have been readily seen by the engineer and fireman at least 150 yards before reaching him, and the engineer knew or had reason to believe that the team would become frightened and that injury would probably result therefrom, when he blew the whistle and allowed the steam to escape. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Spence — Tex. Civ. App. —, 32 S. W. 329.

So, a railroad company is liable for injuries to one employed with a horse and cart in drawing dirt onto a highway parallel with and near to its track, occasioned by the fright of his horse at the sound of the whistle on a locomotive of a train standing on the railroad, if the whistle was blown carelessly, by being unduly prolonged or if the engineer was negligent in blow an interurban railway. That on and prior to the 27th day of September, 1906, the said defendant owned and was operating said railway as aforesaid. That for a mile north of the city of Bluffton said railway runs parallel with and on the west side of the public highway, and the center of said railway track is within 30 feet of the center of said public highway throughout said distance. That there was on said day a deep ditch on both sides of said public highway, and that for three quarters of a mile south from the place of the accident hereinafter mentioned and complained of there were no trees of any kind, hills, or obstructions of any sort between said highway and said interurban railway. That on said 27th day of September, 1906, the plaintiff was in a single buggy, the top of which was up, which said buggy was drawn by a six-year-old horse that had always been gentle, quiet, and safe to drive, and was owned and driven at said time by one Luther Brown. That on said day the plaintiff and said Brown were seated in said buggy, and the horse was being driven by said Brown from the north towards said city of Bluffton, on and along said public highway, on the east side of said railway. That on said day said defendant was running one of its cars north from said city of Bluffton, over said railway track, at a rate of speed not less than 20 miles per hour at said time. That at said time said Brown was driving said horse in a careful manner on said public highway. That, when said horse and ing it, even as an established signal, when he knew that men were at work with teams only a short distance from the place where the train stood,—although the company is not liable for the consequences of the giving by its servants of reasonable and proper signals in a proper manner under circumstances which justified them in so doing. Flynn v. Boston & A. R. Co. 169 Mass. 35, 47 N. E. 1012.

Where an injury occasioned by the fright of a horse results from the manner in which the company's track is laid along a city street, the condition of its track may be one element of negligence rendering it liable for the injury. Thus, a railroad company which, pursuant to statutory authority, has laid down and maintains its tracks in and along a city street, but has unnecessarily impaired the usefulness of the street by leaving its rails 4½ inches above the surface of the street without planking over or filling in between them so as to permit driving over them, is liable for injuries to one driving along the street beside the tracks, and unable, by reason of the raised rails, to turn and avoid meeting an approaching train, whose horses are frightened by such train and by an unnecessary and negligent discharge of steam from the locomotive thereof, in violation of an ordinance, and back against the train. Bell v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 29 Hun, 560. (As to liability of street railway company for defect in track or street, see notes in 52 L.R.A. 448 and 15 L.R.A. (N.S.) 840).

Or for injuries to one on the street with a horse and wagon, occasioned by the fright of the horse at an approaching train, which injury would not have occurred if the track had been in condition to permit the wheels of the wagon to pass readily over it, or if the train had not approached at an excessive rate of speed, prohibited by ordinance. Wasmer v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 80 N. Y. 212, 36 Am. Rep. 608.

—excessive speed.

A railroad company is liable for injuries 33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

to one driving along a city street in which its tracks are located, resulting from the fright of his horses, by reason of which he is forced into close proximity to the tracks while trying to get himself and his team to a safe place, and is struck by a locomotive approaching at an excessive rate of speed, in violation of an ordinance, where such excessive speed is the proximate cause of the injury, and if the locomotive had not been run in excess of the legal rate of speed, he could have withdrawn himself from the place of danger. Colorado Midland R. Co. v. Robbins, 30 Colo. 449, 71 Pac. 371.

And a railroad company may be liable for injuries to one riding a mule alongside a track on a city street, in consequence of the fright of the mule and its carrying him onto the railroad track in front of an approaching train, where, in consequence of the train being run at a greater rate of speed than allowed by the city ordinances, the company's servants in charge of it, after seeing that the mule had become frightened and unmanageable and had run away and onto the track, were unable to stop the train in time to avoid striking the mule and rider, as they could have done had the train been going at a proper rate of speed. Prewitt v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. 134 Mo. 615, 36 S. W. 667.

—unusual and unnecessary noises and sights.

A railroad company is liable for injuries caused by frightening a horse upon a highway parallel with its tracks, if its employees in charge of a train know of the driver's presence and danger, and make an unusual and unnecessary noise. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Street, — Ky. —, 129 S. W. 570.

Thus, a company operating an electric railway along a public road is liable for injuries to one driving a mule along such road, caused by its taking fright and running away as the result of the company's running a car across a railroad track at an unusually high rate of speed, thereby making an unusual and unnecessary noise which buggy were over 100 feet from said car, as it was approaching said horse and buggy, said horse became frightened at said approaching car and the appearance thereof, and began to jump and rear. That said Brown threw up his hand, and signaled the motorman in charge of said car to stop. That, while said horse was so frightened, jumping, and rearing at the approach of said car, defendant's agent, and motorman, saw and was fully aware of the frightened condition of said horse and the cause thereof in ample time to have stopped the speed of said car and the motion thereof, in time to have prevented the injuries to the plaintiff hereinafter complained of, and said motorman and agent of the defendant in charge of said car, with full knowledge of the facts aforesaid, carelessly, negligently, and unlawfully failed, refused, and neglected to stop or check the speed of said car, though signaled and requested to do so by said Brown, and negligently and carelessly ran said car at said high rate of speed of 20 miles per hour towards and in the direction of said horse and buggy, in close proximity to them, thus greatly increasing the fright of said horse, by reason of which and on account of the negligence of said motorman and agent of the defendant, as aforesaid, it rendered it impossible for said Brown or this plaintiff to hold, manage, or control said horse. That, on account of the said negligence and carelessness of said motorman and agent of the defendant, the said horse was caused to its servants in charge know is likely to frighten the mule, which they see in close proximity to the crossing. Georgia R. & Electric Co. v. Joiner, 120 Ga. 905, 48 S. E. 336.

And a suburban railway company may be found guilty of negligence rendering it liable for injuries to one driving along a public highway on which its motorman and conductor are running an electric car on its tracks toward him, occasioned by the fright of his horse at the unusual but natural sounds and the splashing of water caused by the company's running the car at an ordinary rate of speed through a long pool of water covering its tracks, where the motorman saw the pool and continued to run through it without slackening speed until he passed the point where the traveler was injured, although the horse became frightened as soon as the car entered the highway. Ayars v. Camden & Suburban R. Co. 63 N. J. L. 416, 43 Atl. 678.

A railroad company is liable for injury sustained by the killing of horses so frightened by the whistling of a locomotive that they become unmanageable, plunge into a river, and are drowned, where the engineer, seeing the team, and seeing that it is frightened, or knowing that it is in danger of being frightened, sounds the whistle in an unusual manner, or when it is not necessary, or for the purpose of frightening the horses. Everett v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 121 N. C. 519, 27 S. E. 991.

And a railroad company may be liable for personal injuries sustained by one thrown to the ground and dragged some distance when his mule runs away on account of fright caused by an unusual and unnecessary noise made because of a defective stopping or plugging up of a broken cylinder cock. Hutcheson v. Southern R. Co. 134 Ga. 602, 68 S. E. 323.

Where a company operating electric cars on and along a suburban highway uses a car so constructed that when operated it rocks, teeters, and swings up and down at the ends, thereby causing the fenders to toss upward and downward, frightening a horse being driven along the highway, and where the motorman and conductor in charge of the car do not stop, although they know of the horse's fright in time to avoid an accident by stopping the car, it is a question for the jury whether the company is guilty of negligence rendering it liable for injuries to the driver by the fright and rearing and plunging of the horse. Fowler v. Ft. Wayne & W. Valley Traction Co. — Ind. App. —, 91 N. E. 47.

And a company operating an interurban railroad on and along a public highway is liable for injuries resulting to one driving along such highway from the fright of his horse, caused by a large advertising banner attached to the front of one of its approaching cars, which banner was not necessary for the proper management or running of the car, or in any manner required in the operation of the road, and, together with the motion and speed of the car, was well calculated to frighten horses unaccustomed thereto, and was negligently and carelessly adopted and used for advertising purposes. Indianapolis & G. Rapid Transit Co. v. Haines, 33 Ind. App. 63, 69 N. E. 187.

Duty to keep lookout.

While ordinarily the duty of a railroad company to keep a lookout does not extend to travelers on adjacent highways (Southern R. Co. v. Flynt, 2 Ga. App. 162, 58 S. E. 374), if the circumstances are such as to require the engineer, in the exercise of ordinary care to keep a lookout for danger to persons traveling on a parallel highway, and he fails to do so, the railroad company is liable, in the absence of contributory negligence, for injuries to the traveler which are proximate consequences of such failure. Johnson v. Texas & G. R. Co. 45 Tex. Civ. App. 146, 100 S. W. 206.

Thus, a railroad company operating a dummy railroad in and along the public streets of a city, connecting its lines with those of another company, is liable for injuries to one riding along one of such jump into said ditch on the east side of said highway, and to upset said buggy in said ditch, thereby throwing the plaintiff violently against the east bank of said ditch, on his shoulders and face, causing concussion from the shoulder to the hip joint, and going around the entire body, producing ecchymosis and great pain and anguish. That, had said motorman shut off the electricity from the motors on said car, the noise caused by said car would have been greatly lessened, and had said car been stopped or the speed thereof slackened, said accident would have been averted; all of which could have been done without danger or damages to said car or any of the occupants thereof. That at the time of said injury this plaintiff was in the real estate business and earning $200 per month. That, on account of said injury, the plaintiff was confined to his bed three weeks, and unable to do any work or follow his occupation until the 18th day of December, 1906. That, on account of said injury, he has been compelled to pay for medical attention the sum of $25 and the further sum of $12 for medicine. All to the plaintiff's damage in the sum of $1,000, for which plaintiff demands judgment and for all other proper relief."

Counsel for appellant, in their brief, state that the lower court sustained the demurrer on the theory that defendant owed no duty to one driving along a highway running parallel with its road. While as a general rule, those in charge of a railroads, in consequence of the fright of his horses at the noise of a blower in operation or a dummy engine standing on the street, even if it is a usual and necessary noise, if, by the exercise of reasonable care, the train men could have discovered the fright of the horses and the peril of the driver in time to have avoided the injury by stopping the noise. Feeney v. Wabash R. Co. 123 Mo. App. 420, 99 S. W. 477.

And where a public road, established before the location and construction of a railway, runs along and on its right of way, and the railroad company has since permitted it to be used continuously as a public road for more than ten years, it is liable for injuries to one driving thereon, occasioned by the fright of his horse at an approaching and passing train, where its employees in charge of the train have failed to exercise ordinary care to ascertain the traveler's position and danger, or, knowing that his horse is frightened and running away, and that its fright is caused by the approach and noise of the train, have failed to exercise ordinary care to avoid injuring him by slackening the speed or lessening the noise of the train. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Belew, 22 Tex. Civ. App. 264, 54 S. W. 1079, later appeal in 26 Tex. Civ. App. 8, 62 S. W. 99.

Where railroad tracks run through a city parallel with and so near to a public street that the public safety requires that engineers should look out for persons lawfully using the street, in order to prevent the frightening of teams, and an engineer should know that, by running alongside the street at an excessive rate of speed, and by unnecessarily and repeatedly sounding the whistle, teams traveling on the street near the track may become frightened, the railroad company is liable for injuries to one traveling on such street, caused by the fright of his team, where the engineer in charge of an engine ran it at a rate in excess of the speed allowed by an ordinance of the city, and either did discover, or, by the exercise of ordinary care, could have discovered, the fright of the team, and unnecessarily sounded the whistle, which should not have been sounded under the circumstances. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Sanders, 42 Tex. Civ. App. 545, 94 S. W. 149.

And a railroad company may be found guilty of negligence rendering it liable for injuries sustained by one driving along a highway parallel with and near to one of its tracks, in consequence of the fright of his horse at the noise of a train approaching from the rear, where, although the engineer in charge could have seen the buggy on the highway for a distance of a quarter of a mile, such train, an hour late, approached without whistle or other notice, until within a few yards of the team, when its whistle was blown, and the horse became more frightened, and ran away. Hudson v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 14 Bush, 303.

Discovered peril.

While the cases are comparatively few in which the circumstances are such as to impose upon railroad companies the duty to keep a lookout for travelers upon adjacent parallel highways, it seems clear in all cases, as illustrated in EFFINGER v. FT. WAYNE & W. VALLEY TRACTION CO., that if the employees in charge of a locomotive, car, or train actually see that the team has been frightened, and know or have reason to believe that it is likely to become unmanageable and cause injury, they are guilty of negligence rendering the company liable for resulting injuries, if they fail to use all reasonable means at hand which a man of ordinary prudence would use to allay the fright or avoid injury. Thus, a railroad company is liable for injuries to one driving along a public road on its right of way, parallel with its railroad track, and at a distance of 15 to 25 feet therefrom, with a barbed wire fence a few feet away on the opposite side of the road, which injuries are occasioned by the fright of his horse at a train approaching from the rear, where the proximate cause of the injuries is the failure of those in charge of the train, after seeing the traveler's danger, to do everything in their power, consistent way train are not required to watch an abutting highway to discover frightened horses, and while it is not negligence in itself to run a train or electric car at a speed of 20 miles an hour, it does not follow therefrom that there may not be circumstances under which a duty might arise on the part of the railway company to avoid an injury to a traveler on such highway. As was said by Mr. Justice Brewer in Culp v. Atchison & N. R. Co. 17 Kan. 475: "That a party has a right to do a given act at certain times and under certain circumstances does not prove that the same act is right under all circumstances and at all times." 2 Thomp. Neg. §§ 1909-1911; Billman v. Indianapolis, C. & L. R. Co. (1881) 76 Ind. 167, 40 Am. Rep. 230.

with the safety of the train and those upon it, to stop the train, decrease its speed, stop its noise, or lessen the same, and thus avoid the danger of increasing the fright of the horse by running upon him in his frightened condition. Johnson v. Texas & G. R. Co. 45 Tex. Civ. App. 146, 100 S. W. 206.

And a company operating electric street cars over and along a highway outside of a city is liable for injuries to one driving along such highway, caused by the fright and running away of his horse, where its servant in charge of a car approaching the traveler from the rear at a high rate of speed sees that his horse is frightened at the car and the ringing of its gong, and fails to make any effort to stop the car, although he has time, and could, by reasonable effort, stop it, but carelessly or wantonly keeps up the speed of the car and continues ringing the gong. Owensboro City R. Co. v. Lyddane, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 698, 41 S. W. 578.

Where a horse has become frightened at a proper sounding of the whistle of a locomotive on a railroad running parallel with the highway, the railroad company may be found guilty of negligence rendering it liable for injury to the driver, if its engineer unnecessarily uses the whistle a second time at the same place, when he sees, or, with proper care, might see, the traveler, and that his horse is becoming unmanageable. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. v. Stinger, 78 Pa. 219.

And a railroad company is liable for injuries to one driving along the highway running parallel with its road, resulting from the fright of his team, if its engineer unnecessarily continues to blow his whistle after discovering that a blast of the whistle, given as a signal of approach to a station in a town, has frightened the team, which the driver is trying to control, and that it probably will be more frightened by continued blowing (Akridge v. Atlanta & W. P. R. Co. 90 Ga. 232, 16 S. E. 81); or after he has been notified by the fireman that the team is frightened (Lyons v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. — S. D. —, 128 N. W. 134).

So, a railroad company operating a por-

"Negligence" is a relative term, and of necessity must depend upon the circumstances of each particular case. All the attendant circumstances, including the degree of danger and the defendant's knowledge, if any, of plaintiff's peril, should be considered in determining the standard of care which may be reasonably required in the particular case. 29 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 417. It is not sought in this complaint to charge the defendant with negligence in the first instance by reason either of the speed of the car or its appearance; but the theory of the pleading is that plaintiff was in a situation of imminent peril, and defendant, with full knowledge of the situation, afterwards increased that peril, and thereby caused the injury

tion of one of its bridges as a toll highway bridge may be liable for injuries to one who has paid toll and is driving over such portion of the bridge, resulting from the fright and running away of his horse, where he meets on the bridge a train with an engine at each end, and those in charge of the second engine, although seeing that the horse has become frightened, permit the engine to throw out an unusual quantity of smoke, steam, and cinders. Kentucky & I. Bridge Co. v. Montgomery, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 167, 57 L.R.A. 781, 67 S. W. 1008, 68 S. W. 1097.

And where the horse of one riding along a highway parallel with and near to a railroad, having been frightened by a train approaching from behind, runs nearly a mile, and then, the train having caught up with it, throws its rider, and the train men claim as their reason for not applying the brakes that it would have been necessary for that purpose to sound the whistle which would have increased the fright of the horse, the railroad company is liable for the rider's injuries, if the jury find that under all the circumstances, it would have been prudent to sound the whistle for the application of brakes. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Pipes, 10 Ky. L. Rep. 590 (abstract).

A company operating an electric car over a track in a highway may be liable for an injury to one riding in a carriage along side the track, by reason of the fright of the mules drawing the carriage, where the motorman in charge of the car, which was running at a high rate of speed, after seeing the team and their frightened condition, made no effort to stop the car or to prevent a collision with the carriage, but continued to approach, and ran by the frightened team at a high rate of speed. Dabbs v. Rome R. & Light Co. 8 Ga. App. 350, 69 S. E. 38.

And a railroad company may be liable for injuries to one driving upon a city street along the side of its track, in consequence of the fright of his team, causing a collision between his wagon and a locomotive, where the company's servants operating such locomotive saw, or, by the ex-

It may be stated as a general rule that when one sees another in imminent peril, from which he cannot extricate himself, it is the duty of such person to so act as not to increase the peril; and, if he does act in a manner to increase the danger, after he has knowledge thereof, it is negligence. Indianapolis Union R. Co. v. Boettcher (1891) 131 Ind. 82, 28 N. E. 551; Billman v. Indianapolis, C. & L. R. Co. (1881) 16 Ind. 167, 40 Am. Rep. 230; Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Stanger (1893) 7 Ind. App. 179, 32 N. E. 209, 34 N. E. 688; Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Juday (1897) 19 Ind. App. 436, 49 N. E. 843; Kentucky L. Bridge Co. v. Montgomery, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 167, 57 L.R.A. 781, 67 S. W. 1008, 68 S. W. 1097; Ward v. Maine C. R. Co.

96 Me. 136, 51 Atl. 947; Hanlon v. Philadelphia & W. C. Turnp. Road Co. 182 Pa. 115, 37 Atl. 943; Fares v. Rio Grande Western R. Co. 3 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 1070, note; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Martin (1908) 33 Ky. L. Rep. 666, 110 S. W. 815; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Smith, 107 Ky. 178, 53 S. W. 269.

The complaint alleges that plaintiff and another were driving on a public highway, running parallel with defendant's road, and only 30 feet from the center thereof; that there was a ditch on each side of the highway; that the horse became frightened at the approaching car, and began to jump and rear; that the buggy top was up; that defendant's motorman saw and was fully aware of plaintiff's situation while the car was in the exercise of ordinary care and diligence, could have seen, the fright of the team and the driver's peril in time to avoid the collision, but failed to do so (Moore v. Kansas City & I. Rapid Transit R. Co. 126 Mo. 265, 29 S. W. 9); or where those in charge of a locomotive caused great and unusual volumes of steam to be suddenly emitted from the locomotive, enveloping the team, and after they saw that the team was frightened, and had backed the wagon onto the track, and that the driver was helpless, made no effort to stop the locomotive, but negligently and unnecessarily ran it against the wagon, injuring the driver. Brunswick & B. R. Co. v. Hoodenpyle, 129 Ga. 174, 58 S. E. 705.

A company operating an electric railway along a public highway between two cities is liable for injuries resulting to one driving along such highway in a wagon drawn by two horses, if its motorman in charge of a car approaching at a high rate of speed from the rear, having sounded a whistle which frightened one of the horses, and caused it to rear and plunge and run upon the railroad track, and having seen the frightened and unmanageable condition of the horse, and the close proximity of the wagon to the track, so that the car could not pass without striking it, negligently ran the car against the wagon and team, causing the injury, although he could, by the exercise of ordinary care, have stopped the car and avoided the collision. Cincinnati, L. & A. Street R. Co. v. Cook, — Ind. App. —, 90 N. E. 1052.

And a railroad company is liable for injuries to one driving along a highway parallel with its track, in consequence of the fright and running away of his horses, and collision of a train therewith at a crossing ahead, where the employees in charge of the engine of a freight train at which the team became frightened failed to exercise ordinary care to prevent injury to him, after they had seen, or, by the exercise of ordinary care, could have seen and known, that the team was unmanageable and running away, going in the direction of the crossing, and the situation was such as to induce a person of ordinary prudence to believe that there was danger of a collision at the crossing. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Pace, 32 Ky. L. Rep. 806, 106 S. W. 1176.

Likewise, a railway company is liable for injuries to one driving along a highway parallel with its tracks, by the fright and running away of his horses, where the engineer in charge of a locomotive and train approaching from the rear, after seeing the driver struggling to control the frightened horses, negligently and unnecessarily permitted steam to escape and blew his whistle, at which the horses took new fright and became unmanageable and ran away along the highway toward a point where it was crossed by the railway; and the engineer, watching them run, and knowing that the driver's only chance of escape was by crossing the railroad ahead of the train, and continuing along the highway, made no effort to stop or check his train, but increased its speed, so that when the horses reached the crossing, the locomotive and two or three cars had passed, blocking the highway, and the horses turned and dashed through a fence and down a bank into a creek. Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Stanger, 7 Ind. App. 179, 32 N. E. 209, 34 N. E. 688.

But in Evansville Electric R. Co. v. Folz, — Ind. App. —, 93 N. E. 866, it was held that an electric railway company operating cars on a suburban highway was not liable for injuries to one driving a team of mules on such highway, resulting from the fright and unmanageableness of the mules, where it appears only that the motorman in charge of the car did not stop after the mules became frightened at the approach and noise of the car, and more and more frightened and unmanageable as the car came nearer, and that the occupants of the wagon signaled and called to the motorman,—there being no showing as to the width and condition of the highway at the place, or as to the proximity of the team to the track.

was 100 feet away, and in time to have slackened the speed of the car, and prevented plaintiff's injury, and without danger of injury to the passengers or car; but that, with full knowledge of the situation, he neglected to stop or check the speed of the car, thereby increasing the horse's fright, and rendered it impossible for the driver to control the horse; that by reason of the motorman's said conduct, after knowing plaintiff's peril, the horse was caused to jump into one of the ditches at the side of the highway, thereby causing the plaintiff's injury. The complaint charges negligence under the above rule.

Counsel for the appellee assert that the complaint is insufficient because there is no allegation that the appearance of the car, or any act complained of, was calculated to frighten horses of ordinary gentleness. The complaint does not proceed on that theory, but on the theory above indicated.

Appellee also contends that the complaint is defective because it fails to aver that plaintiff would have been able, because of the gentleness of the horse, or other reason, to have controlled it, had the car been stopped. In view of the facts alleged, such allegation was unnecessary.

Appellee further says the complaint is insufficient because it fails to allege that defendant's failure to check the speed of the car was the proximate cause of the injury. The complaint alleges sufficient facts in regard to this matter to justify the submission of the question of negligence to a trial. Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. v. Slaughter (1906) 167 Ind. 330, 7 L.R.A. (N.S.) 597, 119 Am. St. Rep. 503, 79 N. E. 186; Rodgers v. Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. (1898) 150 Ind. 397, 49 N. E. 453.

Appellee suggests other objections to the complaint that might be well taken on a motion to make the complaint more specific but which are not involved in the ruling on a demurrer for want of facts. The court erred in sustaining the demurrer to the complaint.

Judgment reversed, with instructions to the lower court to overrule the demurrer Wanton or malicious acts.

Where acts of servants of a railroad company in the use of instrumentalities of the company placed in their hands are wanton and malicious, the company is liable for injuries resulting from the fright of horses on parallel highways, caused thereby. As held in Texas & P. R. Co. v. Scoville, 27 L.R.A. 179, 10 C. C. A. 479, 23 U. S. App. 506, 62 Fed. 730, the engineer and fireman in charge of a railroad locomotive on a regular run, who wantonly and maliciously blow the whistle to frighten a horse being ridden along a public road running parallel with the railroad, are acting within the scope of their employment, so as to render the company liable for injuries to the rider.

And under statutes providing that a railroad company shall be liable in damages for any injury done to persons or property by the improper conduct of any person in its employment, in running locomotives or cars, a railroad company is liable for injury to one riding in a buggy near its track, by the fright of his horse, causing him to be thrown from the buggy, where an engineer, as his train passes, unnecessarily and maliciously, and for the purpose of frightening the horse and hurting the driver, causes the engine to whistle twice in quick succession. Georgia R. Co. v. Newsome, 60 Ga. 492.

A railroad company is liable for injuries to one traveling along a public highway through a narrow lane parallel with and near to its railroad track, by the fright of his horse and overturning of his buggy, where the engineer on a train approaching from the rear unnecessarily, wantonly, and maliciously sounded the whistle in a harsh and unusual manner, so as to frighten the horse, and after seeing that the sounds had frightened the horse, continued whistling until the carriage was overturned and the injury inflicted. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Dickson, 63 Ill. 151, 14 Am. Rep. 114.

Or where he needlessly, wantonly, willfully, and recklessly, if not maliciously sounded the whistle in such manner, and after seeing that the horses were running away, continued to whistle thus until the train came abreast of the running team Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Dickson, 88 Ill. 431.

Likewise, a lumber company operating a private railroad for conveying its lumber is liable for injuries to one traveling on a highway parallel with and near to its track by the fright of his horse, where the engineer of one of its log trains, as he was passing near the traveler, wantonly and unnecessarily blew the whistle of the engine on purpose to frighten the horses. Stewart v. Cary Lumber Co. 146 N. C. 47, 59 S. E. 545.

And a turnpike company operating a steam passenger railway on and along its turnpike road may be liable for injuries to one driving along the road, by the fright of his horses, where its engineer and conductor in charge of a combined steam engine and passenger car, running at the rate of 3 miles an hour, saw the horse take fright when 30 or 40 yards off, and did not stop, but the engineer recklessly blew off three or four spurts of steam as he approached nearer, as if to aggravate the terror of the horse for his own amusement. Hanlon v. Philadelphia & W. C. Turnpike Road Co. 182 Pa. 115, 37 Atl. 943.

Contributory negligence.

Contributory negligence on the part of an injured driver is, of course, a bar to his recovery against a railroad company for injuries resulting from the fright of his team by a locomotive, car, or train on a railroad parallel with the highway on which he is traveling, unless the fright is caused by some wanton or malicious act on the part of the company. But a person is not, as a matter of law, guilty of contributory negligence in driving along a public highway, along which an electric railway runs, because he knows that his team is liable to become frightened at the cars. Cincinnati, L. & A. Street R. Co. v. Cook, — Ind. App. — 90 N. E. 1052.

Nor is a person with a horse, doing business in a street through which a railroad track runs, guilty of negligence as a matter of law in leaving such horse, not shown to be vicious, unsafe, or unmanageable, standing in his immediate presence while he attends to such business, or in trying, without time for cool reflection, to catch the horse when it has been frightened by an approaching train, and starts across the tracks. Wasmer v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 80 N. Y. 212, 36 Am. Rep. 608.

But a person driving an unbroken or vicious horse, or one that is easily frightened by a locomotive, along a public road running side by side with a railroad, where he is liable to be met or overtaken by a train, does so at his own risk; and it is immaterial that there is no other road for his use. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. v. Stinger, 78 Pa. 219.

And a person who knows that his horses are afraid of cars, and that a train is likely to come along at any time, should remove them a safe distance from a railroad track alongside which he is traveling on a public street, provided he has time and opportunity to do so; and if, knowing the situation, he chooses to have them remain near the track, and by reason thereof his conduct contributes directly to an injury by collision with a train at which his team becomes frightened, he cannot recover against the railroad company. Moore v. Kansas City & I. Rapid Transit R. Co. 126 Mo. 265, 29 S. W. 9. A. C. W.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE RAILROAD COMPANY, Appt.,

v.

WILLIAM RENFRO'S Admr.

(142 Ky. 590, 135 S. W. 266.)

Carrier — separation of races — failure to enforce — liability for injury.

1. A railroad whose conductor fails as soon as practicable, and within a reasonable time after discovering a white passenger in a negro compartment, to require him to leave it, is, where the statute provides a penalty for permitting passengers to occupy compartments set apart for the other race and charges the conductor with the enforcement of the law, liable in damages for the unprovoked shooting by him of a negro.

Evidence — failure to separate races in car — acts of conductor.

2. Upon the question of the liability of a railroad company for an assault upon a colored passenger, because of the conductor's failure to obey the statutory requirement to remove a white man from the colored compartment of a train, evidence is not admissible of his failure to remove other white persons therefrom, of his failure to station a guard to prevent white passengers from entering the compartment, or of the manner in which white passengers were behaving in their own compartment.

Same — failure to notify conductor — liability of carrier.

3. Although the duty of enforcing a statute requiring the separation of white and colored passengers is imposed upon conductors of trains, a railroad company may be held liable for injury inflicted upon a passenger of one race by a member of the other who is allowed to be in the wrong compartment without the knowledge of the conductor, if a subordinate employee, upon discovering his presence there, fails, as soon as practicable and within a reasonable time, to notify the conductor of that fact.

Same — self-defense — effect.

4. A railroad company cannot be held liable for the killing of a negro passenger by a white person permitted to be in the negro compartment of a train, contrary to the provisions of the statute, if the shooting was done in necessary self-defense.

(March 7, 1911.)

Note. — Carriers: liability for injury to passenger by another passenger permitted to remain in car in violation of separate coach law.

In an action against a carrier for assault upon a colored passenger by a white passenger permitted to remain in the car set apart for colored persons, it is error for the court to omit from his charge any reference to the statute requiring that the two races be separated, as whether the carrier complied with that statute is a material issue. Hillman v. Georgia R. & Bkg. Co. 126 Ga. 814, 56 S. E. 68, 8 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 222.

The effect of such statutes seems to be that if the carrier assigns a passenger to the wrong car, or compartment, or permits him to remain therein after knowledge of his presence, it becomes liable to other passengers, rightfully in the car, for any injury inflicted upon them by such passenger, although its employees did not have notice of the violent conduct of such passenger or reason to anticipate it.

Thus, in Quinn v. Louisville & N. R. Co.

33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Bell County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for the death of plaintiff's intestate alleged to have been caused by the failure of defendant's servant to obey the statutory requirement to remove a white man from the colored compartment of a train. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Charles W. Metcalf, J. W. Alcorn, and Benjamin D. Warfield for appellant.

Mr. W. F. Davis for appellee.

Carroll, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

In July, 1908, William Renfro, a colored man, while a passenger on one of appellant's trains, was shot and killed in the compartment set aside for colored passengers by Carlo Jones, a white man, also a white passenger, who went from the compartment for white passengers into the compartment for colored passengers. This action was brought by the administrator of Renfro to recover damages for his death, the ground of the action being that the appellant company subjected itself to liability for the death of Renfro by permitting, through its employees, Jones to be and remain in the colored compartment in violation of the statute. Upon a trial before a jury, a verdict was returned in favor of the appellee, and it is the judgment on that verdict we are asked to reverse.

The errors complained of are that the trial court erred in the admission and rejection of evidence, in giving and refusing instructions, and in declining at the conclusion of the evidence to direct a verdict in favor of the railroad company.

The facts are substantially as follows: Renfro, Jones, and a number of other white and colored passengers got on the train at Middlesboro in the night. The first passenger coach on the train was divided by a partition, with a door in the aisle, into two compartments; one being set apart for colored passengers, and the other used as a smoking car for white passengers. Renfro and a number of his colored companions and friends took seats in the colored compartment; and Jones and a number of other white persons took seats in the smoker. Shortly after leaving Middlesboro, the conductor commenced taking up tickets in the colored compartment, which was at the front of the train, and from there went into the smoker, where the white passengers were, and thence into other cars in the rear of the train. It appears from the evidence that, as he passed through the colored compartment taking up tickets, there was at least one and probably two white passengers, Jones not being one of them, in this compartment, and that he saw or could have seen them, and was requested by one or more of the colored passengers to make them go into their own compartment, and was also asked to keep the partition door closed, but that he did not give any attention to either of these requests, but went on about his business of collecting tickets. Jones did not go into the colored compartment until after the conductor had passed 98 Ky. 231, 32 S. W. 742, it was held that the carrier was liable to a colored woman for grossly insulting language and conduct used by a white man who was permitted by the brakeman to remain in the colored car until he finished talking with a colored man with whom he had some business.

In Wood v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 101 Ky. 703, 42 S. W. 349, it was held that defendant was liable for the use, by white passengers permitted in the colored car, of profane and indecent language in the presence of plaintiff, a colored woman, although the employees of defendant did not know of such conduct.

That knowledge of the presence of the offending passenger in the wrong compartment is essential to the liability of the carrier is shown by Bailey v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 19 Ky. L. Rep. 1617, 44 S. W. 105, in which the court says that defendant would not be liable unless its employees permitted the white persons to enter the colored compartment, or, knowing of their presence there, permitted them to remain.

In Louisville & E. R. Co. v. Vincent, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 1040, 96 S. W. 898, the carrier was held liable for injuries received by a white woman during a panic ensuing as a result of a fight growing out of a controversy over fares, between its employees and a colored man who had been permitted to ride in the car assigned to white persons.

In Hale v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. — Ky. —, 135 S. W. 398, where the conductor requested an intoxicated white passenger to leave the colored car, and he did so peaceably, it was held that the company was not liable for his conduct after he returned to the car without the conductor's knowledge, the court saying that the evidence failed to show failure on the part of the conductor to exercise the utmost degree of care and skill that ordinarily prudent persons would exercise under similar circumstances to protect plaintiff.

And in Walker v. International & G. N. R. Co. — Tex. Civ. App. —, 117 S. W. 1020, where it was not shown that the passenger for whose insulting language action was brought, was assigned to the colored car, or that any of defendant's employees knew of his presence there until the disturbance, it was held that the company was not liable.

R. L. S.

cut of it, and there is no evidence whatever that the conductor or the brakeman on the train knew that Jones had gone into the colored compartment or that he was in there until after the trouble between himself and Renfro. But the colored porter testifies that he saw Jones in the colored compartment a few minutes before the shooting occurred that resulted in Renfro's death. That he did not request him to leave it, nor did he inform the conductor that he was in the colored compartment. About 6 miles from Middlesboro there is a station called "Ferndale," and it was here that the train made the first stop after leaving Middlesboro. Some place between Middlesboro and Ferndale—the weight of the evidence conducing to show that it was shortly before the train reached Ferndale—Jones went from the white compartment into the colored compartment, and was engaged for the few minutes that elapsed between the time he entered until the train reached Ferndale in friendly conversation with an old colored man he had known for many years. This old man left the train at Ferndale, and about the time the train started Jones went to the front end of the colored compartment where Renfro was, and in a moment Renfro and Jones commenced shooting at each other, with the result that Renfro was killed, and Jones dangerously, but not fatally, wounded, although he died from other causes before the trial. What occasioned the difficulty between Jones and Renfro is entirely unexplained. There was no quarrel or disturbance between them preceding the shooting. They were seen engaged in conversation, and Jones was heard to say to Renfro, "What did you say anything about that for?" and this was the only part of the conversation between them that any of the witnesses who testified heard, but immediately after these words were spoken the shooting commenced. Renfro, who was a man of bad reputation, had been drinking, but to what extent he was intoxicated is not shown. Jones was perfectly sober, and, except for the difficulty with Renfro, he did not do or say anything that did or would have caused the slightest disturbance. Nor is there any evidence that the other white men who were in the colored compartment created any disorder or attempted in any manner to insult, abuse, or harm any of the colored passengers. Indeed, although several of the white as well as colored passengers were drinking, and in a more or less degree under the influence of liquor, there was no disorder or quarrel or excitement on the train, except between Jones and Renfro.

Under these facts the first question to be disposed of is: Should the request for a peremptory instruction have been granted? Section 795 of the Kentucky Statutes (Russell's Stat. § 5343), reads in part: "Any railroad company or corporation, person, or persons, running or otherwise operating railroad cars or coaches, by steam or otherwise, on any railroad line or track within this state, . . . are hereby required to furnish separate coaches or cars for the travel or transportation of the white and colored passengers on their respective lines of railroad. Each compartment of a coach divided by a good and substantial wooden partition, with a door therein, shall be deemed a separate coach within the meaning of this act. . . ." Section 797 (§ 5345) reads in part: "That any railroad company or companies that shall fail, refuse, or neglect to comply with the provisions of §§ 795 and 796 shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor." And § 799 (§ 5347) provides: "The conductors or managers on all railroads shall have power, and are hereby required, to assign to each white or colored passenger his or her respective car or coach or compartment, and should any passenger refuse to occupy the car, coach, or compartment to which he or she may be assigned by the conductor or manager, said conductor or manager shall have the right to refuse to carry such passenger on his train, and may put such passenger off of the train. . . ." And § 800 (§ 5348) reading: "That any conductor or manager on any railroad who shall fail or refuse to carry out the provisions of § 799, shall, upon conviction, be fined. . . ." It will be noticed that under this statute railroad companies are required to provide separate compartments or coaches for white and colored passengers, and that the conductors or managers of trains are required to assign white and colored passengers to the respective cars or compartments set apart for their use, and to compel them, upon pain of ejection from the train, to occupy such cars or compartments. There is no complaint that the railroad company did not provide compartments in accordance with the statute, and so this part of the statute need not be further noticed. But, under this statute, if the conductor or manager of a train permits white or colored passengers to be or remain in a coach or compartment set apart for the other race, after he knows or has information they are in such coach or compartment, the company will be liable in damages if any passenger rightfully occupying his coach or compartment is humiliated, insulted, injured, or killed by a passenger who is permitted to remain in a coach or compartment set apart for the use and occupancy of the race of which he is not a member. The duties and liabilities of railroad companies in this respect were considered by this court in Quinn v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 98 Ky. 231, 32 S. W. 742. In that case Fannie Quinn, a colored woman, brought suit against the company, charging that, with the consent of the conductor, white passengers were permitted to enter and remain in the car set apart for colored people in which she was riding, and while in the car used violent, profane, abusive, and indecent language in her hearing, and otherwise humiliated and disturbed her. The evidence showed that the conductor knew the white men were in the car, but did not, as directed by the statute, compel them to go and remain in another car. On these facts, the court said: "While the mere presence of the intruder into this coach for colored persons, with the knowledge of the conductor, would not give to the occupants a cause of action against the corporation, we cannot concur with counsel or the court below that the separate coach law has no application to the facts of this case. It is not necessary, in order to permit a recovery, to show that the conductor knew of this bad treatment of the colored passenger, or from his condition had the right to anticipate it was the purpose of the intruder to produce trouble. He should not be allowed to enter the car, or to remain there after his presence is discovered. . . . If, as we shall assume was the case, each one of the passengers had been assigned the coach required by the statute, and the white passenger had left his coach and gone into the coach with these colored people without the knowledge of the conductor, while he was attending to his duties in the other cars, and had there abused and insulted the appellant, it is plain no action could be maintained against the company, but, when the white passenger is assigned to the car set apart for those of another race, the company will be held responsible for his bad conduct affecting the rights of other passengers, although the conductor may be ignorant of what is transpiring, and, where the conductor or those managing the train know that one is in the wrong car, it is his duty to expel him, and by consenting to his remaining the company becomes responsible for his conduct so long as he does remain. . . . It may be contended that the white passenger having been assigned to his proper coach, and then leaving it without the knowledge of the conductor, exempts the company from liability, unless the conductor knows of the wrongs being committed or the purpose of the passenger, by reason of his conduct, to mistreat passengers. This would, perhaps, be a rational conclusion unless it further appeared the conductor, or those controlling the train, knew of the white passenger's presence in the colored compartment, and took no steps to require him to leave. Here the conductor assented to his remaining in the car until he despatched his business with the old negro, and the company should be held responsible for his conduct so long as he remained, and any other construction of the duties of corporations and their agents, arising from the passage of this law, would nullify its provisions or amount to a disregard of the manifest purpose of the legislature in enacting it. . . . Conductors, or those in charge of passenger trains, are invested with the power to protect those who for the time being are under their charge, and when it is shown they have exercised that vigilance that prudent men would exercise for the protection of the passenger, the company is relieved from liability." To the same effect is Wood v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 101 Ky. 703, 42 S. W. 349; Louisville & E. R. Co. v. Vincent 29 Ky. L. Rep. 1049, 96 S. W. 898.

33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Under the principles announced in these cases, which we approve, there could be no doubt that, if Jones had been assigned to or permitted to be or remain in the colored compartment by or with the consent of the conductor, the railroad company would be liable to a passenger in the colored compartment for any misconduct or violence of Jones. But there is no evidence that the conductor who was in charge of the train knew or had any information that Jones was in or intended to go into the colored compartment until after the difficulty. Jones was not in this compartment when the conductor passed through it, and at the time he went in the conductor was in another part of the train collecting tickets and fares. It therefore cannot be said that the conductor was in any respect neglectful of his duties under the statute. The fact that he failed or refused to remove from the colored compartment the two white men it was said were in there when he passed through taking up tickets or failed to lock or station at the partition door the porter or brakeman to prevent white passengers from going into the colored compartment, did not constitute a violation of the statute, and evidence upon these points should not have been admitted. Nor was it competent or relevant to show how passengers in the white compartment were conducting themselves. When the conductor went through the colored compartment and saw the two white men in there, it was undoubtedly his duty to have compelled them to leave the compartment but his failure to do this did not visi-any civil or criminal liability upon the company or any civil liability upon the conductor, as these white men were not guilty of any misconduct while in the colored compartment. But their mere presence there, with the knowledge of the conductor, subjected him to the penalty denounced by the statute against any conductor who fails or refuses to carry out the provisions of the statute. In other words, if a conductor knows or has information that white or colored passengers are in coaches or compartments set apart for the other race, and he fails or refuses to expel them from the coach or compartment they are wrongfully in, as soon as practicable and within a reasonable time, he may be punished for a violation of the statute; but, unless the passenger who is in the coach or compartment set apart for the other race commits some act of violence or is guilty of rude, insulting, or abusive conduct that is calculated to humiliate or wound the feelings of passengers rightfully occupying the coach or compartment, no one of these passengers will have any cause of action against the company for the failure of the conductor to observe the law. It will be noticed that the statute uses the words "conductor or manager" in defining the duty of trainmen and fixing the penalty for disobedience of the statute. Generally speaking, the conductor is the manager of the train, and we think the words "conductor" or "manager" are used interchangeably and intended to mean the same person, unless it should be that a person not called or designated a "conductor" should be in charge of a train, and in a state of case like this he might appropriately be called the "manager." It has always been the practice of railroad companies in this state to have a conductor on every passenger train, and it is a matter of common knowledge that the conductor is the person who has charge of the train, controls its movements, and is held responsible by the company for obedience to its rules and regulations. It is also a matter of common knowledge that on all passenger trains there are brakemen, and on some of them porters, who assist in looking after the safety and comfort of passengers and in performing other duties incident to the operation of the train. But these brakemen and porters are under the control and supervision of the conductor, and do as he directs them. The method of operating passenger trains and the designation given to employees was well known to the legislature that adopted this carefully prepared law, and, if it had been intended to embrace brakemen or porters or other agents or employees, except conductors or managers, the act would have so provided. The failure to mention in the act any servants or employees, except conductors or managers, was not the result of inadvertence or mistake. It therefore seems obvious that in designating only conductors and managers it was intended to exclude other servants or employees, and to hold only the conductor or manager of the train responsible for the observance of the law, and consequently the company is only civilly liable in cases like the one under consideration when the conductor or manager violates the law. As it was the purpose of this statute to only hold responsible, and punish for a failure to perform the prescribed duty, the person in charge of the train, whether he be called a conductor or manager, and as no other person except the one in control of the train is charged with the duty of enforcing the law or punished for his failure to do so, the company cannot be held responsible in a civil action for any act or omission of duty in respect to the enforcement of this law, unless it is committed by the person in charge of the train, to wit, the conductor or manager. But, we are further of the opinion that if a brakeman, porter, or other employee connected with the passenger department of the train in the performance of duties that relate to the comfort, convenience or safety of the passengers, knows or has information that a passenger is riding in a car or compartment set apart for another race, that he should as soon as practicable and within a reasonable time notify the conductor of this fact, and that the conductor, upon receiving the information, should as soon as practicable and within a reasonable time remove the offending passenger. Brakemen and porters are servants of the company, under the control of the conductor, and while they are not charged with the enforcement of the law, or personally responsible for a failure to execute it, it is nevertheless their duty as servants of the company and assistants of the conductor to use all reasonable means to secure obedience to the statute, and when one of these subordinate employees knows or has information that this statute is being violated, and fails as soon as practicable and within a reasonable time to notify the conductor of the fact, the company should be held responsible upon the ground that through its employees it is consenting to or acquiescing in a violation of the law. The statute imposes upon all railroad companies the duty of providing separate coaches or compartments for the white and colored races, and therefore the company, through all its servants who are connected with the passenger service, should make every reasonable effort to require passengers to obey the law. It is not meant by what we have said to leave the impression that brakemen and porters should not, without calling on or notifying the conductor, enforce obedience to the statute, as there is no doubt that, as agents and servants of the company, it is not only their right, but their duty, to make reasonable efforts to require its observance; but, for the failure to do so, the company will not be civilly liable for a violation of the statute. Nor would we be understood as holding that the duty and liability of the conductor, as well as the company, for his acts, is confined to instances in which he knows or has information from an agent or employee of the company that the statute is being violated. When the conductor receives information from any source that the statute is being violated, he should as soon as practicable and within a reasonable time take appropriate steps to compel its observance.

Having this view of the law of the case, it will be seen that the liability of the company in this case depends upon the question whether or not the porter performed his duty in the manner we have ruled he should. In other words, it was the duty of the porter as soon as practicable, and within a reasonable time after discovering that Jones was in the colored compartment, to notify the conductor, and the duty of the conductor as soon as practicable, and within a reasonable time after receiving the notice, to eject him. Therefore, if the porter had exercised the diligence required, and the conductor could within the time indicated have removed Jones from the car before he killed Renfro, the company is liable, unless Jones killed Renfro in self-defense. The porter is the only witness who testifies that he, the porter, saw Jones in the colored compartment, but it is not shown by his evidence, or that of any other person, that after he first saw him there it was practicable for him within a reasonable time to notify the conductor, or that it would have been practicable for the conductor within a reasonable time after receiving the information, if it had been conveyed to him, to have ejected Jones before the difficulty.

It results from these considerations that the motion for a peremptory instruction should have been sustained. If there is a retrial, the court, in addition to instructing the jury as indicated, should instruct them that, if Jones shot and killed Renfro in his necessary self-defense, they cannot allow any damages for his death. In other words, upon this point the court should give the instruction usually given in criminal cases.

Wherefore the judgment is reversed, with directions for a new trial in conformity with this opinion.

MISSISSIPPI SUPREME COURT.

RAS NEELY, Appt.,

v.

STATE OF MISSISSIPPI.

(— Miss. —, 54 So. 315.)

Contempt—Intoxication in court.

Being in a court room in an intoxicated condition does not constitute contempt of court if the fact is not brought to the attention of the judge and the business of the court is in no way interfered with.

(February 27, 1911.)

Note.—Intoxication in court room as contempt.

It is said in 7 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 28, that a direct contempt or a contempt in facie curiæ is noisy or tumultuous conduct in the presence of the court, or so near thereto as to interrupt its proceedings; or an open defiance to its powers or authority; or disrespectful behavior or language to the presiding judge; or any improper conduct tending to defeat or impair the administration of justice.

If this definition be taken as the criterion, it would seem to follow as a natural conclusion that, as held in NEELY v. STATE, merely going into a court room in an intoxicated condition, without indulging in boisterous conduct, or in any way interfering with the conduct of the business of the court, is not a contempt, at least where the court does not know of the person's drunken condition.

On the other hand, in the only additional case found to discuss this matter (Com. v. Clark, 13 Pa. Co. Ct. 439) the court seemed inclined to take a contrary view. There seems to have been a question in that case whether the defendant had actively created any disturbance, and the court in discussing this question said that it was a disturbance for him really to come into court with a prisoner in a drunken condition, and, at another point in its discussion, the court said a little more guardedly, that if the defendant came into court drunk, not simply being under some influence of liquor, but intoxicated, as the term is usually understood, so as really to be disorderly from that very circumstance, he would be guilty of a contempt. It is possible that the result in this case was somewhat influenced by the fact that the defendant was an officer of the court, acting as such at the time the contempt was alleged to have been committed. L. A. W.

APPEAL by defendant from a decree of the Circuit Court for Rankin County convicting him of contempt of court. Reversed.

Statement by Anderson, J.:

The appellant, Ras Neely, was fined $100 by the circuit court of Rankin county for contempt, and appeals to this court. The facts in reference to such alleged contempt are as follows:

The appellant was convicted of the unlawful sale of intoxicating liquors, and made a motion for a new trial. One ground of the motion, among others, is that he was not represented by counsel when tried, and, being in a state of intoxication, was incapacitated to properly conduct his defense. The testimony of witnesses was taken on the trial of the motion. Touching appellant's intoxication, the testimony was substantially this: That while being tried he appeared to be sober, and to understand what was going on, and fully able to conduct his defense; that, if he was intoxicated, it was not noticeable. The trial judge stated, which is embodied in the bill of exceptions, that he paid particular attention to the appellant during his trial, and did not notice that he was intoxicated, if he was. The sheriff testified that on the day before the trial he saw the appellant in the court room in a drunken condition. There is no testimony whatever that, either on the day before the trial or the day of the trial, the appellant was disorderly or in any manner interfered with the proceedings of the court; and the judge in his statement does not show that he knew of his drunken condition the day before the trial, until it was testified to by the sheriff. There is an entire absence of any testimony tending to show that on either day the appellant was guilty of any conduct which interfered with the orderly administration of the business of the court.

At the conclusion of the testimony, on the motion for a new trial, the judge entered an order overruling the motion, and at the same time another order, adjudging the appellant guilty of contempt of court for being intoxicated in the court room on the day previous to the trial, and fined him $100.

Messrs. Lamar F. Easterling and W. H. Thompson, for appellant:

Before a person can be found guilty of contempt not committed in the presence of the court, he must have due and reasonable notice of the proceeding. The rule to show cause should inform the defendant of the nature of the contempt alleged.

9 Cyc. Law & Proc. pp. 39, 41; Shattuck 33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

v. State, 51 Miss. 50, 24 Am. Rep. 624; State v. Charleston Dist. Sheriff, 1 Mill, Const. 145.

An affidavit charging the facts constituting the contempt is absolutely necessary to support a judgment of contempt, unless the alleged contempt is committed at the time, and in the actual presence of the court.

4 Enc. Pl. & Pr. p. 779; Saunderson v. State, 151 Ind. 550, 52 N. E. 151.

Mr. Carl Fox for the State.

Anderson, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

A direct contempt is a contempt in facie curiæ. It consists of such conduct or language on the part of the contemner as interferes with the orderly administration of justice. It may consist of an open insult, in the presence of the court, to the person of the presiding judge, or a resistance to or defiance of the power and authority of the court. "Misconduct in the presence of the court, which shows disrespect of its authority, or which obstructs or has a tendency to interfere with the due administration of justice, is contempt. Thus, disorderly conduct in the court room, or the use of violent, threatening or insulting language, to the court, witnesses, or opposing counsel, is contempt." 9 Cyc. Law & Proc. pp. 18 and 19. There can be no such contempt of court, unless the trial judge is conscious of it. The testimony in this record falls short of establishing such contempt. There is an entire absence of testimony that the judge knew of the drunken condition of the appellant on the day before he was tried, and there is also no testimony whatever to show that his drunkenness in any wise interfered with the conduct of the business of the court.

Reversed and appellant discharged.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

CHARLES WILLIAM MERRITT, Appt.,
v.

SUE MORTON, Admr., etc., of Sarah E. Morton Deceased, et al.

(143 Ky. 133, 136 S. W. 133.)

Adoption — inheritance from relatives of foster parent.

An adopted child will not inherit from the mother of its deceased foster parent, under a statute which provides that the Note. — Right of adopted child to inherit property from a relative of the adoptive parent.

This was the subject of notes to Warren v. Prescott, 17 L.R.A. 435, and Hockaday v. Lynn, 8 L.R.A. (N.S.) 117. It is in-adopted child shall become the heir at law of the parent adopting it, and be as capable of inheriting as though it was the child of such parent.

(April 13, 1911.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Warren County in defendants' favor in a suit to recover an interest in the estate of the mother of plaintiff's deceased foster parent. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Grider & Harlan and W. R. Speck for appellant.

Messrs. Rodes & Wallace, for appellee:

Appellant was heir at law of his adopted parents, and as capable of inheriting from them as if he had been born to them.

Power v. Hafley, 85 Ky. 671, 4 S. W. 683; Atchison v. Atchison, 89 Ky. 488, 12 S. W. 942.

An adopted child cannot inherit from the collateral kindred of its adoptive parent, nor from the ancestors of such parent, or from his natural children.

Van Matre v. Sankey, 148 Ill. 538, 23 L.R.A. 665, 39 Am. St. Rep. 196; 36 N. E. 628; Keegan v. Geraghty, 101 Ill. 26; Meader v. Archer, 65 N. H. 214, 23 Atl. 521; Phillips v. McConica, 59 Ohio St. 1, 69

Am. St. Rep. 753, 51 N. E. 445; Quigley v. Mitchell, 41 Ohio St. 375; Sunderland's Estate, 60 Iowa, 732, 13 N. W. 655; Moore v. Moore, 35 Vt. 98; Helms v. Elliott, 89 Tenn. 446, 10 L.R.A. 535, 14 S. W. 930.

Lassing, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The Louisville Baptist Orphans' Home was incorporated by an act of the legislature January 29, 1870. Its charter was amended by another act of the legislature of March 19, 1873, and again on January 31, 1880. In 1883 it took into its custody an infant child named Charles Buel Davis, and on the 21st day of November, 1883, it apprenticed this child to W. W. Merritt. Under this apprenticeship, the infant remained in the custody of Merritt until the 19th day of July, 1884, at which time Merritt and his wife, Carrie Merritt, made and executed a contract of adoption with the said Louisville Baptist Orphans' Home, as provided for and authorized by the act of the legislature creating said home. After the execution of this contract, Merritt and his wife kept and reared the child as their own until he reached his majority. They never had any children born to them. In the year 19—, and prior to 1910, Carrie Merritt, his foster mother, tended herein to include only cases decided subsequently to the latter note.

Adoption in and of itself confers no right of inheritance upon either party to the adoption proceeding, and hence whatever rights exist in that regard depend either upon special provisions contained in the statutes authorizing adoption, or special provisions relating to descent and distribution, and where, by statute, the right is not expressly conferred upon an adopted child to inherit from the collateral kindred of the adopted parent, such right does not exist. Wallace v. Noland, 246 Ill. 535, 92 N. E. 956; Boaz v. Swinney, 79 Kan. 332, 99 Pac. 621; Hockaday v. Lynn, 200 Mo. 456, 8 L.R.A.(N.S.) 117, 118 Am. St. Rep. 672, 98 S. W. 585, 9 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 775; Stout v. Cook, — N. J. Eq. —, 75 Atl. 583; Re Leask, 197 N. Y. 193, 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1158, 134 Am. St. Rep. 866, 90 N. E. 652, 18 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 516; Kettell v. Baxter, 50 Misc. 428, 100 N. Y. Supp. 529; Burnett's Estate, 219 Pa. 599, 69 Atl. 74; Rhode Island Hospital Trust Co. v. Humphrey, — R. I. —, 79 Atl. 829.

It was said by the court in Kettell v. Baxter: "Adoption is the taking of a stranger in the blood as one's own child. The proceeding of adoption and the relation established is personal to the foster parent and the child. The statute gives to them all the rights to be derived from the legal relation of parent and child, including the 'right of inheritance from each other.' The right is not given, however, either expressly or by implication, to the child, to inherit through the foster parent from his collateral kin. In other words, the child becomes heir only to the foster parent. This right of inheritance flows from the artificial relation established at the request of the one, and with the consent of the other. The adoption proceedings perpetuate the desire of the parent that the child shall be his heir. But a stranger to the adoption proceedings, who has never recognized the existence of any artificial relation, should not have his property diverted from the natural course of descent."

An adopted child is not a child or heir of an adopted parent, within the meaning of a devise or bequest with a limitation over, dependent on the foster parent dying without heirs, and the rights of the remainderman under such provision are not defeated by the adoption. Stout v. Cook, — N. J. Eq. —, 75 Atl. 583; Re Leask, 197 N. Y. 193, 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1158, 134 Am. St. Rep. 866, 90 N. E. 652, 18 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 516; Wallace v. Nolan, 246 Ill. 534, 92 N. E. 956.

An adopted daughter does not take under the will of her deceased foster parent's brother as a "right heir" of her foster parent where, by statute, an adopted daughter is not entitled to inherit real estate from her foster parent's deceased brother, as representing her deceased foster parent. Brown v. Wright, 194 Mass. 540, 80 N. E. 612.

A. G. S.

died intestate. In 1910 Sarah E. Morton, the mother of Carrie Merritt, died intestate, possessed of a considerable estate. Claiming that he was entitled to that share in the estate of Sarah E. Morton which his foster mother would have received if living at her death, Charles W. Merritt, the adopted child, brought a suit to recover his interest in her estate. The chancellor was of opinion that he could not inherit from any of the kindred of his foster or adoptive parents, and dismissed his petition. Being dissatisfied with this finding and judgment, he appeals.

So much of the act as bears upon the question at issue is as follows: "Said corporation may, through its president or vice president, in the manner prescribed by its by-laws, permit any suitable person to adopt any child in its custody and control, as his or her own child. It may contain all suitable covenants for the care, education, and nurture of such child; and when such instrument shall be so executed and recorded, such child shall become the heir at law of such person so adopting him or her, and be as capable of inheriting as though he or she were the child of said person; and said person shall have the same parental control and be under the same responsibilities, as if the child so adopted were his or her own child."

This identical question has not heretofore been presented to this court. In Power v. Hafley, 85 Ky. 671, 4 S. W. 683, and Atchison v. Atchison, 89 Ky. 488, 12 S. W. 942, it was held that a child adopted as appellant was by W. W. Merritt and his wife becomes the heir at law of those adopting him, and is made as capable of inheriting from them as if he had been born to them, and were in fact their child. But we are cited to no authority, statutory or otherwise, where it has been held that an adopted child is thereby made capable of inheriting from the kindred of those who have adopted him. But in the cases of Van Matre v. Sankey, 148 Ill. 536, 23 L.R.A. 665, 39 Am. St. Rep. 196, 36 N. E. 628, Meador v. Archer, 65 N. H. 214, 23 Atl. 521, Phillips v. McConica, 59 Ohio St. 1, 69 Am. St. Rep. 753, 51 N. E. 445, and Sunderland's Estate, 60 Iowa, 732, 13 N. W. 655, it is expressly held that an adopted child cannot inherit from the collateral kindred of its adoptive parents, nor from the ancestors of such parents, nor from their natural children. And in Vermont, where by special statute an adopted child is made an heir at law in as full and perfect a manner as if born to the adopting parents, it is held that the adopted child cannot become an heir of a brother of his adoptive mother, although she would be an heir if living. Moore v. Moore, 35 Vt. 98. And in Helms v. Elliott, 89 Tenn. 446, 10 L.R.A. 535, 14 S. W. 930, it is held that an adopted child cannot inherit from the natural children of the man adopting him or their descendants. The reason for the uniformity of this rule is apparent. The act of the foster parents in adopting the child is a contract into which they entered with those having the lawful custody of the child, an agreement personal to themselves, and, while they have a perfect right to bind or obligate themselves to make the child their heir, they are powerless to extend this right on his part to inherit from others. All inheritance laws are based or built upon natural ties of blood relationship, whereas an adopted child's right to inherit rests upon a contract, and hence only those parties to the contract are bound by it.

Judgment affirmed.

MAINE SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

JULIUS JENSEN, Admr., etc., of Mary J. Jensen, Deceased,

v.

MAINE EYE & EAR INFIRMARY.
(Two cases.)

(— Me. —, 78 Atl. 898.)

Charity — hospital — liability for negligence.

1. A corporation organized to conduct a hospital as a public charity is not liable for the negligence of its servant in failing to prevent a patient, in a private room engaged for his use, under the direction of his private physician, from falling from the window, although the use of the room includes necessary care and attention by employees of the hospital.

Same — taking pay patients — effect.

2. A hospital supported mainly by charity does not lose its character as a charitable institution by the fact that it makes a charge for the use of rooms to those who are able to pay for them.

(December 15, 1910.)

EXCEPTIONS by plaintiff to rulings of the Supreme Judicial Court for Cumberland County, made during the trial of an action brought to recover damages for the death of plaintiff's intestate, alleged to have been caused by the negligence of defendant's servants, which resulted in a verdict in defendant's favor. Overruled.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. D. A. Meaher and M. T. O'Brien, for plaintiff:

There is an analogy between the liability of a charitable corporation, so called, and a municipal corporation, and the liability should be the same in each case where the business carried on is for its own emolument, profit, and advantage.

Note. — See note to Hordern v. Salvation Army, 32 L.R.A. (N.S.) 62.

Libby v. Portland, 105 Me. 370, 26 L.R.A. (N.S.) 141, 74 Atl. 805, 18 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 547; 2 Dill, Mun. Corp. § 566; 2 Abbott, Mun. Corp. § 720; Milton v. Scarborough, 71 Me. 267, 36 Am. Rep. 308; Larrabee v. Peabody, 128 Mass. 561; Glavin v. Rhode Island Hospital, 12 R. I. 411, 34 Am. Rep. 675; People ex rel. New York Inst. v. Fitch, 154 N. Y. 32, 38 L.R.A. 591, 47 N. E. 983; Powers v. Massachusetts Homeopathic Hospital, 65 L.R.A. 372, 47 C. C. A. 122, 109 Fed. 294; Ward v. St. Vincent's Hospital, 39 App. Div. 624, 57 N. Y. Supp. 784; Winnemore v. Philadelphia, 18 Pa. Super. Ct. 625; Hewett v. Woman's Hospital Aid Soc. 73 N. H. 556, 7 L.R.A. (N.S.) 496, 64 Atl. 190; Phillips v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 211 Mo. 419, 17 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1167, 124 Am. St. Rep. 786, 111 S. W. 100, 14 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 742; Davis v. Central Cong. Soc. 129 Mass. 367, 37 Am. Rep. 368; 5 Thomp. Corp. § 6364.

Messrs. Seth L. Larrabee and Sidney B. Larrabee, for defendant:

Defendant is a charitable institution.

Webber Hospital Asso. v. McKenzie, 104 Me. 320, 71 Atl. 1032; Farrington v. Putnam, 90 Me. 405, 38 L.R.A. 330, 37 Atl. 652; McDonald v. Massachusetts General Hospital, 120 Mass. 432, 21 Am. Rep. 529; Jackson v. Phillips, 14 Allen, 539; Powers v. Massachusetts Homeopathic Hospital 65 L.R.A. 372, 47 C. C. A. 122, 109 Fed. 294; Thornton v. Franklin Square House, 200 Mass. 465, 22 L.R.A. (N.S.) 486, 86 N. E. 909; 6 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 974; Fire Ins. Patrol v. Boyd, 120 Pa. 624, 1 L.R.A. 417, 6 Am. St. Rep. 745, 15 Atl. 553; Parks v. Northwestern University, 218 Ill. 381, 2 L.R.A. (N.S.) 556, 75 N. E. 991, 4 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 103; Hearns v. Waterbury Hospital, 66 Conn. 98, 31 L.R.A. 224, 33 Atl. 595; Downes v. Harper Hospital, 101 Mich. 555, 25 L.R.A. 602, 45 Am. St. Rep. 427, 60 N. W. 42; Gooch v. Association for Relief of Aged Indigent Females, 109 Mass. 558.

A charitable corporation is not liable for injuries resulting to a patient from the negligent acts of its servants or agents in the course of their employment.

McDonald v. Massachusetts General Hospital, 120 Mass. 432, 21 Am. Rep. 529; Powers v. Massachusetts Homeopathic Hospital, 100 Fed. 896, 65 L.R.A. 372, 47 C. C. A. 122, 109 Fed. 294; Parks v. Northwestern University, 218 Ill. 381, 2 L.R.A. (N.S.) 556, 75 N. E. 991, 4 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 103; Hearns v. Waterbury Hospital, 66 Conn. 98, 33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

31 L.R.A. 224, 33 Atl. 595; Downs v. Harper Hospital, 101 Mich. 555, 25 L.R.A. 602, 45 Am. St. Rep. 427, 60 N. W. 42; Williamson v. Louisville Industrial School, 95 Ky. 251, 23 L.R.A. 200, 44 Am. St. Rep. 243, 24 S. W. 1065; Fire Ins. Patrol v. Boyd, 120 Pa. 624, 1 L.R.A. 417, 6 Am. St. Rep. 745, 15 Atl. 553; 6 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 975.

Spear, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

These are actions brought against the Maine Eye & Ear Infirmary by Julius Jensen, in his own behalf and as administrator of the estate of Mary J. Jensen, charging the defendant with negligence of its servants in allowing the plaintiff's decedent, while an inmate of the Infirmary, to evade the supervision of her attendants and fall through a window to the sidewalk; the accident resulting in fatal injuries. The case shows that Mary J. Jensen was ill with typhoid fever, and that her attending physician had arranged with the defendant for her to occupy a private room in one of the wards of its building. But she was not a patient of the Infirmary. She remained the private patient of Dr. Connellan, who had full charge of her case and attended her daily while she was in the institution. He directed the nurses and house doctors, and says, so far as he knows, his directions were complied with. He also understood the regulation of the institution, requiring a specific contract for the employment of a constant nurse, but says he considered the attendance of such a nurse unnecessary, and employed none. It appears, however, that it was the duty of the nurses connected with the institution, although Mrs. Jensen was in a private room and under the direction of a private physician, to give her such attendance in her room as was necessary for her care and the execution of the physician's orders. Further than this Mrs. Jensen was not under the control of the officers of the corporation. She was put there by her husband, by the advice of her physician. The Infirmary did not engage to cure her or take care of her. It undertook to do nothing more than to give her the benefit of one of the rooms and beds and her share of the nursing.

The case also clearly shows that the defendant was not a money-making corporation, nor a business corporation organized for profit, but purely a charitable institution, having no stockholders and paying no dividends. All its receipts are consigned to the general fund for the benefit of charity. Upon this state of facts the presiding justice, at the conclusion of the testimony, directed a verdict in each case for the de-defendant. To this ruling the case comes to the law court on exceptions.

The defendant in its brief sets up two grounds of defense: (1) That defendant is not a corporation for the treatment of sick and injured persons for hire, as the plaintiff in his writ has alleged against it. (2) The defendant is a corporation organized and existing solely as a public charity, its organization having been ratified, confirmed, and declared to be legal and valid as such by chapter 519 of the Private and Special Laws of Maine, approved March 25, 1897.

It is the opinion of the court that the order of the presiding justice can be sustained upon both grounds; but the second being conclusive as a matter of law, the first need not be considered. No principle of law seems to be better established, both upon reason and authority, than that which declares that a purely charitable institution, supported by funds furnished by private and public charity, cannot be made liable in damages for the negligent acts of its servants. Were it not so, it is not difficult to discern that private gift and public aid would not long be contributed to feed the hungry maw of litigation, and charitable institutions of all kinds would ultimately cease or become greatly impaired in their usefulness.

The defendant is a charitable institution. It is so declared by a decision of our own court. In Farrington v. Putnam, 90 Me. 405, 38 L.R.A. 339, 37 Atl. 652, it is said, referring to this very defendant: "Here is an institution, and the only one of the kind in the state, and virtually a state charitable institution of the most beneficent and humane kind, seeking money for supporting its very life and existence, and to enable it to render assistance free of charge to the poor of the state suffering from diseases of the eye and ear." The constituent elements which are regarded as characteristic of charitable institutions are defined in Webber Hospital Asso. v. McKenzie, 104 Me. 320, 71 Atl. 1032, as follows: "It comes within the letter and the spirit of a charitable corporation whose distinctive feature is that it has no capital and no provision for making dividends or profits, deriving its funds mainly from public and private charity, and holding them in trust for the object of the institution." The same doctrine is also emphatically established in Massachusetts. In McDonald v. Massachusetts General Hospital, 120 Mass. 432, 21 Am. Rep. 529, the court says: "The corporation has no capital stock, no provision for making dividends or profits, and whatever it may receive from any source it holds in trust, to be devoted to the object of sustaining the hospital and increasing its benefit to the public, by extending or improving its accommodations and diminishing its expenses. Its funds are derived mainly from public and private charity; its affairs are conducted for a great public purpose,—that of administering to the comfort of the sick, without any expectation on the part of those immediately interested in the corporation, or receiving any compensation which will inure to their own benefit, and without any right to receive such compensation. This establishes its character as a public charity."
33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

It is claimed, however, that the defendant charges a compensation for the use of its rooms to those who are able to pay, and thereby loses one of the essential attributes of a charitable institution. But this in no way changes the character of the institution. In the McKenzie Case, above cited, the testator provided in his will that part of the income from his estate should be used for the maintenance of a "free hospital." In this case it was contended that it was the purpose of the testator "to establish a hospital absolutely and entirely free,"—not one which might provide a certain number of free beds to charity patients, and that neither of the hospitals claiming to meet the conditions of the bequest claimed to be free in this sense. But the court, in construing the word, says: "Nor is the word 'free' used in the sense of without compensation from anyone receiving its benefits. Such a hospital is practically unknown. Income may be received from such as are able to pay, and yet the hospital be free." It is the opinion of the court that the defendant is a charitable institution in fact and in law.

Exceptions in each case overruled.

OREGON SUPREME COURT.

STATE OF OREGON, Respt.,

v.

GEORGE MEYERS, Appt.

(— Or. —, 110 Pac. 407.)

Evidence — trial for murder — threats.

1. Upon trial of one for killing a policeman, evidence of a casual remark of accused several months before, to the effect that "if they arrested me like that fellow

Note. — Homicide in resisting arrest.

The present note is complementary to that appended to Keady v. People, 66 L.R.A. 353.

On the question of self-defense in resisting an officer, see note in 5 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1016.

The question of assault in resisting un-was arrested I would shoot them," is not admissible in evidence if there is nothing to show the circumstances of the arrest alluded to.

Arrest — wrongful — right to resist — taking life.

2. Resistance to the extent of taking life cannot be made to an unlawful arrest where the arrest is attempted by a known officer and nothing is to be reasonably apprehended beyond a mere temporary detention in jail.

Homicide — wrongful arrest — sudden heat — presumption of law.

3. The court cannot assume as matter of law, on a trial of one accused of killing an officer who was attempting to arrest him, that the arrest had the effect of exciting in his mind a sudden heat of passion such as to make the desire to kill irresistible, and thereby reduce the offense to manslaughter.

Appeal — homicide — conviction of lesser degree — error in higher degree.

4. Failure to take from the jury the lawful arrest is made the subject of the note which is appended to State v. Gum, post, 150.

Lawful arrest.

An officer may lawfully arrest his worst enemy, and the motive with which the arrest is begun is of no importance in determining whether it was originally a lawful arrest conducted lawfully and with proper force. McDuffie v. State, 121 Ga. 580, 49 S. E. 708.

One may with reasonable force resist an unlawful attempt to arrest him, but he cannot offer any resistance whatever to a lawful effort to arrest him. Yates v. State, 127 Ga. 813, 56 S. E. 1017, 9 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 620.

If the arrest is lawful and is conducted in a lawful manner, resistance culminating in homicide amounts to murder. McDuffie v. State, supra; Johnson v. State, 130 Ga. 27, 60 S. E. 160.

But if the officer comes upon the citizen and, without apprising him of his purpose, or whether he apprises him of his purpose or not, commences a deadly assault upon the citizen, the latter has the same right to defend himself against the act of the officer as he would have against a similar act of an individual, and the fact that the officer is armed with a warrant does not in any way license him or give him authority to assault the party against whom he holds it. Owen v. State, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 125 S. W. 405.

Where the person arrested caught the officer around the body and arms and was separated by bystanders from the officer, who thereupon struck the other upon the head with a pistol, it was held that if passion was engendered thereby so as to render the party's mind incapable of cool reflection, and he killed while his mind was in that question of murder in the first degree on a trial for homicide is not subject to review in favor of the accused, if the verdict is murder in the second degree.

Trial — argument — reading of authorities.

5. It is not error for a trial court to refuse to listen to the reading of authorities upon the argument of a cause.

(August 3, 1910.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Marion County convicting him of murder. Reversed.

Statement by McBride, J.:

The defendant was indicted for murder in the first degree committed by shooting one Thomas Eckhart.

The evidence as to the immediate fact of the shooting consisted principally of the dying declaration of the deceased and the testimony of defendant. Defendant was occupying a room in a building owned by condition, the offense would be no greater than manslaughter, irrespective of whether the arrest was legal or not. Scott v. State, 49 Tex. Crim. Rep. 386, 93 S. W. 112.

And if the slayer had no notice of the officer's official character, and if the killing was apparently necessary to save his life, the killing will be regarded as homicide in self-defense. State v. Spaugh, 200 Mo. 571, 98 S. W. 55.

As a general rule, it is the duty of an officer in making an arrest, to state his official character and the cause of the arrest exhibiting his warrant if he has one; but the failure to take these precautions does not justify homicide or even physical resistance by the party arrested, without inquiry on his part as to the authority for his arrest. A fortiori resistance of lawful arrest cannot be justified upon the ground of want of express notice, if the person resisting knew that the other was an officer. State v. Byrd, 72 S. C. 104, 51 S. E. 542.

And one who knows the official character as well as the purpose of the officer, and shoots him down before he has an opportunity to declare his purpose or to make any move toward its consummation, cannot be heard to say that he shot in self-defense. Smith v. State, 48 Tex. Crim. Rep. 233, 89 S. W. 817.

So, the mere intention of a posse to arrest a suspect does not justify him in killing one of their number before they have had an opportunity to announce their official characters; and unless there has been such an opportunity followed up by a failure to announce their character and also by the use of force to restrain the suspect, the latter cannot set up the plea that he shot in self-defense and that he had no knowledge of their official character. State v. Rudolph, 187 Mo. 67, 85 S. W. 584.

And where one is approached by a per-his father and occupied by his brother Arthur Meyers, and occasionally by himself. On the evening of the shooting, a dispute arose between the brothers, caused by defendant's placing his wet boots on some sofa pillows which were in the room, and Arthur went upon the street and requested deceased, who was a policeman, to put defendant out of the room, but not to arrest him. Deceased went to the room and found defendant asleep in a chair. That part of deceased's dying declaration which was admitted in evidence is as follows: "I, Thomas M. Eckhart, being conscious of my present condition, and realizing no hope of recovery, do make this my final declaration: Then I went to room with Arthur and found George Meyers who was sitting in a chair sleeping. I woke him up and says: 'Moley says his father gave him orders to keep you out.' George says: 'All right, I will pack my clothes.' George put his clothes in a small box. I started downstairs with him. He says:

'What are the charges?' I says: 'I don't know, but have orders to lock you up when I found you.' I had hold of his left arm. We walked along to place of shooting and talking friendly on the way. We walked down High street to the city hall, then turned west on Chemeketa and stopped a few feet from outside jail door, then he says, 'Some one in there looking in the window.' I says, 'There might be,' and, as I turned from the window and faced him, he says, 'Take that you son of a bitch,' and then shot me, pulling a pistol out of a slicker coat, standing at the time beside me while I was holding his arm. I was shot first in the abdomen. Then I went down. He made two or three steps, turned around, and shot me again, this time in the leg. Then he ran across street north and turned down the alley."

The testimony of defendant is as follows:

A. The first I remember of Mr. Eckhart son whom he knows to be a sheriff with a warrant for his arrest, it is his duty to submit to arrest, and in resisting it, with a gun in his hand, he has precluded himself from saying that he acted in self-defense, even though, in refusing to submit to the arrest, he went away from the officer, who thereupon unjustifiably shot him, for if, after such shooting by the officer, there appeared to be a necessity for shooting the officer to save his own life, it was the result of the unlawful resistance of the mandate of the law, and the slayer's position is similar to that of one who brings on or provokes a difficulty and in the progress of it kills. State v. Horner, 139 N. C. 603, 52 S. E. 136, 4 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 841.

Although one may not be subject to arrest or search without a warrant, upon mere suspicion that he is carrying a concealed weapon, where, in such circumstances, he is told by an officer that an arrest or search is about to be made, and he draws the weapon and attempts to frighten the officer therewith, and the officer is shot during a struggle for its possession, he is guilty of the statutory offense of going armed with a concealed weapon, and is therefore subject to arrest under a statute authorizing the officer to arrest a person found violating a state law; and therefore the slayer is not resisting an unlawful arrest within the meaning of the homicide statute, so as to reduce the killing from murder to manslaughter. Anderson v. State, 133 Wis. 601, 114 N. W. 112.

Notwithstanding the duty of an officer to give notice of his intention to arrest, the person sought to be arrested may not properly resist or kill his assailant until all other means of peaceably avoiding the arrest have been exhausted. The omission of the officer to exhibit his warrant or declare his authority can do no more than deprive him of the protection which the law affords him in the rightful discharge of his duty, and does not justify the person sought to be arrested in killing him, if the apparently illegal arrest can be otherwise resisted. The question of the knowledge of the person sought to be arrested, of the official character of the person seeking to arrest him, is one of fact for the jury. Hurd v. State, 119 Tenn. 583, 108 S. W. 1064.

Where one committing a crime warranting his arrest without a warrant shoots for the purpose of avoiding arrest, a person whom he knows is an officer authorized to arrest him without a warrant, he does so at his peril, and where the officer is thereby killed, the offense is murder. State v. Byrd, supra.

And the fact that an officer attempting to rearrest one who, having been arrested under a warrant for a misdemeanor, has escaped from custody, menaces his life, does not authorize him to kill the officer in self-defense, especially where the statute makes one guilty of a misdemeanor who obstructs an officer in the discharge of his duty. State v. Durham, 141 N. C. 741, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1016, 53 S. E. 720.

So, an escaped felon may be arrested by a public officer without a warrant, and if, when the officer attempts to make the arrest, the other slays him for the purpose of preventing the arrest, the offense is murder irrespective of whether the officer had a warrant or whether the slayer knew that he was an officer. Harper v. State, 129 Ga. 770, 59 S. E. 792.

So, an escaped misdemeanor convict is guilty of murder when he kills without warning and merely for the purpose of preventing his recapture, one who was lawfully attempting to take him without a warrant. Williford v. State, 121 Ga. 173, 48 S. E. 962.

being around me when he woke me up. I was sitting in a big rocking chair in the room. My feet were on the other chair. He had knocked my feet off of the chair. He woke me up. I don't know the exact words he used. I had been out horseback riding. I was kind of dazed. I had been drinking some, I will admit. He said something about coming out of there. I says, "All right." I don't know the exact words he used. Of course, I was nervous; in fact, I didn't pay much attention to him. So I started to go out, and he says, "Hurry up, I can't wait here all evening." I says, "All right;" I says, "Is it raining?" He says, "I don't know. It may be." I says, "I will put on my slicker, maybe it is raining." I got my slicker, and we started down the steps. I asked him what the charges were, and he said he didn't know, he had orders to lock me up. I didn't say anything to him until we got in front of Yannke's livery stable.

Q. Just opposite the courthouse?

In State v. Franklin, 80 S. C. 332, 60 S. E. 953, involving a prosecution apparently for the killing of an officer, the following general charge upon the question of self-defense was upheld: "Where a person is without fault in bringing about the difficulty, where they are in danger of losing their lives or of sustaining serious bodily harm, and where there are no other probable means of escape save to kill the assailant, then the law says they have a right to kill, and this is self-defense." The following charge was also upheld: "A constable stands on the same footing as a sheriff. If a warrant is placed in his hands to make an arrest, it becomes his duty to make that arrest, and the law clothes him with the power to do all that is necessary to make the arrest. . . . Ordinarily, if a constable goes up to a man and says, I arrest you, that is usually as far as he has to go, and that is all that is necessary if the other party submits to the arrest. The other party has a right to ask the reason for his arrest and his authority, if he has a warrant; it then becomes his duty to exhibit the same; then, if the party submits, that is as far as the officer has the right to go. If he refuses to submit to the arrest then the officer has the right to go to whatever length is necessary to make him submit. . . . If an arrest is resisted and active resistance is resorted to, then the officer still has the right to use, as a matter of fact, whatever force is necessary to accomplish his purpose."

It seems that the statutory requirement that, before making an arrest, a private person must inform the person to be arrested of the cause thereof and require him to submit, does not apply to a case where the person arrested is in the actual commission of the crime or is arrested on pursuit immediately after its commis-

A. Yes; I asked if he had a warrant for me, and he said, "No." I broke away from him. I says, "You have no right to take me without a warrant." He says, "God damn you, I will take you anyway." He twisted my arm back and pushed me along. He said, if I couldn't come along decent, he had a way of taking me. I kept talking to him the best I could under the circumstances. He told me to keep my mouth shut and come along. He had hold of my arm practically until we got to the city hall. I told him he was hurting me, and asked if he would let go of my arm. He did, and grabbed me by the shoulder on the left side. After we turned the corner at the city hall and got pretty close to the office of the city marshal, I says, "Will you let me phone to Doc. Gibson?" He says, "No; I won't." I kind of thought over the matter, and I thought, if anybody knew what I was arrested for, he would surely know. I knew I had not done anything. I says, "I will be damned if I go sion. People v. Governale, 193 N. Y. 581, 86 N. E. 554.

In view of a statute permitting any private person to arrest another for a public offense committed or attempted in his presence, where one, upon attempting to commit a robbery, is ordered to hold up his hands, by his intended victim, who draws his own gun, it is his duty to throw down his gun and surrender himself as a prisoner; and the other has the right to use whatever force is necessary to disarm him and prevent his escape, for the aggressor, in such a case, does not occupy as favorable a position as the aggressor in an ordinary combat, who is entitled in good faith to withdraw from the place of encounter and thus render the party assailed the aggressor, if he follows for the purpose of continuing the affray. In such case, the aggressor is acting in the role of an outlaw and hold-up, and having been, in effect, placed under arrest, the killing of the intended victim by the other in order to make good his escape is just as culpable and indefensible as though he had without warning shot him down in the first instance. State v. Shockley, 29 Utah, 25, 110 Am. St. Rep. 639, 80 Pac. 865.

And to make applicable a statute providing that anyone who kills a private person endeavoring to apprehend a criminal, with knowledge of the intention with which such private person interposes, is guilty of murder, it is not necessary that the citizen, before answering to the call of a police officer for assistance in the arrest of a criminal, shall have been first informed of the particular crime charged to have been committed, nor is it essential that the citizen shall have been specially selected by the officer. State v. Bertchey, 77 N. J. L. 640, 73 Atl. 524, 18 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 931.

To justify a conviction under a statute in there." I broke away from him. He turned and says, "By God you will go in there!" He reached for his hip pocket. At that I fired the shot.

Q. Did you realize at the time how many shots you fired?

A. No, sir; I did not.

The defendant also denied that he had the alleged conversation related by the witness, Sol Anderson.

Arthur Meyers testified, among other things, as follows:

Q. What did you do after you went down?

A. I walked up and down the street a few times, and didn't see anybody. I walked down by the White House restaurant. Mr. Eckhart was in there. I motioned for him to come out. I says, "George is up in my room, and I cannot do anything with him. I would like for you to come up there and take him out." I says, "I don't want him arrested. I just want him taken out." He went up there with me, and George was asleep. He woke him up and says, "George, Arthur wants you out of the room. You had better get up and put on your coat and come on; by the way, I have orders to arrest you on sight." I spoke up and asked what he was arrested for. He said he didn't know; that Doc. Gibson told him to arrest him when he saw him. George said, all right, he would go. He went over and got his coat and started out with him.

Q. Where was his coat?

A. Hanging up in the partition. The room is a large room. In one end is a partition about 8 or 9 feet high. It was hanging on the other side of the partition, the side away from the main part of the room.

Q. What kind of a coat did he get?

A. A black slicker.

There is evidence tending to show that deceased fell at the first shot; that defend-providing that anyone who shall kill a private person endeavoring to apprehend a criminal, with knowledge of the intention with which such private person interposes, is guilty of murder, it must be established that the defendant was a criminal, that the private person was endeavoring to apprehend him at the time of the shooting, and that the defendant knew the purpose with which the private person interposed; and the first requisite may be found from evidence that the defendant made a burglarious entry into a building and committed a theft therein; and the other requisites may be found from proof that several persons pursued the defendant, raised a hue and cry, fired several shots, and that the deceased joined the pursuit from a point at which the hue and cry and shots were clearly audible. Ibid.

The deliberate purpose necessary to sustain a conviction for murder in the first degree is sufficiently shown by evidence that the slayer together with others, in getting ready to commit a burglary, made preparations to kill, and that when an officer approached them, although the burglary had been abandoned, under circumstances indicating the probability that the officer would make an arrest or a search of their persons, the defendant shot such officer. People v. Woods, 147 Cal. 265, 109 Am. St. Rep. 151, 81 Pac. 652.

And the fact that the accused, who had violated a municipal ordinance and had avoided arrest for four months, came to an understanding with the town marshal that he would come to town on a certain day to stand trial, constitutes no reason why the marshal should not attempt to arrest him on that day, and, especially since the accused came armed, affords no excuse for not submitting to arrest, which can be interposed in his behalf on a trial for the killing of the officer. Yates v. State, 127 Ga. 813, 56 S. E. 1017, 9 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 620.

Where one who has committed an offense announces that he will shoot anyone who attempts to arrest him, and thereafter, upon seeing one whom he knows to be the sheriff, approaching for the purpose of arresting him, retreats, arms himself, and shoots the sheriff when the latter follows him, the killing is murder, and not manslaughter. State v. Spaugh, 200 Mo. 571, 98 S. W. 55.

Where one charged with killing an officer who was pursuing him after he had shot another, claimed that he shot his pursuer in self-defense and upon the supposition that the pursuer was a friend of the victim of the first shooting, bent on doing the slayer personal injury, he may nevertheless be properly found guilty of murder in the first degree where it appeared that he had no reasonable ground to apprehend a design upon the part of the pursuer to do him any personal injury. People v. Governale, supra.

Unlawful arrest.

Whether the person whose right to liberty and freedom from illegal arrest is invaded is guilty of any offense when he kills the aggressor depends upon the circumstances of the case. He has no right to kill an officer who attempts to commit a trespass upon his person, and nothing more; and the degree of force that he may use in resistance depends upon that used or attempted by the officer. Where a person resists an attempt to arrest him, made without legal authority, and the resistance is only proportionate to the assault, and is provoked by it, the killing, if without malice, is neither murder nor manslaughter. Perdue v. State, 5 Ga. App. 821, 63 S. E. 922.

ant shot him again, wounding him in the arm, then ran a short distance, stopped, and fired a third shot, which did not take effect.

It was admitted by the state that no order had been given or warrant issued for defendant's arrest, and there is no testimony indicating that defendant had been guilty or accused of any offense against the law at the time Eckhart arrested him.

During the trial the state called one Sol Anderson as a witness, and propounded to him the following questions, over the objection of defendant:

Q. Do you recall a conversation you had with him (referring to defendant) some time last spring about the time that Mr. Swegle was arrested?

A. Yes; I don't know his name.

Q. You may state to the jury what, if anything, he said that time with reference to shooting a policeman? . . .

A. We was running an automobile garage down here, Mr. Linn and I, and he came down to the shop. He used to clean Mr. Hauser's machine before he gave us the job of taking care of the machine. He laid a gun up in the side. I asked him what he carried that around for. He said, "I use that to shoot down the river." A short time after this man Swegle was arrested he was pretty mad. He said, "If they arrest me like that fellow, I would shoot them." I didn't think he meant it when he said it. When he did what he did it came to our minds.

A motion was made to strike out the testimony, but was overruled, except as to the last sentence, which was stricken out.

Messrs. John A. Carson, P. H. D'Arcy, S. T. Richardson, and W. M. Kaiser for appellant.

Messrs. I. H. Van Winkle and W. C. Winslow for respondent.

McBride, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

We are of the opinion that the court erred in admitting the testimony of the witness Anderson. Evidence of threats made by defendant against a person subsequently killed by him may be introduced to show deliberation, premeditation, or malice. Wharton, Homicide, § 601, and cases there cited. And threats against a particular class of persons, as, for instance, a threat to kill all policemen, are admissible in a prosecution for killing a member of the particular class indicated in the

A person seeking unlawfully to arrest another is a trespasser, and the trespass is a ground of provocation sufficient to reduce the homicide of such person in resistance of the arrest from murder to manslaughter, though it is not so reduced unless the person sought to be arrested actually acted under the influence of hot blood induced by the provocation. And such an attempt unlawfully to arrest gives the person sought to be arrested the right to resist, even to the extent of killing his opponent, if such killing is necessary to save himself from serious bodily harm; but the necessity must have been real and apparent. Hurd v. State, 119 Tenn. 583, 108 S. W. 1064.

If the authority to make an arrest is wanting, the person attempting it is a trespasser, and the person arrested can resist, using such force only as is necessary to prevent the arrest. Demarco v. State, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 131 S. W. 589.

And if the person sought to be arrested kills the officer in resisting him, he is ordinarily guilty of no greater offense than manslaughter. Jenkins v. State, 3 Ga. App. 146, 59 S. E. 435.

In such case the killing of the person attempting the arrest is, as a general rule, manslaughter only. Hurd v. State, and Yates v. State, supra.

If the person sought unlawfully to be arrested is thereby enraged to such an extent that he is incapable of cool reflection at the time of the killing, his offense will be no greater than manslaughter. Earles v. State, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 94 S. W. 464 (see 33 L.R.A.(N.S.)

former appeal 47 Tex. Crim. Rep. 559, 85 S. W. 1).

But an attempted arrest, even if illegal, does not justify a homicide committed in resisting it, unless such killing is necessary in self-defense, that is, to prevent death or great bodily harm. State v. Byrd, 72 S. C. 104, 51 S. E. 542.

In such circumstances the killing is not justifiable homicide unless the slayer had reason to believe and did believe that he was in imminent danger, and that it was necessary to do so in order to save himself from some great bodily harm; and if he kills merely for the purpose of avoiding the arrest, it is manslaughter. State v. Clark, 64 W. Va. 625, 63 S. E. 402.

And if an officer arrests a party illegally, but the latter does not know whether the arrest is illegal or not, and he draws a pistol and kills the officer, no question of the legality or illegality of the arrest enters into the case. Earles v. State, 52 Tex. Crim. Rep. 140, 106 S. W. 138 (overruling opinion on former appeal, 47 Tex. Crim. Rep. 559, 85 S. W. 1).

In no circumstances can a party threatened with arrest upon a warrant appearing upon its face to be legal, although in fact defective in some particular, do more than offer force commensurate with the danger threatened, and if he knows that the person is an officer acting in that capacity, the mere fact that such officer will arrest him and hold him without inflicting any personal violence will not authorize the use of a deadly weapon upon the officer. In such threats. Wharton, Homicide, § 603. In the case at bar it appears that defendant had said, in effect: "If they arrest me like that fellow was arrested, I would shoot them." No showing was made of the circumstances attending the arrest in question, whether it was made by an officer or by some private person, and the witness Anderson was unable to state even the name of the person arrested. It was a casual remark made several months before, and evidently did not refer to deceased. Nor was it shown to have referred to policemen or arresting officers as a class. The evidence was too remote to have any legitimate bearing upon the case at bar. Stenson v. United States, 29 C. C. A. 600, 52 U. S. App. 647, 86 Fed. 106; Earles v. State, 47 Tex. Crim. Rep. 559, 85 S. W. 1. The admission of this testimony was highly prejudicial to defendant, and was reversible error.

Several requests were made for special instructions. Many of these were substantially covered by the general charge, and as to those not so included the refusal was proper. They may, for the sake of brevity, be divided into two classes: (1) Those which assume that a person unlawfully arrested has a right to take life, if necessary; in circumstances, the arrest becomes a mere detention, and while it may be unlawful, it is not such an invasion of rights or such an offer of personal violence as justifies the use of a lethal weapon. Coile v. State, 28 Ohio C. C. 827.

And it seems that the illegality of a warrant upon which one was sought to be arrested for a crime for which he might have been arrested without a warrant cannot be urged to reduce from murder to manslaughter the offense of killing the officer, especially where such killing occurred as the result of hours of premeditation and determination to kill anyone attempting to make the arrest, and before any personal violence or show thereof had been manifested by the officer. Ibid.

While it has been declared to be the general rule that it is manslaughter to kill an officer or other person to prevent an illegal arrest, there can be no conviction when the slayer uses no more force than is necessary, or where the officer or other person making the illegal arrest uses more force than is necessary to overcome the resistance, and puts the person whom he arrested in fear of his life or of great bodily harm. Holmes v. State, 5 Ga. App. 166, 62 S. E. 716.

So, a conviction of manslaughter cannot be sustained against one who committed a homicide while being pursued by officers unlawfully attempting to arrest him without a warrant for a trivial offense, where he did not shoot until he had fled a considerable distance and had been wounded twice by the pursuing officers. Ibid.

And a conviction of murder cannot be to free himself from such unlawful detention. (2) That a homicide committed in resisting an unlawful arrest cannot as a matter of law be a greater offense than manslaughter. Neither of these propositions are sound law. While there are cases holding that one threatened with unlawful arrest may use such force as may be necessary to free himself, and maintain his liberty, even to the extent of taking the life of the aggressor, we are inclined to adopt the more humane and civilized rule that, where the arrest is made by a known officer and nothing is to be reasonably apprehended beyond a mere temporary detention in jail, resistance cannot be carried to the extent of taking life. This is the doctrine announced by Mr. Wharton in his work on Homicide, and the authorities cited by him amply sustain it. Wharton, Homicide, § 409, and cases there cited.

We do not wish to be understood as holding that cases may not arise in which one may use a deadly weapon to protect himself against an unlawful arrest. Thus where the arresting party himself uses a deadly weapon or signifies his immediate intention to do so, or where an unauthorized person, being armed, attempts to break into one's dwelling to make an unlawful sustained against one who killed a police officer in a scuffle which ensued when the officer grabbed him and demanded whatever he had in his pocket apparently for the purpose of ascertaining if he was carrying a concealed weapon, where the officer wore plain clothes and bore no insignia to indicate that he was an officer, and was not known to the slayer to be such; and in such circumstances the nature of the crime, if any was committed, is to be determined without reference to the official character of the officer and just as if the affray had occurred between private individuals. People v. Bissett, 246 Ill. 516, 92 N. E. 949.

Where an escaped convict shoots and kills a private person who has been unlawfully deputized by the jailer to arrest him, he may be acquitted of the charge of killing such private person, if, and only if, the circumstances were such as to create the belief based upon reasonable judgment that he was in imminent danger of death or great bodily harm, and that there was no apparent way to avoid such death or harm except to shoot the person attempting to make the arrest. Mann v. Com. 118 Ky. 800, 82 S. W. 438.

The principles relating to the question of homicide in resisting unlawful arrest have no application to a case in which it appears that the accused was attacked by another, and shot him in self-defense without knowing that he was an officer, and thinking him to be a third person who had made threats against the accused. McPhay v. State, 87 Miss. 456, 40 So. 17. L. A. W.

arrest, or where it is attempted in such a way as to put one in fear of death or great bodily harm, in such rare instances one may be justified in using a deadly weapon. But we wish to be understood as holding emphatically that, where the attempted arrest is made by a known officer, and there is nothing to be apprehended beyond a mere temporary detention, the question of the right of such officer cannot be tried out with a pistol.

We do not think that the court had a right as a matter of law to assume that the arrest had the effect of exciting in the mind of the prisoner a sudden heat of passion, such as to make the desire to kill irresistible, and therefore manslaughter. The jury had all the facts before them, and it was for them to judge what effect the arrest had or might have had on the defendant. While the arrest was practically admitted by the state to have been unlawful and without cause, there was some evidence which the jury had a right to consider which tended to show malice. The facts, as claimed by deceased, that before leaving the room defendant put on a "slicker" having a pistol in the pocket, that he told deceased that somebody was looking out of the jail window, apparently with a design to attract his attention, and thereafter immediately shot him, and that he continued to fire after deceased had fallen, were circumstances which might well have justified the jury in finding that there was express malice.

It is unnecessary to consider the alleged error of the court in refusing to take from the jury the question of murder in the first degree, as the verdict of murder in the second degree operated in any event to acquit defendant of the higher crime, and he was therefore not prejudiced by any ruling made on that subject.

It was not error in the court to refuse to listen to the reading of authorities upon the argument of the cause. If the court thought itself sufficiently advised as to the law, it had the right to refuse to hear counsel further, and the very clear and exhaustive charge given in this case indicates that the court was well advised as to the law.

We find no other error in the record, but for the reasons given above this cause must be reversed, and a new trial ordered.

33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

WEST VIRGINIA SUPREME COURT OF APPEALS.

STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA

v.

WOODS GUM, Plff. in Err.

(68 W. Va. 105, 69 S. E. 463.)

Arrest — forcible resistance — use of deadly weapon.

If an attempted arrest be unlawful, the party sought to be arrested may use such reasonable force, proportioned to the injury attempted upon him, as is necessary to effect his escape, but no more; and he cannot do this by using or offering to use a deadly weapon, if he has no reason to apprehend a greater injury than a mere unlawful arrest. Instructions to the jury, not so limited, were properly refused.

(November 1, 1910.)

Headnote by MILLER, J.

Note. — Assault in resisting unlawful arrest.

For a note on the question of homicide in resisting arrest, see the note to State v. Meyers, ante, 143; references therein to notes on kindred questions.

In order to throw the shield of the law over an officer, so as to make it criminal for another to resist him in what he is attempting to do, he must not only be a legal and proper officer, but he must have a good and sufficient precept, which he is attempting to execute, and he must be attempting to execute it in a legal way. State v. Hooker, 17 Vt. 658.

One cannot be convicted of wounding an officer in resisting arrest, where the officer was unlawfully attempting to make the arrest under a warrant directed to another officer. Reg. v. Sanders, 36 L. J. Mag. Cas. N. S. 87, L. R. I. C. C. 75, 16 L. T. N. S. 331, 15 Week. Rep. 752, 10 Cox, C. C. 445.

And it was held in Reg. v. Crompton, 49 L. J. Mag. Cas. N. S. 41, L. R. 5 Q. B. Div. 341, 42 L. T. N. S. 543, 28 Week. Rep. 539, 44 J. P. 480, that the offense of assaulting an officer in the execution of his duty was not committed by resisting an arrest in a city, by county officers, under a warrant issued by a county justice, but not backed by any city justice.

And in Rex v. Gay, Quincy (Mass.) 91, one was acquitted of assaulting a sheriff in the execution of his duty, where force was used in resisting the execution of a warrant issued without right.

On the other hand, it was held in Rex v. Sabeans, 37 N. S. 223, that a person who, although misled by an officer putting for-ERROR to the Circuit Court for Pochontas County to review a judgment convicting defendant of assault with intent to kill. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. N. C. McNell for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. William G. Conley, Attorney General, and D. E. Matthews for the State.

Miller, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The indictment charges that the defendant did maliciously and feloniously cut, stab, and wound one John Waugh, a sergeant of the town of Marlinton, while the latter was attempting to place him under arrest for being drunk and disorderly, with the intent to then and there maim, disfigure, disable, and kill the said Waugh.

Upon the trial, upon his plea of not guilty, the jury found the defendant guilty of an insufficient warrant as the sole authority for the arrest, acted on what appeared to be justifiable grounds in resisting the arrest, was, nevertheless, punishable for an assault upon the officer, where the arrest was capable of justification, under a statute authorizing arrest without a warrant in certain cases.

One whom an officer unlawfully attempts to arrest for an alleged misdemeanor not committed in the officer's presence may use whatever force is necessary to resist the arrest, without being liable to a prosecution for assault and battery. Com. v. Bryant, 9 Phila. 595.

And before one can be convicted for a felonious assault and battery, with intent to kill, in resisting a person seeking to arrest him without a warrant, upon the ground that he had committed a felony, it must appear that the person seeking to make the arrest had at least reasonable ground to believe that he had committed the felony. Spradley v. State, 80 Miss. 82, 31 So. 534, 13 Am. Crim. Rep. 36.

And one who resists an attempted arrest by a private person bearing a warrant unlawfully issued to him by a justice of the peace cannot be convicted of assault and battery. Com. v. Foster, 1 Mass. 488.

So, one who at first submits to an unlawful arrest may thereafter use what force is necessary to free himself from the unlawful custody; but if he goes further and uses more force than is necessary, and commits a violent assault upon the officer, he may be convicted therefor. Com. v. Cosler, 8 Kulp, 97.

And where one is unlawfully taken into custody by a private person, he is justified in committing an assault in order to free himself from custody, upon discovering that the other is not a peace officer. People v. Denby, 108 Cal. 54, 40 Pac. 1051.

And it seems one may aid another in defending against an unlawful arrest, and in so doing he is not guilty of an assault proof unlawful, but not malicious, wounding, as charged in the indictment. Upon this verdict the court below pronounced the judgment complained of, that the defendant be confined in the penitentiary for the period of three years, at hard labor, and to be further dealt with according to law.

In his petition to this court for the writ of error allowed him, petitioner alleges numerous errors committed on the trial, but no oral argument was made or printed brief filed on his behalf on the final hearing here. The attorney general filed a brief on behalf of the state, and the case, thus presented, was submitted for decision.

Upon the trial below there was substantially no conflict in the evidence, and there is practically but one question, a question of law, presented by defendant's instructions to the jury numbered three and four, rejected, presented for decision. These instructions, poorly drawn, would have told provided that no more force is used than is necessary. People v. Craig, 152 Cal. 42, 91 Pac. 997.

But a person is guilty of an assault upon a person whom he deliberately trips while such person is chasing one whom he is seeking illegally to arrest. State v. Hedrick, 95 N. C. 624.

One unlawfully arrested and restrained of his liberty has the right to use such force as is necessary to regain his liberty, short of taking life. Goodman v. State, 4 Tex. App. 349.

And if he uses no more force than is necessary, he cannot be convicted even of a simple assault. Brown v. State, 43 Tex. Crim. Rep. 411, 66 S. W. 547, 13 Am. Crim. Rep. 118.

Thus, one whom it is sought unlawfully to arrest by holding the horse upon which he is riding is justified in striking with a whip the person seeking to make the arrest, for the purpose of forcing him to release his hold. Massie v. State, 27 Tex. App. 617, 11 S. W. 638.

And a conviction of the offense of assault is unauthorized when the evidence discloses that the only act of the accused relied on to sustain the conviction is that he, having committed no offense and against whom no warrant had been issued, raised a stick and drew it back in a striking position, with a threat to use the same, when officers with a warrant against a relative approached him and endeavored to compel him to go with them until they made the arrest; and even if in ordinary circumstances such conduct would have amounted to an assault, the accused was justified in the act that he committed. Shubert v. State, 127 Ga. 42, 55 S. E. 1045.

The evasion of an illegal arrest, which the person sought to be arrested accomplished by running away from the officer when first approached by him, does not render him a fugitive from justice, whom the officer may thereafter arrest without a war-the jury, substantially, number three, that if they believed from the evidence that Waugh was attempting to arrest the defendant without a warrant or other proper authority, defendant had the right to resist said arrest, and that they should find the defendant not guilty, unless they should find that said officer was attempting to make the arrest for the violation of the law committed in his presence or view; the fourth, that if they believed from the evidence that Waugh went upon the premises of defendant, and attempted to arrest him in his own house, without proper legal authority, by a warrant issued by a proper officer, or for some violation of law committed in his presence, he had the right to resist said arrest "in any manner he chose," rant, as an "escape," whenever and wherever the officer may find him, for, if one accused of a misdemeanor or a violation of a municipal ordinance may oppose an illegal arrest with commensurate resistance or by flight, it would be begging the question to say that an evasion of an illegal arrest by flight would authorize his arrest as a fugitive endeavoring to escape. Porter v. State, 124 Ga. 297, 2 L.R.A. (N.S.) 730, 52 S. E. 283.

The shooting by one who has committed no offense, of an officer attempting to make an illegal arrest, is prima facie not an assault with intent to murder, but the statutory crime of shooting at another not in self-defense, or assault and battery; but the shooting is justifiable if it is done as an apparently necessary course, to avoid apprehended death or great bodily injury from the use by the officer of a deadly weapon or excessive violence. Jenkins v. State, 3 Ga. App. 146, 59 S. E. 435.

But one has no right to use more force than is necessary to resist an unlawful arrest, and where an officer attempts to arrest another with open hands and apparently without a weapon, even if the arrest is unlawful, the other will be guilty of an assault if he strikes at the officer with an open knife. People v. Murray, 54 Hun, 406, 7 N. Y. Supp. 548.

And one is not justified in shooting an officer who merely announces the intention to arrest him, although the character of the officer does not appear, and the arrest would be unwarranted. Keady v. People, 32 Colo. 57, 66 L.R.A. 353, 74 Pac. 892.

And one innocent of the offense for which he is sought to be arrested, who knows the officers, and that they intend to arrest him, but has no reasonable cause to believe that they intend to do him any personal injury, is not justified in assaulting the officer by shooting him, upon his first uttering a word, and without making any explanation himself, or inquiring the purpose of the arrest, or giving the officer an opportunity to state the purpose. Robinson v. United States, — Okla. Crim. Rep. —, 111 Pac. 984.

It would be a pernicious doctrine to hold 33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

and they should find the defendant not guilty.

The facts proven in brief were, that Waugh, at the time of the alleged offense, at the request of defendant's wife, entered the home of defendant by the kitchen door, the witness Dennison accompanying him to the door, and being informed, first by Dennison before entering and after entering by defendant's wife, that she wanted him to do something with defendant, because she was afraid he would do something before morning, he went on into the adjoining room where Woods was quietly sitting, and, to quote his own language, addressing the defendant, said: "I asked him what was the matter, and he said, 'I wont stand what is going on in my home,' and I said, 'You that an officer, known to be such, while attempting to make an arrest, could be shot down, and the defendant or the person who did the shooting allowed to go free, because it might, upon due investigation, be discovered that the officer did not in fact have proper authority for making the arrest People v. Price, 9 Cal. App. 218, 98 Pac. 547.

No excuse for the shooting and wounding of a constable, which will avoid a conviction for assault with a deadly weapon, is afforded by the fact that the constable had no warrant or legal authority for making the arrest, where he approached the person to be arrested in a peaceable manner, informed him that he was a constable, that he was performing his official duty, and at the same time showed the badge of his office, and did not assault the other in a violent manner, or attempt in any way to injure him. Ibid.

The offense which one commits who fires at an officer attempting an illegal arrest, with a gun, and misses him, when such resistance is unnecessary to defend himself from the illegal arrest, is that of unlawfully shooting at another not in his own defense, and does not amount to an assault with intent to murder. Porter v. State, 124 Ga. 297, 2 L.R.A. (N.S.) 730, 52 S. E. 283.

An offender who knows of the intention to arrest upon the part of one whom he knows to be an officer, and in whose presence he has committed the offense, cannot, where he shoots the officer upon his first uttering a word, justify the assault upon the ground that the attempted arrest was illegal because the officer did not comply with the statutory requirement that one about to be arrested shall be informed of the intention to arrest, and of the offense with which he is arrested. Robinson v. United States, supra.

If one is suddenly ordered at the point of a gun to throw up his hands, by another whom he knows to be an officer attempting to arrest him in pursuance of a valid warrant, it is his duty to submit, and if he resists the efforts of the officer to arrest him, had better keep quiet and go to bed and sleep this off,' and he said, 'No, by God, there is a man and a woman in this room, and a man and a woman in the other room, and I will be God damned if I am going to stand it any longer,' and I said, 'Mr. Gum, you will have to get quiet now, or I will have to put you under arrest,' and he said, 'God damn you, you can't do it,' and at that I got him by the arms and I called Mr. Dennison, he was standing at the door, and when he come in, Mr. Gum threw his right hand up and I discovered his knife for the first time, and he said to Mr. Dennison, 'By God, you stand back,' and I said to Dennison, 'Look out, he will cut you,' and just as I said that Gum made a vicious lick at him with the knife, and I jumped behind him and grabbed him by both arms, and he struck back at me with his knife that way (indicating), and struck me here and cut me. . . . He threw back his hand and struck me there, and I thought from the sting of the knife that he had cut me pretty badly, but after I had him arrested and took him to jail, I did not think so much of it. It was a small place, but was cut deep, and it was six weeks before it was entirely healed up."

At another point in his evidence, this witness testified:

Q. When you first went in the sitting room, who was in there?

A. Nobody but Gum.

he might be guilty of an assault with intent to murder; but if the officer comes upon the citizen, and without apprising him of his purpose, or whether he apprises him of his purpose or not, commences a deadly assault upon the citizen, the latter has the same right to defend himself against the act of the officer, as he would against an individual; and the fact that the officer is armed with a warrant does not in any way license him or give him authority to assault the party against whom he holds the warrant. Owen v. State, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 125 S. W. 405.

And the fact that a person is an officer gives him no greater rights than any other citizen, when he is engaged in a mere personal encounter, for it is only while an officer is actually engaged in performing some official duty that the law throws around him its special protection, and the guilt or innocence of another of an assault upon him is to be determined without reference to his being a peace officer. State v. Clayton, 100 Mo. 516, 18 Am. St. Rep. 565, 13 S. W. 819.

If the officer has no authority to make an arrest, or, having authority, is not known to be an officer, and does not in some way notify the party that he is an officer and has authority, the party arrested may lawfully resist the arrest, as if it were made by a private person, and if, in doing so, he does not use excessive violence, his act is justified, and he cannot be convicted of an assault. State v. Belk, 76 N. C. 10.

And if one who has committed no offense is suddenly approached by one who does not make it known that he is an officer, and who strikes the former upon the head, and, as the former believes at the time, shoots him, the fact that the person committing such acts was an officer attempting to make an arrest does not alter the position of the other, for in such circumstances the officer stands in the same relation to the other as any other citizen, and the other has a right to defend himself. This was the holding in Lynch v. State, 41 Tex. Crim. Rep. 510, 57 S. W. 1130, where the defendant was charged with assault with intent to murder, alleged to have been committed by shooting the officer.

So, where one is engaged in a fight against several persons, and is grabbed by another whom he does not know to be an officer, but in fact is such, apparently trying to stop the fight, he is justified in striking the officer in resistance of what may appear to him to be an assault by the officer, if the circumstances are such as to make it reasonably appear that the officer is in fact joining his adversaries; and in such circumstances he cannot be convicted of an assault. Franklin v. State, 27 Tex. App. 136, 11 S. W. 35.

An officer who is resisted in making an arrest which he is authorized to make is justified in using the force necessary to prevent an escape, and to defend himself or others from injury; but if there is no attempt to escape, and no forcible resistance, it is an excess of authority and a criminal offense in the officer to inflict any blow or violence upon the prisoner, and the latter is justified in using any force not excessive in defending himself from such an unauthorized assault. State v. Belk, 76 N. C. 10.

Thus, if the person sought to be arrested knows the officer and his intention to make the arrest, yet makes no effort to injure him, but, nevertheless, the officer makes such a demonstration with his pistol as would cause a reasonable man in like situation to believe that he is about to be killed or seriously injured, and the person about to be arrested perceives such demonstration, and honestly believes that unless he shoots his life will be taken or he will receive great bodily injury, and he shoots in such circumstances, and not in a spirit of malice or revenge, he cannot be convicted of assault with intent to kill. Robinson v. United States, — Okla. Crim. Rep. —, 111 Pac. 984.

So, where one about to be arrested offers no violence toward the officer, but merely flees or attempts to flee, and thereupon the officer shoots at him, or makes such a demonstration as to give him reasonable cause to believe that the other is about to shoot him, and he shoots at the officer in

Q. I want you to tell the jury what he was doing.

A. He was sitting there in the chair when I went in.

Q. He wasn't saying anything to you or anyone else, was he?

A. No, not at that time, he wasn't.

Q. Who spoke first?

A. I did,—I said, "Woods, what is all this excitement about?" and then he commenced.

Q. The trouble started as soon as you said that?

A. Yes, he commenced whenever I said that. I went in there at the instance of Mrs. Gum, because she asked for protection.

Defendant's wife corroborates the officer in his testimony, but says, in addition, that before entering the room where defendant was, and where he was quietly sitting, the officer told her she would have to get a warrant before the arrest could be made.

There is no evidence of any offense committed by defendant in the presence of the officer, or within his hearing, unless the offense of attempting an assault upon Dennison with the knife be an offense; but this was after Dennison had been called in to assist in making the arrest, and Waugh had taken hold of defendant's arms. The charge of the indictment is that the offense was committed while Waugh was attempting to arrest the defendant on the charge of being drunk and disorderly.

Did the facts proven entitle the defendant to the instructions refused, or either of them? As stated by Bishop (Bishop, Crim. Proc. § 181): "Their powers of arrest do not differ greatly; or, at least, the differences at common law are not distinctly defined in the books. . . . For a past offense lower than felony, none of these officers can make an arrest without warrant; unless, for example, it is such a dangerous assault as may end in felony, by the death such circumstances, and not in a spirit of unlawfulness or revenge, but honestly believing that unless he does so he will probably be killed or seriously injured, then he cannot be convicted of assault with intent to kill. Ibid.

And where officers attempt without a warrant to make an arrest upon the mere oral complaint of another, they are guilty of assault and battery upon the person so seized, and the latter has the right to defend himself against such assault, and, after having already been seized by two officers, and the third who has a pistol in his hand has been told to shoot him, he is justified in using any weapon to protect himself, and if, in attempting to effect his escape, he

33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

of the injured person." See also 3 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 880.

The offense of being drunk and disorderly is not a felony. Section 9, chap. 153, Code 1906, among other things, provides: "If any person shall, in the presence of a constable, . . . appear in a state of gross intoxication in a public place, such constable may, without warrant or other process, or further proof, arrest such offending person, and carry him before some justice of the peace in the county in which such offense is committed. . . ." The statute, § 15, chap. 149, Code 1906, punishing drunkenness, provides: "If a person arrived at the age of discretion, profanely curse, or swear, or get drunk, he shall be fined by a justice $1 for each offense." Under neither of these statutes was the sergeant justified, without warrant, in making the arrest.

What rights, then, has a citizen in resisting an unlawful arrest? An arrest without warrant is a trespass, an unlawful assault upon the person, and how far one thus unlawfully assaulted may go in resistance is to be determined, as in other cases of assault. Life and liberty are regarded as standing substantially on one foundation; life being useless without liberty. 1 Bishop, New Crim. Law, § 868. And the authorities are uniform that where one is about to be unlawfully deprived of his liberty, he may resist the aggressions of the offender, whether of a private citizen or a public officer, to the extent of taking the life of the assailant, if that be necessary to preserve his own life, or prevent infliction upon him of some great bodily harm. 1 Bishop, New Crim. Law, § 868; State v. Clark, 64 W. Va. 642, 63 S. E. 402, and cases cited. But just to what extent one may so resist, where the acts and conduct of the officer or aggressor do not threaten his life or any great bodily injury, the authorities are not very clear. The court, in Jackson v. Com. 96 Va. 107, 30 S. E. 452, uses a knife and inflicts a wound upon one of the officers, he is guilty of no offense. Dorsey v. State, 7 Ga. App. 366, 66 S. E. 1096.

Where an officer, after an offense had been committed for which an immediate arrest might properly have been made, attempted to make the arrest after a delay of such duration that the attempt constituted a fresh pursuit, it was held that the attempted arrest was unjustifiable, and that the offender could not, therefore, be convicted for wounding the officer while resisting. Reg. v. Marsden, 37 L. J. Mag. Cas. N. S. 80, L. R. I. C. C. 131, 18 L. T. N. S. 298, 16 Week. Rep. 711, 11 Cox, C. C. 90.

L. A. W.

but, as we thought in Teel v. Coal & Coke R. Co. 66 W. Va. 315, 319, 66 S. E. 470, 472, inadvertently, approved an instruction which told the jury that defendant had the right to repel an assault "by all the force he deemed necessary." "At any rate," we said, "we do not think one who is assaulted may use such force, in repelling the attack, as he deems necessary, if he should deem it necessary to use more force than a jury would say is reasonable under the circumstances, viewing the situation from the standpoint of the assailant." And in the same case we criticized Montgomery v. Com. 98 Va. 840, 36 S. E. 371, 13 Am. Crim. Rep. 156, where we thought the court had gone to the other extreme in saying that a man may rightfully use as much force as is necessary for the protection of his person or property, provided he does not endanger human life or do great bodily harm. Another pertinent case is State v. Gravely, 66 W. Va. 375, 378, 379, 66 S. E. 503. "The reason," says Bishop, supra, "why a man may not oppose an attempt on his liberty by the same extreme measures permissible in an attempt on his life, appears to be because liberty can be secured by a resort to the laws."

But what is meant by saying, as Teel v. Coal & Coke R. Co. and other authorities do, that one may not use more force than a jury would say is reasonable under the circumstances? May one under this rule use a club or a cane, or, as in the case we have here, a knife, if he do not go to the extent of killing his assailant or endangering his life, if in his judgment, viewing the situation from his standpoint, it be necessary to do so to preserve his liberty, and successfully ward off the assault upon him? We think the authorities justify answering this question in the negative. In 21 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 804, it is stated that one thus situated "is justified in using or offering to use a deadly weapon only where he has reason to apprehend an injury greater than the mere unlawful arrest, as danger of death or great bodily harm." Numerous decisions are cited for this proposition in the footnotes. In Coleman v. State, 121 Ga. 594, 600, 49 S. E. 716, 718, it is held that if the accused meets the unlawful assault with force proportionate to the attack, he is in the right; but if he resists with disproportionate, and therefore unlawful, violence, without being put in real or apparent danger of life or serious bodily harm, he becomes the wrongdoer. Says the court in this case: "The unlawful arrest justified a certain amount of resistance. But it did not justify shooting." In Roberson v. State, 43 Fla. 157, 52 L.R.A. 751, 29 So. 539, the court says: "If 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) the attempt to arrest be unlawful, the party sought to be arrested may use such reasonable force, proportioned to the injury attempted upon him, as is necessary to effect his escape, but no more; and he cannot do this by using or offering to use a deadly weapon, if he has no reason to apprehend a greater injury than a mere unlawful arrest." In Miller v. State, 31 Tex. Crim. Rep. 609, 638, 37 Am. St. Rep. 836, 21 S. W. 925, 927, that court says: "He is not required to submit to illegal arrest, but may demand the warrant or proper authority, and, in its absence, repel force by force, provided the force does not exceed prevention and defense. Such force, however, cannot be disproportionate to the injury. The right to repel force by force continues until the person attempting the illegal arrest presses forward with such violence that the person defending is obliged to choose between three things; to retreat, to surrender, or the death of his adversary. If the force used be disproportionate to the injury about to be inflicted, self-defense is eliminated; and if it be attributed to any other cause than resistance to the illegal arrest, such arrest cannot be looked to as a mitigating circumstance." In State v. Row, 81 Iowa, 138, 46 N. W. 875, a case involving the killing of an officer while attempting to make an unlawful arrest, one of the instructions propounded by the state, in modification of the general proposition stated, said: "One may, however, rightfully resist, by reasonable and moderate force, an unlawful and unauthorized attempt to arrest him, or restrain him of his liberty; but is not justified or excused in carrying such resistance to an immoderate extent, or in using such extreme force or violence as to imperil life, unless the circumstances and manner of the attempted arrest be such that, as an ordinarily reasonable and prudent man, he fairly and honestly believes that he was in imminent peril of death or of great bodily harm, and there was no other reasonable way of escaping the danger except by killing his assailant." The criticism of this instruction by defendant's counsel was that it only justified in self-defense the use of "reasonable and moderate force," whereas, it was argued, "the only limit which the law places upon a man thus wrongfully sought to be deprived of his liberty is just that force which will prevent the doing of the unlawful purpose." "That," says the court, "is the clear import of the instruction given. It enjoins moderate force only where moderate force will be effective, and it justifies sufficient force, even to the extent of taking life. The difficulty lies in giving effect to only a part of the language used." We do not think the court rightfully interpreted this instruction. As interpreted, it implies that one thus about to be deprived of his liberty would be justified, if that extreme measure was necessary to make his resistance effective, in taking the life of his assailant, whether or not his own life was in danger or he was in danger of great bodily harm. We do not understand the authorities to go that far. In People v. Denby, 108 Cal. 54, 40 Pac. 1051, a case involving an unlawful arrest, defendant had made use of a knife in resistance; and though he had threatened to do so, he had inflicted no wound upon the officer. The court held that the trial court erroneously refused to instruct the jury as requested by the defendant that "the witness Strait, not being a peace officer, had no right to arrest or attempt to arrest the defendant for begging, and the defendant was justified in resisting such arrest, or attempting to free himself from the hold of said witness after he had arrested him, upon ascertaining that the person so arresting him was not an officer authorized to make arrest." As applicable to the facts in that case, the instruction was proper and should have been given.

It is unnecessary, we think, to multiply authorities. Upon reason, as well as upon authority, we think the general rule, affirmed in Roberson v. State, supra, may be properly adduced, namely, that "if the attempt to arrest be unlawful, the party sought to be arrested may use such reasonable force, proportioned to the injury attempted upon him, as is necessary to effect his escape, but no more; and he cannot do this by using or offering to use a deadly weapon, if he has no reason to apprehend a greater injury than a mere unlawful arrest."

Such being the law applicable to this case, the court below committed no error in rejecting defendant's instructions three and four. While the general proposition stated therein, that one may lawfully resist an unlawful arrest is true as stated, as applied to this case, they would in effect have told the jury that, if necessary to successfully resist the arrest, the defendant might lawfully use the deadly weapon he did use in inflicting the wound upon the officer. This we do not understand to be the law.

The fact that the assault was committed in defendant's residence, under the circumstances of this case, makes no difference. The officer had been invited there by the wife of defendant, who desired his protection. The officer did wrong in attempting to make the arrest without a warrant, and his act was wholly unjustifiable; but this does not excuse the defendant in the use of the deadly weapon, endangering the life of the officer, and the unlawful cutting of which the jury found him guilty was an unjustifiable act.

The judgment of imprisonment for three years, however, under all the circumstances, we think was quite too severe; but we could not say, if we had been called upon to do so, that the court below exceeded its reasonable discretion. The judgment will therefore be affirmed.

MICHIGAN SUPREME COURT.

LAURA L. SHEPARD

v.

GERMANIA FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY,
Plff. in Err.

(— Mich. —, 130 N. W. 626.)

Insurance — adjacent buildings — including in one policy.

A policy written by a state agent upon a brick building "and its additions adjoining and communicating," after notice from the owner that he wanted the policy to cover not only the brick building, but a wooden one which had been moved back to make way for it, and, although separated from it by a few feet, was connected by passageway and used with it, will cover the wooden structure.

(March 31, 1911.)

Note. — Import of word "additions" in policy of fire insurance.

I. Where policy covers "building and additions."

- a. In general, 156.
- b. Necessity of physical connection, 157.
- c. Effect of fact that no other building answers description of "addition," 158.
- d. Character of the building.
 1. Manufacturing plant, 159.
 2. Building used for mercantile purposes, 160.
 3. Dwelling houses, 160.
 4. Miscellaneous, 160.
- e. Admissibility of parol evidence to aid in construction, 161.
- f. Construction of policy, whether question for court or jury, 161.

II. Where policy permits additions, alterations, and repairs, 162.

I. Where policy covers "building and additions."

a. In general.

Like other contracts, an insurance policy is interpreted to give effect to the intention of the parties, ascertained from the language used in the instrument as a whole, aided by extrinsic evidence of the situation

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Clinton County to review a judgment in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due under a fire insurance policy. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Wilkinson & Younglove and Walbridge & Kelley for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. Lyon & Molnet, for defendant in error:

Plaintiff was entitled to a direction of a verdict in her favor, for her loss on both the brick and the wooden building.

Wolverine Lumber Co. v. Palatine Ins. Co. 139 Mich. 432, 102 N. W. 991; Phenix Ins. Co. v. Martin, — Miss. —, 16 So. 417; Marsh v. Concord Mut. F. Ins. Co. 71 N. H. 253, 51 Atl. 898; Marsh v. New Hampshire F. Ins. Co. 70 N. H. 590, 49 Atl. 88; Cargill v. Millers' & Mfrs.' Mut. Ins. Co. 33 Minn. 90, 22 N. W. 6; Pettit v. State Ins. Co. 41 Minn. 299, 43 N. W. 378; Gross v. Milwaukee Mechanics' Ins. Co. 92 Wis. 656, 66 N. W. 712; Home Mut. Ins. Co. v. Roe, 71 Wis. 33, 36 N. W. 594; Ferguson v. Lumbermen's Ins. Co. 45 Wash. 209, 88 Pac. 128; Guthrie Laundry Co. v. Northern Assur. Co. 17 Okla. 571, 87 Pac. 649, 10 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 936; Lehmer v. Horton, 67 Neb. 574, 93 N. W. 964, 2 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 683.

Bird, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Plaintiff instituted this suit to recover for a loss which she suffered by fire to

of the parties at the time of executing the contract, the purpose and intent of the contract, and other surrounding facts and circumstances having a legitimate bearing or tendency to disclose such intention. Particularly applicable to the question under consideration is the cardinal rule that a contract will be construed in a manner to give effect to every material word used therein, if such a construction is not inconsistent with other portions of the contract, or incompatible with the surrounding facts and circumstances. Applying this general rule to the question under consideration, it is obvious that the technical definition of the word "addition," or language generally used in connection therewith, "adjoining and communicating," is of little, if any, value in determining the sense in which these words were used in a policy. The intention of the parties is the real question, and where the policy purports to cover some building other than the main building, by employing "addition" or "additions," it will be construed to cover a structure physically or by use connected with the main building insured, especially if there is no other building to which the term "addition" can be applied. Bickford v. Aetna Ins. Co. 101 Me. 124, 63 Atl. 552, 8 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 92; SHEPARD v. GERMANIA F. INS. CO.; Cargill v. Millers' & Mfrs.' Mut. Ins. Co. 33 Minn. 90, 22 N. W. 6; Tate v. Jasper County Farmers' Mut. Ins. Co. 133 Mo. App. 584, 113 S. W. 659; Phenix Ins. Co. v. Martin, — Miss. —, 16 So. 417; Marsh v. New Hampshire F. Ins. Co. 70 N. H. 590, 49 Atl. 88; Marsh v. Concord Mut. F. Ins. Co. 71 N. H. 253, 51 Atl. 898; Arlington Co. v. Colonial Assur. Co. 190 N. Y. 337, 73 N. E. 34; Ferguson v. Lumbermen's Ins. Co. 45 Wash. 209, 88 Pac. 128; Rickerson v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 149 N. Y. 307, 43 N. E. 856; Maisel v. Fire Asso. of Philadelphia, 59 App. Div. 461, 69 N. Y. Supp. 181; Cummins v. German American Ins. Co. 197 Pa. 61, 46 Atl. 902; Home Mut. Ins. Co. v. Roe, 71 Wis. 33, 36 N. W. 594.

As aptly stated in Bickford v. Aetna Ins. Co., the definition of the word "addition" given in the dictionaries affords very little assistance in determining its application to a particular structure. "The meaning of the term must be extended or limited by reference to other words of description, and by the use and purpose contemplated by the parties to the contract not inconsistent with the language of the policy, and by judicial definitions given in similar cases."

On the same subject, in Marsh v. Concord Mut. F. Ins. Co. 71 N. H. 253, 51 Atl. 898, the court said that whether, in the strictest sense of the term, certain buildings could be said to be "additions" to the principal building, and if so, whether they were "adjoining or communicating" additions to that building, may suggest discussions of the technically correct use of language, in which it is not often useful for the court to indulge. "The question of the grammatical propriety of the language is not before the court. The question for decision is: What is the meaning of the language employed, in view of the apparent purposes of the parties, the situation and uses of the property, and the nature of the contract evidenced by the policy?" Answering this query the court continued: "In view of the dependent uses of all the buildings, . . . the word 'additions' was not an inappropriate designation of the two smaller ones; and for the same reason the qualifying words 'adjoining and communicating,' though perhaps unnecessary, were evidently intended to designate such additional buildings as were necessary appurtenances to the main building in the manufacture of pails."

b. Necessity of physical connection.

In the great majority of cases wherein the question has been presented, there has been some physical connection between the principal building and the structure sought to be brought within the terms of the policy as an "addition." These cases, however, do not hold that such a connection is necessary, and, in the cases wherein the question has arisen or been discussed, the con-certain business property which she owned in the village of Ovid. She had judgment in the trial court, and the defendant brings the case to this court by writ of error.

The plaintiff was the owner of two brick stores facing the east, on Main street, in the village of Ovid. The north one was occupied as the postoffice, and the south one as a restaurant. At the rear of the stores, and from 5 to 8 feet distant, was a two-story wooden structure extending nearly the entire width of the stores. The wooden building was connected with the store occupied as a restaurant by an inclosed passageway, and was used in connection with it. The brick oven used by the bakery was situate in the rear part of the wooden building. A short time prior to the issuance of the policy, the wooden structure occupied the place where the postoffice now stands. It was moved to the rear, and the brick stores were erected in the summer of 1906. In the autumn of that year, when the improvements were nearing completion, plaintiff, being desirous of obtaining some insurance thereon, applied to her husband, who was the local agent for the defendant. He wrote and delivered to her a Michigan Standard policy, describing the property as "the one-story brick building located on the west side of Main street," etc. Plaintiff, upon learning that the policy did not cover the wooden building, informed her husband that a local agent had agreed to insure the buildings as an entirety, and that she preferred to have it done in that clusion has been reached that, in order that a building be an addition within the terms of an insurance policy purporting to insure a building and its additions, it is not absolutely necessary that the buildings be physically connected.

Thus, in Phenix Ins. Co. v. Martin, it is held that a policy on a two-story brick building and additions thereto, occupied as a dwelling, includes as an addition an entirely separate and distinct building within the curtilage, which is used as part of the residence insured, being in part occupied by the domestic servants of the assured and in part used as a laundry room.

And to the same effect is Tate v. Jasper County Farmers' Mut. Ins. Co., which holds that a detached building, used as a part of the main dwelling, is an addition within the description of a policy purporting to cover a dwelling and additions.

And see also Arlington Co. v. Colonial Assur. Co., which holds a new building constructed subsequently to the issuance of the insurance policy in suit, to be an addition, within a provision thereof authorizing additions, alterations, and repairs, although it was a distinct building, separated by a considerable distance from the other buildings insured, and only connected with one of them, the boiler house, by a tunnel or conduit 5 feet in diameter, through which passed electric wires, steam pipes, water pipes, etc.

Compare with North British & M. Ins. Co. v. Tye, 1 Ga. App. 380, 58 S. E. 110, which holds that a servants' house is not an addition to a two-story frame dwelling house from which it is entirely separate, being distant about 150 feet, and with which it has no communication except by call bells, and hence it is not covered by a policy purporting to insure a two-story frame building and its additions.

In Bickford v. Aetna Ins. Co., the court remarked that generally a building entirely distinct from a larger one will not be covered by a policy insuring a "building and addition."

An entirely separate and distinct building will not be treated as an addition to a brick building, within the terms of a policy of insurance covering a brick building, including a frame addition, where there is a connected frame addition not otherwise insured. Franklin F. Ins. Co. v. Hellerick, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 1703, 49 S. W. 1066.

So, a new building not physically attached to or connected with any building specifically covered by a policy of insurance, and which contains no machinery connected with any of that used in the buildings insured, is not an addition within the terms of the policy permitting additions, alterations, and repairs, it also appearing that such building was under construction at the time of the issuance of the policy. Arlington Mfg. Co. v. Norwich Union F. Ins. Co. 48 C. C. A. 542, 107 Fed. 662.

c. Effect of fact that no other building answers description of "addition."

In determining whether in a given case a building is an addition within the terms and meaning of an insurance policy purporting to insure a building and addition, the court will not treat the word "addition" as mere surplusage, but will give effect to it by applying the term to any building reasonably answering the description, if such application is not inconsistent with other provisions of the policy, or clearly opposed to the surrounding facts and circumstances existing at the time of the execution of the contract. Bickford v. Aetna Ins. Co. 101 Me. 124, 63 Atl. 552, 8 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 92; SHEPARD v. GERMANIA F. INS. CO.; Phenix Ins. Co. v. Martin, — Miss. —, 16 So. 417; Marsh v. Concord Mut. F. Ins. Co. 71 N. H. 253, 51 Atl. 898; Maisel v. Fire Asso. of Philadelphia, 59 App. Div. 461, 69 N. Y. Supp. 181.

Thus, in Marsh v. Concord Mut. F. Ins. Co. 71 N. H. 253, 51 Atl. 898, the court remarked that any doubt that might remain as to whether the buildings in question are the "adjoining and communicating" additions intended to be covered by the policy is removed by the fact that, unless so construed, this language can be given no force or significance, as there were no other way. The husband expressed some doubt of his authority to make the policy cover both buildings, and suggested that the matter rest until he could communicate with the state agent. Subsequently, Mr. Spice, the state agent, came and inspected the property, and, after doing so, he canceled the policy which had been written by the husband, and drew up the policy in question, describing the property as "the one-story brick, metal ^{and}/_{or} composition roof building, and its additions adjoining and communicating with their foundations." The policy gave "permission to make ordinary alterations, additions, and repairs, without notice, until required." Later a fire occurred, which damaged both the brick and wooden buildings. Defendant refused to pay the loss on the wooden building, on the ground that it was not included in the description of the property insured. Suit was brought on the policy, and plaintiff recovered a judgment for the damage to both buildings.

The trial court admitted parol proof of the conversations between the plaintiff and her husband, and her husband and the state agent, with reference to the issuing of the policies, and instructed the jury that if plaintiff was misled by these conversations and the acts of defendant, into believing that the policy in question covered the wooden building, and she relied upon it, the defendant would be estopped to deny that it was so covered. The defendant assigns buildings or additions to which it could refer, and added: "It is unreasonable to assume, except from necessity, that language used by parties in a written contract was not intended to express an intelligible idea, or that they employed language having no application or reference to the subject-matter of the contract. No such necessity exists in this case, and the language referred to cannot be rejected as surplusage. It is susceptible of a reasonable construction, based upon all the competent evidence in the case."

So, in Bickford v. Aetna Ins. Co. 101 Me. 124, 63 Atl. 552, 8 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 92. the court said that upon the facts which appeared in evidence, the use which the insurer made of the building destroyed, in connection with the principal building insured, and the fact that no other structure by its location or use can be intended by the terms of the policy, under the rule of construction, which in cases of doubt favors the insured, the building destroyed was the addition designated in the contract.

So, in Phenix Ins. Co. v. Martin. — Miss. —, 16 So. 417, the court remarked that since the language of the policy was broad enough to include the building injured, and as there were no other houses or structures which might possibly be claimed as additions to the main building, the building in question must have been the building meant in the policy.

And in Maisel v. Fire Asso. of Philadelphia, the court remarked: "It is a fact not to be overlooked that the only building to which the term 'additions attached' can relate is this frame building. The language is therefore surplusage, unless it embraces that building, and we must give effect to every part of the policy, if we can do so without obvious violence to the intention of the parties to it."

d. Character of the building.

1. Manufacturing plant.

It has been sometimes asserted that a court, as a matter of law, would hold to be an addition a separate independent building connected with a manufacturing plant insured as a plant and additions, because of the blanket form of the policy, in cases where the ordinary policy covering a building and additions would not be construed to cover an independent separate building as the addition; in other words, that the interpretation of the former class of insurance contracts is more favorable to the insured than the latter. An examination of the cases, however, does not support this claim. A comparison of the following cases will serve to illustrate the uniformity with which the general rule is applied without reference to the character of the property insured:

A dry house about 12 feet from a frame mill building, and an engine house about 4 feet from the dry house, and both connected with the main building by a movable bridge, and all used in the manufacture of pails, are additions to the frame mill building, within the terms of the policy, "frame mill building and all additions thereto adjoining and communicating, . . . occupied by the assured as a pail shop." Marsh v. New Hampshire F. Ins. Co. 70 N. H. 590, 49 Atl. 88; Marsh v. Concord F. Ins. Co. 71 N. H. 253, 51 Atl. 898.

An engine room 22 feet from a planing mill, and connected therewith by a 3½-inch iron shaft furnishing the motor power for propelling the machinery in the planing mill, and also connected by a spout or box 2½ feet square and 10 feet above the ground or roadway, between the two buildings, is an addition to the planing mill, within the terms of a policy covering a planing mill and additions. Home Mut. Ins. Co. v. Roe, 71 Wis. 33, 36 N. W. 594. This was not a blanket form policy.

A two-story planing mill building 40 by 60 is an addition to a sawmill building 220 feet long by 50 feet wide, within the terms of a policy covering a sawmill and addition thereto, although the two buildings are 18 inches apart, but are connected by means of a belt extending from the main shaft in the sawmill to the machinery in the planing mill, the machinery in the planing mill being run by this belt. Ferguson v. Lum- error upon the admission of this testimony and also on this charge of the trial court.

The plaintiff contended in the trial court and in this court, that the jury ought to have been instructed, as a matter of law, that the wooden building was covered by the terms of the policy. If plaintiff is right in this contention, it disposes of the defendant's assignments of error. Therefore we will first consider that question.

When the words of description contained in the policy are read in connection with the undisputed testimony, with reference to the location, the surroundings, the ownership, and the use made of the property, we have no hesitancy in holding, as a matter of law, that the wooden building was included within the terms of the policy.

The record shows that both brick and wooden buildings were owned by plaintiff; that the wooden building was not to exceed 8 feet distant from the brick building; that it was used in connection with the restaurant in the brick building; and that it was connected by a walk, and before the fire it was made into an inclosed passageway. The words of the description contained in the first policy made it very clear that it applied only to the brick building. Soon after its issue, Mr. Spice, the state agent of defendant, came and inspected the property, and, after so inspecting and conferring with the local agent, he canceled the first policy, and wrote the one sued upon, in which the words of description are substantially in the language berman's Ins. Co. 45 Wash. 209, 88 Pac. 128.

2. Building used for mercantile purposes.

A two-story frame building situated on the rear of an adjacent lot, but extending over and against the rear of a brick store building used for retail mercantile purposes, in connection with which the frame building is used as a storehouse, is an addition thereto, within a policy covering all furniture contained in the brick building and additions attached. Maisel v. Fire Asso. of Philadelphia, 59 App. Div. 461, 69 N. Y. Supp. 181.

A frame building 6 to 8 feet from a brick building used for mercantile purposes, in connection with which business the frame building is also used, the two being connected by a covered platform, is an addition within the terms of a policy covering a brick building and its additions. SHEPARD V. GERMANIA F. INS. CO.

3. Dwelling houses.

A building not connected with a two-story brick dwelling, but in the same yard, and used in connection therewith in part as a laundry and in part for domestic servants, is an addition to the brick dwelling, within the terms of a policy covering a two-story brick building and additions thereto, occupied by assured as a dwelling. Phenix Ins. Co. v. Martin, — Miss. —, 16 So. 417.

An insurance policy upon a dwelling and addition covers a building used in connection with it as a storage for family stores and other things used for family purposes, although such structure is not attached to the main building. Tate v. Jasper County Farmers' Mut. Ins. Co. 133 Mo. App. 584, 113 S. W. 659.

A policy covering a two-story frame building and additions thereto, occupied by assured as a dwelling, covers as an addition a carriage house and stable under the same roof. Hannan v. Williamsburgh City F. Ins. Co. 81 Mich. 556, 9 L.R.A. 127, 45 N. 33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

W. 1120; Hannan v. Westchester F. Ins. Co. 81 Mich. 561, 45 N. W. 1122.

Compare with North British & M. Ins. Co. v. Tye, 1 Ga. App. 380, 58 S. E. 110, which holds that an insurance policy covering a two-story frame building and its additions, used as a dwelling house, does not cover a servants' house used in connection with the dwelling house, but 150 feet distant and connected only by call bell.

A frame building used as a cigar factory, adjoining and communicating with a brick dwelling, is an addition thereto, within the terms of a policy insuring a two-story brick dwelling house and its additions adjoining and communicating. Carpenter v. Allemannia F. Ins. Co. 156 Pa. 37, 26 Atl. 781.

4. Miscellaneous.

A policy covering a two-story basement and brick building and its additions adjoining and communicating, occupied as a steam laundry, covers as an addition a boiler room 4 feet from the main building, and connected therewith by a 2½-inch steam pipe, and also by a framework of 2 by 6 beams for an overhead archway, and a partially completed platform and sidewalk at the bottom. Guthrie Laundry Co. v. Northern Assur. Co. 17 Okla. 571, 87 Pac. 649, 10 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 936.

A building 47 feet long, 37 feet wide, connected with the main building, 86½ feet long by 54½ feet wide, by a platform 24 feet wide and 26 feet by the sides of the buildings, which is supported by posts, is an addition to the main building, within the terms of a policy insuring "the frame building and addition, . . . occupied as a livery and sale stable," where the second floor of the addition is used for storing carriages and generally as a permanent storage in connection with the main stable. Bickford v. Aetna Ins. Co. 101 Me. 124, 63 Atl. 552, 8 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 92.

A warehouse about 2½ feet from the elevator building, and about the same size as the elevator, and connected therewith by of the first policy, with the addition of the words, "and its additions adjoining and communicating with the foundations." The evident intent in changing and adding to the description was to include something which was omitted in the first policy. The word "additions" was intended to have some significance, and there was no other building to which it could apply save the wooden building. Unless we say it applied to the wooden building, we are obliged to say that it meant nothing. If we are to adopt defendant's view, we would be obliged to say that both descriptions should be given the same construction, notwithstanding they read differently. If the change in description had been made by an inexperienced local agent, we might have more misgiving about the intent in making the change; but when the state agent, with nearly thirty years of experience behind him in the insurance world, comes and looks this property over, and changes the description so as to include the word "additions," we are in duty bound to say that it was done to include something that was not included in the first policy, and that that something was the wooden building.

The case of Guthrie Laundry Co. v. Northern Assur. Co. 17 Okla. 571, 87 Pac. 649, 10 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 936, is very similar to the one under consideration. The insured property was described as a two-story basement and brick building, with metal roof, and its additions adjoining and communicating, including foundations, oc-strips of board nailed upon each building, and also two spouts used to transfer grain from one building to the other, is an addition within the terms of a policy covering an elevator and additions. Cargill v. Millers' & Mfrs.' Mut. Ins. Co. 33 Minn. 90, 22 N. W. 6.

e. Admissibility of parol evidence to aid in construction.

The rule that parol evidence of extrinsic facts is admissible to enable a court or jury to apply the descriptive portion of a contract to the subject-matter applies to contracts of insurance, and evidence of the situation of the property and the parties, as well as the other surrounding facts and circumstances, at the time of the issuance of the policy, is admissible to aid the court in construing the word "addition" as used in an insurance policy in describing the property intended to be covered thereby. Arlington Mfg. Co. v. Norwich Union F. Co. 46 C. C. A. 542, 107 Fed. 662; Bickford v. Aetna Ins. Co. 101 Me. 124, 63 Atl. 552, 8 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 92; Marsh v. Concord Mut. F. Ins. Co. 71 N. H. 253, 51 Atl. 898; Rickerson v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 149 N. Y. 307, 43 N. E. 856; Cummins v. German American Ins. Co. 197 Pa. 61, 46 Atl. 902; Home Mut. Ins. Co. v. Roe, 71 Wis. 33, 36 N. W. 594.

It is said by the court in Arlington Mfg. Co. v. Norwich Union F. Ins. Co.: "Where the question is whether the property destroyed by fire is embraced within the terms of the policy, it is always competent in contracts of doubtful interpretation, to give evidence of extraneous facts which will place the court in the situation of the parties when the contract was made, in order to enable it to read understandingly."

And in Home Mut. Ins. Co. v. Roe, the court said that parol evidence was certainly admissible as to the character, nature, and situation of the property insured, in order to place the court in the position of the parties at the time of making the contract of insurance.

So, while evidence is properly received to place the court in the position of the parties, and enable it to appreciate the force of the words they used in reducing the contract to writing, neither party to the contract is entitled to state how he understood it when he signed it, or testify as to its meaning or as to his intent. What the parties intended should be gathered from the contract, read in the light of the circumstances surrounding them when they used the doubtful words. "Parol evidence was not admissible to show what either party secretly intended, as that would add to or take from the writing, which is presumed to express the intention of both." Rickerson v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 149 N. Y. 307, 43 N. E. 856.

But testimony of the parties to an insurance contract, as to what was said about the property in question at the time the policy was written, is properly received by the court, to enable it to interpret and apply the provision of a policy purporting to cover a barn, including a shed and additions attached. Such testimony is not that anything had been omitted from the contract, but is simply taken to prove that both the insured and the insurer, at the time the insurance was effected, understood that certain pens were embraced in the term "sheds and additions attached." Cummins v. German American Ins. Co. 197 Pa. 61, 46 Atl. 902.

f. Construction of policy, whether question for court or jury.

It being the duty of the court in all cases where the question is simply the determination of the meaning of a written document, to declare its legal interpretation, where there is no ambiguity, uncertainty, or conflicting inferences in the language of an insurance policy as applied to the undisputed facts, it is a question of law for the court to say what is embraced within the word "addition" as used in a policy of insurance. Arlington Mfg. Co. v. Norwich Union F. Ins. Co. 46 C. C. A. 542, 107 Fed. 662; Bickford v. Aetna Ins. Co. 101 Me. 124, 63 Atl. 552, 8 A. & E. Ann.

occupied as a steam laundry. A boiler house, 4 feet distant, was connected with the main building by a steam pipe, and by a partially completed platform and overhead arch between the buildings, and a sidewalk along the side. It was held that the policy included the boiler house. For similar interpretations, see Marsh v. Concord Mut. F. Ins. Co. 71 N. H. 253, 51 Atl. 898; Phenix Ins. Co. v. Martin, — Miss. —, 16

So. 417; Marsh v. New Hampshire F. Ins. Co. 70 N. H. 590, 49 Atl. 88; Pettit v. State Ins. Co. 41 Minn. 299, 43 N. W. 378; Gross v. Western Assur. Co. 92 Wis. 656, 66 N. W. 712.

We are of the opinion that the plaintiff was entitled to an instruction in accordance with his contention. Under this view of the case, the admission of the testimony complained of, and the submission to the Cas. 92; SHEPARD v. GERMANIA F. INS. CO.; Hannan v. Williamsburgh City F. Ins. Co. 81 Mich. 556, 9 L.R.A. 127, 45 N. W. 1120; Hannan v. Westchester F. Ins. Co. 81 Mich. 561, 45 N. W. 1122; Phenix Ins. Co. v. Martin, — Miss. —, 16 So. 417; Tate v. Jasper County Farmers' Mut. Ins. Co. 133 Mo. App. 584, 113 S. W. 659; Marsh v. New Hampshire F. Ins. Co. 70 N. H. 590, 49 Atl. 88; Marsh v. Concord Mut. F. Ins. Co. 71 N. H. 253, 51 Atl. 898; Maisel v. Fire Asso. of Philadelphia, 59 App. Div. 461, 69 N. Y. Supp. 181; Home Mut. Ins. Co. v. Roe, 71 Wis. 33, 36 N. W. 594.

Where, however, the evidence permits different inferences as to what facts and circumstances were known and understood by the parties when the policy was issued, the meaning they applied to the word "addition" becomes to some extent a question of fact dependent upon those inferences, which should be submitted to the jury. Rickerson v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 149 N. Y. 307, 43 N. E. 856; Home Mut. Ins. Co. v. Roe, 71 Wis. 33, 36 N. W. 594.

In Cummins v. German American Ins. Co. 192 Pa. 359, 43 Atl. 1016, and subsequent appeal in 197 Pa. 61, 46 Atl. 902, it was held that the court properly left it to the jury to determine whether certain sheep and hog pens came within the provisions of an insurance policy purporting to cover a barn, including sheds and additions.

II. Where policy permits additions, alterations, and repairs.

A distinction is to be observed in construing policies purporting to insure a building and additions, and a policy containing the permission to make additions, alterations, and repairs. In the former the doctrine already considered applies, that the insured having purported to insure the principal building and some addition thereto, the court will not reject as surplusage the language purporting to insure an addition, if there is some building reasonable answering the description to which this designation may be applied. This doctrine, however, has no application in construing policies containing permission to make additions, alterations, and repairs, and as a consequence the court might refuse to hold a structure to be an addition, so as to be covered by a policy containing language of the latter character, which, under a policy of the former character, would be held to be an addition. Thus, in Peoria Sugar Ref. Co. v. People's F. Ins. Co. 24 Fed. 773, it 33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

was held that a building 40 feet distant from the insured building, used in connection therewith, and connected with it by a bridge and underground passage, is not an addition within the terms of a policy permitting the insured to make additions, alterations, and repairs.

And in Peoria Sugar Ref. Co. v. People's F. Ins. Co. 52 Conn. 581, a warehouse 41 feet from a factory, used in connection therewith, is held not to be an addition within the terms of a policy similar to the preceding case.

In Arlington Mfg. Co. v. Norwich Union F. Ins. Co. 46 C. C. A. 542, 107 Fed. 662, a new building not physically attached to or connected with any building specifically covered by a policy of insurance, and which contains no machinery connected in use with the insured buildings, is not an addition within the terms of such an insurance policy. The court said that the privilege thereby given to make additions, alterations, and repairs refers manifestly to the property which is described in the policy, and cannot be read as intending to permit insurance to extend to additions when made to other property.

Compare with Arlington Co. v. Colonial Assur. Co. 180 N. Y. 337, 73 N. E. 34, which holds that a new building constructed after the policy was issued is an addition within the terms of a policy permitting the insured to make additions, alterations, and repairs, although it is a distinct building, separated from the insured buildings by a considerable distance, it, however, being connected with the boiler house by a tunnel or conduit about 5 feet in diameter, through which pass electric wires, steam pipes, water pipes, etc. The court said that if the words "additions, alterations, and repairs" referred solely to existing buildings upon the insured's plant, the new building damaged by fire would not be covered by the policy, citing Peoria Sugar Ref. Co. v. People's Ins. Co. 24 Fed. 773; Arlington Mfg. Co. v. Norwich Union F. Ins. Co. 46 C. C. A. 542, 107 Fed. 662, being two of the preceding cases, but added: "We entertain the view that a broader and more liberal construction of the provision was contemplated by the parties. . . . The word 'additions' embraced in the policy had reference to the additions to plaintiff's plant, and included new buildings constructed thereon, and when constructed they were included within the provisions of the policy." A. G. S.

jury of the question of estoppel, are of no importance.

The case is affirmed.

Hooker, Moore, and Stone, JJ., concurred with Bird, J.

Ostrander, Ch. J.,:

I think the terms of policy, interpreted in the light of the undisputed testimony concerning the situation of the property at the time the policy was issued, included both the brick and the frame structures. I therefore concur in affirming the judgment.

IOWA SUPREME COURT.

ELIZABETH FORSYTHE

v.

GEORGE KLUCKHOHN, Appt.

(— Iowa, —, 129 N. W. 739.)

Proximate cause — unmuzzled dog — injury to pedestrian.

Permitting a dog to run at large without a muzzle, contrary to law, is not the proximate cause of injury to a pedestrian who is tripped and injured by its running against him.

(February 7, 1911.)

Note. — Liability of owner for injuries caused by dog running against person.

In Sanders v. Teape, 51 L. T. N. S. 263, where the defendant's dog, apparently in a spirit of playfulness, jumped over the wall bounding the premises of its owner, and struck upon, and injured, a laborer working on adjoining premises, it was held that there was no liability, in the absence of proof of scienter, and the court seemed to regard the trespass as involuntary and of no effect.

A reference to Fraser v. Bell, 14 Rettie (Sc. Ct. Sess.) 811, is made on page 397 of Ingham on Animals, declaring such case to hold that where a dog leaped upon a porter, and caused him to drop a piece of coal on the plaintiff's foot, an action was maintainable, scienter having been alleged.

And it was held in Crowley v. Groonell, 73 Vt. 45, 55 L.R.A. 876, 87 Am. St. Rep. 690, 50 Atl. 546, that the fact that an assault committed by a dog in jumping upon a stranger and injuring him resulted merely from its mischievous or playful propensity, rather than from viciousness, would not absolve the owner from liability, if he knew of its disposition to commit such injuries, or knew enough of its habits to convince a man of ordinary prudence of its inclination to commit them.

In Hathaway v. Tinkham, 148 Mass. 85, 19 N. E. 18, involving an action for injuries 33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Plymouth County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for injury inflicted on plaintiff by defendant's dog, which was alleged to have been running at large unmuzzled, in violation of an ordinance. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Sammis & Bradley, for appellant:

The negligence, if any, of defendant in allowing his dog to run unmuzzled, was not the proximate cause of the injury, because the jury expressly found plaintiff was not injured as a result of an attack from defendant's dog.

Tingle v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 60 Iowa, 333, 14 N. W. 320; Walrod v. Webster County, 110 Iowa, 349, 47 L.R.A. 480, 81 N. W. 598; Sowles v. Moore, 65 Vt. 322, 21 L.R.A. 723, 26 Atl. 629; Stacy v. Knickerbocker Ice Co. 84 Wis. 614, 54 N. W. 1091.

Messrs. Nelson Miller and Struble & Struble, for appellee:

Appellants misconstrue the meaning of the ordinance, in order to secure a reversal of the case on the question of proximate cause.

Shipley v. Colclough, 81 Mich. 624, 21 Am. St. Rep. 546, 45 N. W. 1106.

to a boy by being thrown down when a dog jumped upon him, it was held that the statute providing that every owner of dogs should forfeit to every person injured thereby double the amount of damages sustained cast responsibility upon such owner, irrespective of whether the act of the dog was committed playfully or viciously.

In Jones v. Owen, 24 L. T. N. S. 587, it was held that an owner of greyhounds, who coupled them together with a rope, and permitted them to run upon the highway without being led or otherwise restrained, was properly found guilty of negligence rendering him liable to injuries to a pedestrian who was run into by them and thrown by the rope. It was pointed out that the court was not confronted with the question merely of allowing dogs on the highway without restraint, but of coupling them together, and failing to lead or guide them.

The case, Brogan v. Worton, 78 Sc. L. Rev. (Sher. Ct. Rep.) 162, is set out in Ingham on Animals, page 379, as holding that where the defendant, seeing a cat running past in a public street, called to a dog beside him to seize it, and the dog accordingly gave chase, and while doing so knocked down and injured a child, the former acted negligently and without due care for passers-by, and was liable in damages. Although it does not appear from the case as so set out that the defendant was the owner of the dog, such fact is of little importance, so far as the purposes of this

The question of proximate cause is a question for the jury.

Ward v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 97 Iowa, 50, 65 N. W. 999.

Any violation of a city ordinance constitutes negligence per se.

Healy v. Johnson, 127 Iowa, 221, 103 N. W. 92; Meier v. Shrunk, 79 Iowa, 17, 44 N. W. 209; Correll v. Burlington, C. R. & M. River R. Co. 38 Iowa, 120, 18 Am. Rep. 22.

Injuries done by animals need not necessarily be the result of their vicious character, to make the owner liable. Any injury committed in playfulness or as an accident, which could have been prevented, will make the owner liable.

Shipley v. Colclough, supra; Jewett v. Gage, 55 Me. 538, 92 Am. Dec. 615; Dickson v. McCoy, 39 N. Y. 400; Bott v. Pratt, 33 Minn. 323, 53 Am. Rep. 47, 23 N. W. 237; Card v. Ellsworth, 65 Me. 547, 20 Am. Rep. 722; Lake v. Milliken, 62 Me. 240, 16 Am. Rep. 456; 2 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 363; Cooley, Torts, 2d ed. 670; State, Evans, Prosecutor, v. McDermott, 49 N. J. L. 163, 60 Am. Rep. 602, 6 Atl. 653.

Ladd, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

In the afternoon of November 4, 1908, the plaintiff while walking along Fifth street in Le Mars, noticed the approach of two dogs from the opposite direction. She stepped aside to avoid them, but, according to her testimony, they seized her clothes, pulled her around, and caused her to fall. Other evidence tended to show that neither dog bit or took hold of her dress but that one of the dogs ran against her, causing her to lose her balance. The smaller of these was a yellow dog, and the other, a brindle, was a pup belonging to defendant. The jury, in answer to special interrogatories, found that the dogs neither attacked nor attempted to bite plaintiff. One seems to have been chasing the other, and the ground of recovery was that defendant had allowed his brindle pup to run at large without being muzzled, in violation of the ordinance of the city of Le Mars. That defendant did this, and therein was at fault, is not questioned, but something more was essential in order to justify the verdict; i. e., such fault must have been the proximate cause of the injury.

Can it be said that these dogs, in chasing one another or playing in the street, ran against plaintiff because of the omission of either to wear a muzzle? No evidence on the subject was offered, and, in the absence of any showing to that effect, we are not warranted in assuming that muzzling would have interfered with the dog's propensities to run and play with his associates. The omission of the muzzle seems to have been a mere incident or condition, and not in any sense the cause of the injury. But, say counsel, had defendant kept his unmuzzled dog from running at large, the accident would not have happened, and, in support of this position, rely on the language of the ordinance, which declares that "it shall be unlawful for any dog to be allowed to run at large within the limits of said city without being securely muzzled, and any owner of any dog who shall allow the same to run at large, or go beyond his or her immediate control, without being so muzzled, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and punished accordingly."

It will be observed that this did not prohibit dogs from running at large, or men from allowing them to do so, but denounced the act of allowing them to be at large "without being securely muzzled." The unlawful act, then, of the brindle pup, was not in being on the street, but in being there without wearing proper apparel, and the defendant's fault was in permitting such freedom. But unless this error of the dog and fault of the man had something to do with causing the injury, there should be no recovery. See Tingle v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 60 Iowa, 333, 14 N. W. 320; Tackett v. Taylor County, 123 Iowa, 149, 98 N. W. 730; Sowles v. Moore, 65 Vt. 322, 21 L.R.A. 723, 26 Atl. 629.

Plaintiff relies on Jewett v. Gage, 55 Me. 538, 92 Am. Dec. 615, where a hog suddenly arose from a gutter and frightened complainant's horse, and Shipley v. Colclough, 81 Mich. 624, 21 Am. St. Rep. 546, 45 N. W. 1106, where cattle running at large overturned the complainant's buggy, and other like decisions. See 2 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 363; Hardiman v. Wholley, note is concerned, for if one can be held responsible in damages for his affirmative act in setting a dog in motion to the injury of another, a fortiori the owner would be liable if he committed the same act.

A note upon the question of what scienter is necessary to charge an owner with liability for an injury inflicted by a dog, to the person or property of another, is appended to Emmons v. Stevane, 24 L.R.A. 33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

(N.S.) 458, and this note contains references at its close to several other notes upon kindred questions.

See, in addition to those just mentioned, the note to McClain v. Lewiston Interstate Fair & Racing Asso. 25 L.R.A. (N.S.) 691, on the question of scienter as a condition of liability for damages by a trespassing dog.

L. A. W.

172 Mass. 411, 70 Am. St. Rep. 292, 52 N. E. 518. But the owners in those cases were prohibited from allowing their animals to be at large unattended, and not as here, from permitting this, unless wearing safety appliances. The omission of the appliance did not contribute to the injury, and for this reason the fault of defendant in allowing his brindle pup on the street without the muzzle was not the proximate cause of the injury. State, Smith, Prosecutrix, v. Donohue, 49 N. J. L. 548, 60 Am. Rep. 652, 10 Atl. 150. See Sanders v. Teape, 51 L. T. N. S. 263.

A new trial should have been ordered.
Reversed.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

CHESAPEAKE & OHIO RAILWAY COMPANY, Appt.,

v.

M. D. SELSOR.

(142 Ky. 163, 134 S. W. 143.)

Carrier — drunken passenger — right to eject.

1. The conductor of a passenger train may refuse to receive as a passenger a person so far intoxicated as to affect his conduct.

Same — ejection — liability.

2. Train men have the right to remove from the train a person who has boarded it after the conductor has refused, because of his intoxicated condition, to receive him as a passenger, although he has a ticket entitling him to transportation.

(February 10, 1911.)

APPPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Lewis County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for alleged wrongful ejection of plaintiff from defendant's train. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Worthington, Cochran, & Browning for appellant.

Messrs. A. D. Cole and John E. Littleton for appellee.

Hobson, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

M. D. Selsor brought this suit against the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company, charging that he bought a ticket at Vanceburg, Kentucky, to go to South Portsmouth, Kentucky, on April 3, 1910; that he got on board the regular passenger train to go to South Portsmouth, and that the conductor stopped the train and ejected him from it. An answer was filed by the defendant, putting in issue the allegations of the petition, and pleading affirmatively facts to warrant his ejection from the train. On a hearing of the case, there was a verdict and a judgment in his favor for the sum of $200. The railroad company appeals.

The facts in the case are few and simple, and there is little conflict in the evidence. The plaintiff bought his ticket from the ticket agent, and, when the train came, started to get on the train. The conductor saw him, and told him not to get on the train; that he would not carry him. He then went up to the smoker and got on the car, when the brakeman saw him, stopped the train, and put him off. The conductor testified that he told him not to get on the train, that he could not carry him, because he was in a very drunken condition, and a young man was leading him. Other witnesses say that he was staggering drunk or helplessly intoxicated, while others say that he was drinking, but not boisterous, and was able to walk. On this evidence the court gave the jury these instructions:

"(1) The jury are instructed that if they shall believe from the evidence that the plaintiff, M. D. Selsor, purchased from the agent of defendant at Vanceburg, Kentucky, a ticket over the defendant's railroad from said point to Portsmouth, on April 3, 1910, and offered to become a passenger on defendant's train on the said day on the ticket so purchased, and the defendant refused to accept him as a passenger, and expelled him from the train after he had entered thereon for the purpose of becoming a passenger, then the law is for the plaintiff, and the jury will find for him such a sum of money as will fairly and reasonably compensate plaintiff for humiliation or mortification, if any, to which he may have been subjected by reason of his being removed from the train, not exceeding, however, the sum of $2,000, the amount claimed in the petition. But if the jury shall believe from the evidence as indicated in instruction No. 2, they will find for defendant, although they may believe the plaintiff was expelled from defendant's train or refused passage thereon as indicated in this instruction.

"(2) The jury are instructed that it is a public offense for any person, while riding on a passenger train in this state, to be drunk thereon, to the annoyance of other passengers on said train, and it is the right and duty of the conductor in charge of a train upon which such offense is committed, either to put the person so offending off the train, or to give notice of such offense to some peace officer at the first stopping place where any such peace officer may be, and it is the duty of such peace officer, when so notified by such conductor, to arrest such offender, and carry him to the most convenient magistrate of the county in which the arrest is made; and in expelling the offender from the train the conductor has the right to use such force as is reasonably necessary therefor, if the eviction be forcibly resisted. And if the jury shall believe from the evidence that the plaintiff, M. D. Selsor, at the time and upon the occasion when he was expelled from the defendant's passenger train, on April 3, 1910, mentioned in the evidence, if he was so expelled therefrom, was intoxicated to such an extent as to be annoyance or offensive to passengers on the train, then the defendant had the right to refuse to accept the plaintiff as a passenger on its train, and to expel him from the train if he got on same in such condition, and if plaintiff was in the condition aforesaid, and was expelled from defendant's train for that reason, the law is for the defendant, and the jury will so find."

Note. — As to duty of carrier to accept as a passenger one physically or mentally disabled, see note to Connors v. Cunard S. Co. 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 171.
33 L.R.A.(N.S.)

It is undisputed in the evidence that the conductor told the plaintiff not to get on the train, that he could not carry him, and that the plaintiff after he was so told by the conductor, in violation of the conductor's instructions, went upon the car. When he so went upon the car, although he had a ticket, he was a trespasser, if the conductor was right in refusing to carry him, and in this event he cannot recover anything for his ejection from the train. The carrier was not obliged to receive the plaintiff as a passenger on its train if he was drunk, although he had bought a ticket. Persons who are not in a proper condition to be received on the train may be refused admittance by the carrier. Section 806, Ky. Stat. (Russell's Stat. § 5350), applies to passengers who have been received on the train. It has no application to persons who present themselves to be received. The statute was intended for the protection of the carrier, and not to change the common-law rule as to what persons the carrier is bound to receive. The case of Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Crank, 128 Ky. 329, 16 L.R.A.(N.S.) 197, 108 S. W. 276 is not like this case. There the passenger was on the train. He had been accepted as a passenger, and was ejected from the train while on his journey. Section 806, Ky. Stat. is as follows: "If any person whilst riding on a passenger or other train shall, in the hearing or presence of other passengers, and to their annoyance, use or utter obscene or profane language, or behave in a boisterous or riotous manner, or obtain, or attempt to obtain, money or property from any passenger by any game or device, he shall be fined for each offense not less than twenty-five nor more than one hundred dollars, or imprisoned in the county jail not less than ten or more than fifty days, or both so fined and imprisoned; and it shall be the duty of the conductor in charge of any train upon which there is a person who has violated the provisions of this section, either to put such person off the train, or to give notice of such violation to some peace officer at the first stopping place where any such officer may be." The statute was applicable in the Crank Case, but it has no application here. The question here is simply: Did the conductor have the right to refuse to receive the plaintiff as a passenger on the train? Louisville & E. R. Co. v. McNally, 31 Ky. L. Rep. 1357, 105 S. W. 124, is on all fours with this case. There it was held that the court should instruct the jury that if the plaintiff, when he offered to get on the train, was so far intoxicated as to affect his conduct, the conductor had a right to refuse to receive him on the car, and the jury should find for the defendant. In lieu of the instructions given, the court should have instructed the jury as above indicated.

33 L.R.A.(N.S.)

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

MICHIGAN SUPREME COURT.

MARY C. PEGG

v.

JOHN PEGG et al., Appts.

(— Mich. —, 130 N. W. 617.)

Entirety — conveyance by husband to wife.

A man cannot convey to his wife a half interest in his estate so as to create a tenancy by entireties in the whole estate, and cause his remaining half to pass to her rather than to his heirs, upon his death.

(March 31, 1911.)

Note. — Creation of tenancy by entireties by conveyance, to one spouse only, of interest in property of which the other already owns the whole or a part.

Aside from any criticism to which the decision reported may be subjected, as permitting a technical objection to override the grantor's expressed intention, its cor-

A PPEAL by defendants from an order of the Circuit Court for Grand Traverse County, in chancery, overruling a demurrer to a bill filed for the construction of a deed. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Covell & Cross, for appellants:

In construing a deed, the intention in the minds of the parties is not what is sought, but the intent as expressed by the language used.

Cameron v. Sexton, 110 Ill. App. 381; Moran v. Lezotte, 54 Mich. 83, 19 N. W. 757; Schulz v. Brohl, 116 Mich. 603, 74 N. W. 1012.

No estate can pass by deed that is not embraced plainly in the words of grant.

Ryan v. Wilson, 9 Mich. 262; Plummer

v. Gould, 92 Mich. 6, 31 Am. St. Rep. 567, 52 N. W. 146; Munro v. Meech, 94 Mich. 596, 54 N. W. 290.

Where there is an absolute or unlimited conveyance of property, a subsequent clause expressing a wish, desire, or direction for its disposition after the death of the grantee will not defeat the conveyance, nor limit the extent of the interest conveyed.

Hubbard v. Goin, 70 C. C. A. 320, 137 Fed. 828.

The question of the construction of a deed set up in full in the bill of complaint may be raised by demurrer.

Schulz v. Brohl, 116 Mich. 603, 74 N. W. 1012.

Messrs. Pratt & Davis, for appellee:

The object to be arrived at by the court

rectness obviously depends upon the validity of the premises therein, that the unities of time, title, interest, and possession must be observed in creating a tenancy by the entirety. This seems, in view of the authorities cited, to rest upon the assumption that tenancy by entirety is a species of joint estate, and so can be created only as joint estates are created. While it is often loosely spoken of as a sort of joint estate having peculiar characteristics, the fact remains that the two have more points of difference than of resemblance. Besides the familiar distinction, that while joint tenants are seised per my et per tout, tenants by the entirety are seised per tout, and not per my, so that the survivor does not take by accruer, but by virtue of the original title, tenancy by the entirety differs from joint tenancy in that it may not be terminated by alienation by one without the consent of the other, and in that it cannot be partitioned. Authorities differ as to whether it is a joint estate or not. A discussion of the question may be found in Ram, Tenures, § 25, the author of which contends that tenants by the entirety are joint tenants, although he admits that such authorities as Blackstone and Preston are to the contrary.

But if tenancy by the entirety cannot be regarded as a kind of joint tenancy, the authority for the supposition that the four unities must be observed in its creation fails, leaving it simply a matter of conjecture. An investigation of the question has failed to show whether a seisin per tout is a requisite to its creation, or is merely an incident of the estate resulting from the legal identity of husband and wife.

Although the relationship of husband and wife is essential to its creation, it is not a necessary sequence of the relation. Thus, it is settled by authority running back to the earliest times that persons holding as cotenants before their marriage will not, by virtue of their marriage, become tenants by the entirety. See Co. Litt. 187; Washburn, Real Prop. § 911; Greenleaf's Cruise, Real Prop. title 18, ¶ 50; Moody v. Moody, 2 Ambl. 649; McDermott v. French, 33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

15 N. J. Eq. 80; Ames v. Norman, 4 Sneed, 683, 70 Am. Dec. 269.

So, tenancy by the entirety is not a necessary consequence of the acquisition by a husband of title after marriage, pursuant to an antenuptial agreement that the husband and wife should hold and own the estate jointly and equally, since the right of the parties originated before marriage. Holt v. Wilson, 75 Ala. 58.

And it is equally well settled that a husband and wife may by express words be made tenants in common by gift to them during coverture. See, inter alia, 2 Bl. Com. 182, Sharswood's note; 4 Kent, Com. 363; 1 Preston, Estates, 132.

It has accordingly been held that an estate by the entirety does not result from a conveyance to the wife alone by the husband's cotenant. Banzer v. Banzer, 10 Misc. 24, 30 N. Y. Supp. 803, affirmed on other grounds in 11 Misc. 310, 32 N. Y. Supp. 266, which is affirmed in 156 N. Y. 429, 51 N. E. 291; Isley v. Sellars, 153 N. C. 374, 69 S. E. 279; Tindell v. Tindell, — Tenn. —, 37 S. W. 1105; in the latter of which cases it is said to be essential to a creation of tenancy by the entirety that the title or interest devolve upon the husband and wife at the same time and during coverture.

Another case which lends support to the theory upon which PEGG v. PEGG is decided is American Nat. Bank v. Taylor, — Va. —, 70 S. E. 534. There a father conveyed certain realty to his son, reserving a life use to himself and his wife by a proviso stating that the conveyance was made on the distinct understanding that the grantor and his wife were to remain on the land and enjoy the rents and profits thereof for and during the period of their natural lives. It is said: "If it be held that the wife, although no party to the deed (§ 2415 of the Code [Code 1904, p. 1178]), took an estate for life in one undivided moiety of the land, and the husband excepted from the operation of the deed a life estate for himself in the other moiety, then there would be no survivorship, for the husband and wife would not be either joint tenants or tenants in construing deeds or other contracts is to ascertain clearly the intention of the parties.

Ford v. Daniells, 71 Mich. 78, 38 N. W. 708; Wilson v. Terry, 130 Mich. 73, 89 N. W. 566; Bassett v. Budlong, 77 Mich. 338, 18 Am. St. Rep. 404, 43 N. W. 984; Bodine v. Arthur, 91 Ky. 53, 34 Am. St. Rep. 162, 14 S. W. 904; Meacham v. Blaess, 141 Mich. 261, 104 N. W. 579; Powers v. Hibbard, 114 Mich. 533, 72 N. W. 339.

Bird, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The bill of complaint in this cause calls for the construction of a deed made by Davis Pegg to Mary C. Pegg, the complainant. Davis Pegg was the husband of complainant, and in the year 1897 he conveyed to her, by warranty deed in the usual form, an undivided one-half interest in and to the following described premises: "The west half (W. $\frac{1}{2}$) of the southeast quarter (S. E. $\frac{1}{4}$) of section three (3), and by entireties, for their estate would be lacking in unity of title, unity of time, and unity of possession. 2 Minor Inst. 4th ed. p. —, and authorities cited; 2 Minor, Real. Prop. § 880. The life estate remaining in the husband was from his vendor, while that of the wife was acquired from him, or from him and his son, both of whom signed the deed creating her estate."

But see McRoberts v. Copeland, 85 Tenn. 211, 2 S. W. 33, where the grantor conveyed lands by deed in which his wife joined, the habendum clause of which contained the words, "subject alone to our life estate." It was held that the exception or reservation of the life estate inured, upon the death of the grantor, to his wife in her own right as survivor, by operation of law; and Tindell v. Tindell, supra, in which, in commenting upon this case, it is said that, the life estate having been created at the same time in the husband and wife, the unities were observed.

In Bassett v. Budlong, 77 Mich. 338, 18 Am. St. Rep. 404, 43 N. W. 984, where the owner in fee of certain premises executed a quitclaim deed thereof to his wife, containing a proviso subjecting it to the express conditions and reservations that the grantee should not at any time during the lifetime of the grantor convey or encumber any part of the premises without the written assent or joinder of the grantor, and that, in case of the decease of the grantee at any time before the decease of the grantor, then the premises should forthwith revert to the grantor, it was held that the instrument would be construed so as to carry out the intent of the parties making it, that the survivor should take the fee; although it was suggested that the object might better have been accomplished by a conveyance to a third party, and a reconveyance to the husband and wife jointly.

33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

the west half (W. $\frac{1}{2}$) of the northeast quarter (N. E. $\frac{1}{4}$) of section 10 (10), in Grand Traverse county." In the deed, between the granting and the habendum clauses, is inserted the following clause: "The object and purpose of this deed is to convey to said second party such an interest in said land that the parties hereto will have an estate in entirety, and that the same shall survive and vest in the survivor as a full and complete estate." The deed was recorded in 1901, and in 1902 Davis Pegg died. Complainant is in possession of the premises, and claims title thereto on the theory that she and her husband owned the premises as tenants by entirety, and, she being the survivor, she takes the whole. It is claimed by the defendants, who are children and grandchildren of Davis Pegg, that Davis Pegg and complainant were the owners of the premises as tenants in common, and that upon his decease an undivided one half of the premises descended to them. The defendants demurred to the

In Saxon v. Saxon, 46 Misc. 202, 93 N. Y. Supp. 191, it was held that tenancy by the entireties was not created by a conveyance made by a husband to himself and his wife, under a statute enabling husband and wife to convey to each other without the intervention of a third person, since such statute abrogates in respect of such conveyance the rule of unity which at common law gave to a conveyance to husband and wife the effect of vesting the estate by the entireties in them.

The language of the first clause of a deed, describing the grantees as "John F. Saxon and Mary B. Saxon, his wife, for their joint lives, and upon the death of either, the survivor to be absolute owner of the second part," is ineffectual to create an estate by the entireties where the subsequent words of conveyance are not apt or operative for that purpose, but only for a simple conveyance; since, although it is true that the whole deed must be read for the intention, nevertheless no effect can be given to any intention in a conveyance or will which does not contain words adequate to express and carry it out; and since, even if the words quoted should be given the same effect as they would receive if in the premises or conveying clause, or in the habendum, they do not create an estate by the entireties, but only a joint tenancy. Ibid.

As to the effect upon the character of an estate as one by entireties under a conveyance to both spouses, of the fact that one of them already had an estate in the land, see note to Sprinkle v. Spainhour, 25 L.R.A. (N.S.) 167.

As to tenancy by entireties generally, see note to Hiles v. Fisher, 30 L.R.A. 305.

E. S. O.

bill, and the trial court made an order overruling it, and they have appealed from that order.

Davis Pegg conveyed an undivided one-half interest in said premises to complainant. He retained an undivided one half interest therein. After this was done, they had distinct titles, and were therefore tenants in common. The title remained that way until Davis Pegg died. The question is, then: What became of his undivided half? Ordinarily, it would descend to his heirs, the defendants; and it did so descend, unless the clause which was inserted carried it in a different direction. Complainant contends that it did not so descend, because she and her husband owned the premises as tenants by the entirety, and were made such by said deed, and that now, as survivor of her husband, she is entitled to the whole of said premises. In order to own the whole, as survivor, she would have to be seised of the whole before his death. Whatever vested in her as survivor must have been owned by both her and her husband before his death, and each must have been seised of the whole. As neither one was seised of the whole, but both held by distinct titles, they could not have been tenants by the entirety. Neither were they tenants by entirety of the undivided half conveyed to her, because Davis Pegg reserved no interest in the undivided half he conveyed to complainant. The deed as a whole cannot be construed as creating a tenancy by entirety, because the law was not followed in creating it. At the common law, the unities of time, title, interest, and possession had to be observed in creating such an estate. Bl. Com. bk. 2, p. 182; 1 Washb. Real Prop. 6th ed. p. 529. See suggestion in Bassett v. Budlong, 77 Mich. 338, 18 Am. St. Rep. 404, 43 N. W. 984.

The common law has remained unchanged in this respect, and is now in force. In the attempt to create an estate by entirety, in the case under consideration, neither the unity of time nor title was observed. The estate was not created by one and the same act; neither did it vest in them at one and the same time. If the clause inserted can be said to be a part of the habendum of the deed, as is argued, then that part of the habendum must fail, on the ground that it seeks to enlarge an estate in common, which is granted, into an estate of entirety, without complying with the rules of law for the creation of such an estate. By reason of these considerations, the deed must be read as though the "clause" had been omitted. The deed created a tenancy in common between complainant and her husband, and upon his decease his undivided one half of the premises descended to his heirs.

The order of the trial court overruling defendants' demurrer will be vacated and set aside, and an order entered sustaining the demurrer.

Ostrander, Ch. J., and Hooker, Moore, and McAlvay, JJ., concurred in the result.

NORTH CAROLINA SUPREME COURT.

JAMES EXUM, Admr., etc., of Paul Exum, Deceased, Appt.,

v.

ATLANTIC COAST LINE RAILROAD COMPANY.

(154 N. C. 408, 70 S. E. 845.)

Railroad — killing person on track — last clear chance.

A railroad company is not liable for the death of an employee killed while walking along its track to his work, even though he bears to it the relation of licensee, if he was in full possession of his faculties and there is no reason why he could not have stepped off the track up to the last moment, although the engineer was negligent in failing to keep a lookout and to see signals which attempted to warn him of the employee's danger, since his negligence is not the proximate cause of the injury.

(Clark, Ch. J., dissents.)

(March 29, 1911.)

Note. — The decision in this case denying the applicability of the doctrine of last clear chance upon the ground that the negligence of the deceased, he being in full possession of his faculties, continued until the instant of the impact, and was, therefore, at least, concurrent with, if not subsequent to, the negligence of the engineer, assuming that the latter was negligent at all, is, as shown in the note to Southern R. Co. v. Bailey, 27 L.R.A. (N.S.) 379, and numerous other notes in this series therein referred to, in accord with the trend of the cases where the negligence chargeable against the defendant consists of the failure to discover the danger, and not in the omission of any precautions after the discovery thereof.

And see to the same effect the later case of Hammers v. Colorado Southern, N. O. & P. R. Co. — La. —, — L.R.A. (N.S.) —, 55 So. 4. This limitation of the doctrine is also recognized in the later case of Wilson v. Illinois C. R. Co. — Iowa —, — L.R.A. (N.S.) —, 129 N. W. 340, but was held not to defeat the application of the doctrine in that case because there was sufficient evidence to show that the engineer, APPPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court for Edgecombe County sustaining a motion for nonsuit in an action brought to recover damages for the alleged negligent killing of plaintiff's intestate. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Gilliam & Bassett for appellant.

Messrs. John L. Bridgers and F. S. Spruill, for appellee:

Plaintiff carelessly and negligently took the route which was beset with manifest danger, and the defendant was thereby absolved from liability for the resulting injury.

McAdoo v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 105 N. C. 153, 11 S. E. 316; Neal v. Carolina C. R. Co. 126 N. C. 638, 49 L.R.A. 684, 36 S. E. 117; Bessent v. Southern R. Co. 132 N. C. 934, 44 S. E. 648; Pharr v. Southern R. Co. 133 N. C. 615, 45 S. E. 1021; Allen v. Atlanta & C. Air Line R. Co. 141 N. C. 340, 53 S. E. 866; Crenshaw v. Asheville & B. Street R. & Transp. Co. 144 N. C. 325, 56 S. E. 945; Royster v. Southern R. Co. 147 N. C. 347, 61 S. E. 179; Parker v. Wilmington & W. R. Co. 86 N. C. 222.

Brown, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The evidence in this case was all introduced by the plaintiff, and in its most favorable aspect for him tends to prove these facts: The intestate, Paul Exum, was an employee of defendant in its shops at South Rocky Mount, a man of sound mind, about thirty four years old, and with no bodily infirmity. On the morning of February 1, 1907, the intestate was walking south on main line track of defendant, going from North Rocky Mount about a mile to South Rocky Mount to his work. The regular "shop train" of defendant, used to carry employees at the same hour every morning, had left North Rocky Mount on its regular run for South Rocky Mount and was using the main line track, going in same direction at from 12 to 15 miles per hour. It ran over the intestate and killed him. At the time of the casualty, the intestate was in the full possession of his faculties, walking briskly on main line track. There was nothing unusual about his appearance, except that he appeared to plaintiff's witness Thorp to be looking down on the track. There are half a dozen tracks between North and South Rocky Mount, with spaces of 6 feet between them, which spaces are used by pedestrians and bicyclists. The tracks are in constant use by all kinds of trains and engines. The evidence discloses nothing about the intestate to indicate to the engineer of the shop train other than that he would step off the track at any moment and let him pass. The intestate was an employee of defendant at its South Rocky Mount shops, and must have been familiar with the constant passage of trains over these tracks, and especially with the schedule of the shop train.

It must be admitted that the intestate was entirely out of his place walking on a main line track under the circumstances and conditions disclosed by the evidence. He should have used the established walk ways between the tracks, as witness Thorp was doing, or else he should have taken the shop train provided by defendant for its employees, who resided in North Rocky Mount. That the intestate was guilty of great carelessness and negligence in failing to use his faculties and keep a vigilant lookout for engines while on the railroad track is established by a multitude of decisions of this court, over thirty five in number. Coleman v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 153 N. C. 325, 69 S. E. 251. In referring to this by the exercise of proper care after he discovered the decedent's danger, could have prevented the accident. This is in accordance with the distinction suggested in the note to Dyerson v. Union P. R. Co. 7 L.R.A. (N.S.) 132.

In this view the question under what circumstances the negligence of the person injured will be deemed to have culminated and ceased prior to the injury becomes important. The effect of voluntary intoxication on that question is the subject of a note to Little Rock R. & Electric Co. v. Billings, 31 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1031.

It should be observed that this limitation of the doctrine of last clear chance if accepted will defeat a recovery even upon the assumption that the defendant owed the person injured a duty the performance of which would have revealed his presence and danger in time to have enabled the defendant by the exercise of proper care to have averted the accident, though according to the trend of authority it will not defeat a recovery if the negligence on the part of the defendant consisted in the failure to exercise due care after the presence and danger of the person were actually discovered. Of course, if for any reason the defendant can be acquitted of negligence altogether,—for example, if it be assumed that the defendant owed no duty to keep a lookout for the person injured, or if his presence had been discovered the defendant could properly have assumed that he would leave the place of danger in time to avoid the accident,—there is no foundation whatever for the defendant's liability, and no occasion on its part to invoke the doctrine of contributory negligence, and therefore no opportunity on the plaintiff's part to invoke the doctrine of last clear chance. G. H. P.

rule of law in the case of Cooper v. North Carolina R. Co. 140 N. C. 212, 3 L.R.A. (N.S.) 391, 52 S. E. 932, 6 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 71. Mr. Justice Hoke well says: "This rule is so just in itself and so generally enforced as controlling, that citation of authority is hardly required." The rule applies to those who cross the railroad tracks, and with equal, if not greater, force to those who walk up and down them. It is immaterial whether we consider the intestate in the light of a trespasser or licensee; the same obligation to look, listen, and to exercise vigilance rested upon him.

This court has held uniformly that "even where it is conceded that one is not a trespasser . . . in using the track as a foot-way from a foundry to his house, it behooves him to be still more watchful. The license to use does not carry with it the right to obstruct the road and impede the passage of trains. A railroad company has the right to the use of its track, and its servants are justified in assuming that a human being who has the use of all his senses will step off the track before a train reaches him." McAdoo v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 105 N. C. 153, 11 S. E. 320; Parker v. Wilmington & W. R. Co. 86 N. C. 221; Meredith v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 108 N. C. 616, 13 S. E. 137; Norwood v. Raleigh & G. R. Co. 111 N. C. 236, 16 S. E. 4; High v. Carolina C. R. Co. 112 N. C. 385, 17 S. E. 79. In Neal v. Carolina C. R. Co. 126 N. C. 638, 49 L.R.A. 684, 36 S. E. 118, this court said: "If plaintiff's intestate was walking upon defendant's road, in open daylight, on a straight piece of road, where he could have seen defendant's train for 150 yards, and was run over and injured, he was guilty of negligence; and, although the defendant may have also been guilty of negligence in running its train at a greater rate of speed than was allowed by the town ordinance, or in not ringing its bell as required by said ordinance, and in not keeping a lookout by its engineer, as it should have done, yet the injury would be attributed to the negligence of the plaintiff's intestate."

Speaking of the principle involved in the case determining the injured party's negligence, the court says: "According to the principle declared in all of them, the question of liability is not to be solved by any reference to what the defendant may have done or omitted to do, but by the conduct of the plaintiff; and if the latter would not see when he could see, or would not hear when he could hear, and remained on the track, in reckless disregard of his own safety, the law adjudges any injuries he may have received to be the result of his own carelessness." Bessent v. Southern R. Co. 132 N. C. 940, 44 S. E. 650; Pharr v.

Southern R. Co. 133 N. C. 615, 45 S. E. 1021, approving Neal's Case and Bessent's; Allen v. Atlanta & C. Air Line R. Co. 141 N. C. 340, 53 S. E. 867; Crenshaw v. Asheville & B. Street R. & Transp. Co. 144 N. C. 325, 56 S. E. 945; Royster v. Southern R. Co. 147 N. C. 347, 61 S. E. 179. In Syme v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 113 N. C. 558, 18 S. E. 114, it is held that "when a person is injured while walking on a railroad track by an engine that he might have seen by looking, the law . . . imputes the injury to his own negligence," and that "the engineer was justified in assuming that intestate had looked, had notice of his approach, and would clear the track in ample time to save himself from harm."

In the recent case of Beach v. Southern R. Co. 148 N. C. 153, 61 S. E. 664, this subject is discussed elaborately by Mr. Justice Walker, and all the cases cited and reviewed.

The plaintiff seeks to take this case out of the established rule by attempting to prove that the engineer of the shop train could have avoided killing the intestate by exercising reasonable care, and failed to do so. This condition is based upon the testimony of Thorp, who says: "I was between the last western track and the eastern track when I saw Exum, and he was walking along with his head down, walking very brisk, with a tin bucket on his arm." Thorp says he saw the shop train approaching the intestate, and, when it was 150 feet from Exum, "I commenced to wave at him and shout. Ran 20 or 25 feet towards him, waving my hat at him and hallooing to him. He seemed to be walking right along and did not notice me. Then I commenced waving train down and pointing at the track. I did not succeed in attracting anybody's attention." Thorp further states that there was nothing between him and Exum, or between him and the train, to obstruct the view.

We fail to see anything in this evidence to take this case out of the rule laid down in the cases cited. It is not even suggested, much less contended, that the engineer purposely and wilfully ran down and killed his coemployee. There is no evidence whatever that the engineer actually saw Thorp's signals in time to stop, or that he saw them at all. But plaintiff contends that it was the engineer's duty to see them. The engineer's duty was to keep a vigilant lookout in front of him and especially along the track over which he was running. It was no more the duty of the engineer to see Thorp's signals than it was the duty of the intestate. It was as much incumbent upon him to keep a sharp lookout as upon the engineer. In fact, had the engineer seen Thorp's signals, he had a right to assume up to the last moment that the intestate also saw them, and that he would step off the track out of harm's way. The intestate was a sound man, with no apparent infirmity, walking briskly along ahead of a train with the uses and schedule of which he was necessarily familiar. The engineer had every reason to believe that such a man was exercising vigilance and would get out of the way and let him pass.

In this class of cases it will be found generally that, where the company has been held liable, it is in cases where the party injured was not upon equal chances with the engineer to avoid the injury, where there was something suggesting the injured party's disadvantage or disability, as where the party injured is lying on a railroad track apparently drunk or asleep, or is on a bridge or trestle where he cannot escape, or cannot do so without great danger. In such cases, if the engineer saw the party injured, or by proper diligence could have seen him, the company is held liable for the engineer's negligence. Neal v. Carolina C. R. Co. 126 N. C. 639, 49 L.R.A. 684, 36 S. E. 117. See also Norwood v. Raleigh & G. R. Co. 111 N. C. 236, 16 S. E. 4; High v. Carolina C. R. Co. 112 N. C. 385, 17 S. E. 79; McAdoo v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 105 N. C. 153, 11 S. E. 320.

Assuming, however, that the engineer was negligent as well as the intestate, the negligence of both is concurrent, and, as said by Mr. Justice Allen in Harvell v. Weldon Lumber Co. — N. C. —, 70 S. E. 389: "It is well settled that, when the plaintiff and defendant are both negligent, and the negligence of both concur and continue to the time of the injury, that the negligence of the defendant is not in the legal sense proximate."

As lately held by a unanimous court in Beach's Case, supra, when a person is injured upon a railroad track, which injury could have been avoided by him by looking and exercising proper vigilance, the negligence of such person in this respect is concurrent, and damages are not by him recoverable on that account.

Upon an unbroken line of authorities, we are of opinion his Honor properly sustained the motion to nonsuit.

Affirmed.

Hoke, J., concurring:

If it be conceded that the defendant in this case was negligent, I concur in the decision, for the reason that, accepting all of plaintiff's evidence as true, and taking every permissible inference arising from the entire testimony and which makes for his claim as established, it appears that, when he was killed, the intestate was voluntarily walking along the main line of defendant's track, at a time and place where a train might be expected any moment, in broad daylight, in the full possession of his faculties, and with nothing to restrain or hinder his movements, without paying the slightest attention either to his placing or surroundings. There is nothing, therefore, to qualify the obligation that was upon him to be careful of his own safety, and to my mind it presents a typical case of contributory negligence, negligence concurring at the very time of the impact, and recovery by plaintiff is therefore properly denied.

Clark, Ch. J., dissenting:

The plaintiff's intestate was killed by the defendant's engine. The bare fact that the intestate was walking on the track did not, as a matter of law, give the defendant the right to kill him. The court ought not to hold as a matter of law that a killing under such circumstances is necessarily rightful. Whether it is excusable or not is a matter which depends upon the circumstances of the case and is an inference to be drawn by the jury, for, notwithstanding the intestate's negligence (if he was negligent under the circumstances of this case in walking upon the track), if the defendant's engineer with a due regard to human life and by keeping a proper lookout could have avoided killing the deceased, it was incumbent upon the defendant to have done so, and his failure to do so was the proximate cause of the death of plaintiff's intestate.

There are many circumstances in this case which require that the question of proximate cause should have been left to the jury, and that the judge should not by a nonsuit have adjudged that the defendant had a right as a matter of law to kill the deceased. The deceased, an employee of the defendant, on his way from his work, was walking, according to the custom of employees at that place, along the track on his way home. He was walking along with his head down, his back to the engine, and evidently oblivious to its approach. The track was straight, and where the deceased was walking was within the town limits of Rocky Mount. The evidence is that the track was "customarily" used by the employees of the defendant corporation, and by the general public as well, without objection, as a walk way between Rocky Mount and South Rocky Mount, to the same extent as if it were a public street. The defendant's engine was running at from 12 to 15 miles per hour, an excessive speed within town limits, and, though it had passed over many crossing places where street after street crossed the track, it blew no signal at any of them. The train was a shop train, and was not running on its regular track. The deceased was walking on the main track on which no train was scheduled to pass at that hour. There was evidence tending to show that a passing freight train on another track prevented the intestate from hearing the approaching train behind him. It was the duty of the engineer to have kept an efficient lookout in front of him, and with proper care he could have seen that the deceased was pre-occupied, with his back turned to the approaching engine, and looking down on the track. The engineer knew that this track was customarily used by the public, that the deceased was walking on a track on which no engine was scheduled to pass at that hour, that he himself was running on an unusual track for his engine, and, more than this, his attention was specially called to the fact that the deceased was inadvertent to the approach of his train by the gestures and signal of the witness Thorp, who was walking by the side of that track some 200 feet in front of the engine and facing it, who saw the danger of the deceased was in, and who ran forward waving his arms and making signals to the engineer. The engineer should have seen the oblivious condition of the deceased as quickly as Thorp, even if the latter had made no signals. While ordinarily an engineer seeing a man walking on the track may expect him to get off when he blows his whistle, here the engineer neither blew his whistle nor rang his bell.

All the above facts combined, together with the excessive speed of the engine, certainly required some action on the part of the engineer. It was not necessary for him to stop his engine, but he should at least have blown his whistle or rung his bell. Stanley v. Durham & N. R. Co. 120 N. C. 514, 27 S. E. 27, in which it was held that "a person walking on a railroad track . . . has a right to suppose that the railroad company would take care to provide against injuring pedestrians by the use of proper lights and signals," "and to feel secure in acting upon that supposition." Had the engineer blown his whistle after he saw Thorp's signals,—and he should have seen them with a proper lookout when 150 feet from the deceased,—the deceased would have been awakened from his reverie and been given notice to step off the track. A human life should be at least worth the trouble of the engineer raising his hand to pull the cord that sounds the whistle. It ought not to be held as a matter of law that in all cases whatever a man forfeits his life by the mere fact that he walks on a railroad track, and that in such cases that railroad company may rightfully kill him, like a rat caught in a box.

33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

It is not contended by the plaintiff that his intestate was entirely without negligence in walking on the track, though to do so at that point was permissive and customary. But notwithstanding that negligence, if the engineer could have prevented killing the deceased by the exercise of proper care on his part, then the proximate cause was the negligence of the defendant, and the killing of the deceased was not rightful as a matter of law, but was wrongful as a matter both of fact and of law. If the engine had not been running at an excessive speed, if the whistle had been blown at each crossing, if the train had been running on its rightful track, and if the engineer had kept a proper lookout so that he would have seen that the deceased was oblivious to the approach of the engine from the rear, which he could not hear on account of the noise made by the freight train passing on another track, and if he had taken notice of the frantic gestures of the witness Thorp immediately in his front calling attention to the jeopardy of the deceased, and if under these circumstances a blast of the whistle would have given the deceased notice in time of the approach of the fatal train, then the proximate cause of the death on the actual facts was the negligence of the defendant's engineer. At least these facts should have been submitted to the jury.

In Arrowwood v. South Carolina & G. Extension R. Co. 126 N. C. 630, 36 S. E. 152, the court held that, where the public are in the habit of using the railroad track as a pass way, then the defendant should exercise greater care, move its trains at a lower speed, and keep a keener lookout in front, than in going along a straight track in an open country, and that "the amount of care depends upon the circumstance in each case," and sustained the finding that, "notwithstanding the negligence of the plaintiff's intestate, could the defendant by the exercise of ordinary care have avoided the killing of the intestate."

In Edwards v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 129 N. C. 81, 39 S. E. 730, it was held that where the train was passing, as here, through a town at an excessive speed, this was evidence of negligence on the part of the defendant, and should be submitted to the jury on the issue of proximate cause. In Fulp v. Roanoke & S. R. Co. 120 N. C. 525, 27 S. E. 74, the court held that the failure to sound a whistle at a crossing was evidence of proximate cause where the deceased was killed along the track beyond the crossing. In that case Furches, J., said: "Though the intestate may have been guilty of negligence by going on the defendant's road, whether drunk or sober, it was still the duty of the defendant's engineer to be in his place, on the lookout, and if he saw the intestate, or could by due diligence have seen him, in time to stop the train and save the life of the intestate, it was his duty to do so, and if he did not he was guilty of negligence, . . . and the defendant would be liable." He further said that it was error for the judge to charge: "If the intestate's failure to note approaching trains was in whole or in part because he was drunk, and was run over and killed in consequence, this would be contributory negligence, and the jury should answer the second issue, 'Yes.' This puts the whole case upon the intestate's being drunk, and, if this charge were sustained, it would be a free license to every railroad company in the state to run over and kill every drunken man that got on its road, whether the conductor saw him or not,—a doctrine it seems to us too shocking to be insisted upon."

In Powell v. Southern R. Co. 125 N. C. 374, 34 S. E. 530, it was held, citing Fulp v. Roanoke & S. R. Co. supra, and many other cases, that it was negligence not to sound the whistle at a public crossing when the person killed was on the track and the whistle might have given him notice to get off. That case has been cited by many others since. See annotated ed. In Morrow v. Southern R. Co. 147 N. C. 623, 16 L.R.A.(N.S.) 642, 61 S. E. 621, Mr. Justice Walker held: "The failure of the employees of a railroad company to give crossing signals at a public crossing does not constitute negligence per se, when the injury complained of occurred to a pedestrian while using the track at a different place, but it is only evidence of negligence under certain conditions." If evidence of negligence, it should have been submitted to the jury to say whether it was sufficient under the conditions of this case. This last quotation was cited by Mr. Justice Hoke in Norris v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 152 N. C. 510, 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1069, 67 S. E. 1020, who said: "Where a person is on the track, at a place where travelers are habitually accustomed to use the same for a walkway, they have a right to rely to some extent and under some conditions upon the signals and warnings to be given by trains at public crossings and other points where such signals are usually and ordinarily required, and that a failure on the part of the company's agents and employees operating its train to give proper signals at such points is ordinarily evidence of negligence, and, where such failure is the proximate cause of an injury, it is, under some circumstances, evidence from which actionable negligence may be inferred,—citing Randall v. 33 L.R.A.(N.S.)

Richmond & D. R. Co. 104 N. C. 410, 10 S. E. 691, where the plaintiff was driving his oxen along the road near the track, and by reason of the whistle not being sounded at the crossing he did not turn out, and the train so frightened his oxen that they got upon the track and were killed.

Upon the authorities, it is clear beyond controversy that the intestate was a licensee, and not a trespasser, and, though he was guilty of negligence, if those in charge of the train could with proper care have prevented the injury by blowing the signals or by running the train at a moderate speed, the defendant is liable. The matter is fully discussed in Teakle v. San Pedro, L. A. & S. L. R. Co. 32 Utah at page 288, 90 Pac. at page 407 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 486, at page 491, with full citation of authorities, which are thus summed up: "While trainmen are not usually bound to foresee or watch for the wrongful presence of any person upon the track, even where it is open to an adjoining highway, . . . yet, if experience has shown that at certain points persons are constantly thus entering upon the track . . . such persons, if injured as the proximate result of the trainmen's failure to use ordinary care to keep watch for them, may recover damages if the trainmen could have seen them without difficulty, had they kept a reasonable watch, even though in fact they did not see them. Especially should this rule be applied where the railroad company has acquiesced in the use thus made of its property." It is further said that in such cases the duty is "imposed upon the train operatives with respect to observing a reasonable lookout in the direction of the moving train, the extent of which it is not for us to say, but is to be determined by the triers of fact under all the circumstances of the case." The citations of authority in this case are full, and the reasoning is convincing and just.

In Williamson v. Southern R. Co. 104 Va. 146, 70 L.R.A. 1007, 113 Am. St. Rep. 1032, 51 S. E. 195, it is held: "If the right of way of a railroad corporation at a particular point has long been in use as a walk way, and this is well known to the company, it is under the duty of using reasonable care to discover, and not to injure, persons whom it might reasonably expect to be on its tracks at that point," citing Blankenship v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 94 Va. 449, 27 S. E. 20; Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Rodgers, 100 Va. 324, 41 S. E. 732.

In Troy v. Cape Fear & Y. Valley R. Co. 99 N. C. 298, 6 Am. St. Rep. 521, 6 S. E. 77, it is held that walking on the track is not in itself such contributory negligence as will bar a recovery of damages for injuries sustained if the company by reasonable care could have prevented them.

To the same effect, Guilford v. Wolcott, — N. C. —, 70 S. E. 393; Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Phillips, 2 Am. St. Rep. 155, and note (112 Ind. 59, 13 N. E. 132; Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Walker, 113 Ind. 196, 3 Am. St. Rep. 638, 15 N. E. 234; Hurt v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 94 Mo. 255, 4 Am. St. Rep. 374, 7 S. W. 1; Indianapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Watson, 5 Am. St. Rep. 578, and note (114 Ind. 20, 14 N. E. 721, 15 N. E. 824). In Schmidt v. Missouri P. R. Co. 191 Mo. 215, 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 196, 90 S. W. 336, it is said, citing Harlan v. St. Louis, K. C. & N. R. Co. 65 Mo. 22, that, notwithstanding the contributory negligence of the intestate, "the company is liable if by the exercise of ordinary care it could have prevented the accident . . . after a discovery by defendant of the danger in which the injured party stood, . . . or if the company failed to discover the danger through the recklessness or carelessness of its employees when the exercise of proper care would have discovered the danger [of the intestate] and averted the calamity."

In Virginia Midland R. Co. v. White, 84 Va. 498, 10 Am. St. Rep. 874, 5 S. E. 573, it is held that a railroad company owes to a licensee on its track ordinary care and prudence, and that the intestate, who was killed while walking on the track, is not barred of recovery if the engineer might by the exercise of care on his part have avoided the consequences of the negligence and carelessness on the part of the intestate. To the same effect, Thomas v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 103 Iowa, 649, 39 L.R.A. 399, 72 N. W. 783; Bogan v. Carolina C. R. Co. 55 L.R.A. 418, and notes (129 N. C. 154, 39 S. E. 808). In Raines v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 39 W. Va. 50, 24 L.R.A. 226, 19 S. E. 565, it is held that, if one is walking along the track apparently in possession of his faculties, the engineer may presume that he will get off the track provided due signals are given. To same effect, Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Baker, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 427, and notes (79 Kan. 183, 93 Pac. 804).

In 2 Thomp. Neg. § 1596, it is said that the rule which requires the railroad to keep a lookout ahead of its trains at crossings and at places where the track is much used by the public "is reduced to meaningless verbiage, unless it is followed up by the corresponding rule that, where a person negligently exposes himself to injuries upon the crossing, the railroad company will be liable if, by the maintenance of a lookout, it might have discovered the traveler in his exposed situation in time by the exercise of reasonable care to have avoided killing or injuring him." For this proposition numerous cases are cited, and the author adds: "The cases which told the contrary seem to have no counterpart in the jurisprudence of any other English speaking country, and form a disgraceful chapter in American jurisprudence." The same point is elaborated in §§ 1724, 1725, 1726, 1836, 1837.

There were numerous street crossings of this track, and the track itself was with the permission of the defendant customarily used by its employees and the public as a street, according to the evidence. Yet the evidence of Thorp is that no whistle was blown or bell was rung that he heard, and this is the evidence, under our authorities, to go to the jury that there was none, in the absence of evidence to the contrary. Authorities might be multiplied; but it has never yet been held law in this state or elsewhere, and cannot now be held with my assent, that the mere fact that one walks upon the railroad track is conclusive evidence that his negligence is the cause of his death, regardless of the surrounding circumstances; and yet such is practically the rule if, under all the circumstances in this case, it is held that the defendant, as a matter of law, had a right to kill the deceased, and that by a nonsuit a jury can be deprived of any right to determine whose negligence was the proximate cause of the death.

ARKANSAS SUPREME COURT.

E. B. PETTY, Impleaded, etc., Appt.,

v.
HENRY GACKING.

(—Ark. —, 133 S. W. 832.)

Equity — jurisdiction — suit on incomplete note.

1. Equity has jurisdiction of a suit by the payee of a note against a bank and its cashier, who had lent the payee's money on the note before a specified indorsement had been secured, contrary to instructions, and the maker and designated surety, who

Note. — Effect of extrinsic promise to sign or indorse a note or bill.

No case aside from PETTY v. GACKING, appears to discuss the effect of the giving of a written or oral extrinsic promise to sign a specified note with another, but the decision therein reached, to the effect that a person so promising is to be held a joint maker of the note, certainly seems in accord with the nicest equitable principles. But when it comes to the question of the effect of such a promise to indorse a note, then the books are more prolific of authority. And while two of the cases seem had promised in writing to sign the note, to adjust the rights of the parties and affix the liability for the amount due.

Note — promise to sign — liability.

2. One signing a promise to sign a specified note with another will be held liable in equity as though he had in fact affixed his signature to the note.

Same — accommodation maker — delay — effect.

3. Delay in enforcing a note against one maker has no effect to release a comaker, although he signed out of accommodation to the principal debtor.

Agent — lending money — disobedience of orders — liability.

4. Neither a cashier nor the bank which he represents can be held liable for his disobedience of instructions to lend a customer's money on a certain note, when a certain indorser had been secured, if his promise in writing had been obtained to sign the note before the transaction was closed.

(January 9, 1911.)

to hold those who promise to indorse liable as indorsers, the weight of authority is the other way.

Thus, in Sachs v. Fuller, 69 Ark. 270, 62 S. W. 902, where a company agreed to indorse an overdue note, and failed to do so, the court disposed of the question of its liability just as if it had actually indorsed. It was said that the company, in failing to indorse the note, incurred no greater liability than would have been its, had it done so; that by agreeing to indorse the note, it undertook to pay the amount due on the same, provided payment was demanded of the maker within a reasonable time after the indorsement, and, upon his refusal to pay, due notice of such refusal was given to the company; and that, since these conditions never were performed, it was not liable in damages, either on the instrument or the agreement to indorse. But see Boardman v. Steele, infra, where the action was based on the original consideration, and not upon the agreement to indorse.

On signing a promise to indorse a specified note of another, given as part of the purchase money of land which is sold on credit on the faith of the promised indorsement, is liable where he refuses to indorse, and is sued both as an indorser and upon his agreement to indorse, just as he would be liable had he indorsed the note. Levy v. Wagner, 29 Tex. Civ. App. 98, 69 S. W. 112.

"The indorsement must," it is written so in 1 Daniel on Negotiable Instruments, 5th ed § 689a, "as a general rule, be somewhere on the paper itself, or attached thereto, and unless it is, the party cannot be held liable as an indorser; but a promise made on a sufficient consideration will sustain an action upon its breach."

So, in French v. Turner, 15 Ind. 59, it was held that in order to hold one as an 33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

A PPEAL by defendant Petty from a decree of the Chancery Court for Sebastian County in plaintiff's favor in a suit to recover money lent on a promissory note which the appealing defendant had promised in writing to indorse. Affirmed.

Statement by Wood, J.:

This is an action brought by appellee, Henry Gacking, against E. B. Petty, John Shaw, American National Bank, and P. A. Ball, for the purpose of recovering judgment for an amount of money loaned by Gacking to Shaw and Petty. The facts briefly stated are as follows: During and prior to 1902, Gacking was a customer of the American National Bank, and had been in the habit of calling upon his friend, P. A. Ball, the cashier of that bank, to attend to many of his little business matters. The bank was furnishing Gacking with a box in its safety deposit vault free of rent, and Ball had to some extent looked after indorser of certain notes, the indorsement must have been made "thereon," or on another paper annexed to the notes when there are many successive indorsements to be made.

In Bank of Wilmington & Brandywine v. Houston, 1 Harr. (Del.) 225, it was held that in order to charge one as an indorser of a note, he must personally sign the same, or properly authorize another to sign it for him, and that where one agreed to be bound as an indorser of certain renewal notes, he was bound not as an indorser, but merely upon his agreement. Clayton, Ch. J., said: "This is an undertaking to indorse, or an agreement to hold himself responsible as an indorser; in either case he is liable, but liable on the agreement. The action should have been on this agreement, specially setting it out; it might have been done in this case by adding a count to that effect. It has been contended that this was an authority given to the bank to indorse these notes for the debt. [sic.] We admit that this authority may be made out by inference, by the course of trade, as where a wife was accustomed to indorse for her husband, but here is a written agreement, and we cannot go beyond it. It gives no such authority. The party agrees to be bound as much as if he had indorsed the notes, but he does not indorse them nor authorize another to indorse for him. He is not then an indorser, though liable as much as an indorser; but how liable? Not on the notes, for this would make him an actual indorser, but on the agreement."

So, it was held in Birdsell Mfg. Co. v. Brown, 96 Mich. 213, 55 N. W. 801, that an agent who promises to indorse a note cannot be held as an indorser, but only in an action for the breach, provided the promise was based upon sufficient consideration.

In Boardman v. Steele, 13 Conn. 547, a few of Gacking's financial affairs, acting merely as his friend and receiving no compensation therefor. During the year 1901, Gacking loaned to Shaw and Petty $125, and took their joint note for that amount. In November, 1902, Shaw desired to increase the amount of this loan to $250, and requested Gacking to loan him $125 more, which amount would be added to the old note of $125, making the total $250, for which amount Shaw and Petty would give their new note to Gacking. Gacking called Mr. Ball on the phone and asked him if Petty was good for $250. Mr. Ball responded that he was, and Gacking then notified Ball to let Shaw have $125 of his money, and surrender to Shaw the old Petty and Shaw note when Shaw brought to the bank a new note for $250 and signed by Shaw and indorsed by Petty. Some time later during the same day, Shaw came to the bank and presented to Mr. Ball the following writing:

Mr. P. A. Ball:

I will sign Mr. John Shaw's note for $250 all right.
11-19-1902.

Signed E. B. Petty:

In accordance with instructions, Mr. Ball then made out a note to Gacking for $250, which was signed by Shaw, and the above agreement of Petty to sign the note was attached to the note itself, and Shaw given $125 of Gacking's money. At the time Shaw brought the above writing to the bank, he told Mr. Ball that Petty was engaged in work and would come to the bank later in the day, or within a short time thereafter, and sign the note. A few days later Gacking came to the bank, and Mr. Ball advised him what had been done, showed him the note signed by Shaw with Petty's agreement attached thereto, and told Gacking it would be advisable to have this note actually signed by Petty, but where a purchaser of land promised in writing to indorse certain purchase money notes, and failed to do so, and was sued in an action of assumpsit for the price of the land, it was held that the purchaser was not in the position of an indorser, and thus entitled to take advantage of any lack of diligence, if any there was, on the part of the vendor as an indorsee, in taking the steps necessary to fix his liability as an indorser.

Parties who agree to indorse a bill of exchange to be subsequently drawn, without actually doing it, and without properly authorizing anyone else to indorse for them, are not liable as indorsers, where their indorsement is forged. Lord Ellenborough said that while they might be liable for a breach of promise, they could not be sued as indorsers of the bill. Moxon v. Pulling, 4 Campb. 50.

Other cases dispose of the question upon the ground that the promise to indorse was void because not in compliance with the statute of frauds, and therefore creative of no liability, or else the effect of the promise has been avoided on the ground that it was made without consideration.

In Smith v. Easton, 54 Md. 138, 39 Am. Rep. 355, it was held, in an action against one for the breach of a promise to guarantee the debt of another already due, by indorsing his promissory note, that not only must the promise have been in writing in order to satisfy the requirements of the statute of frauds, but the promise must have been based upon sufficient consideration, and that in the case at bar, since the consideration for the promise to indorse the note was the forbearance of a creditor to sue out process of attachment against the goods of their debtor, and there was no legal ground for the attachment, there was an utter failure of consideration for the promise, and consequently no liability.

33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

In Carville v. Crane, 5 Hill, 483, 40 Am. Dec. 364, where one requested another to sell goods to a third person, promising by parol to indorse the note of the latter party for the price, it was held that the promise was one to answer for the debt of another, and for that reason was void by the statute of frauds.

The above decision was in accordance with the view of the question taken by Mr. Justice Woodworth in Gallager v. Brunel, 6 Cow. 346, wherein he comments upon this promise to a creditor, that the defendant would indorse the note of the debtor. In this case, the defendant, refusing to indorse the note, the creditor treated the refusal as a fraud, and, having sold goods on the faith of the promise, brought an action as for a deceit. Such action, however, was considered a mere experiment for getting round the statute, and the declaration in the action was held to be bad on demurrer.

Westcott v. Keeler, 4 Bosw. 564, distinguishes the two preceding cases upon the ground that in them there was no original debt between the parties to the promise, while in the case at bar the complaint alleged that money was loaned to the defendant on the security of the note of a third party, payable to his own order, and indorsed by him and the defendant; that when the note matured the lender surrendered it to the maker for a new note of the same amount, payable on demand, and made and indorsed by the third party,—the note being surrendered at the request of the defendant, and on his promise to indorse the new note,—and that the defendant refused either to indorse the note or pay the money loaned him. The dismissal of the complaint in this action was held to be error, although the surrender note had been destroyed. E. M. S.

that his agreement to sign the note was binding and would hold him; but for business purposes the note should be signed by Petty. Gacking agreed to have this attended to, took the note, placed it in his safety vault, and had exclusive control over the note from that time to the present. Petty never signed the note. After the maturity of the note, the interest was paid on it by Shaw to maturity, and indulgence was granted at Shaw's request, but for no fixed period. On the 12th of March, 1906, Shaw paid $20 on the interest then due on the note. The above are substantially the facts as they were found by the court. The court found that the bank and Ball "had not been guilty of any negligence resulting in damage to Gacking." The decree was a dismissal of the complaint as to the bank and Ball, and a judgment in favor of appellee against appellant Petty, in the sum of $250, with interest, etc.

Mr. Edwin Hiner for appellant.

Messrs. Winchester & Martin, for appellee:

An agreement to indorse a note before delivery to the payee, in order to induce the payee to lend the money on the note, is, in effect, an agreement to become a joint maker of the note.

Lake v. Little Rock Trust Co. 77 Ark. 53, 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1199, 90 S. W. 847, 7 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 394; Heise v. Bumpass, 40 Ark. 545; Nash v. Skinner, 12 Vt. 219, 36 Am. Dec. 338; Scanland v. Porter, 64 Ark. 470, 42 S. W. 897; Braddock v. Wertheimer, 68 Ark. 423, 59 S. W. 761; Good v. Martin, 95 U. S. 95, 24 L. ed. 343.

Equity regards as done that which ought to be done, "and a court of equity will, under those circumstances, require a performance of the agreement."

Spaulding Mfg. Co. v. Godbold, 92 Ark. 66, 29 L.R.A.(N.S.) 282, 135 Am. St. Rep. 168, 121 S. W. 1063, 19 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 947; Lowe v. Walker, 77 Ark. 107, 91 S. W. 22; 16 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 134; Stiewel v. Webb Press Co. 79 Ark. 52, 116 Am. St. Rep. 62, 94 S. W. 915; Rogers v. Galoway Female College, 64 Ark. 639, 39 L.R.A. 636, 44 S. W. 454; Story, Eq. Pl. 313; Black v. Bowman, 9 Ark. 503; Terry v. Rosell, 32 Ark. 489.

Wood, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The chancery court had jurisdiction. The facts were set forth in detail in the complaint, and the prayer was "for such other relief, general and special, against all of said defendants, or either of them, or against them jointly or severally, as the 33 L.R.A.(N.S.)

facts may justify, and as to the court may seem fit."

Petty had not in fact signed the note, though the evidence clearly shows that he intended to sign it. His communication to Ball saying: "I will sign John Shaw's note for $250 all right," shows beyond controversy that he intended to sign the note. Ball, acting for Gacking, upon the faith of this communication, turned over to Shaw the sum of $125, and Shaw and Petty also obtained a note for $125, which had been previously executed to Gacking. The note was obviously surrendered upon the theory that the subsequent note for $250 signed by Shaw, and which Petty promised to sign, covered the amount of the prior note. There was therefore a valuable consideration for the note sued on, and the communication or written promise of Petty to sign the note should be treated in equity as a part of the note. The court properly considered the case, under the facts, as if it were a suit to reform the note, so as to make it the note of Petty, as well as of Shaw, who had actually signed it. A court of equity having all the parties before it could mold the remedy to conform to the rights of the party entitled to relief. Equity "varies its adjustments and proportions so as to meet the very form and pressure of each particular case in all its complex habitudes." Black v. Bowman, 9 Ark. 501, 503, 504.

Petty wrote the communication to Ball for the purpose of giving Shaw, the maker of the note, credit with the payee, whoever he might be. It was the same in legal effect as if Petty had signed the note jointly with Shaw, or as if Petty at the time the note was executed by Shaw had put his name in blank upon the back of the note. Treating that as done which should have been done, Petty must be considered as the joint maker of the note, and not as a mere guarantor. Heise v. Bumpass, 40 Ark. 545. See also Lake v. Little Rock Trust Co. 77 Ark. 53, 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1199, 90 S. W. 847, 7 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 394; Scanland v. Parker, 64 Ark. 470, 42 S. W. 897; Braddock v. Wertheimer, 68 Ark. 423, 59 S. W. 761; Good v. Martin, 95 U. S. 95, 24 L. ed. 341.

"It is only by looking at the intent, rather than at the form," says Mr. Pomeroy, "that equity is able to treat that as done which in good conscience ought to be done." [Eq. Jur. 3d ed. vol. 1, § 378.] The maxim has been applied in innumerable instances to work out justice, and the facts of this record call for its application again. See Spaulding Mfg. Co. v. Godbold, 92 Ark. 66, 29 L.R.A.(N.S.) 282, 135 Am. St. Rep. 168, 121 S. W. 1063, 19 A. & E.

Ann. Cas. 947, and other cases cited in appellee's brief. The note was kept alive by payments of interest after maturity, and the statute of limitations does not apply. Treating appellant as a joint maker of the note, as he should be, the less said about laches the better for appellant. Neither Ball nor the bank is liable, for Ball was only acting at the request of appellee without compensation, and practically carried out his instructions and obtained for him what he desired, namely, an instrument that rendered Shaw and Petty liable for the money loaned them by appellee.

The decree is in all respects correct.
Affirmed.

MISSOURI SUPREME COURT.
(Division 2.)

STATE OF MISSOURI, Respt.,
v.

GEORGE SMITH, Appt.

(— Mo. —, 135 S. W. 465.)

Indictment — practising medicine without license — negating exception.

1. An indictment for practising medicine without a license need not state that accused was not within the classes not included in the law, where these classes were merely persons rendering gratuitous services and surgeons in the service of the Federal government, since the exception is not descriptive of the offense.

Statute — subject — practice of medicine and treatment of sick.

2 The practice of medicine and surgery

Note. — Application of statutes regulating the practice of medicine, to persons giving special kinds of treatment.

This annotation is supplementary to earlier notes on the same point, appended to the cases of O'Neil v. State, 3 L.R.A. (N.S.) 763; State v. Bresee, 24 L.R.A. (N.S.) 103; and Witty v. State, 25 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1297.

The question whether the system of treatment known as chiropractic, described in STATE v. SMITH, might be considered as within the provisions of a statute regulating "the practice of medicine, surgery, and osteopathy," was also presented in State v. Johnson, 84 Kan. 411, 114 Pac. 390. It was there held that, as it may be said that one whose vertebræ are partially displaced, causing the impairment of nerve function, is one afflicted with bodily infirmity, and that one who restores the functional activity of the nerve on which the maladjusted vertebræ had formerly pressed is treating, or attempting to treat, such afflicted person, such treatment constitutes the practice of and the treatment of the sick are so far germane that they may be regulated by one statute, under a Constitution forbidding statutes to contain more than one subject.

Same — ejusdem generis — medicine and surgery — treating sick.

3. The addition by amendment of the words, "treat the sick," to a statute requiring one desiring to practise medicine and surgery to have a license, does not bring the case within the rule of ejusdem generis, when general words follow special ones so as to make them mean treat the sick by medicine and surgery.

Physician — license — chiropractic.

4. Removing the cause of disease by adjustment of the spinal column under the system termed "chiropractic" is within a statute requiring those who wish to treat the sick to secure a license.

Same — police power — interference with right to choose calling — manner of treatment.

5. A statute requiring a license as a condition to treating the sick has sufficient relation to the protection of the public health to be within the police power of the legislature, which cannot be controlled by the courts, and is not so unreasonable or capricious that it can be declared not to be an honest exercise of such power, although it may interfere with the right of the patient to choose his own method of treatment, and of the practitioner to pursue a calling of his choice.

(March 7, 1911.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit court for Webster County convicting him of practising medicine without a license. Affirmed.

medicine, within chap. 24 of Kansas Laws of 1901, as amended by chap. 63 of Special Session Laws of 1908, which provides that it should be applicable to "any person attempting to treat the sick or others afflicted with bodily or mental infirmities, or any person representing or advertising himself by any means or through any medium whatsoever, or in any manner whatsoever, so as to indicate that he is authorized to or does practise medicine or surgery in this state, or that he is authorized to or does treat the sick or others afflicted with bodily infirmities;" and that as the manifest object and intent of the legislature was to protect the public from ignorance and imposition in the healing art, the rule of noscitur a sociis should not be so applied to the title of the act as to restrict the words found therein to their associates, medicine, surgery, and osteopathy.

In State v. Miller, 146 Iowa, 521, 124 N. W. 167, it was held that evidence showing that defendant treated patients for a consideration, and that he professed to heal and cure divers diseases by the use of the system and treatment known as chiroprac-

Statement by Ferriss, J.:

This is an appeal from Webster county, where the defendant was convicted of the offense of treating and attempting to treat the sick and afflicted without first having obtained a license from the state board of health. His punishment was assessed at a fine of $50. The case reaches this court by transfer from the Springfield court of appeals upon a constitutional question. The information upon which the defendant was tried reads as follows: "J. E. Haynes, prosecuting attorney, duly elected, commissioned, sworn, qualified, installed, and acting as such, in and for said county of Webster, in the state of Missouri, upon his oath and upon his hereto appended oath, informs the court, and upon his said oath and upon his hereto appended oath, does depose, present, aver, and charge, that said defendant, George Smith, on or about the 1st day of July, 1908, and from said date until November 6, 1908, at the said county of Webster, did then and there unlawfully, wrongfully, wilfully practise medicine and surgery, and did attempt to treat the sick or others afflicted with bodily and mental infirmities, and did then and there represent and advertise himself by means of certain printed matter, the exact nature of which is to this informant unknown, so as to indicate that he was authorized to practise medicine and surgery, and that he was authorized to treat the sick and afflicted with bodily and mental infirmities, without then and there having a license from the state board of health, contrary to the form of the statute in such cases made and provided, against the peace and dignity of the state of Missouri." The information is based upon §§ 1 and 5 of an act regulating the practice of medicine and surgery, approved March 12, 1901 (Sess. Acts of 1901, p. 207), reading as follows:

"Section 1. It shall be unlawful for any person not now a registered physician within the meaning of the law, to practise medicine or surgery in any of its departments, or to profess to cure and attempt to treat the sick and others afflicted with bodily or mental infirmities, or engage in the practice of midwifery, in the state of Missouri, except as hereinafter provided."

"Sec. 5. Any person, except physicians now registered, practising medicine or surgery in this state, and any person attempting, no medicine being given or prescribed, showed the defendant to be guilty of violating the Iowa statute which forbids the practice of medicine without a license, and declares that any person shall be deemed to be practising medicine who shall publicly profess to be a physician, or shall make a practice of prescribing, or prescribing and furnishing, medicine for the sick.

The practice of "suggestive therapeutics," consisting of the laying on of hands and manipulation, breathing, and rubbing, together of the practitioner's hands, by one having an office where he received patients and treated them for physical ailments, for which he received compensation, is the practice of medicine, within chapter 344, New York Laws 1907, which provides: "A person practises medicine within the meaning of this act . . . who holds himself out as being able to diagnose, treat, operate, or prescribe for any human disease, pain, injury, deformity, or physical condition, and who shall either offer, or to undertake by any means or method, to diagnose, treat, operate, or prescribe for any human disease, pain, injury, deformity, or physical condition." People v. Mulford, 140 App. Div. 716, 125 N. Y. Supp. 680.

The treatment, for a compensation, of a patient with electricity, for the purpose either of alleviating or curing disease, is the practice of medicine, within the meaning of § 62 of Manitoba Rev. Stat. 1902, chap. 111, which declares that "it shall not be lawful for any person not registered to practise medicine, surgery, or midwifery for hire, gain, or hope of reward." Bergman v. Bond, 14 Manitoba L. Rep. 503.

But treatment by massage, although a 33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

branch of therapeutics, is not a practising of medicine, within the meaning of the above statute. Ibid.

A person who occasionally treats persons resorting to her for treatment, by making passes with her hands and by stimulating them, and who, being called upon to treat a child nine or ten years of age suffering from some malady which would appear to any ordinarily intelligent person to be serious or deep-seated, and who is too young and helpless even to tell her symptoms, or decide whether she will submit to particular agencies of treatment or not, complying with the request, does treat or pretend to treat the child by the method described, and repeats the treatment from time to time, and receives remuneration for so doing, "practises medicine," within the meaning of Revised Statutes of Quebec, § 3998, which prohibits the practising of medicine by unauthorized persons, but which contains no definition of the expression "practising medicine." Rex v. Couture, 15 Can. Crim. Cas. 147.

An oculist, in examining the eyes of his customers, and giving them glasses to remedy any defect in vision discovered by him, is not engaged in practising medicine, within the meaning of Ontario Medical Act, R. S. O. 1897, chap. 176, § 49, which provides that it shall not be lawful for any person not registered to practise medicine, surgery, or midwifery for hire, gain, or hope of reward. Rex v. Harvey, 16 Ont. Week. Rep. 433.

Nor is such statute violated by the giving of osteopathic treatment. Rex v. Henderson, 16 Ont. Week. Rep. 1021. E. S. O.

ing to treat the sick or others afflicted with bodily or mental infirmities, without first obtaining a license from the state board of health, as provided in this act, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and punished by a fine of not less than $50 nor more than $500, or by imprisonment in the county jail for a period of not less than thirty days nor more than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment, for each and every offense; and treating each patient shall be regarded as a separate offense. Any person filing, or attempting to file, as his own, a license of another or a forged affidavit of identification, shall be guilty of a felony, and, upon conviction thereof, shall be subject to such fine and imprisonment as are made and provided by statutes of this state for the crime of forgery in the second degree. Said fines to be turned into the state treasury when collected."

Said § 1 appears without change, as § 8311 of the Revision of 1909, and § 5, with some amendments not material to the case at bar, appears as § 8315 of said Revision.

The evidence shows that the defendant practised what he called the "science of chiropractic," which science is thus defined in defendant's brief: "The theory of this science is that the center and seat of all intelligence and body-controlling force is in the brain; that all function depends upon this nerve force, universal intelligence, or whatever it may be, that is seated in the brain; that it is transmitted from the brain to the muscles and organs through, first, the spinal cord, and, then, thence through the nerves radiating from the spinal column; that, while it is not impeded, all bodily function is normal and the body is well; that, when it is impeded, function is not normal, and the organ or muscle cut off from, or not in free communication with, the brain, becomes diseased; that it can be impeded only by pressure or pinching of the nerves. known to chiropractic as 'impingement'; that nerves are impinged only where passing between bones; that they pass between bones in going through the intervertebral foramina, and are impinged when the vertebrae are from a blow, contraction of muscles, as by a draught of cold air or other cause, more or less displaced, or 'subluxated,' as the chiropractor terms it. The slightly misplaced bones pinch or impinge the nerves, impeding the flow of mental impulse. The effect is the same as the introduction of a rheostat or other resistance on the circuit between an electric dynamo at a power station and an electric motor supplying power for a factory. The motor representing a vital organ, not receiving the required amount of electricity, is hindered in its work just as a vital organ becomes diseased by not being in free communication with the brain. When all mental impulse is cut off, for example, by what the layment term a 'broken back,' the portion of the body and the organs beyond the point where the impulse is cut off become paralyzed, just as the motors of a huge shop, beyond a break in a wire leading from a dynamo, stop when the break is so complete as to cut off all or nearly all electricity coming to it. The experienced chiropractor, by passing his hand up and down the spinal column, is able to detect these subluxations or slight dislocations, and by a swift downward movement places the vertebra back in its normal position, removing the pressure on the impinged nerve, and again opening up free communication between the brain and the organs controlled by the nerve so impinged." In actual practice the chiropractor makes no physical examination outside of the spinal column. He does not feel the pulse, take the temperature, prescribe any diet, or use any instruments. He simply examines the spinal column, determines whether or not a subluxation, as he calls it, exists, and, if he finds it, adjusts the same. Defendant practised according to this system. Testimony was given by one of his patients, by defendant himself, and by an expert brother chiropractor.

The evidence for the state tended to show that the defendant maintained an office in the town of Seymour, Webster county, Missouri, over the door of which was a sign reading, "Chiropractor." He circulated through the community certain printed matter in which he advertised and held himself out as "Dr. George F. Smith." His office was equipped with some charts showing the different parts of the human body, and a table which the witness says was split in the middle, and upon which defendant placed his patient for examination and treatment. The witness called at defendant's office, received and paid for a chiropractic treatment, was placed on the table by defendant, who examined his spine, told him it was in bad shape, and then manipulated and rubbed his spine with his hands and fingers. Defendant was formerly a watchmaker by trade. He testified that he did not practise medicine; that he did not treat his patients, but adjusted them; that he did not consider the nature of the disease, but dealt only with the cause; and that this system of removing the cause by relieving the nerve impinged between the vertebrae of the back applied to all diseases,—smallpox, measles; tuberculosis, etc. Further reference will be made to the facts in evidence in the course of the opinion.

Messrs. Samuel Dickey, Wright Brothers, and Morris & Hartwell for appellant.

Messrs. Elliott W. Major, Attorney General, and Charles G. Revelle, for the State:

No person has a vested right to pursue any particular occupation or profession, where the protection of lives or health and the general welfare of the people require that those engaging in such pursuits shall possess skill, knowledge, or other particular qualifications and personal attributes.

State v. Davis, 194 Mo. 498, 4 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1023, 92 S. W. 484, 5 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 1000; Ex parte Lucas, 160 Mo. 232, 61 S. W. 218; State ex rel. Brown v. McIntosh, 205 Mo. 637, 107 S. W. 1071; State v. Hamlett, 212 Mo. 86, 110 S. W. 1082; State v. Hathaway, 115 Mo. 47, 21 S. W. 1081; State v. Bixman, 102 Mo. 1, 62 S. W. 828.

The act treats of but one subject, and that is the regulation of the practice of treating the sick and afflicted.

State v. Miller, 45 Mo. 497; Hannibal v. Marion County, 69 Mo. 575; Lynch v. Murphy, 119 Mo. 169, 24 S. W. 774; State v. Doerring, 194 Mo. 408, 92 S. W. 489; Cox v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 174 Mo. 603, 74 S. W. 854; O'Connor v. St. Louis Transit Co. 198 Mo. 637, 115 Am. St. Rep. 495, 97 S. W. 150, 8 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 703; State ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Mead, 71 Mo. 268; State v. Price, 229 Mo. 670, 129 S. W. 650; State v. Martin, 230 Mo. 1, 129 S. W. 931.

Whether the treatment administered was technically the practice of medicine, as applied by regular physicians, is immaterial. It was within the prohibition of the statute, and that is sufficient.

State v. Addington, 77 Mo. 117; State v. Brown, 181 Mo. 192, 79 S. W. 1111; Keyes-Marshall Bros. Livery Co. v. St. Louis & H. R. Co. 105 Mo. App. 556, 80 S. W. 53.

Where the exception in the act is not contained in the section creating the offense, and is not descriptive thereof, it is a matter of defense, and need not be negatived.

State v. Doerring, 194 Mo. 415, 92 S. W. 489; State v. Price, 220 Mo. 670, 129 S. W. 655; State v. Bockstruck, 136 Mo. 335, 38 S. W. 317; State v. Jenkins, 139 Mo. 535, 41 S. W. 220; State v. Meek, 70 Mo. 355, 35 Am. Rep. 427; State v. Cox, 32 Mo. 566; State v. Buford, 10 Mo. 704. 33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Ferriss, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

1. It is claimed that the information is fatally defective, in that it does not state that defendant, Smith, does not belong to one of the classes not included in the law. Section 8319, Rev. Stat. 1909, the same being the last section of the article entitled "Medicine and Surgery," provides: "It is not intended by this article to prohibit gratuitous service to and treatment of the afflicted, and this article shall not apply to commissioned surgeons of the United States Army, Navy, public health, and marine hospital service." This objection is evidently based upon the rule that where an exception is contained in the act creating the offense, and constitutes a part of the description of the offense, such exception must be negatived in the information. The rule does not apply to this case. The exception referred to, viz., treating the sick gratuitously, is not a part of the description of the offense. It simply exempts certain classes from the operation of the law, which is completely defined in the previous sections. In State v. Doerring, 194 Mo., loc. cit. 398, 92 S. W. 489, the court, in discussing an objection to an indictment which charged the defendant with practicing dentistry without a license, which objection was that the indictment failed to negative the exception which was incorporated in a separate section, quoted from State v. O'Brien, 74 Mo. 549, as follows: "When an exception is contained in a statute defining an offense, and constitutes a part of the offense, an indictment for such offense must negative the exception; but when the statute contains a proviso exempting a class therein referred to from the operation of the statute, an indictment need not negative the proviso. The accused must make the exemption a ground of defense." In State v. Connor, 142 N. C. 700, 55 S. E. 787 (cited by defendant), the rule is thus stated: "When a statute creates a substantive criminal offense, the description of the same being complete and definite, and by a subsequent clause, either in the same or some other section, or by another statute, a certain case, or class of cases, is withdrawn or excepted from its provisions, these excepted cases need not be negatived in the indictment." So, in State v. Carmody, 50 Or. 1, 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 828, 91 Pac. 446, 1081, it is said: "Exceptions and provisos in a criminal statute need not be negatived in indictments unless they be descriptive of the offense, or a necessary ingredient in its definition." This court has held it to be the sound rule in this state that, where the exception is contained in a subsequent section to the one which defines the offense, such exception need not be negatived in the information. State v. Bockstruck, 136 Mo., loc. cit. 352, 38 S. W. 317. In the case at bar the exception, even if it were contained as a proviso in the section defining the offense, would not be descriptive of the offense; and hence would not require a negation in the information. The sufficiency otherwise of the information is not questioned.

2. The statute in question does not violate § 28, art. 4, of the Constitution. The act contains one subject, which is clearly expressed in the title. The title to the act is not "Medicine and Surgery," as defendant asserts it to be in his brief. The words "Medicine and Surgery" are merely the caption. The title to the act is as follows: "An Act to Regulate the Practice of Medicine, Surgery, and Midwifery, and to Prohibit Treating the Sick and Afflicted Without a License, and to Provide Penalties for the Violation Thereof." Sess. Acts 1901, p. 207. The one "subject" of this act, within the meaning of the Constitution, is, broadly speaking, public health. State v. Marble, 72 Ohio St., loc. cit. 36, 70 L.R.A. 835, 106 Am. St. Rep. 570, 73 N. E. 1063. 2 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 898. Treating the sick is well within this subject, and is specifically covered by the title. It is unnecessary to cite the cases in this state on this proposition. This court has again and again, with patient repetition, expounded the law upon this constitutional provision, and the law so expounded is this: "Where all the provisions of a statute fairly relate to the same subject, have a natural connection with it, are the incidents or means of accomplishing it, then the subject is single, and if it is sufficiently expressed in the title, the statute is valid." State v. Doering, supra, and cases therein cited. The practice of medicine or surgery, and the treatment of the sick by whatever means employed, are certainly germane to each other, and are germane to the general subject of health. "This section of the Constitution is to be reasonably and liberally construed and applied; due regard being had to its object and purpose. . . . If all the provisions of the bill have a natural relation and connection, then the subject is single, and this, too, though the bill contains many provisions." State ex rel. Wolfe v. Bronson, 115 Mo., loc. cit. 276, 21 S. W. 1126. If the treatment of the sick and the practice of medicine and surgery are not in natural relation, then it will be difficult to conceive of a case where two or more provisions in a bill relate to each other.

3. Defendant claims that the general words in the statute, "attempting to treat the sick," should, by the application of the rule of ejusdem generis, be limited to attempts to treat by medicine or surgery, which are the special words preceding. As early as 1877 the legislature of this state enacted a law "to regulate the practice of medicine and surgery," and made it a misdemeanor for any person "to practise or attempt to practise medicine or surgery" without complying with the provisions of the act. This provision was carried through the various revisions up to and including § 8517, Rev. Stat. 1899, excepting only that the words "attempt to practise" were dropped, so that the Revision of 1899 reads: "Any person practising medicine or surgery in this state, without complying with the provisions of this article," etc. The Revisions of 1889 and 1899 also provided that "every person practising medicine and surgery in any of their departments" should possess the qualifications therein specified. In 1901 chapter 128 of 1899 Revision, relating to medicine and surgery, was repealed, and a new act passed covering the subject. Section 3 of the act provided that "all persons desiring to practise medicine or surgery in this state, or to treat the sick or afflicted, as provided in § 1," should apply to the state board of health for examination. This review of the history of the law affords a complete answer to the claim that the doctrine of ejusdem generis applies to this case. It is not a case of general words following a specific designation. There might be some ground for the claim if the general words, "treat the sick," were in the original act. As shown above, until 1901 the only designation was "medicine and surgery." No one will claim that the general words, "and any person attempting to treat the sick," added by amendment, are ejusdem generis with the specific words of the original act. Furthermore, this rule of ejusdem generis is, after all, resorted to merely as an aid in construction. If, upon consideration of the whole law upon the subject, and the purposes sought to be effected, it is apparent that the legislature intended the general words to go beyond the class specially designated, the rule does not apply. If the particular words exhaust the class, then the general words must have a meaning beyond the class, or be discarded altogether. National Bank v. Ripley, 161 Mo., loc. cit. 132, 61 S. W. 587; Lewis's Sutherland, Stat. Constr. § 437. Certainly, the words "medicine or surgery in any of its departments" exhaust the genus or class. It is obvious that the legislature, by this amendment, intended to include those who practise neither medicine nor surgery in any of its departments, but who profess to cure, and who treat or attempt to treat, the sick by means other than medicine or surgery. Evidently, the legislature, in order to guard the overcredulous against injury that might result from yielding to the solicitations and professions of men who ignorantly undertake to diagnose and treat human ailments, deemed it proper, in the exercise of its police power, to require all persons who undertake to so treat the sick, to show that they possess the qualifications which the law makers prescribe as essential.

4. Defendant argues that the record shows that he did not "treat" his patients. He calls what he did not "treatment," but "adjustment." He says that he does not treat disease; he "adjusts the cause." Call it what you will, the fact remains that the system of practice called in this case "chiropractic," as explained by defendant's witnesses and his counsel, involves both diagnosis and physical treatment. The patient testified: "He laid me down on a cot, and he felt up and down on my spine, and he said my spine was in bad condition." The defendant testified: "I examined the spine with my fingers and adjusted the subluxated vertebræ and relieved the impinged nerves.

Q. How did you make the adjustment?

A. By putting the fingers on the point of subluxation, and giving a quick downward movement.

Q. What did you do that for?

A. To adjust the nerves.

Q. What did you want to find the impinged nerves for?

A. To remove the cause of the disease.

Q. What do you mean by removing the cause of the disease?

A. Well, simply this: The motory nerves begin in the brain and run through the spinal column, the spinal canal, and pass from there out to the different organs. There is another nerve passing back to the brain. We find the impingement of the motory nerve, which we call the cause of all trouble, and the real trouble. We simply find the impinged nerves and adjust them.

Q. What do you mean by an impingement of the nerves?

A. An impingement of a nerve is caused by what we know in chiropractic as a subluxation of the vertebræ; an impingement of the nerve carrying the impulse to the muscle or muscles from the brain to the organ using the nerve.

Q. According to that, then all force is from the brain?

A. Yes, sir; it all comes from the brain. Everything will be normal unless there is an impingement of some nerve.

Q. By impingement, do you mean pressure?

A. Yes, sir.

The foregoing practice clearly involves diagnosis,—at least to a limited extent,—knowledge of anatomy, and physical treatment.

An expert witness for the defense, one educated as a regular physician, and who had abandoned his practice and become a professional "chiropractor," testified as follows:

Q. Now, why does the chiropractor call upon a patient,—you do call upon patients, although you may call it by a different name,—why do you call upon an individual professionally?

A. Because they want us to do so.

Q. Now, when you go, you request them not to tell you what is the matter?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. When you are called, you expect to find something the matter?

A. Indeed we do.

Q. You make an examination of some kind, but you may call it by a different name?

A. Yes, sir; p—— of the spine.

Q. A physician who is in the regular practice makes an examination in addition to taking statements. He may go through a different process, but you are both trying to find out how the person is afflicted?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. If the person is not afflicted, you do not offer any treatment?

A. No, sir.

Q. Now, then, if you find he is afflicted, you do give some kind of treatment. You may not call it treatment, but you go through some process?

A. We go through a process.

Q. The purpose of that process is to restore the man to a normal condition?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In other words, you cure him or attempt to cure him?

A. No, sir; we do not do any curing.

Q. Before you had studied chiropractic, you would have called it a cure?

A. If I had accomplished it.

Q. When a physician treats a man whom he finds out of normal condition, and restores him to a normal condition, he calls it a cure?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. When a chiropractor finds a man out of his normal condition what does he do?

A. He removes the cause; we would remove the cause.

The defendant and his witness testify that they make no diagnosis; take no temperature; do not examine the tongue of the patient, nor any part of the body except the spinal column; that they do not treat the disease, but remove the cause, which is invariably found—no matter what the disease, whether consumption, smallpox, or any other ill that flesh is heir to—located in the spine, and in every case consists in an impingement of the nerves caused by a "subluxation"—whatever that may be—of the vertebrae. Yet, notwithstanding all this, the practice does involve skill, knowledge of anatomy, diagnosis, and physical treatment.

5. It is a serious question whether defendant would not come within the original statute as one practising medicine or surgery. The practice of medicine is not confined to the administration of drugs; nor is surgery limited to the knife. When a physician advises his patient to travel for his health, he is practising medicine. Broadly speaking, one is practising medicine when he visits his patient, examines him, determines the nature of the disease, and prescribes the remedies he deems appropriate. Bibber v. Simpson, 59 Me. 181. Tested by this rule, the defendant was practising medicine when he examined the patient's back, determined the trouble to be that a vertebra was subluxated, thereby impinging a nerve, and proceeded to employ what he considered an appropriate remedy, viz., a sudden downward pressure with the fingers, thereby adjusting the vertebra and relieving the impingement. When the defendant says that he does not "treat," but "adjusts," and that he deals not with the "disease," but with the "cause," he is merely juggling with words. Changing the name does not change the thing.

The defendant cites several cases to support his contention that the Missouri statute does not include a practice which eliminates drugs and surgical instruments. We will examine them.

Two cases from North Carolina hold under a statute which prohibits practising medicine or surgery without a license, that an osteopath, and also one who treats by "massage, baths, and physical culture, manipulates the muscles, bones, spine, and solar plexus, and kneads the muscles with the fingers of the hand, . . . writes no prescriptions as to diet, but advises his patients what to eat and what not to eat; all the above treatment is administered to the exclusion of drugs," are not included. State v. Biggs, 133 N. C. 730, 64 L.R.A. 139, 98 Am. St. Rep. 731, 46 S. E. 401; State v. McKnight, 131 N. C. 717, 59 L.R.A. 197, 42 S. E. 580. These cases proceed upon the doctrine that the legislature exceeds its power when it prohibits treatment of disease by any except a licensed doctor, and they are therefore not in point under the immediate discussion. People v. Allcut, 117 App. Div. 546, 102 N. Y. Supp. 878.

The next case cited is State v. Liffing, 61 Ohio St. 39, 46 L.R.A. 334, 76 Am. St. Rep. 358, 55 N. E. 168, 15 Am. Crim. Rep. 33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

516, which holds that an osteopath is not within a statute which provides that any person shall be regarded as practising medicine who shall for a fee prescribe or direct any "drug, medicine, or other agency for the treatment," etc.; that the doctrine of ejusdem generis limits the word "agency" to drugs or medicines; and that osteopathy is not such an agency. This statute was subsequently amended so as to read: "Who shall prescribe . . . any drug, medicine, appliance, application, operation, or treatment of whatever nature." In State v. Gravett, 65 Ohio St. 289, 307, 55 L.R.A. 791, 87 Am. St. Rep. 605, 62 N. E. 325, 326, it was held by the same judge who rendered the opinion in the Liffing Case to include osteopathy. The court said that the legislature in this amendment had "attempted a comprehensive regulation of the practice of the healing art." This same statute was held in State v. Marble, 72 Ohio St. 21, 70 L.R.A. 835, 106 Am. St. Rep. 570, 73 N. E. 1063, 2 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 898, to include Christian Science.

The next case cited is Bennett v. Ware, 4 Ga. App. 293, 61 S. E. 546. That case involved a healing solely by supernatural or divine agency,—by a "magic power direct from the Lord;" and is therefore not in point.

So, also, is the case of State v. Mylod, 20 R. I. 632, 41 L.R.A. 428, 40 Atl. 753, 11 Am. Crim. Rep. 238, not in point, where it was held that Christian Science was not within a statute forbidding the "practice of medicine and surgery" without a certificate from the board of health.

Smith v. Lane, 24 Hun, 632, holds that a system of practice consisting of "rubbing, kneading, and pressure" performed with the hand was not within a statute which penalized the "practice of medicine or surgery" without a license. This case is expressly overruled by the case of People v. Allcut, supra, which latter case states that the doctrine of Smith v. Lane, and of cases that follow it, is opposed by Massachusetts, Maine, Michigan, Iowa, Missouri, Colorado, Nebraska, Illinois, Ohio, Alabama, Indiana, New Mexico, South Dakota, and Tennessee, which "refuse to restrict the 'practice of medicine' to the administration of drugs or the use of surgical instruments." 117 App. Div. loc. cit. 552, 102 N. Y. Supp. 682. In the Allcut Case the defendant described his system as "mechano neural therapy," which meant "mechanical nerve treatment, a gentle pressure on all parts of the body; that the whole theory of this science is that disease comes from lack of blood circulation, and that the treatment proceeds upon the theory of assisting the circulation back into normal condition." The analogy here to the "science" practised by the defendant at bar is obvious.

Hayden v. State, 81 Miss. 291, 95 Am. St. Rep. 471, 33 So. 653, 15 Am. Crim. Rep. 522, rested upon a statute similar to the original Ohio statute. The court followed the Liffing and Mylod Cases, supra, but said that its own views would point to a different conclusion if followed. The holding was that osteopathy was not an "agency" within the meaning of the statute.

Nelson v. State Bd. of Health, 108 Ky. 769, 50 L.R.A. 383, 57 S. W. 501, holds that a statute which forbids one to "practise medicine, or attempt to practise medicine, in any of its branches, or who shall treat or attempt to treat any sick or afflicted person by any system or method whatsoever," does not include an osteopath. This ruling, however, is put upon the ground, as was said in the Allcut Case, supra, that it would be beyond the power of the state to prevent the practice of osteopathy, and therefore it would be presumed that the legislature did not intend to include it within the statute, a doctrine which does not prevail in this state, as we shall show later on.

We do not desire to extend this opinion by citing on this point numerous cases which hold contrary to the defendant's contention. Some of them are Parks v. State, 159 Ind. 211, 59 L.R.A. 190, 64 N. E. 862; State v. Yegge, 19 S. D. 234, 69 L.R.A. 504, 103 N. W. 17, 9 A. & W. Ann. Cas. 202; Bragg v. State, 134 Ala. 165, 58 L.R.A. 925, 32 So. 767; State v. Buswell, 40 Neb. 158, 24 L.R.A. 68, 58 N. W. 728.

In the case of Davidson v. Bohlman, 37 Mo. App. 576, Davidson was seeking to recover for services rendered in giving electrical treatment. The defense was that Davidson was practising medicine without a license. Statute of 1879. It was urged in his behalf that the services rendered were not medical. He held a diploma from an electric medical college. Judge Thompson, speaking for the court, in denying Davidson's contention, said: "The obvious intention of the statute was to embrace any person who habitually holds himself out as a professor of the art of healing diseases."

In the main, the cases regard diagnosis as the test to determine whether a practice or treatment is included in the terms "medicine" and "surgery." This is a practical test. A doctor who advises his patient to sleep in the open air is treating him. Such advice, however, is based upon a knowledge of the patient's condition obtained by diagnosis. The defendant professed to be able to ascertain by examination of the patient the cause of his trouble,—a result rather beyond that which ordinarily attends the diagnosis of the regular practitioner. The method or extent of the examination is not 33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

the controlling feature. When the practitioner makes such examination of the patient as he regards as sufficient to indicate to him the cause of the trouble, and to indicate its proper treatment, he has diagnosed the case.

6. This brings us to defendant's last contention, which is thus expressed in his brief: "If it includes other sciences of healing besides medicine and surgery, the statute is unconstitutional and void, because it is an abuse of the police power of the state of Missouri. It is unreasonable and void because, under guise of protecting the public's interest, it imposes unusual and unnecessary restrictions upon the useful occupations. It is class legislation, in that it compels all persons desiring to practise medicine or surgery in this state, to furnish satisfactory evidence of having received a diploma from some reputable medical college of four years' requirements of the time of graduation, regardless of the applicant's knowledge of medicine and surgery, thereby making the receipt of said diploma, and not the applicant's knowledge, the standard from which to judge his qualifications." In discussing this proposition we are to deal with one question only—the power of the legislature to pass this law. We are not concerned about its wisdom or propriety. Whether the law is wise, necessary, or proper is a question for the makers of the law. It is contended that to so construe this statute as to forbid anyone to treat the sick, without possessing the technical knowledge required to pass an examination before the state board, where such treatment does not involve such technical knowledge, would result in denying to the people a constitutional right to determine how they shall be treated, and also in denying to citizens the constitutional right to pursue a lawful calling for a livelihood: in short, that such a construction amounts to a deprivation of both liberty and property. This contention begs two questions: (1) Have the people an unrestricted right to determine how they shall be treated? (2) Has a man an unrestricted right to pursue any lawful calling? The legislature has the power under the Constitution to pass all necessary laws to guard the morals, safety, and health of the people, even if such laws in some degree operate as a restraint upon recognized constitutional rights. An absolute right to liberty or property, or even life itself, does not exist. The state may and does deprive its citizens of either of these so-called constitutional rights. When the lawmaking power forbids the manufacture of liquor, an absolute destruction of property results. Yet this may be done in the exercise of the police power. Our jails and penitentiary are filled with inmates who have been deprived of their liberty for the public good. The power of the state to deprive its citizens of their lives for the public good has never been questioned. In other and various ways citizens, for the public good, may be deprived of liberty and property. True, these rights of the citizen are to be impaired only when necessary for the public good. But who is to judge whether the necessity exists? The authorities agree that this power of judgment lies with the legislature. If, under the guise of the police power, the legislature unreasonably and capriciously restrains one's liberty or property, the court may interpose the Constitution, and declare the law void. This court in State v. Fisher, 52 Mo. 174, said: "A law which unnecessarily and oppressively restrains a citizen from engaging in any traffic, or disposing of his property as he may see fit, though passed under the specious pretext of a preservative of the health of the inhabitants, would be void." Yet in that case the court sustained a law which gave certain persons an exclusive privilege to render dead animals, and prohibiting all others on the ground of public health. So, in State v. Addington, 77 Mo. 110, this court approved a ruling by Judge Thompson of the court of appeals, that "the police power is a power to be exercised within wide limits of legislative discretion; and, if a statute appears to be within the apparent scope of this power, it would be a usurpation of jurisdiction for the judicial courts to inquire into its wisdom and policy, or to undertake to substitute their discretion for that of the legislature." State v. Addington, 12 Mo. App., loc. cit. 221. The Addington Case involved the validity of a statute which prohibited the manufacture of oleomargarine. This court sustained an objection to evidence offered by the defendant to prove that oleomargarine was a healthful and useful article of food. In the case of Booth v. Illinois, 184 U. S. 425, 428, 46 L. ed. 623, 625, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 425, 426, the United States Supreme Court had under consideration a statute of Illinois declaring option contracts illegal. It was contended that the legislature did not intend to prohibit bona fide options, but only those that were gambling contracts; that, if it did intend to prohibit lawful option contracts, such act was beyond the scope of its police power. The supreme court of Illinois had construed the act to "declare that unlawful which had theretofore been lawful," and to include lawful options. The question before the United States Supreme Court was: "Taking the statute to mean what the highest court of the state says it means, is it unconstitutional?" Judge Harlan, speaking for the court, says: "The argument, then, is that the statute directly forbids the citizen from pursuing a calling which in itself involves no element of immorality, and therefore, by such prohibition, it invades his liberty as guaranteed by the supreme law of the land. Does this conclusion follow from the premise stated? Is it true that the legislature is without power to forbid or suppress a particular kind of business, where such business properly and honestly conducted may not in itself be immoral? We think not. A calling may not in itself be immoral, and yet the tendency of what is generally or ordinarily or often done in pursuing that calling may be towards that which is admittedly immoral or pernicious. If, looking at all the circumstances that attend, or which may ordinarily attend, the pursuit of a particular calling, the state thinks that certain admitted evils cannot be successfully reached unless that calling be actually prohibited, the courts cannot interfere, unless, looking through mere forms and at the substance of the matter, they can say that the statute enacted professedly to protect the public morals has no real or substantial relation to that object, but is a clear, unmistakable infringement of right secured by the fundamental law. Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623, 661, 31 L. ed. 205, 210, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 273; Minnesota v. Barber, 136 U. S. 313, 320, 34 L. ed. 455, 458, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 185, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 862; Brimmer v. Rebman, 138 U. S. 78, 34 L. ed. 862, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 485, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 213; Voight v. Wright, 141 U. S. 62, 35 L. ed. 638, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 855. In Ex parte Lucas, 160 Mo., loc. cit. 232, 61 S. W. 218, this court approved the following ruling by the supreme court of Minnesota: "Laws enacted for the purpose of regulating or throwing restrictions around a trade, calling, or occupation, in the interests of the public health and morals, are everywhere upheld and sustained. Such laws are within the police power of the state, and are universally sustained where enacted in the interests of the public welfare. The question presented in cases where the validity of such laws is called in question is no longer the power or authority of the legislature to enact them, but whether the occupation, calling, or business sought to be regulated is one involving the public health and interests. A person engaged in such an occupation is not alone interested therein. The public served by him is also interested. He is interested to the extent that it provides and furnishes him with employment and a means of livelihood. The public is interested in his competency and qualifications, and it is eminently proper that there be thrown around the calling protection from intrusion by incompetents and other inimical to the public good." It is unnecessary to refer further to the repeated declarations of this court to the effect that the legislature has the power to regulate, in such manner as it may think proper and wise, callings that are related to the public health.

Applying the principles announced to the case at bar, we cannot say that an act which forbids treatment of the sick by one not possessing certain technical knowledge evidenced by a license bears no reasonable relation to the purpose sought to be accomplished by the legislature, namely, the protection of the public health. The legislature thought, perhaps, that this act was necessary to protect credulous sick people from injury at the hands of charlatans and quacks, with their specious promises of a sure cure without drugs; or it may have been thought necessary to forbid harmless practices in order to insure protection against those that are dangerous and hurtful. Sick people sometimes grow desperate in their search for a cure, or their judgment becomes weakened, so that they fall an easy prey to the ingenious and varied devices of the pretended healer. We know that some people are prone to give more weight to a skillfully worded advertisement than to the advice of a competent physician. The legislature, no doubt, thought that, in view of all these considerations, the welfare of the people required the sweeping law of 1901. The method of practice disclosed by this record may be harmless and useful, but it is a treatment for the sick, related, to say the least, to the practice of medicine or surgery, and so is within the terms of the statute. The legislature may have been mistaken in thinking it necessary to forbid such a method of practice, but the act was passed in the exercise of its police power, and we are not prepared to say judicially that such exercise of the power was either unreasonable or capricious, or that it bears no relation to the public health.

The judgment is affirmed.

Kennish, P. J., and Brown, J., concur.
33 L.R.A.(N.S.)

OKLAHOMA SUPREME COURT.

AMERICAN EXPRESS COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,
v.
STATE NATIONAL BANK.

(27 Okla. 824, 113 Pac. 711.)

Check — forgery — payment — retention of proceeds.

A payee receiving money from a bank upon a check purporting to be drawn upon it by one of its depositors, but the signature of which was in fact forged, is not entitled to retain the same, except upon the following combination of facts: First, that the payee was not negligent in receiving the check; second, that the payer was lacking in due care in paying the same; and, third, that upon the payer's action the payee has changed his position or would be in a worse condition if the mistake was corrected than if the payer had refused to pay the check at the time of its presentment.

(January 10, 1911.)

ERROR to the District Court for Oklahoma County to review a judgment in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover a certain amount paid by plaintiff to defendant on a forged check. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Flynn, Ames, & Chambers, for plaintiff in error:

When money has been paid on a check properly drawn on a bank wherein the purported maker of the check has money deposited subject to check, and the bank pays the check to an innocent holder thereof for value, the bank cannot recover the amount so paid from such holder if it afterward develops that the maker's name is forged to the check.

Neal v. Coburn, 92 Me. 139, 69 Am. St. Rep. 495, 42 Atl. 348; Germania Bank v. Boutell, 60 Minn. 189, 27 L.R.A. 635, 51 Am. St. Rep. 519, 62 N. W. 327; National Park Bank v. Ninth Nat. Bank, 46 N. Y. 80, 7 Am. Rep. 310; Bank of St. Albans v. Farmers' & M. Bank, 10 Vt. 141, 33 Am. Dec. 188; Star F. Ins. Co. v. New Hampshire Nat. Bank, 60 N. H. 442; Deposit Bank v. Fayette Nat. Bank, 90 Ky. 22, 7 L.R.A. 849, 13 S. W. 339; First Nat. Bank v. Marshalltown State Bank, 107 Iowa, 327, 44 L.R.A. 131, 77 N. W. 1045;

Headnote by KANE, J.

Note. — As to right of drawee of forged check or draft to recover money paid thereon, see notes to First Nat. Bank v. Wyndmere, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 49; Title Guarantee & T. Co. v. Haven, 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1308.

Farmers' & M. Bank v. Bank of Rutherford, 115 Tenn. 64, 112 Am. St. Rep. 817, 53 S. W. 939; Bank of United States v. Bank of Georgia, 10 Wheat. 333, 6 L. ed. 34; Morse, Banks & Bkg. §§ 462-466.

Messrs. Harris & Wilson and Whit M. Grant, for defendant in error:

One cannot retain funds received on a forged check.

First Nat. Bank v. Bank of Wyndmere, 15 N. D. 299, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 49, 125 Am. St. Rep. 588, 108 N. W. 546; Ford v. People's Bank, 74 S. C. 180, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 63, 114 Am. St. Rep. 986, 54 S. E. 204, 7 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 744; Rouvant v. San Antonio Nat. Bank, 63 Tex. 610; People's Bank v. Franklin Bank, 88 Tenn. 299, 6 L.R.A. 724, 17 Am. St. Rep. 884, 12 S. W. 726; First Nat. Bank v. First Nat. Bank, 151 Mass. 280, 21 Am. St. Rep. 450, 24 N. E. 44; Third Nat. Bank v. Allen, 59 Mo. 310; Dan. Neg. Inst. 684; Morse, Banks & Bkg. 3d ed. § 464; Canadian Bank v. Bingham, 30 Wash. 484, 60 L.R.A. 955, 71 Pac. 43; People's Nat. Bank v. Wheeler, 21 Okla. 387, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 816, 96 Pac. 619.

Kane, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This was an action commenced by the defendant in error, plaintiff below, against the plaintiff in error, defendant below, to recover back the sum of $852.55 paid by said bank to the express company on a forged check. Upon trial to a jury there was a verdict for the plaintiff upon which judgment was duly entered, to reverse which this proceeding in error was commenced.

The facts upon which the main proposition of law presented by counsel is based are undisputed, and are substantially as follows: On the 24th day of August, 1904, Weaver & Seaver were subagents of the American Express Company in Oklahoma City, and had authority to issue money orders for and on behalf of the express company to parties applying therefor. On this date Mr. Weaver of the firm received a telephone call from a person claiming to be A. C. Weiker, president of the O. K. Transfer & Storage Company, asking him if he would issue money orders to the amount of $850, and take the check of the company in payment thereof. Weaver said he would, and the person talking over the phone said he would send the check for the amount of the money orders right away. Shortly afterwards one R. W. Twombly, the bookkeeper and cashier of the company, came to Mr. Weaver, and presented the check signed, "O. K. Transfer & Storage Company, by A. C. Weiker," 33 L.R.A.(N.S.)

president," for $852.55, upon receipt of which Mr. Weaver issued the money orders for $850, and delivered the same to Twombly. The next day Weaver indorsed the check and turned same over to the express company, and on the following day the express company presented the check to the State National Bank, and the bank accepted the same and paid the money to the express company. Twenty days thereafter it was discovered that the name of A. C. Weiker had been forged to the check, and the bank immediately demanded of the express company the repayment of $852.55, which the express company refused, whereupon said action was commenced. The check was made payable to Weaver & Seaver. The O. K. Transfer & Storage Company were depositors with the State National Bank, and the custom of the O. K. Transfer & Storage Company was to sign checks as this one was signed. Counsel for plaintiff in error contend that the law applicable to the foregoing facts is that when a bank pays to an innocent holder who came into the possession thereof without any fault on his part the amount of a check purporting to be drawn upon it by one of its depositors, but the signature of which was in fact forged, the bank cannot recover back the amount from such holder. The court below submitted the case to the jury upon the theory that, although the express company may not have been negligent in accepting the check, still, if the payment thereof by the bank did not put the payee in a worse position than if payment had been refused, the bank was entitled to recover.

The old doctrine was that a bank was bound to know its correspondents' signatures, and could not recover money paid upon a forgery of the drawers' name, because it was said the drawee was negligent not to know the forgery, and having parted with his money by reason of his own negligence, he cannot be permitted to recover it back when he afterward discovers his error. The leading case sustaining this proposition is Price v. Neal, 3 Burr, 1354, 1 W. Bl. 390, decided in 1762. A great many of the courts that continue to follow the old rule criticize it, but follow it upon the ground that it has been established by decisions which have been so long acted upon that it is not proper to disturb them. All the text-book writers on Banks and Banking that we have access to disapprove the old rule as unsound and unjust. Mr. Morse says of it: "This doctrine is fast fading into the misty past, where it belongs. It is almost dead, the funeral notices are ready, and no tears will be shed, for it was founded in misconception of the fundamental principles of law and common sense." 2 Morse, Banks & Bkg. § 464. Mr. Bolles says it is a hard rule. "It runs against the great rule that money paid by mistake may be recovered back, which is constantly growing in judicial favor." 2 Bolles, Modern Law of Bkg. 721. Magee and Zane say that the rule formerly prevailing has been modified by the courts with a view to doing equity between the parties. Cyc. Law & Proc. states the modern rule to be that when payment is made to the holder of forged paper who has come into possession of it without any fault on his part, and his situation would be rendered worse if compelled to refund than it was before receiving payment, the money cannot be recovered from him. If, however, he has been negligent in any regard, he cannot retain the money. To justify him in doing so the bank alone must have been negligent. If neither party has been negligent, or both have been, then the bank can recover the money. A great many authorities are compiled in a note purporting to sustain the text, and all do so, we think, to a greater or less extent. That the old rule is unsound and illogical is unquestionably true. It is based upon the theory that the mere fact that B was negligent gives A a right to B's property, which A did not have before the negligence, without regard to the question whether A has sustained any loss by the negligence or not. In any other case involving the question of negligence, it is not enough to create legal liability, or to give A a right to acquire or retain the property of B, to show merely that A has not been negligent. One more element is necessary, namely, that damage to A, being himself innocent in the matter, should naturally and proximately result from B's negligence. 2 Morse, Banks & Bkg. supra. No good reason occurs to us for the foregoing rule should not be applied to forgery cases in this state. If there was a reason for the exception originally, it does not exist at the present time in this new state. We have not the same reasons for following an unsound precedent that exists in the older states. The old rule has not become a part of our common law by general usage or custom, nor has it been expressly or impliedly made part of our law by statute. Moreover, we are not the first to tread the path that leads away from the old rule. We find it explored by the text-writers and blazed by the decisions of courts of high authority. Without any actual change in the abstract doctrine as stated by the old rule, the gradual but sure tendency of the modern decisions is to put as heavy a burden of responsibility upon the payee as upon the drawee until the 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) interesting question has come to be whether or not the payee has done his full duty, or, if he has and the negligence is with the bank, whether the payee will be worse off by correcting the error than if payment had been refused. In Ellis v. Ohio L. Ins. & T. Co. 4 Ohio St. 628, 64 Am. Dec. 610, it was held that to enable a holder to retain money paid to him on forged paper, he must put the bank alone in the negligence, and be able to say that the mistake of the bank cannot now be corrected without placing the holder in a worse position than though payment had been refused. If he cannot say this, and especially if the failure to detect the forgery can be traced to his disregard of duty in negligently omitting some precaution he had undertaken to perform, he fails to establish a superior equity of the money, and cannot with good conscience retain it.

Other cases that modify the old rule are Canadian Bank of Commerce Case, 30 Wash. 484, 60 L.R.A. 955, 71 Pac. 43; First Nat. Bank v. First Nat. Bank, 151 Mass. 280, 21 Am. St. Rep. 450, 24 N. E. 44; First Nat. Bank v. Ricker, 71 Ill. 439, 22 Am. Rep. 104; First Nat. Bank v. State Bank, 22 Neb. 769, 3 Am. St. Rep. 294, 36 N. W. 289. In First Nat. Bank v. Bank of Wyndmere, 15 N. D. 299, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 49, 125 Am. St. Rep. 588, 108 N. W. 546, the old doctrine is specifically disapproved, the court holding that "the drawee of a forged check who has paid the same without detecting the forgery may, upon discovery of the forgery, recover the money paid from the party who received the money, even though the latter was a good-faith holder, provided the latter has not been misled or prejudiced by the drawee's failure to detect the forgery;" and that "the burden of showing that he has been misled or prejudiced by the drawee's mistake in such a case rests upon him who claims the right to retain the money for that reason." Jones v. Miners' & M. Bank, 144 Mo. App. 428, 128 S. W. 829, is also published in 71 Cent. L. J. 137, where, in a note, the editor of that publication, among other cases, calls attention to First Nat. Bank v. Bank of Wyndmere, supra. Speaking of that case, the editor continues: "The rule this last case opposes certainly seems unsound. It has its basis solely upon a mistake of fact, arising possibly out of mere lapse of attention, while the taking of the forged paper is through deliberate act. To say slips of attention may not be cured when they cause no substantial change in the situation certainly has no basis in justice, and any commercial rules whose efficiency necessitate disregard of justice ought to be amended." We agree with the learn-editor, and, as this is the first case wherein the question has arisen in this jurisdiction, we commit this court to the doctrine that a payee receiving money from a bank upon a check purporting to be drawn upon it by one of its depositors, but the signature of which was in fact forged, is not entitled to retain the same, except upon the following combination of facts: First, that the payee was not negligent in receiving the check; second, that the payer was lacking in due care in paying the same; and, third, that upon the payer's action the payee has changed his position or would be in a worse condition if the mistake was corrected than if the payer had refused to pay the check at the time of its presentment.

As the court below submitted the case at bar to the jury upon instructions which substantially conform to this view of the law, its judgment is affirmed.

Dunn, Ch. J., and Williams, Hayes, and Turner, JJ., concur.

VERMONT SUPREME COURT.

MARTHA M. HALL, Appt.,

v.

GEORGE W. HALL'S ESTATE.

(— Vt. —, 78 Atl. 971.)

Will — limitation of heirs — life estate.

A devise to one, "his heirs, viz., his children, grandchildren, and assigns," limits the word "heirs" to the class named, and therefore passes only a life estate to the first taker.

(January 27, 1911.)

Note. — Effect of videlicet following word "heirs" in a grant or devise of real property to restrict estate given to the first taker.

Few cases have been found where the word "heirs" in a deed or will is followed by a videlicet. The question of restrictions or qualifications upon the use or meaning of the word "heirs" generally arises in phrases of a different character, as, for example, in such expressions as "heirs of the body," "heirs by" a certain person, or like phrases applying to particular classes of heirs, or in explanatory phrases relating to certain contingencies.

This note is intended to be limited to cases in which the videlicet occurs; for while there are cases in which the phrase is nearly if not entirely the same in meaning as if a videlicet had been employed, any other rule broadens imperceptibly into the general subjects of the effect of the use of

33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

EXCEPTIONS by the widow of George W. Hall, deceased, to an order of the Windham County Court affirming a decree of the Probate Court for the District of Westminster, distributing the estate of deceased to her for life only. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Davis & Davis, for appellant:

Martha M. Hall took an estate in fee simple.

Johnson v. Whiton, 159 Mass. 424, 34 N. E. 542; Smith v. Rice, 183 Mass. 251, 66 N. E. 806.

There are no previous or subsequent words indicating life estate in Martha M. Hall, as in the following cases:

McCloskey v. Gleason, 56 Vt. 264, 48 Am. Rep. 770; Richardson v. Paige, 54 Vt. 373; Shepard v. Shepard, 60 Vt. 109, 14 Atl. 536; Smith v. Hastings, 29 Vt. 240; Blake v. Stone, 27 Vt. 475.

The words "her children and grandchildren" are void for repugnancy, if by those words they meant to alter the meaning of "heirs."

Stowell v. Hastings, 59 Vt. 495, 59 Am. Rep. 748, 8 Atl. 738, 4 Kent, Com. 9th ed. *536.

Messrs. Stickney, Sargent, & Skeels for appellee.

Haselton, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal from the decree of the probate court for the district of Westminster distributing the estate of George W. Hall, deceased. Under the will of George W. Hall, certain pieces of his real estate were decreed to his widow, Martha M. Hall, for life, and in the county court, on the construction of the will, judgment was rendered affirming the decree of the probate court. The only question made in the coun-words qualifying or restricting the meaning of the word "heirs," and of the effect of subsequent words in restriction of or repugnance to a grant or devise.

As to "children" as a word of purchase or limitation, see the note to Wills v. Foltz, 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 283.

As to the effect of qualifying or explanatory words upon limitations to heirs after a grant or devise of a freehold estate, see the note on the rule in Shelley's Case, 29 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1077 et seq.

The reader is reminded that where a grant or devise is "to A and his heirs," "heirs" is a word of limitation; so, where the grant or devise is "to A for life, remainder to his heirs," "heirs" is a word of limitation under the rule in Shelley's Case, unless that rule is abolished in the jurisdiction. His attention is further directed to the statement in Tallman v. Wood, 26 Wend. 9, where it was said that coeval with the rule in Shelley's Case "it ty court was whether the real estate in question should have been decreed to the widow in fee simple, instead of for life. That is the question brought before us by an exception taken to the judgment of the county court, and is the sole question here considered.

The parcels of real estate with which this case is concerned were devised "to said Martha M., her heirs, viz., her children and grandchildren and assigns." The cardinal rule in the construction of wills is that effect is to be given to the intention of the testator, so far as it can be gathered from the whole instrument and can be legally carried out. So true is this that, according to an observation of Lord Mansfield, it has often been said to be "a sort of paradox" to cite cases upon the construction of wills. But in the context Mansfield further said that the intent cannot be gathered by conjecture, and that established rules of construction are to be adhered to, unless they are manifestly inconsistent with the intent of the testator. Pistol ex dem. Riccardson v. Riccardson, 3 Dougl. K. B. 361. And again, while laying down the duty of the court to construe a will according to the intent of the testator, he emphasized the truth that a court must not in that matter act upon mere conjecture. Chapman v. Brown, 3 Burr. 1626. These rules were declared for the sake of certainty, which, as was said by Sir James Burrow in the preface to his Reports, is "the mother of security and peace." The principles thus ex-has been held that where there are any superadded words in the deed or devise,—words of explanation, which plainly show that the grantor or devisor did not mean to use the term 'heirs' in a technical sense, but merely as a description of persons to whom he intends the estate shall go after the death of the first taker,—the court will effectuate such intent, and restrain the grant or devise to an estate for life. . . . The heirs then are regarded as purchasers, constituting a new stock with reference to whom the future succession shall be regulated."

The nature of a videlicet or scilicet is explained with lucidity in Stukeley v. Butler, Hobart, 168, where a general grant of woods upon a manor was followed by "viz." with particular mention of parts of the manor, and it was held that the grant was not restricted to the parts specially mentioned, and that if what follows the "viz." is repugnant to the grant, the viz. and what is so repugnant is void. Lord Hobart there said inter alia: "Now I come to the use of a (viz.) or (sc.) or in English (that is to say) and the nature and force of it. It is neither a direct several clause, nor a direct entire clause, but it is intermedia. First, it is clear, that it is not a substantive clause of itself, and therefore you can neither begin a sentence with it, nor make a sentence of it by itself; but it is (as I may say) clausula ancillaris, a kind of handmaid to another clause, and to deliver her mind, not her own. And therefore it is a kind of interpreter; her natural and proper use of it is to particularize that that is before general, or distribute that that is in gross, or to explain that that is doubtful and obscure. First, it must not be contrary to the premises. . . . Next, it must neither increase nor diminish, for it is not the nature of it, to give of itself: as if I have in D Black-Acre, White-Acre, and Green-Acre; and I grant unto you all my lands in D, that is to say, Black-Acre and White-Acre, yet Green-Acre shall pass too; but if I add under the viz. land lying out of the town of D it shall not pass. . . . But now I grant, on the other side, that a viz. may work a restriction where the former words were not express and special, but so indifferent, as they may receive such a restriction without apparent injury; though those former words by construction of law would have had a larger sense, if the viz. had not been. . . . One gave land to A and B habendum to A for life, and after his decease to B, this was holden good. So, Littleton, 66, if a man give land to two habendum to them, sc., the one moiety to the one, and the other moiety to the other, it is good. For note, that the substance of the premises is not altered, for both of them have the whole in use, in common as they should have had it by the premises jointly, which is but a point of quality, or accident altered. But if it were 20 acres to two, sc., 10 to one and 10 to another, it were void. So, upon the cases 21 H. 6. 7. and 13 H. 7. 24, I hold, if I grant land to one, and his heirs, viz., the heirs of his body, it is an estate tail."

33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Where the conveyance was "to the said Hannah Hollister, and her heirs or children, to wit, the children begotten by her present husband, Isaac Hollister, to the exclusion of any others and her assigns forever," it was held that this was an estate tail in Hannah as donee in tail. Hollister v. Ramsey, 30 Ohio L. J. 38.

It will be seen that the decision in HALL v. HALL is in accord with that in Hollister v. Ramsey, but that the Vermont court is careful to limit the case to the precise question arising under the peculiar clause in Hall's will, which was "to said Martha M., her heirs," etc., and not "to said Martha M., and her heirs," etc. The omission of the word "and" may perhaps suffice to distinguish HALL v. HALL from Brasington v. Hanson, infra, to which, however, the Vermont court does not refer, nor does it allude to the possibility that a tenancy in common was created in which the taker first named took in common with those secondly mentioned, considering that the only question involved was whether the first taker took a fee or a life estate.

In a deed, Sally Brasington was named pressed have uniformly governed the construction of wills in this court. Harris v. Harris, 82 Vt. 199, 205, 72 Atl. 912; Shepard v. Shepard, 60 Vt. 109, 116, 14 Atl. 536; McCloskey v. Gleason, 56 Vt. 264, 267, 48 Am. Rep. 770; Richardson v. Paige, 54 Vt. 373; Giddings v. Smith, 15 Vt. 344; Chaplin v. Doty, 60 Vt. 712, 15 Atl. 362; Conant v. Palmer, 63 Vt. 310, 21 Atl. 1101.

Thus much has been said because the will in question contains several clauses, and because both sides to this controversy refer to other parts of the will as supporting their respective claims as to the construction of the provision immediately under consideration, and because from a careful reading of the entire will we find nothing elsewhere than in the clause to be construed to give

as the party of the second part, and the grant was to "the said party of the second part, her heirs," and immediately after the description were the words, "for the only use and behoof of the said Sally Brasington and her heirs, viz., Samuel, Milton, Oscar, and Albert H. Brasington;" the habendum was "to have and to hold the premises hereby granted, with the appurtenances, unto the said party of the second part, her heirs, to the use of the said party of the second part her heirs forever," and the warranty was "to the said party of the second part, her heirs." The four names following the videlicet were those of four of Sally's fourteen children. The court said: "The grant to the said Sally is to her and her heirs. The word 'assigns' is stricken out wherever it occurs in the deed. This, however, is not important, as a grant to a man and his heirs carries with it the estate to his assigns by operation of law. It was contended by the appellants that Sally Brasington took but a life estate and that no title vested in the designated heirs until her death. We do not think the word 'heirs' in this deed was intended to be used in its ordinary sense. On the contrary, we think it means children. Had the conveyance been to her, and to children as a class, the contention of the appellants would have had more force. But it was not to a class, but to certain designated children, and we think the learned judge below was right in holding that the title was vested in Sally Brasington and her four children named, as tenants in common. The language of the deed is unusual, and we know of no case that is upon all fours with it." Brasington v. Hanson, 149 Pa. 289, 24 Atl. 344.

Where a deed did "grant, bargain, and sell unto the said Nathaniel Allen and Hannah, his wife, for and during their lives or the life of the longest liver or survivor of them in trust to and for their children, their lawful heirs, namely: William Allen, now begotten, and to their children and heirs to be begotten, being the issue of her, the said Hannah Doctor, by her said husband, Nathaniel Allen" 33 L.R.A. (N.S.) rise to more than the merest conjectures as to the intention of the testator in drawing this clause, and because such mere conjectures are conflicting. We have, then, to determine whether, as is claimed, Martha M. Hall took an estate in fee simple by virtue of the phrase, "to said Martha M., her heirs, viz., her children and grandchildren and assigns." It is claimed by the appellant that the words, "viz. her children and grandchildren," are void on the ground that they are repugnant to what precedes them. If they are so, the appellant took an estate in fee simple. It is claimed in behalf of the defendant estate, and the court below held, that those words are not repugnant, but explanatory and restrictive, and that the result of the whole clause, so far as it con-

(here follows description of the land), "to have and to hold the said messuage, tenement, or tract of land containing 45 acres, hereditaments, hereby granted, mentioned, or intended so to be, with the appurtenances, unto the said Nathaniel Allen and Hannah, his wife, in trust to the only proper use and behoof of the said Nathaniel Allen and Hannah, his wife, in trust for their heirs forever." It was held that the word "heirs" was used for children, that the parents took nothing except a naked trust for their issue. Warn v. Brown, 102 Pa. 347.

Reference may be here made to Doe ex dem. Williams v. Beasley, 60 N. C. (1 Winat. L.) 102, although the deed there considered contained no videlicet. It appeared that Jesse Potts, by deed, in consideration of natural love and affection for his daughter, Nancy C. Potts, granted and confirmed "unto the said Nancy C. Potts" a certain tract, "Provided, my daughter, Nancy C. Potts, should have an heir or heirs of her body to live and survive; then, and in that case, all the property above given is to belong to the said heirs, to them and their heirs forever. But if it should so happen that my daughter should die, and not leave any surviving heir or heirs of her body, in that case, all the property is to descend back to the said Jesse and his heirs, the same as if the said land and other property had never been given to the said Nancy C. Potts. . . . But if the said Nancy C. Potts should die and leave an heir or heirs of her body, in that case, said heirs, being her children or child, is to hold, occupy, and possess all the property herein given to them and their heirs forever." It was held that the words "an heir or heirs of her body" were used in the sense of child or children, and that Nancy took a life estate with remainder to her children or their heirs, but if she died leaving no children at her death, then over.

While not strictly within the scope of this note, the case of Blake v. Stone, 27 Vt. 475, is of interest here as to the effect of excluding a particular heir. In that case the habendum of the deed in ques-cerns the appellant, is that she takes a life estate only.

The appellant claims that a note of Sergeant Williams, appended to Dakin's Case, 2 Wms' Saund. 290, 291, has been the cause of much error, and that this alleged error governed the court below in this case. The note in question is this: "So a videlicet may sometimes restrain the generality of the former words, where they are not express and special, but stand indifferent, so as to be capable of being restrained without apparent injury to them; as if lands be granted to a man and his heirs, that is to say, the heirs of his body, it is an estate tail." Hobart, 175, Stukeley v. Butler, is cited by the annotator; but the appellant says that the passage is a mere dictum of the annotator. If this were correct, it would be high authority; for the notes of Sergeant Williams to the cases in Saunders have received frequent, uniform, and almost unqualified praise from the bench in England and in America. To cite a conspicuous instance, Lord Eldon referred to these notes in the House of Lords, and said that while Sergeant Williams held no judicial position, it would be sufficiently flattering to anyone in such a position to have it said of him that he was as good a common lawyer as the sergeant; "for," said Eldon, "no man ever lived to whom the character of a great common lawyer more perfectly applied." Johnes v. Johnes, 3 Dow, P. C. 15.

But the passage from the note of Sergeant Williams is not a dictum of his, but is made up of two propositions of Lord Hobart in the case of Stukeley v. Butler, to which the note refers. For there in one place, Lord Hobart says, that "a viz. may work a restriction where the former words were not express and special, but so indifferent as they may receive such a restriction without apparent injury; though those former words by construction of law would have had a larger sense if the viz. had not been." And in another place in the opinion he says: "If I grant land to one and his heirs, viz., the heirs of his body, it is an estate tail." It is true that the case did not require all this to be said; but it did require a construction of a videlicet as used in an instrument to be construed, and the conclusion was reached through an exhaustive and luminous discussion of the office of a videlicet pertinent throughout to the point decided. If the doctrine laid down by Lord Hobart is to be treated as a dictum, it was not "obiter," but judicial, and of high authority. Derosia v. Firland, 83 Vt. 372, 381, 28 L.R.A.(N.S.) 577, 76 Atl. 153. It was, indeed, like many of the "resolutions" or "rules" to be found in Coke's Reports, not necessary to the decision of the particular tion was, "To have and to hold the same to the said Leonard Burt for and during the term of his, the said Leonard Burt's, natural life, and no longer, and in remainder to the heirs of his, the said Leonard Burt's body (Charles Burt, son of the said Leonard, excepted), forever;" and it was held that Leonard took but a life estate, and that the remainder was in fee.

While without the scope of this note, reference may be here made to cases where a gift in fee is made to "heirs" followed by a videlicet.

Thus, where a testatrix provided in her will, "I bequeath and devise one half of the remainder of my estate, whether it be real, personal, or mixed, to my heirs Zephaniah P. Proctor and Rebecca P. Swallow, and the remaining half to the heirs of Isaac O. Taylor, my late husband, namely, Mary T. Bennett, Samuel S. Taylor, and Don G. Taylor, the son of Alpheus Taylor, deceased," and Proctor, Bennett, and Don G. Taylor predeceased her, it was held that the gifts of the halves were to classes, and that Samuel S. Taylor took the entire one half given to the husband's heirs, the court considering the case a very close one. Swallow v. Swallow, 166 Mass. 241, 44 N. E. 132.

The residuary clause of a will was as follows: "After the death of my wife, Harriet Evans, my will is that the balance of my estate, real and personal, after paying all former bequeaths, shall be sold and equally divided among my legal heirs, including Frances E. Evans and Laura Nichols and David E. Wyncoop, which is to have their equal share of the residue over and above what has already been given to them. True meaning of above bequeaths is that said balance or residue shall be divided equally among my nephews and nieces; that is to say, John Evans' heirs, five; Thomas Evans' heirs, two; C. G. Evans' heirs, two; Nancy Camp's heirs, two; Mary Carr's heirs, four. So, the above residue will be divided into fifteen shares in all." When the testator made his will there were five of John Evans' children living, two of Thomas Evans', two of C. G. Evans', two of Nancy Camp's, and four of Mary Evans'. One of John Evans' children, Nettie Fonner, died prior to the testator, leaving five children who survived him. One of C. G. Evans' children, David H. Evans, died after the will was made and prior to the testator, without issue. Mrs. Mary Carr, sister of the testator, survived him. David E. Wyncoop was not the nephew of the testator, but of his wife. It was held that the residuary estate was to be divided equally among the surviving nephews and nieces, Wyncoop sharing with them,—the children of the deceased nieces saving her share, under the Pennsylvania statute preventing the lapse of legacies to the children of deceased brothers and sisters. Re Evans, 23 Pittsb. L. J. N. S. 140. B. B. B.

case in which they respectively are found, but which, nevertheless, constitute in considerable measure the wealth of the common law.

The doctrine stated by Lord Hobart, and restated by Sergeant Williams, has been reiterated by many text writers, and has been the basis of numerous decisions, and we entertain no doubt of its soundness. Very clearly, too, it applies here; and, since the words "children and grandchildren" designate a class of heirs, they operate to limit the estate of the appellant to an estate for life, unless they are prevented from having that effect by the words "and assigns," which follow them. The effect of the words "and assigns" was not referred to in argument; but we have given those words due consideration. In respect to them the case of Thompson v. Carl, 51 Vt. 408, is much in point. There the question was as to the construction of a deed of land to "Betsey Thompson, and her legal heirs by Samuel Thompson, Jr., and assigns forever." The habendum was "to have and to hold to the said Betsey, her heirs, and assigns," and the covenant was with the said Betsey, her heirs, and assigns. It was held that the granting part of the deed created what would have been an estate tail at common law, and that so under our statute Betsey Thompson took only a life estate. It was there held that the use of the words "and assigns" might as well mean the assigns of the designated heirs as of the first taker, or that the words "and assigns" might properly mean the assigns of the first taker or of her specified heirs of such estate as each took and so could assign. It is true that the rules governing the construction of deeds are in some respects more technical than the rules applicable in the construction of wills. But in the case referred to the words "and assigns" are considered for their bearing upon the question of what grant was actually intended to be made, and we think that here, as there, they do not modify the meaning of the associated words, and that counsel were justified in basing no argument upon their use.

Johnson v. Whiton, 159 Mass. 424, 34 N. E. 542, is a case somewhat relied on by the appellant. There a testator devised and bequeathed an estate to a granddaughter "and her heirs on her father's side." It was considered that the testator had attempted to create a new kind of inheritance, and the qualifying words were treated as of no force, 33 L.R.A. (N.S.) and were rejected, in accordance with what is said by Littleton: "If a man give lands or tenements to another to have and to hold to him and to his heirs males, or to his heirs females, he to whom such a gift is made hath a fee simple, because it is not limited by the gift of what body the issue male or female shall be, and so it cannot in any wise be taken by the equity of the said statute, and therefore he hath a fee simple." Littleton, Tenures, § 31. By "the said statute" Littleton refers to the Statute of Westminster, 13 Edw. I, chap. 1 (1285).

We are also referred to Smith v. Rice, 183 Mass. 251, 66 N. E. 806. In that case an estate was devised to a son, "to have and to hold the same to him, his heirs, assigns, executors, and administrators, to his and their use and behoof forever." The words quoted were apt to convey a fee simple, and the court so held, and found no foundation for the claim made that they showed an intention to convey an estate tail, or that at common law they could have had that effect. The conclusion of the court was an obvious one.

Several Kentucky cases are cited by the appellant, and more from that state might be referred to; for this subject has many times been forced upon the attention of the supreme court of Kentucky, and the individual cases there arising have been dealt with in accordance with sound and sensible doctrine. We note that there, when a devise is to a wife and her children, whatever the form of the expression used, it is, with that court, to use its own language, "the constant and uniform tendency . . . to hold that the wife takes a life estate only, and that the children take in remainder." In the absence of anything in the instrument to indicate a different intention that court infers that, where a wife and children are named, such a holding is more consonant than any other with the wishes of the testator. Hood v. Dawson, 98 Ky. 285, 33 S. W. 75.

We do not go outside of the very question raised and argued, the question of what estate the widow, Martha M. Hall, took under the clause considered. That question was decided by the probate court, and by the county court, in accordance with the sound principles governing our own cases, those herein cited and others; and accordingly:

Judgment is affirmed. Let the result be certified to the Probate Court.

ARIZONA SUPREME COURT.

L. J. BOURDREAUX, Admr., etc., of Clifford E. Youmans, Deceased, Appt.,

v.

TUCSON GAS, ELECTRIC LIGHT, & POWER COMPANY.

(— Ariz. —, 114 Pac. 547).

Limitation of actions — amendment of demurrable complaint — supplying defects — permissibility.

An amendment after the completion of the limitation period, of a complaint demurrable for failure to state facts sufficient

Note. — Relation of new pleadings to statute of limitations.

This note is supplementary to the note to Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Bagley, 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 259.

As to amendment of pleading after limitation period, by changing from common law to statute, or vice versa, or from statute of one jurisdiction to statute of another, see note to Allen v. Tuscarora Valley R. Co. 30 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1096.

An amendment to a declaration, which sets up no new cause of action, and makes no new demand, relates back to the commencement of the action, and the running of the statute against the claim so pleaded is arrested at that point. Martin v. Gregory, 86 Ark. 280, 110 S. W. 1046; Sexton Rice & Irrig. Co. v. Sexton, 48 Tex. Civ. App. 190, 106 S. W. 728; Benson v. Ottumwa, 143 Iowa, 349, 121 N. W. 1065; Clark v. Oregon Short Line R. Co. 38 Mont. 177, 99 Pac. 298; McAuley v. Casualty Co. 39 Mont. 185, 102 Pac. 586; Parlin & O. Co. v. Glover, 45 Tex. Civ. App. 93, 99 S. W. 592; Johnson v. American Smelting & Ref. Co. 80 Neb. 250, 114 N. W. 144, 116 N. W. 517; Yazoo & M. Valley R. Co. v. Rivers, 93 Miss. 557, 46 So. 705; Dallas Mfg. Co. v. Townes, 162 Ala. 630, 50 So. 157; Regan v. Keyes, 204 Mass. 294, 90 N. E. 847; Central R. Co. v. Williams, 163 Ala. 119, 50 So. 328; Dittgen v. Racine Paper Goods Co. 164 Fed. 85, affirmed in 96 C. C. A. 433, 171 Fed. 631; Woodstock Iron Works v. Kline, 149 Ala. 391, 43 So. 362; Mobile Light & R. Co. v. Bell, 153 Ala. 90, 45 So. 56; Townes v. Dallas Mfg. Co. 154 Ala. 612, 45 So. 696; Alabama Consol. Coal & I. Co. v. Heald, 154 Ala. 580, 45 So. 686; Gaines v. Birmingham R. Light & P. Co. 164 Ala. 6, 51 So. 238; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Hooker, 161 Ala. 312, 50 So. 56; Mitchellree School Twp. v. Carnahan, 42 Ind. App. 473, 84 N. E. 520; Sanders v. Allen, 135 Ga. 173, 68 S. E. 1102; Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. McDonald, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 120 S. W. 494; Columbia Heights Realty Co. v. Macfarland, 31 App. D. C. 112; El Paso & S. W. R. Co. v. Harris, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 110 S. W. 145; Harrod 33 L.R.A.(N.S.)

to constitute a cause of action, is permissible, if the facts stated in the original complaint are sufficient when read in the light of the amendment, to disclose that the amendment is but the perfection of the imperfect statement of the cause of action attempted to be pleaded, and not the statement of a new or different cause of action.

(Doan, J., dissents.)

(March 27, 1911.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the District Court for Pima County dismissing the complaint in an action brought to recover damages for the wrongful death of plaintiff's intestate, alleged

v. Bisson, — Ind. App. —, 93 N. E. 1093; Tomson v. Iowa State Traveling Men's Asso. — Neb. —, 129 N. W. 529; Gatta v. Philadelphia, B. & W. R. Co. — Del. —, 76 Atl. 56; Oolitic Stone Co. v. Ridge — Ind. —, 91 N. E. 944; Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Hill, 146 Ala. 240, 40 So. 612; Z. J. Fort Produce Co. v. Southwestern Grain & Produce Co. — Okla. —, 108 Pac. 386.

And so, amendments which only amplify or make more specific the averments in the original petition, or which state the wrong suffered or right relied on in a different form, are ordinarily permissible, and will relate back to the beginning of the action. Union P. R. Co. v. Sweet, 78 Kan. 243, 96 Pac. 657; Crotty v. Chicago G. W. R. Co. 95 C. C. A. 91, 169 Fed. 593; Wise Terminal Co. v. McCormick, 107 Va. 376, 58 S. E. 584; Georgia B. Swift Co. v. Gaylord, 229 Ill. 330, 82 N. E. 299; Beasley v. Baltimore & P. R. Co. 27 App. D. C. 595, 6 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1048; Oolitic Stone Co. v. Ridge, — Ind. —, 91 N. E. 944; Joerg v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 152 Ill. App. 229; Western Coal & Min. Co. v. Corkille, — Ark. —, 131 S. W. 963; Green v. Loftus, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 132 S. W. 502; Stanley v. Anderson, 107 Mich. 384, 65 N. W. 247; Curry v. Southern R. Co. 148 Ala. 57, 42 So. 447; Gilliland v. Ellison, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 137 S. W. 168.

So, of amendments introduced merely to cure the description of the cause of action already alleged. Southern R. Co. v. Cunningham, 162 Ala. 147, 44 So. 658; Hess v. Birmingham R. Light & P. Co. 149 Ala. 499, 42 So. 595.

And an amendment adding other grounds for damages in an action for interference with bodies in a burial lot does not state a new cause of action. Anderson v. Acheson, 132 Iowa, 744, 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 217, 110 N. W. 335.

An amendment which introduces a new or different cause of action, and makes a new or different demand, does not relate back to the beginning of the action, so as to stop the running of the statute of limitations, but is the equivalent of a fresh suit upon a new cause of action, and the

to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. S. W. Purcell, Edwin F. Jones, and Lewis C. O'Connor, for appellant:

The complaint is only a defective statement of a good cause of action, and the amendment made introduces no new cause of action, and is in no sense a departure from the cause of action set up in the original complaint.

Tiffany, Death by Wrongful Act, § 187; Ellison v. Georgia R. & Bkg. Co. 87 Ga. 691, 13 S. E. 809; Klemm v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 78 Hun, 277, 28 N. Y. Supp. 861; 31 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 440; Pullen statute continues to run until the amendment is filed. Maegerlein v. Chicago, 141 Ill. App. 414, affirmed in 237 Ill. 159, 86 N. E. 670; Wasson v. Boland, 136 Mo. App. 622, 118 S. W. 663; Van Cleve v. Radford, 149 Mich. 106, 112 N. W. 754; Raley v. Evansville Gas & Electric Light Co. — Ind. App. —, 90 N. E. 783; Dobbs v. Pearl, 118 N. Y. Supp. 485; Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Clippenger, 47 Tex. Civ. App. 510, 106 S. W. 155; Rauer's Law & Collection Co. v. Lefingwell, 11 Cal. App. 494, 105 Pac. 427; Melvin v. Hagadorn, 87 Neb. 398, 127 N. W. 139; Hall v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 157 Fed. 464; Klugman v. Sanitary Laundry Co. 141 Ill. App. 422; Mitchell Coal & Coke Co. v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 181 Fed. 403; Henderson v. Moweaqua Coal Min. & Mfg. Co. 145 Ill. App. 637; Van Cleve v. Radford, 149 Mich. 106, 112 N. W. 754; Lane v. Sayre Water Co. 220 Pa. 599, 69 Atl. 1126; Mahoney v. Park Steel Co. 217 Pa. 20, 66 Atl. 90; Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. McDonald, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 120 S. W. 494.

Where the original declaration fails to state a cause of action, and by amendment a new cause of action is introduced after the time fixed by the statute for bringing suit has expired, a plea of the statute of limitations is good. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Enright, 227 Ill. 403, 81 N. E. 374; Powers v. Badger Lumber Co. 75 Kan. 687, 90 Pac. 254; Bahr v. National Safe Deposit Co. 234 Ill. 101, 84 N. E. 717; Walters v. Ottawa, 240 Ill. 259, 88 N. E. 651.

Where the original complaint states no cause of action whatever, it will not arrest the running of the statute, and an amendment made after the bar of the statute is complete will be regarded as the beginning of the action in reckoning the statutory period of limitations. Clark v. Oregon Short Line R. Co. 38 Mont. 177, 99 Pac. 298.

But if the original declaration states a cause of action, but states it defectively, an amended declaration restating the same cause of action with more particularity is not subject to such defense. Lee v. Re- 33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

v. Hutchinson, 25 Me. 249; Taylor v. Monroe, 43 Conn. 36; Cooke v. Cooke, 43 Md. 522; State use of Zier v. Chesapeake Beach R. Co. 98 Md. 35, 56 Atl. 385; Lassiter v. Norfolk & C. R. Co. 136 N. C. 89, 48 S. E. 644, 1 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 456; Webb v. Hicks, 125 N. C. 201, 34 S. E. 395; Savannah, F. & W. R. Co. v. Smith, 93 Ga. 742, 21 S. E. 157; Love v. Southern R. Co. 108 Tenn. 104, 55 L.R.A. 472, 65 S. W. 475; Ladd v. Ladd, 121 N. C. 121, 28 S. E. 190.

A missing allegation, without the presence of which in pleading and proof there can be no recovery, relates back, and is unaffected by the statute of limitations expiring after suit was begun, and before the amendment was made.

public Iron & Steel Co. 241 Ill. 372, 89 N. E. 655.

Illustrative cases—identity maintained.

The following amendments have been held not to change the cause of action originally pleaded, and therefore not to admit the bar of the statute, although the limitation period expired in the interval between the original and amended pleading:

—an amendment to a complaint for personal injuries, that made no change in the allegations, except that when the train ran on the switch, it was wrecked by being derailed, instead of colliding with another train, as alleged in the original petition. Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Clippenger, 47 Tex. Civ. App. 510, 106 S. W. 155;

—an amendment in an action for personal injuries, stating an additional ground of defendant's negligence. Johnson v. Texas C. R. Co. 42 Tex. Civ. App. 604, 93 S. W. 433;

—an amendment of a complaint for commissions for selling land, which merely sets out more fully the transaction on which plaintiff's demand is based. Newsom v. Sharman, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 119 S. W. 912;

—an amendment supplying the omission of an explicit averment in the original declaration in action for death, that the parents and sisters, mentioned in that declaration as surviving the deceased, and alleged to have been deprived of their support, were deceased's next of kin. Byrne v. Marshall Field & Co. 237 Ill. 384, 86 N. E. 748, affirming 142 Ill. App. 72;

—an amendment showing that the original note, and not a "copy" thereof, as originally alleged, was attached to the petition. Bradley v. Pinney, 77 Kan. 763, 93 Pac. 585;

—an amendment alleging that the contract was made with the wife alone, it having been originally pleaded as the joint and several obligation of the husband and wife. Calloway v. Oro Min. Co. 5 Cal. App. 191, 89 Pac. 1070;

Smith v. Georgia R. & Bkg. Co. 87 Ga. 784, 13 S. E. 904; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Pointer, 113 Ky. 952, 69 S. W. 1108; Chicago City R. Co. v. Hackendahl, 188 Ill. 300, 58 N. E. 930; Eshelman v. People, 52 Ill. App. 621; Chicago City R. Co. v. Cooney, 196 Ill. 466, 63 N. E. 1029; Springfield Engine & Thresher Co. v. Michener, 23 Ind. App. 130, 55 N. E. 32; Detroit v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 125 Mich. 634, 85 N. W. 1; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Young, 67 Neb. 568, 93 N. W. 922; Crotty v. Chicago G. W. R. Co. 95 C. C. A. 91, 169 Fed. 598; Whalen v. Gordon, 37 C. C. A. 70, 95 Fed. 305; Thayer v. Smoky Hollow Coal Co. 129 Iowa, 550, 105 N. W. 1024; Walker v. Wabash R. Co. 193 Mo. 453, 92 S. W. 83; Texas Midland R. Co. v.

Cardwell, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 67 S. W. 157; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Bagley, 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 259, and note, 65 Kan. 188, 69 Pac. 189; Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. Zehner, 166 Ind. 149, 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 277, 76 N. E. 169.

Mr. S. L. Kingan for appellee.

Lewis, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On the 21st day of March, 1908, one Clifford E. Youmans, a lineman of the Consolidated Telephone, Telegraph, & Electric Company, was killed while engaged in repair work. In November, 1908, the appellant brought this action against the appellee, seeking a money judgment for the death of Youmans, which was alleged to have

—where the original petition charged that the accident was caused by defective condition of switch and dangerous speed of car, and the amendment charged that it was caused by operation of car at dangerous rate of speed, negligence in allowing switch to become defective, and in failing to repair it, with additional charge that defendant's servants at the time of the accident were acting in the line of their duty. Indianapolis Street R. Co. v. Fearnaught, 40 Ind. App. 233, 82 N. E. 102;

—an amendment changing a suit on an insurance policy from covenant to assumption. Monahan v. Fidelity Mut. L. Ins. Co. 242 Ill. 488, 134 Am. St. Rep. 337, 90 N. E. 213;

—an amendment which states more elaborately the circumstances of the conversion of the property in question, the original petition having alleged merely plaintiff's rightful possession of the property, and the wrongful taking thereof by defendant. Parlin & O. Co. v. Glover, 45 Tex. Civ. App. 93, 99 S. W. 592;

—an amendment introducing new parties, the cause of action being the same throughout the pleadings. El Paso & S. W. R. Co. v. Harris, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 110 S. W. 145;

—an amendment merely changing the negligence to meet different phases of the evidence, the form of action remaining the same. Wise Terminal Co. v. McCormick, 107 Va. 375, 58 S. E. 584;

—an amendment averring an additional stipulation in the agreement alleged in the original petition, being merely an enlargement, and not a contradiction, of the allegations contained in the original petition. Goodwin v. Simpson, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 136 S. W. 1190;

—an amendment asserting plaintiff's right as a putative wife to recover for personal injuries to her deceased putative husband, she having supposed at the time of the original petition that she was his lawful wife. Ft. Worth & R. G. R. Co. v. Robertson, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 121 S. W. 202; for treble damages for carrying away stone, which supplied the clerical omission in the original petition to designate defendant in connection with the trespass, and explicitly avers the statutory requisites that defendant had no right or interest in the stone, and did not own the land, both being clearly implied, though not explicitly averred, in the original petition. Fox v. Turner, — Kan. —, 116 Pac. 233;

—an amendment in a statutory action 33 L.R.A.(N.S.)

—an amendment bringing in the mother, where an action for the negligent killing of a child was begun by the father alone. Cytron v. St. Louis Transit Co. 205 Mo. 692, 104 S. W. 109;

—an amendment inserting names of children, omitted from averment of claim in an action by husband for negligent killing of wife. McArdle v. Pittsburg R. Co. 41 Pa. Super. Ct. 162;

—an amendment eliminating one of two causes of action which were improperly joined in the original petition. McCague Sav. Bank v. Croft, 87 Neb. 770, 128 N. W. 504;

—an amended count charging that the defendant street railway company so carelessly "conducted and managed" its car as to cause a collision, the original declaration charging that the defendant so carelessly "propelled" its car that a collision occurred. Ratner v. Chicago City R. Co. 233 Ill. 169, 84 N. E. 201;

—An amendment in trespass for cutting timber, alleging that greater part of such timber "was cut in 1902 and 1903," whereas the original complaint alleged that the timber was cut "on or about June 27, 1901, and on diverse days and times since then." Price v. Greer, 89 Ark. 300, 116 S. W. 676, 118 S. W. 1009;

—an amendment to a complaint in ejectment, which conforms the allegations in the complaint to the facts shown by the chain of title set out by plaintiffs. Gannon v. Moore, 83 Ark. 196, 104 S. W. 139;

—an amendment alleging a negligent failure to keep cattle guards in repair, thereby allowing hogs to pass over the stock gap into plaintiff's lands, the original com-

been caused by appellee negligently permitting a highly charged wire to come in contact with the telephone line which decedent was repairing. The cause of action attempted to be stated was one for wrongful death, under paragraphs 2764 to 2766 of the Revised Statutes of Arizona 1901. The complaint, tested by a general demurrer, unquestionably failed to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. In May, 1909, the appellant filed an amended complaint, to which appellee answered, demurring upon the ground that plaintiff's cause of action was barred by the statute of limitations, in that it appeared upon the face of the complaint and the records of the court, that the original complaint filed did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and that the first amended complaint was not filed until more than a year after the cause of action had accrued. This demurrer was sustained. Appellant thereafter filed a second amended complaint, to which appellee answered, demurring upon the same ground, which demurrer was also sustained. Judgment was entered dismissing the complaint. This appeal was thereupon taken from the judgment.

The rulings and judgment of the trial court were correct upon the authority of Keppler v. Becker, 9 Ariz. 234, 80 Pac. 334. The appellant asks a review of that decision. This court in the Keppler Case thus stated the law: "It is a rule of general application that, where the original complaint plaint alleging that the company negligently allowed a stock gap to remain out of repair, as a consequence of which hogs entered plaintiff's farm and destroyed his crop. Central R. Co. v. Sturgis, 159 Ala. 22, 48 So. 810;

—when the original complaint alleged that the defendant wilfully and negligently ran its locomotive on and over certain horses, and the amendments thereto alleged that the injuries were caused by the horses running onto a trestle on account of being frightened by the locomotive, both original and amended counts being in case. Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Garth, 115 Ala. 311, 46 So. 583;

—an amended petition alleging that the railroad employees negligently ran a car with knowledge of plaintiff's peril, where the gravamen of the charge in the petition was that railroad employees negligently ran a car over plaintiff, an employee of a third person, while unloading cars. Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. McDonald, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 120 S. W. 494;

—an amendment striking the word "owned" from the averment that the defendant "owned, controlled, and carried on" the store in question. Steiskal v. Marshall Field & Co. 142 Ill. App. 154, affirmed in 238 Ill. 92, 87 N. E. 117; —amendment averring different causes contributing to the unsafeness of the place to alight, where both complaint and amendment alleged defendant's failure to provide plaintiff with a safe place to alight. Atlanta & B. Air Line R. Co. v. Wheeler, 154 Ala. 530, 46 So. 262;

—an amended petition which set forth substantially the same cause of action as the original, except that it added the allegation that defendant promised to pay for the property that both petitions charged he had converted. Hitson v. Hurt, 45 Tex. Civ. App. 360, 101 S. W. 292;

—an amendment setting up a claim for damages resulting from the cutting of timber on land where the original petition, in trespass to try title, claimed damages resulting only from the unlawful ejectment of plaintiff and the withholding of possession by defendant. Kirby v. Hayden, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 125 S. W. 993;

—an amendment merely correcting a mistake in the number of pounds of oats, the amount charged not being changed. Borden v. Le Tulle Mercantile Co. — Tex. Civ. App. —, 99 S. W. 128;

—an amendment of a complaint in ejectment, eliminating certain lands and parties originally named therein. Smith v. Scott, 92 Ark. 143, 122 S. W. 501;

—an amendment to the effect that the work and labor was performed by a certain machine, where the original complaint was for work and labor. Lemon v. Hubbard, 10 Cal. App. 471, 102 Pac. 554;

—where the original petition for personal injuries stated that plaintiff was a widow, and the amendment that she had been deserted by her husband. Gulf, C. & S. F. Co. v. Overton, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 107 S. W. 71, reversed in 101 Tex. 583, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 500, 110 S. W. 736;

—an amendment in an action by a widow for the death of her husband, striking the descriptive word "administratrix" from the declaration, and leaving the suit to proceed in the individual name of the widow. Atlanta, K. & N. R. Co. v. Smith, 1 Ga. App. 162, 50 S. E. 106;

—an amendment merely seeking to cure a defective averment in the original complaint upon an assigned note. Rauer's Law & Collection Co. v. Leffingwell, 11 Cal. App. 494, 105 Pac. 427.

—identity changed.

The following amendments have been held to change the cause of action originally pleaded, and therefore to admit the bar of the statute, the limitation period having expired in the interval between the original and amended pleading:

—an amended declaration which alleges that the sidewalk was out of repair at a different place than was averred in the original declaration. Gilmore v. Chicago, 224 Ill. 490, 79 N. E. 596;

—an amendment in an action to recover back money unlawfully paid to public of-states no cause of action, it will not arrest the running of the statute of limitations, and an amendment made after the bar of the statute is complete must be treated as filed at the time the amendment is made." In order to ascertain the origin and reasoning in support of this statement of the law, it becomes necessary to re-examine the authorities relied upon, inasmuch as this court has adopted a rule formulated by the supreme court of Illinois and followed by the supreme court of Kansas. They are Illinois C. R. Co. v. Campbell, 170 Ill. 163, 49 N. E. 314; Lasater v. Fant, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 43 S. W. 321; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v Bagley, 65 Kan. 188, 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 259, 69 Pac. 189. The supreme court of Kansas in the Bagley Case, last cited, said, speaking by Johnston, J.: "The petition on which the first trial was had was filed in good time, but that pleading was held bad, in that it did not state a cause of action." Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Bagley, 60 Kan. 424, 56 Pac. 759. "The amended petition, on which the second trial was had, was filed May 15, 1899, more than six years after the causes of action pleaded had accrued. The statute of limitations barred such causes in three years after they had accrued, and, if the original petition did not arrest the statute, the causes ficer, introducing a new item. Clark v. Logan County, 138 Ky. 676, 128 S. W. 1079;

—an amendment charging negligence in directing work to be done in a dangerous and unsafe method and in a dangerous and unsafe place, while the original declaration charged merely negligence in ordering the work to be done in an unsafe method. Keenan v. Wells Bros. Co. 142 Ill. App. 1;

—an amendment charging that damages were caused by wilful, wanton, or reckless conduct of defendant's servant, the complaint setting up simple negligence or wilful, wanton, or reckless conduct on the defendant's part. Freeman v. Central R. Co. 154 Ala. 619, 45 So. 898;

—an amendment seeking to recover on quantum meruit without performance, in action upon express contract for contract price of apparatus sold and set up in defendant's plant. Meinshausen v. A. Gettelman Brewing Co. 133 Wis. 95, 13 L.R.A.(N.S.) 250, 113 N. W. 408;

—an amendment supplying the averment omitted from the original declaration in an action against a municipality for personal injuries, that notice was given to the municipality as required by statute. Prouty v. Chicago, 250 Ill. 222, 95 N. E. 147;

—an amended declaration pleading specifically a contract of insurance, where the original complaint was based upon an account stated. Heffron v. Concordia F. Ins. Co. 138 Ill. App. 483;

—an amendment setting up an action on an express contract, where the original action was based on an implied contract. Booth v. Houston Packing Co. — Tex. Civ. App. —, 105 S. W. 46;

—an amendment substituting a cause of action based upon the injuries act, where the original action was based upon the mines and miners' act. Chicago-Virden Coal Co. v. Bradley, 134 Ill. App. 234, affirmed in 231 Ill. 622, 83 N. E. 424;

—an amendment averring an abuse of civil process by an excessive seizure of goods, where the original complaint for trespass charged a malicious seizure of goods by unlawful process. Sayre Water Co. 220 Pa. 599, 69 Atl. 1126; 33 L.R.A.(N.S.)

—an amendment declaring upon a cause of action conferred by statute, the original declaration declaring upon a common-law right of action. McCray v. Moweaqua Coal Min. & Mfg. Co. 149 Ill. App. 565;

—an amendment averring that damages resulted from another and different fire, which was started 5 miles distant from the one relied on in the original petition. Union P. R. Co. v. Sweet, 78 Kan. 243, 96 Pac. 657;

—an amendment alleging the killing of an intending passenger by the negligent starting of the car before he was safely aboard, where the original declaration set up the killing of a pedestrian attempting to cross the street by the negligent running of a street car. Martin v. Pittsburgh R. Co. 227 Pa. 18, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1221, 75 Atl. 837, 19 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 818.

It is held in Paris & G. N. R. Co. v. Robinson, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 127 S. W. 294, that where an action for the death of the decedent was begun by his wife and children within six months after his death, and an amended petition filed more than two years after his death, alleging for the first time the existence of his mother, and demanding a recovery for her benefit, limitations barred the right of the mother, but did not bar the right of the wife and children.

The filing of an amendment setting up an entirely separate and distinct cause of action, and the answer to it, are equivalent to the bringing of a new action as respects the statute of limitations. Warmack v. Askew, — Ark. —, 132 S. W. 1013.

In Cotulla v. Urbahn, — Tex. —, 126 S. W. 1108, it was held that the attempt to avoid the plea of the statute of limitations to a petition declaring upon a note, by setting up a new promise by a supplemental petition, instead of by an amendment of the original, was a mere irregularity, and that the expiration of the limitation period on the new promise, in the interval between the filing of the supplemental petition and the filing of the amended petition, did not bar the action. ¹ D. C.

were all barred." After stating the general rule that a new and distinct cause of action barred by the statute could not be ingrafted on a petition by way of amendment, so as to deprive the defendant of the defense of the statute of limitations, and citing cases, the court, continuing, said: "Those cases differ somewhat from the case in hand, as in them the new causes were added by amendment to other and distinct causes that had been previously pleaded, while here the amendment sets up a cause of action where none whatever had been previously alleged. The principle which ruled the cited cases, however, applies. A cause of action pleaded by way of amendment for the first time is new, and the departure is as great as the ingrafting of a distinct cause of action which is barred, upon an original one that is not barred. . . . The supreme court of Illinois had this identical question before it for consideration, and while holding that, if the action was originally brought within the statutory period, and an amendment is afterward filed which simply restates the right of recovery originally pleaded, the amendment is treated as filed at the time the action was brought, and the statute of limitations will not operate as a bar. Yet it was also held: 'Where an original declaration fails to state any cause of action whatever, and an amended declaration does, upon an issue of the statute of limitations, the amended declaration will be deemed to have been filed, and the action to have been instituted, at the time of the making of such amendment, although such amendment is confined to a more complete statement of the same cause or right attempted to be stated in the original.' See also Illinois C. R. Co. v. Campbell, 170 Ill. 163, 49 N. E. 314; Eysenfeldt v. Illinois Steel Co. 165 Ill. 185, 46 N. E. 266; Selma, R. & D. R. Co. v. Lacey, 49 Ga. 106; Phelps v. Illinois C. R. Co. 94 Ill. 548; Lasater v. Fant, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 43 S. W. 321; Sicard v. Davis, 6 Pet. 124, 8 L. ed. 342." Doster, Ch. J., dissenting, says: "I dissent from the judgment in this case, and from so much of the opinion as applies the statute of limitations to the case of defendant in error, the plaintiff below, and am authorized to say for Justice Ellis that he also dissents. The majority opinion is entirely too technical. The original petition was defective because incomplete in its formal allegations. It simply omitted the statement of the consideration for the promise sued on. The amendment merely supplied the allegation of that element of the contract. Now, in such cases, we understand the rule to be that petitions are amendable even after the running of the statute of limitations; that is, the incomplete allegations may be helped out by amendment. However, one may not introduce a new cause of action into a case by way of amendment of his petition after the period of limitation has run against it. He may not, under the guise of amendment, change his cause of action from one sued on during its life to one against which the bar of the statute has run; nor may he, by way of amendment, tack a barred cause of action onto one against which the statute has not run. The decisions cited in the majority opinion are instances of changes from one cause of action to another, and do not constitute precedents for the ruling made in this case." The validity of the conclusion reached in the opinion of the majority of the court in that case is dependent upon the soundness of the assumption that "a cause of action pleaded by way of amendment for the first time is new," within the meaning of the generally accepted rule that an amendment introducing a new cause of action cannot be made after the bar of the statute of limitations has become complete.

Passing the Illinois cases for later consideration, we will now examine the remaining cases cited by the supreme court of Kansas in support of this doctrine. The first case is Selma, R. & D. R. Co. v. Lacey, 49 Ga. 106. The law was thus stated: "A cause of action defectively set forth may be amended, but, when there is no cause of action set forth, there is nothing to amend." This has been retracted by the supreme court of Georgia in Ellison v. Georgia R. & Bkg. Co. 87 Ga. 691, 13 S. E. 809, wherein the court elaborately discusses the topic of amending declarations, and expressly overrules their former decisions. The court of civil appeals of Texas in Lasater v. Fant, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 43 S. W. 321, a case not involving the statute of limitations, said: "The complaint [in the justice court] is so defective that it states no cause of action whatever, and an amendment of it in the county court would be equivalent to the bringing of a new action, which cannot be done in that court." This lends but little support to the rule, inasmuch as the same court in Texas & P. R. Co. v. Johnson, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 34 S. W. 186, in a carefully considered opinion collecting the Texas authorities, said that an amendment filed after the bar of the statute of limitations had become complete did not present a new or different cause of action from one imperfectly alleged in the original petition, which had been held on demurrer not to state a cause of action. The last case—Sicard v. Davis, 6 Pet. 124, 8 L. ed. 342—is one of an amendment to a good declaration by the addition of a count asserting a different title from that originally declared upon, concerning which the court said: "The second count in the declaration, being on a demise from a different party, asserting a different title, is not distinguishable, so far as respects the bar of the act of limitations, from a new action."

Turning to the Illinois cases, we find Illinois C. R. Co. v. Campbell, 170 Ill. 163, 49 N. E. 314, cited in both the Bagley case and Keppler v. Becker. The supreme court of Illinois there said, speaking by Phillips, Ch. J.: "Where a declaration fails entirely to set forth a cause of action, and where the negligence of the defendant is not such as would entitle the plaintiff to recover, and is not sufficient on which to base a judgment for the plaintiff, the statute of limitations will interpose, and deny him the right, after the limitation of such statute, to set up and allege new and different grounds, or other and different acts of negligence, on which to base his claim for damages. Eysenfeldt v. Illinois Steel Co. 165 Ill. 185, 46 N. E. 286." The point of the case is as to whether the amended complaint set up a new cause of action, and it falls within the general rule that an amendment setting up a new cause of action cannot be made after the bar is complete. But, assuming that the rule stated is necessary to the decision, the facts were completely set forth in the original complaint. The law, however, afforded no remedy upon the facts stated; the court holding that the act of negligence alleged was one the risk of which plaintiff had assumed. The act alleged in the amended count was held to be a statement of a new cause of action, in that it alleged a negligent act the risk of which was not assumed. The court itself distinguishes the case from those wherein the action is begun, and, the cause of action being insufficiently alleged, amendments are permitted to perfect the statement. The leading Illinois case announcing the "cause of action for the first time stated" rule is the Eysenfeldt Case. In that decision, as will be observed by reading the facts stated by the court, the plaintiff was injured on January 17, 1892, and suit was brought on the 29th day of the following March. What purported to be a declaration was filed, but it should be noted no cause of action whatever was stated or attempted to be stated. No declaration was filed stating a cause of action until January 31, 1895, more than three years after the accident, and more than one year after the statute of limitations had run. After stating the record substantially thus, the court said: "The 33 L.R.A. (N.S.) question, then, presented by the record before us, is whether the counts filed by the plaintiff in January, 1895, after the two years provided by the statute for bringing an action had expired, set up a new cause of action, or whether they were a mere restatement of the cause of action already stated in the declaration. Upon an inspection of the declaration first filed by the plaintiff, it will be found that the commencement of the declaration is in proper form in an action of trespass on the case, and no fault is found with the conclusion of the declaration, wherein damages are claimed, but, when the body of the declaration is examined, where the cause of action should be set up, no cause of action whatever is averred in the declaration. The amended count does, however, set up a cause of action; but, inasmuch as the original declaration stated no cause of action, it seems to follow that the amended declaration stated a new cause of action,—one which had never been stated before,—and hence the statute of limitations was a good defense. There could be no restatement of a cause of action by the amended declaration, unless the cause of action had been stated before. If the plaintiff had stated his cause of action in a defective manner, omitting some feature which should have been incorporated in it, then an amendment restating the cause of action would not fall within the statute; but such was not this case." In Foster v. St. Luke's Hospital, 191 Ill. 94, 60 N. E. 803, the court said: "If the original declaration failed to state a cause of action, and by the amendment thereto a new cause of action was sought to be introduced, the same was barred, and the plea of the statute of limitations thereto should have been sustained. . . . The controlling question therefore is: Did the original declaration state a cause of action? . . . We are of the opinion the declaration as originally filed stated no cause of action, and that the cause of action stated in the amended declaration was barred by the statute of limitations." Varying applications of the rule of the Eysenfeldt Case are to be found in Mackey v. Northern Mill Co. 210 Ill. 115, 71 N. E. 448; Klawiter v. Jones, 219 Ill. 626, 76 N. E. 673; Bahr v. National Safe Deposit Co. 234 Ill. 101, 84 N. E. 717 (which collects the cases in support of the rule); Walters v. Ottawa, 240 Ill. 259, 88 N. E. 651. In Doyle v. Sycamore, 193 Ill. 501, 61 N. E. 1117, a different statement of the rule is made, namely: If the original complaint be one to be held good after a verdict, it will toll the bar of the statute, otherwise not. The leading case in Illinois stating the "new cause of action" rule is that of Illinois C. R. Co. v. Cobb, 64 Ill. 128. At page 140 of 64 Ill. the court said: "In the particular case now under consideration, the plaintiffs, by leave of court, filed two amended declarations, setting up shipments of corn by different persons from different places, and at different times, from those described in the original declaration. Defendant pleaded the statute of limitations to these additional counts, to the effect that the cause of action did not accrue within five years before they were filed, or before leave was given to file them, with an averment that they set up new causes of action. The court sustained a demurrer to this plea. We are of opinion the plea was good. The new counts set up entirely new causes of action. Counsel for appellees cite various authorities for the purpose of showing that courts should be liberal in allowing amendments for the purpose of avoiding the running of the statute. These authorities, however, are cases where the amendment was for the purpose of restating the cause of action in the pending suit, and not for the purpose of introducing a wholly new and different cause of action. The rule contended for by appellees would substantially break down the protection intended to be given by the statute. If A has two notes against B, one of which is barred by the statute and the other not, he could not enforce payment of the first note by joining it in a suit upon the second. If, however, he commences suit on the second before the statute has run against either, and afterwards, the statute having run in the meantime against the first note, seeks to recover upon it by adding a new count to his declaration in the pending suit, it is claimed he may do so. Why should this be permitted any more than to unite in the first instance a note barred with one not barred? The two cases are the same in principle. When a new count is added, a distinct suit could not be brought on the outlawed note, and it has not been included in the pending suit. How, then, can its payment be enforced by adding a new count in the pending suit? How can a note which the law pronounces dead be vitalized by amending the declaration in a suit brought upon another cause of action. This seems plain upon principle, but we cite the following authorities: King v. Avery, 37 Ala. 173; Holmes v. Trout, 1 McLean, 1, Fed. Cas. No. 6,645, affirmed in 7 Pet. 171, 8 L. ed. 647; Woodward v. Ware, 37 Me. 564; Skowhegan Bank v. Cutler, 49 Me. 315." The rules which we would deduce from the foregoing Illinois cases are well summarized in Heffron v. Rochester German Ins. Co. 220 Ill. 514, 77 33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

N. E. 262, thus: "Certain propositions of law thoroughly established by the decisions of this court should be borne in mind in the consideration of this question. If the original declaration fails to state any cause of action whatever, the cause of action set up by amendment after the statute of limitations has run is barred. Mackey v. Northern Mill. Co. 210 Ill. 115, 71 N. E. 448; Doyle v. Sycamore, 193 Ill. 501, 60 N. E. 1117; Foster v. St. Luke's Hospital, 191 Ill. 94, 60 N. E. 803. If an amendment to a declaration restates in different form the same cause of action set up in the original declaration, the filing of the amendment relates back to the commencement of the suit, and the statute of limitations is not a bar. Chicago City R. Co. v. McMeen, 206 Ill. 108, 68 N. E. 1093; Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Wallace, 202 Ill. 129, 66 N. E. 1096. If an amendment introduces a new cause of action, it is regarded as a new suit commenced when the amendment is filed, and the statute of limitations may be pleaded accordingly. Chicago City R. Co. v. McMeen, supra; Fish v. Farwell, 160 Ill. 236, 43 N. E. 367."

Examining the opinions of other courts, we find that the court of appeals of Maryland, reversing the circuit court, in State use of Zier v. Chesapeake Beach R. Co. 98 Md. 35, 56 Atl. 385, after holding the first count bad on demurrer as not stating a cause of action, said: "Did the amendment change the cause of action? As we have said, the suit was brought under article 67 of the Code, which permits an action to be maintained to recover damages whenever the death of a person shall be caused by wrongful act, neglect, or default, if the act, neglect, or default (had death not ensued) would have entitled the injured party to recover damages in respect thereof. Now, the original declaration, though defective, was founded on the alleged negligence of the defendant. The fact that the narr. was insufficient in law—that it did not accurately and formally set forth the real cause of action—did not prevent the suit itself from being a pending suit wherein the gravamen was the negligence of the defendant. When the amendment was made, precisely the same cause of action was declared on. It is true it was imperfectly stated in the first count, but in the second it was correctly set forth. The negligence alleged in the first count was the negligence of the defendant through its agents, but was none the less the negligence of the master, though, as respects a servant of the master, it was not actionable. In the second count the negligence alleged was again the negligence of the master in failing to exercise due care in the selection of the fellow servants by whom the injury was inflicted. But the suit to recover for the defendant's negligence was precisely the same after the amendment had been made that it was antecedently. The statement of the cause of action was different, but the cause of action itself was identical. Injury resulting in death is what occasioned the suit. The imperfect statement of the case did not cause the correct statement of it to be a different cause of action. Being the same cause of action, the accurate statement of it in the amended declaration did not convert the original suit into a new and different suit, and therefore did not warrant the filing of any other plea of the statute of limitations than such as could have been interposed to the original narr. The action for the negligence was, in fact, commenced within twelve calendar months from the death of Zier, and hence the plea which averred that the cause of action did not accrue within twelve months before the filing of the amended declaration ought to have been stricken down on demurrer, and there was consequently error in overruling the demurrer thereto. Because of the error just named, the judgment must be reversed, and a new trial will be awarded." The court of appeal, first district, of California, in Rauer Law & Collection Co. v. Leffingwell, 11 Cal. App. 494, 105 Pac. 427, refused to follow the Eylenfeldt rule, and denied the soundness of the contention that where the original complaint stated no cause of action, while the amended complaint stated a perfect cause of action, the latter necessarily stated a new and different cause of action. A rehearing was denied by the supreme court. The supreme court of Montana in Clark v. Oregon Short Line R. Co. 38 Mont. 177, 90 Pac. 298, reversed the ruling of the district court, sustaining a plea that the amended complaint, for the first time stating a cause of action, was barred by the statute of limitations. The question is discussed at length; the court saying it is a new one in the state. The supreme court of Georgia in the case of Savannah, F. & W. R. Co. v. Smith, 93 Ga. 742, 21 S. E. 157, though not directly in point, approves the practice of permitting amendments after the bar of the statute became complete, where the original declaration failed to state a cause of action. The supreme court of South Carolina in Lilly v. Charlotte, C. & A. R. Co. 32 S. C. 142, 10 S. E. 932, is in accord with the Illinois rule expressed in the Eylenfeldt Case, although perhaps 33 L.R.A. (N.S.) affected by a local practice making amendments discretionary with the trial court; this being an affirmance. This South Carolina case is criticized in Love v. Southern R. Co. 108 Tenn. 104, 55 L.R.A. 471, 65 S. W. 475, which reviews the authorities, and holds that where a cause of action for wrongful death is properly brought by the personal representative in right of the deceased, by the filing of a valid summons, but the declaration is a nullity because the statutory beneficiaries are not named, a new declaration may be filed for the purpose of naming them, even after the limitation period has elapsed, since the declaration relates back to the filing of the summons. In speaking of the case of Lilly v. Charlotte C. & A. R. Co. supra, it is said: "The case is an extreme one, and somewhat technical, as we think, in its holding." In North Carolina in the litigation of Webb v. Hicks, reported in 116 N. C. 598, 21 S. E. 672, 123 N. C. 244, 31 S. E. 479, and 125 N. C. 201, 34 S. E. 395, and again in Woodcock v. Bostic, 128 N. C. 243, 38 S. E. 881, the supreme court indicates its view that a pleading defective, in that it fails to state a cause of action, may nevertheless be sufficient to prevent the bar of the statute of limitations attaching. The supreme Court of Nebraska in the case of Merrill v. Wright reversed a judgment in favor of Merrill, because in the petition there was neither averment nor proof of the existence of a levy of assessment of taxes for the amount for which Merrill had obtained judgment. After the case was remanded, the petition was amended, and to it as amended the plea of the statute of limitations was interposed and sustained. The court said (54 Neb. 517, 74 N. W. 955); "The action [original], however, was for the same relief prayed in the amended petition, but in the original petition sufficient facts to entitle plaintiff to that relief were not stated. The argument of the appellees is, however, that, because of this failure, the petition must be treated as though it were an absolute nullity. In other words, as though no petition had ever been filed. From this principle, and its attempted application, it would of necessity result that no amendment could be made upon a general demurrer being sustained to a petition. The rules of the Code of Civil Procedure are not thus inflexible. . . . We therefore conclude that the bar of the statute of limitations was not well pleaded, and the judgment of the district court dismissing the action of said appellant is accordingly reversed." This ruling is adhered to in Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Young, 67 Neb. 568, 93 N. W. 922. The supreme court of Michigan in Stanley v. Anderson, 107 Mich. 384, 65 N. W. 247, a case involving the statute of limitations, dismisses the matter thus: "Counsel's contention must rest upon the somewhat technical proposition that, because the first declaration was defective in alleging the cause of action, to the extent that it did not contain a sufficient allegation of a breach, no cause of action was set up, and of necessity the amended declaration, which did set up a cause of action, must state a new and different one. We think this contention is too technical, and that the cases cited are so readily distinguishable in this respect as not to call for a discussion of them." See also Detroit v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 125 Mich. 634, 85 N. W. 1. The question has been before the circuit court of appeals for the eighth circuit in the case of Patillo v. Allen-West Commission Co. 65 C. C. A. 508, 131 Fed. 680. A demurrer had been sustained to the original complaint. An amendment was filed after the statute had run. The court held that no new or independent cause of action was thus presented, and that it "related back to the commencement of the action, where the running of the statute of limitations against the cause of action upon the account stated ceased."

The following cases touch closely related phases of the subject of the amendments of pleadings after the bar of the statute of limitations has become complete; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Pointer, 113 Ky. 952, 69 S. W. 1108; Myers v. Kirt, 68 Iowa, 124, 26 N. W. 22; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Johnson; — Tex. Civ. App. —, 34 S. W. 186 (collecting Texas cases); Alabama Consol. Coal & I. Co. v. Heald, 154 Ala. 580, 45 So. 686 (opinions by divided court elaborately discussing general question, with the majority favoring liberality in allowing amendments); Powers v. Badger Lumber Co. 75 Kan. 687, 90 Pac. 254 (following the Bagley Case). See also note, "The relation of new pleadings to statutes of limitations," in 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 259. We believe that the cases here cited fairly present the variant views touching the question we are endeavoring to solve, namely, is the conclusion of the Bagley class of cases sound, that where the original complaint is defective, in that it fails to state a cause of action, formal or informal, the statement for the first time of a cause of action by amendment necessarily is the statement of a "new" cause of action, within the meaning of the generally accepted rule that an amendment which introduces a new or different cause of action does not relate back to the beginning of the action so as to arrest the running of the statute of limitations? From these authorities we deduce the conclusion that the failure of the original complaint to state facts sufficient in form or substance to constitute a cause of action is not of itself the conclusive test. Confusion has arisen from a lack of an exact definition and common understanding of the term "new," as used in this rule. The supreme court of Illinois, in the Eylenfeldt Case, was the first, so far as we have discovered, to say: "Inasmuch as the original declaration stated no cause of action, it seems to follow that the amended declaration stated a new cause of action,—one which had never been stated before,—and hence the statute of limitations was a good defense." (Italics ours.) Unquestionably, in one sense in which "new" is in common usage, it means "other than" or "different from," and it is irresistible that in such sense a pleading which for the first time states a cause of action states a new cause of action. So, equally, in one meaning of the words "different" or "distinct," such perfect pleading states a "different" or "distinct" cause of action. But the expression, "new or different cause of action," has had a technical meaning in the law of pleading. It is legitimate to assume that it was so used by those who formulated the "new cause of action" rule. That such technical meaning was theirs is amply illustrated in the early cases cited above. The test as to what is meant by "new cause of action," within the law of pleading, is furnished by the Supreme Court of the United States in a case involving the question of amendment after the bar of the statute of limitations had become complete. "The decision as to the application of the Missouri law involves, first, the ascertainment of whether the amended petition presented a new cause of action. The legal principles by which this question must be solved are those which belong to the law of departure, since the rules which govern this subject afford the true criterion by which to determine the question whether there is a new cause of action in case of an amendment." Union P. R. Co. v. Wyler, 158 U. S. 285, 289, 39 L. ed. 983, 987, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 877, 879. It may further be said that the question of amendment of a defective complaint is a question of pleading. The question of the addition of a new cause of action to a pleading by amendment is one of the law of limitations. The law of limitations requires that an action shall be commenced within a definite period from the accrual of the cause of action. An action is commenced in this territory by the filing of a complaint. We have not here in mind the question as to whether such action must be prosecuted.

The law of limitations is thereby satisfied. The complaint, under the law of pleading, is bad, even though it indicates, if it does not state, a cause of action. The question as to its being good or bad, as to its being amendable or nonamendable, is purely one of the law of pleading. So long as amended to plead the same action, it is not obnoxious to the law of limitations. But, immediately upon there being an amendment which states a new action, the law of limitations must be looked to to determine whether such new action is barred; for, as to such new action, whether brought in by way of amendment or pleaded as an original action, the law of limitations governs. The decision is in reality that such new cause of action is barred, though in form the statement frequently is that the amendment will not be permitted.

Considering the question again from a standpoint of policy, it is too common matter of observation to be doubted that the most careful and experienced of practitioners fail at times in the statement of their clients' cause of action through no fault, but because of the unsettled condition of the law. So failing, even in essentials, there is no cogent reason for denying the right of amendment to perfect the cause of action attempted to be pleaded, after the bar of the statute of limitations is complete. The law of limitations, it is true, is one of repose. It is not, however, the purpose of the law to prevent trials where litigants have moved diligently, though erroneously. One great reason for such laws is to compel promptness of action, while events are still in mind and evidence available, that cases may be determined on their merits. That object of the statute is accomplished when the action is commenced. To permit the use of the technical law of pleading, formulated to facilitate trials, and to render more certain the administration of justice, to defeat a hearing and determination of what is justice, is wholly inconsistent with the spirit and policy of our law, which seeks a determination of every case upon a trial of the merits. The statement of the rule of the Kepler Case, "that, where the original complaint states no cause of action, it will not arrest the running of the statute of limitations, and an amendment made after the bar of the statute is complete must be treated as filed at the time the amendment is made," finds support in the cases considered, and is itself supported by reason if construed as applicable to the class of complaints before the supreme court of Illinois in the Eylenfeldt Case, where there was no attempt to state a cause of action in the original complaint. The Kepler Case, however, makes the test of the applicability of the rule the failure of the original complaint to state a cause of action, when attacked by general demurrer. That test is sound in theory, and is the logical line of demarcation between the statement and no statement of a cause of action. But experience in so applying the rule has demonstrated that the test is too rigorous. Even in Illinois, where the rule is most frequently enforced, the court has not adhered to the letter of the law. Doyle v. Sycamore, supra. There are many cases which fall between the extremes of the Eylenfeldt Case, where there was no attempt to state a cause of action, and the Patillo Case, supra, where the defect was the failure to expressly aver the legal conclusion, the promise to pay the balance of an account stated. The propriety of amendments in all cases where the statute of limitations has intervened may be tested by the new cause of action rule, stated by this court in Motes v. Gila Valley, G. & N. R. Co. 8 Ariz. 50, 54, 68 Pac. 532. Inasmuch as the case at bar must be remanded for further proceedings, and the question may arise as to the amendment stating a new cause of action, we deem it proper to indicate when amendments to complaints which fail to state a cause of action, as tested by general demurrer, are to be permitted after the statute of limitations has run. Where the original complaint fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, tested by a general demurrer, an amendment filed after the bar of the statute of limitation is complete is not subject thereto, provided the facts stated in the original complaint are sufficient when read in the light of the amendment, to disclose that such amendment is but the perfection of the imperfect statement of the cause of action originally attempted to be pleaded, and not the statement of a new or different cause of action. The opinion expressed in Kepler v. Becker is modified accordingly.

As there is no contention under the demurrer sustained by the trial court, that the amended complaint in this action states a new or different cause of action from that attempted to be set forth in the original complaint, the judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded, with direction to overrule the demurrer to the amended complaint.

Kent, Ch. J., and Doe, J., concur.

Doan, J., dissents.

MISSISSIPPI SUPREME COURT.

J. C. OAKES, Appt.,

v.

STATE OF MISSISSIPPI.

(— Miss. —, 54 So. 79.)

Libel — determination of law — charge of court.

1. The court may require the jury to consider only the law given in its charge in a libel suit, notwithstanding the Constitution provides that in such suits the jury shall determine the law and the facts, under the direction of the court.

Same — reading law to jury.

2. Counsel may be forbidden to read to the jury from law books in arguing a libel cause to them, notwithstanding the Constitution provides that in such suits the the jury shall determine the law and the facts, under the direction of the court.

Same — imputing crime to officer.

3. A communication false in fact, addressed to the general public, imputing the commission of a criminal offense or of a moral delinquency to a public officer in the discharge of his official duties, is not privileged, although made in good faith and on probable cause.

Evidence — libel — motive.

4. One on trial for libeling a public officer may state to the jury what his motive was in making the publication, if there is evidence which would justify the jury in finding that the alleged libelous matter was true.

(November 28, 1910.)

Note. — Effect of provision that jury shall determine the law and the facts in libel cases.Reason for the provision.

To understand the language of these constitutional or statutory provisions and the controversy that has arisen in interpreting them, it is necessary to go into their history and see what the conditions were that led to their enactment. This has been so well done in OAKES v. STATE that any extended discussion of that phase of the question would be largely a matter of unnecessary repetition. Briefly stated, there had grown up in the courts of England a practice of denying to juries the right to render a general verdict upon the whole question of guilt in prosecutions for libel, it being held that the function of the jury in such cases was merely to determine whether or not the article had been published by defendant, and whether or not the innuendoes, if any were alleged, were true; a verdict of guilty amounting merely to a special verdict upon the facts as to these matters. If the jury found a verdict of not guilty, that, of course, ended the matter; but when a verdict of guilty was rendered, it became the duty of the court to apply the law to the facts found, and to pronounce defendant guilty or not guilty, according to its view as to the libelous nature of the writing. Thus it will be seen that libel prosecutions were placed upon a different footing from others in which, while the jury is supposed to take the law from the court, they really pass upon the whole question of defendant's guilt, and have the power, if not the right, to pass upon the law as well as the fact. It was feared that this extra power which the judges had assumed in prosecutions for libel had, or at least might, become a serious menace to the freedom of the press, because of the natural bias of the judges in favor of the Crown, by which authority they were appointed. To remedy this evil, Parliament passed, in 1792, a statute which became 33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

known as the "Fox act," declaring that, in prosecutions for libel, the jury might give a general verdict of guilty or not guilty upon the whole matter put in issue, and providing that the court should, according to its discretion, give its opinion and direction to the jury in like manner as in other criminal cases.

The construction generally placed upon this statute by the English courts was in accordance with the object of the statute as set forth above,—i. e., to restore to juries the same, but no greater, power in prosecutions for libel than they had in other criminal prosecutions. See Rex v. Burdett, Reeves v. Templar, and Parmiter v. Coupland, which are set out in OAKES v. STATE.

The principle of the Fox act was later applied by the courts to civil actions for libel, though in terms it referred only to criminal cases, and Hakewell v. Ingram, 28 Eng. L. & Eq. 413, holds that the statute did not take from the court or impose upon the jury the duty of deciding the point of law as to what is or is not a libel.

Statutes or constitutional provisions having similar import to the Fox act, some of which apply to civil as well as criminal cases, have been adopted in many of the United States, and have been variously interpreted by the courts.

In State v. Jay, 34 N. J. L. 368, the court said that the evil to be remedied was that, by the course of judicial decisions, the jury had been deprived of their right to deal in the ordinary mode with this class of prosecutions.

In Harris v. State, 7 Lea, 538, which was a trial for murder, the court had occasion to discuss the effect of the provision concerning libel, and said: "It is one of the things hard to be accounted for, how the language we have quoted was ever seen to have made any alteration whatever in the recognized, traditional, and long-settled rules of the common law as to the function and rights of a jury in all criminal cases."

The ultimate object to be attained by these provisions is the safeguarding of the APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Lawrence County, convicting him of libel. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Mounger & Mounger, for appellant:

The defendant had a right to read from the books as to the law, and the jury did not have to look solely to the instructions given by the court.

State v. Armstrong, 106 Mo. 395, 13 L.R.A. 419, 27 Am. St. Rep. 361, 16 S. W. 604; State v. Whitmore, 53 Kan. 343, 42 Am. St. Rep. 288, 36 Pac. 748; State v. Verry, 30 Kan. 416, 13 Pac. 838.

It is permissible to publish the truth upon a lawful occasion, even though it reflect upon the government or its magistrates. When a matter is of a public and general interest, this constitutes lawful occasion.

State v. Burnham, 9 N. H. 34, 31 Am. Dec. 217; Respublica v. Dennie, 4 Yeates, 267, 2 Am. Dec. 402; Castle v. Houston, 19 Kan. 417, 27 Am. Rep. 127; State v. Bush, 122 Ind. 42, 23 N. E. 677; Com. v. Clap, 4 Mass. 163, 3 Am. Dec. 212; Com. v. Blanding, 3 Pick. 304, 15 Am. Dec. 214; Com. v. Damon, 136 Mass. 441; Com. v. Reed, 30 Phila. Leg. Int. 424; Coleman v. MacLennan, 78 Kan. 711, 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 361, 130 Am. St. Rep. 390, 98 Pac. 281; Palmer v. Concord, 48 N. H. 211, 97 Am. Dec. 611.

The jury in a libel case must pass on the defendant's motives in making the publication.

freedom of the press. Castle v. Houston, 19 Kan. 417, 27 Am. Rep. 127; Sands v. G. W. Marquardt & Sons, 113 Mo. App. 490, 87 S. W. 1011.

And the preferable interpretation as to the extent to which these provisions go, both from the standpoint of their history and of the desirability of having a definite and uniform body of law upon the question of libel, would seem to be that these provisions merely secure to the jury the right to render a general verdict of guilty or not guilty, as in other criminal cases. Drake v. State, 53 N. J. L. 23, 20 Atl. 747; Com. v. McManus, 143 Pa. 64, 14 L.R.A. 89, 21 Atl. 1018, 22 Atl. 761; State v. Syphrett, 27 S. C. 29, 13 Am. St. Rep. 617, 2 S. E. 624.

Such, however, has not been the uniform interpretation placed upon these provisions, in this country, at least, and various questions have been raised as to the relative powers of the judge and jury where they are in force. While some of this difference of interpretation may be due to variations in the wording of the statutes, some providing merely that the jury shall be judges of the law and the facts, while others add, "under the direction of the court, as in other criminal cases," or similar limitations, it would be difficult, if not impossible, to distinguish the cases on this ground, for the reason that some courts construe the former expression as merely restoring or insuring to juries the same power in libel cases which they have in other criminal cases, while others interpret provisions of the latter kind as giving the jury a greater power.

Power of court—to grant a nonsuit.

In Hazy v. Woitke, 23 Colo. 556, 48 Pac. 1048, and Ukman v. Daily Record Co. 189 Mo. 378, 88 S. W. 60, it was held that, notwithstanding the constitutional provisions which apply to all suits and prosecutions for libel, of whatever nature, a judgment of nonsuit in civil actions for libel may be directed by the court in like manner as in other cases.
33 L.R.A.(N.S.)

And in Cox v. Lee, L.R. 4 Exch. 284, 38 L. J. Exch. N. S. 219, 21 L. T. N. S. 178, applying the principle of the Fox act to a civil case, and holding that libel actions are on the same footing as other cases, it is said by Kelly, C. B., that unless the judge is satisfied that the publication cannot be libel, and that, if found by the jury to be such, their verdict will be set aside, he is not justified in withdrawing the question from their consideration.

—demurrer or motion to quash, etc.

In Reeves v. Templar, 2 Jur. 137, it was held that the Fox act was not intended to take from the court the power to decide whether or not certain words were libelous per se, but that it might do so if the libel appeared plainly from the matter stated, and that this question may be decided on demurrer.

In State v. Norton, 89 Me. 290, 36 Atl. 394, it is said that whether or not the article published constitutes a criminal libel is wholly for the jury; but that this provision is for the benefit of the accused, and may be waived by him, which is done by demurring to the indictment.

And carrying out the idea that these provisions are for the benefit of the accused, it was held in Heller v. Pulitzer Pub. Co. 153 Mo. 205, 54 S. W. 457, that while the court could sustain a demurrer to plaintiff's petition, or grant a nonsuit, or sustain a motion in arrest of judgment against the defendant it could not direct a verdict for the plaintiff in a libel case.

In Diener v. Star-Chronicle Pub. Co. 230 Mo. 613, 132 S. W. 1143, it was held that the court may determine on demurrer that the matter alleged is not libelous per se. And to the same effect is Morris v. Sailer, — Mo. App. —, 134 S. W. 98.

And in St. James Military Academy v. Gaiser, 125 Mo. 517, 28 L.R.A. 667, 46 Am. St. Rep. 502, 28 S. W. 851, it was held that it is not the duty or province of the jury to pass upon the pleadings, and it is for the court to say whether the petition states a good cause of action.

State v. Allen, 1 M'Cord, L. 525, 10 Am. Dec. 690; Johnson v. St. Louis Dispatch Co. 65 Mo. 539, 27 Am. Rep. 293; Hetherington v. Sterry, 28 Kan. 426, 42 Am. Rep. 169; Palmer v. Concord, 48 N. H. 211, 97 Am. Dec. 612; Upton v. Hume, 24 Or. 420, 21 L.R.A. 493, 41 Am. St. Rep. 863, 33 Pac. 810; Coleman v. MacLennan, 78 Kan. 711, 10 L.R.A. (N.S.) 361, 130 Am. St. Rep. 413, 98 Pac. 281; Com. v. Damon, 136 Mass. 441.

Mr. Carl Fox, for appellee:

Under § 13 of the Constitution, in prosecutions for libel, the jury shall construe the paper or writing which is charged to be a libel, and say whether it is in fact a libel, and whether it was published with malicious intent. In that sense, and that sense only, shall the jury "determine the law."

State v. Armstrong, 106 Mo. 395, 13 L.R.A. 419, 27 Am. St. Rep. 361, 16 S. W. 604; Odgers, Libel & Slander, 4th ed. 680, 681; Reg. v. Sullivan, 11 Cox, C. C. 52; State v. Burpee, 65 Vt. 1, 19 L.R.A. 145, 36 Am. St. Rep. 775, 25 Atl. 964, 9 Am. Crim. Rep. 536; Com. v. Anthes, 5 Gray, 185; People v. Crosswell, 3 Johns. Cas. 336; Com. v. McManus, 143 Pa. 64, 14 L.R.A. 89, 21 Atl. 1018, 22 Atl. 761.

The publication of the circular was in no sense, and under no view of the law, privileged. If Mr. Oakes had honestly believed the statements made by him in the circular to be true, if he had had reason-

Extent of jury's power.

In Benton v. State, 59 N. J. L. 551, 36 Atl. 1041, it was held that the court could not grant a motion to quash or in arrest of judgment, on the ground that the publication was not libelous, as long as the language thereof was such that an inference might reasonably be drawn by the jury that the words were within the definition of libel, as laid down by the court.

In Banner Pub. Co. v. State, 16 Lea, 176, 57 Am. Rep. 216, under a provision that the jury shall have the right to determine the law and the facts under the direction of the court, as in other criminal cases, it was held to be the province of the court to tell the jury whether the publication is prima facie libelous, and to determine whether, on its face, it is indictable per se.

And in Squires v. State, 39 Tex. Crim. Rep. 96, 73 Am. St. Rep. 904, 45 S. W. 147, it was held that the court is authorized to determine whether the particular matter charged comes within the definition of libel, but that it is the function of the jury to determine the intent with which the libel was published.

—to set aside verdict.

In Hakewell v. Ingram, 20 Eng. L. & Eq. 413, it was held that the court might set aside a verdict for defendant in a case where the fact of publication and its application to plaintiff was not in question.

In State v. Zimmerman, 31 Kan. 85, 1 Pac. 257, under a provision that in all prosecutions for libel the jury have the right to determine at their discretion the law and the fact, it was held that the court has no power to set aside a verdict, and therefore no power to set aside a part of the verdict finding that the prosecution was instituted without probable cause and from malicious motives, which threw the costs on the prosecutor, and to adjudge that the costs should be paid by the county.

And in Re Lowe, 46 Kan. 255, 26 Pac. 749, the court approves State v. Zimmerman, and says that the court has no power to interfere with the verdict in any prejudicial respect.

33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Instructions—right of court to instruct the jury.

Where provisions of the kind under discussion are in force, a question is sometimes raised as to the right of the judge to instruct the jury upon the law.

In Parmiter v. Coupland, 4 Jur. 701, 9 L. J. Exch. N. S. 202, 6 Mees. & W. 105, the court says that the proper course for the judge is to declare the meaning of the term "libel," and to assist the jury in drawing their conclusion from the facts; and that he might in a particular case tell them able grounds for his honest belief, and if he had published the circular only to the governor of the state, who alone has the power to appoint circuit judges, then it might be urged that it was privileged.

2 Wharton, Crim. Law, 10th ed. §§ 1630, 1635, 1636; Cooley, Const. Lim. 7th ed. 619; Odgers, Libel & Slander, 4th ed. 281-289; Newell, Defamation, 2d ed. 504, 505; 29 Cyc. Law & Proc. pp. 388; 399; 25 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 405; Hunt v. Bennett, 19 N. Y. 173; Knapp v. Campbell, 14 Tex. App. 199, 36 S. W. 765.

Whether the occasion is "privileged" or not is a question for the court when the facts are undisputed.

Warner v. Press Pub. Co. 132 N. Y. 181, 30 N. E. 393; Ramsey v. Cheek, 109 N. C.

that if the words were used in the ordinary sense, they would be libelous, but failure to do so is no ground for a new trial.

And in Baylis v. Lawrence, 11 Ad. & El. 920, 4 Jur. 652, 9 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 196, 3 Perry & D. 526, it is held that the court is not bound to instruct the jury as to whether the publication is libelous as a matter of law.

And in State v. Jeandell, 5 Harr. (Del.) 475, under a provision that the jury may determine the facts and the law, as in other cases, it was held that whether a publication is libelous or not is a question of law; that all questions of law are for the court to instruct the jury upon; and it is the duty of the jury to take the law from the court, as they take the facts from witnesses, and make their verdict accordingly.

In Walston v. Com. 32 Ky. L. Rep. 535, 106 S. W. 224, in denying a rehearing of the case as reported in 31 Ky. L. Rep. 378, 102 S. W. 275, it was held that a provision giving a jury the right to determine the law and the facts under an instruction of the court, as in other cases, does not prevent the court, in a prosecution on an indictment for libel, from instructing the jury on the law of the case.

In State v. Simpson, 136 Mo. App. 664, 118 S. W. 1187, under a provision that the jury shall determine the law and the fact under the direction of the court, it was held to be error to instruct that certain words constitute a charge of a certain offense, which would be slanderous, as it is the jury's province to determine whether the words were slanderous.

In Drake v. State, 53 N. J. L. 23, 20 Atl. 747, a provision that the jury shall have the right to determine the law and the fact was held not to be intended to affect the duty of the court to instruct the jury with regard to the general principles of criminal law and of the law of libel, but that, on these points, the instructions retained the same force which they previously possessed.

In People v. Sherlock, 56 App. Div. 422, 15 N. Y. Crim. Rep. 297, 68 N. Y. Supp. 33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

270, 13 S. E. 775; Newell, Defamation, 2d ed. 391, 392; Odgers, Libel & Slander, 4th ed. 217, 236, 320, 324.

Smith, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Appellant was indicted and convicted in the court below of libel, and appeals to this court. The indictment alleged that he had published and circulated a handbill, charging the circuit judge of the district with having committed several high crimes and misdemeanors, setting out the particulars thereof, while in the discharge of his official duties. Appellant's defense was that the statements made by him were true, and were published with good motives and for justifiable ends. One of the instructions

74, affirmed in 166 N. Y. 180, 59 N. E. 830, under a provision that the jury may determine the law and the facts under the direction of the court, it was held to be the right and duty of the court to tell the jury what the law is, as long as he does not arrogate to himself the right belonging to them to determine the law and the fact.

In State v. Syphrett, 27 S. C. 29, 13 Am. St. Rep. 616, 2 S. E. 624, under a provision that the jury shall be the judge of the law and the fact, it is held to be the right and duty of the judge to declare the law to the jury, and that, if he errs, the error may be reviewed upon appeal, unless defendant is acquitted.

—effect of instruction.

A question more frequently raised, however, is the force and effect which the instruction of the court is to have upon the jury.

In People v. Seeley, 139 Cal. 118, 72 Pac. 834, it was held that the judge has a right to instruct the jury, but these instructions are advisory only. The jury can disregard the instructions and bring in a verdict even contrary to the evidence; but that it is proper for the court to instruct the jury that "under the constitutional law, if the jury can say on their oaths that they know the law better than the court does, they have the right to do so; but before assuming so solemn a responsibility they should be sure that they are not acting from caprice or prejudice, that they are not controlled by their will or wishes, but from a deep and confident conviction that the court is wrong and that they are right. Before saying this on their oaths, it is their duty to reflect whether, from their habits of thought, their duty and experience, they are better qualified to judge of the law than the court. If, under all those circumstances, they are prepared to say that the court is wrong in its exposition of the law, the Constitution has given them that right."

And an instruction almost identical was approved in State v. Heacock, 106 Iowa, given by the court to the jury, at the request of the state, was as follows: "The court charges the jury that all the law to be considered by them in reaching a verdict in the case is contained in the written instructions given by the court, and upon these instructions and the evidence alone should their verdict be made." During the argument of the case appellant's counsel attempted to read to the jury from certain law books dealing with the law of libel, but, on objection by the state, was by the court prevented from doing so. These two actions of the court are assigned for error, and this assignment necessitates a construction by us of that portion of § 13 of our state Constitution of 1890 which provides that "the jury shall determine the law and the facts, under the direction of the court."

Section 13, in full, is as follows: "The freedom of speech and of the press shall be held sacred; and in all prosecutions for libel the truth may be given in evidence; and the jury shall determine the law and the facts under the direction of the court; and if it shall appear to the jury that the matter charged as libelous is true, and was published with good motives and for justifiable ends, the party shall be acquitted." The contention of appellant is that by this section of the Constitution the jury have the right to determine both the law and the facts; that they not only have the right to apply their own knowledge of the law, but may receive information relative thereto from sources other than the instructions

191, 76 N. W. 654, where it was held that the jury has not only the power, but the right, to decide in conflict with instructions, and is not required to follow the charge of the court, which must be regarded as advisory, and not conclusive as to the duty of the jury.

In State v. Rice, 56 Iowa, 431, 9 N. W. 343, however, it was held that the court has the right to instruct, and it is conclusively presumed that the jury will follow the instruction; and therefore it cannot be said that an erroneous instruction is not prejudicial simply because the jury has the right to determine both the law and the fact.

In State v. Zimmerman, 31 Kan. 85, 1 Pac. 257, and State v. Verry, 36 Kan. 416, 13 Pac. 838, it is held that the instructions of the court are not to bind the consciences of the jury, but only to inform their judgments.

In Tresca v. Maddox, 11 La. Ann. 206, 66 Am. Dec. 198, where the statute provides that the jury shall be the judge of the law and the facts in all prosecutions for libel, the court expresses doubt as to whether it applies to civil actions, but says if it does, it does not relieve the judge from the duty of instructing on the law, though the jury may disregard his instructions if they see fit.

In State v. Goold, 62 Me. 509, under a provision that the jury may determine at their discretion both the law and the fact, it was held error to instruct the jury that it was the duty of the court to direct them whether the publication was or was not libelous, and that it was their duty to be governed thereby, and the court points out the difference between the powers of the jury in prosecutions for libel and other criminal cases, as follows: "In fact, in all criminal trials, a general verdict of guilty affirms not only that the defendant committed the act in question, but also that the act was one prohibited by law; and to this extent such a verdict does in every case determine the law as well as the fact. But the difference between indictments for libels and other criminal prosecutions is this: that in the former the jury may rightfully pass upon the criminality of the act, although their judgment in that respect is contrary to the opinion of the court; while in the latter they have no such right. In the latter, as in the former, they do in fact pass upon the law as well as the facts involved in the issue; but in the former the Constitution secures to them the right to determine the law for themselves, while in the latter it is their duty to follow the instructions of the court."

In State v. Powell, 66 Mo. App. 598, it was held to be error to instruct the jury that they are to be guided by the instructions of the court, as all the court can do is to advise the jury as to the law, and let them follow that direction or not, as they see fit.

In Paxton v. Woodward, 31 Mont. 195, 107 Am. St. Rep. 416, 78 Pac. 215, 3 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 546, under a provision that in all suits and prosecutions for libel the jury, under the direction of the court, shall determine the law and the facts, it was held that though the jury is judge of the law as to the libel, it is the duty of the judge to instruct them, and an erroneous instruction is ground for reversal.

State v. Patterson, 2 N. J. L. J. 218, holds that the provision merely puts libel cases on the same footing as others; and the jury is to apply the law as explained by the court to the facts, but not to decide what the law is.

Ross v. Ward, 14 S. D. 240, 86 Am. St. Rep. 746, 85 N. W. 182, holds that under a provision that the jury shall determine the facts and the law under the direction of the court, the court may direct the jury by stating to them what constitutes a privileged communication; but whether or not the particular communication is privileged is for the jury to determine.

And under a similar provision it is held in McArthur v. State, 41 Tex. Crim. Rep. 635, 57 S. W. 847, that the jury are judges of the law under the direction of the court, as in other cases, and that they are to take of the court; that, consequently, the court erred in granting instruction No. 1 for the state, and also in not permitting appellant's counsel to read to the jury from law books dealing with the law of libel.

In all criminal cases the guilt or innocence of the defendant is a mixed question of law and fact, and the verdict of guilty or not guilty is a compound of, and determines, both. In rendering such a verdict, juries must act upon the law as given them by the court. The facts they find themselves, then apply the one to the other, and from both determine the guilt or innocence of the defendant on trial. To this extent, they, in all criminal cases, determine both the law and the facts. This results, of necessity, from their right to return a general verdict. This right of juries to render a verdict in criminal cases, as broad as the issue involved, was never doubted after the common law became fully developed, except in cases of trial for criminal libel, and it was to remove this doubt that this provision of our Constitution was adopted. This doubt arose by reason of the decision of Lord Mansfield in Woodfall's Case, 20 How. St. Tr. 895, followed later, by the full court, in the celebrated case of Dean of St. Asaph, 3 T. R. 428, note, and by the disagreement of the judges of the supreme court of New York in the equally celebrated case of People v. Crosswell, 3 Johns. Cas. 365. In these cases, in both of which the defendants were being prosecuted for criminal libel, the juries were not permitted to pass upon the whole matter in issue. The only questions submitted to them were: First, whether the defendant was guilty of publishing; second, whether the innuendoes were justly stated and applied. If both of these questions were answered in the affirmative, then the jury were required to return a verdict of guilty, leaving the construction of the words charged to be libelous and the motive of the defendant in publishing same to be afterwards determined by the court, as a matter of law, upon a motion in arrest of judgment.

The ground of the decision in the case of the Dean of St. Asaph was that all written instruments must be construed, and the meaning and effect of the words used therein settled, as matter of law, by the court; and that consequently, when the words of the alleged libel were copied in the indictment, and the fact of the publication and the truth of the innuendoes was by the verdict of the jury established and placed on the record, the legal character of the words used could then be determined by an inspection of the record, and would be open, after the verdict, to be decided as a question of the law from the court, and are required to be governed thereby, and should not construe the law for themselves.

—propriety of instructing jury as to their power to determine the law.

In People v. McDowell, 71 Cal. 194, 11 Pac. 868, it was held to be error to instruct, in effect, that the jury might, if they thought proper, ignore the law defining libel, for while they are to determine the law as well as the facts, they are not at liberty to determine that which the statute declares to be criminal libel to be otherwise.

But in McCloskey v. Pulitzer Pub. Co. 152 Mo. 339, 53 S. W. 1087; Benton v. State, 59 N. J. L. 551, 36 Atl. 1041; and Duncan v. Williams, 107 Mo. App. 539, 81 S. W. 1175, it was held to be proper to instruct the jury that they are the sole judges of the law.

In State v. Armstrong, 106 Mo. 395, 13 L.R.A. 419, 27 Am. St. Rep. 361, 16 S. W. 604, expressly overruling State v. Hosmer, 85 Mo. 553, under a provision that the jury, under the direction of the court, shall determine the law and the fact, it was held proper, after instructing the jury fully, further to instruct them that they were judges of the law and the fact in libel, and were not required to accept the court's instruction as conclusive of the law. And similar instructions were approved in Arn-33 L.R.A. (N.S.) old v. Jewett, 125 Mo. 241, 28 S. W. 614, and case of Reg. v. Sullivan, 11 Cox, C. C. 51.

But in civil cases it is not error for the court to fail to instruct that the jury is the judge of both the law and the fact, when such instructions are not requested. Mitchell v. Bradstreet Co. 116 Mo. 226, 20 L.R.A. 138, 38 Am. St. Rep. 592, 22 S. W. 358, 724; Minter v. Bradstreet Co. 174 Mo. 444, 73 S. W. 668.

Right of counsel to argue law to jury.

In State v. Verry, 36 Kan. 416, 13 Pac. 838, it was held that counsel for defendant has the right to discuss his theory of the law before the jury, though it differs from that expounded by the court.

In State v. Whitmore, 53 Kan. 343, 42 Am. St. Rep. 288, 36 Pac. 748, it was held that, in discussing the law before the jury in libel cases, counsel for defendant may read from legal authorities; and while the court may restrict the arguments by preventing the reading of matters wholly foreign to the issue, it may not strictly confine counsel to authorities in line with the court's instructions.

But in Heller v. Pulitzer Pub. Co. 153 Mo. 205, 54 S. W. 457, it was held that reading to the jury from law books should not be allowed; and this is the rule adopted in OAKES v. STATE. R. L. S.

law by the court. In 1792, after the decision in this case, an act known as "Fox's libel act," and being chapter 60 of 32 George III., was passed by the English Parliament. This act was entitled, "An Act to Remove Doubts Respecting the Functions of Juries in Cases of Libel;" and declared that in all such cases the jury might render a general verdict of guilty or not guilty upon the whole matter in issue, and should not be required to render a verdict of guilty merely on proof of publication and of truth of the innuendoes.

The passage of this act was largely the result of the argument of Lord Erskine "in support of the rights of juries" on the motion for a new trial in the case of Dean of St. Asaph. In the course of that argument, among other things, he said: "I may affirm with equal certainty that the general verdict, ex vi termini is universally as comprehensive as the issue, and that consequently such a verdict on an indictment, upon the general issue, not guilty, universally and unavoidably involves a judgment of law, as well as fact, because the charge comprehends both; and the verdict, as has been said, is coextensive with it. Both Coke and Littleton give this precise definition of a general verdict, for they both say that, if the jury will find the law, they may do it by a general verdict, which is ever as large as the issue. If this be so, it follows by necessary consequence that, if the judge means to direct the jury to find generally against a defendant, he must leave to their consideration everything which goes to the constitution of such a general verdict, and is therefore bound to permit them to come to, and to direct them how to form, that general conclusion from the law and the fact, which is involved in the term 'guilty.' For it is ridiculous to say that guilty is a fact. It is a conclusion in law from a fact, and therefore can have no place in a special verdict, where the legal conclusion is left to the court." 1 Erskine's Speeches, High's ed. p. 329.

In the course of the debates on the bill, while under consideration by Parliament, it is said by Mr. Fox, the author thereof, that "there was a power vested in the jury to judge the law and fact as often as they were united; and if the jury were not to be understood to have a right to exercise that power, the Constitution would never have intrusted them with it;" that this was the case, not of murder only, but of every other criminal indictment; and it was said by Mr. Pitt that he "saw no reason why, in the trial of a libel, the whole consideration of the case might not go precisely to the unfettered judgment of twelve men, sworn to give their verdict honestly and conscientiously, as matters of . . . [they] did in felony and other crimes of a high nature." Lord Camden, to whom much of the credit for the passage of the bill was due, said that "he did not apprehend that the bill had a tendency to alter the law, but merely to remove doubts that ought never to have been entertained." All of these extracts can be found set out in the opinion of Mr. Justice Gray, in Sparf v. United States, 156 U. S. 130, 39 L. ed. 373, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 273, 10 Am. Crim. Rep. 168, together with citations for the authority therefor.

In Rex v. Burdett, 4 Barn. & Ald. 131, 1 How. St. Tr. N. S. 1, it was said by Best, J.: "It must not be supposed that the statute of George III. made the question of libel a question of fact. If it had, instead of removing an anomaly, it would have created one. Libel is a question of law, and the judge is the judge of the law in libel as in all other cases; the jury having the power of acting agreeably to his statement of the law or not. All that the statute does is to prevent the question from being left to the jury in the narrow way in which it was left before that time. The jury were then only to find the fact of the publication, and the truth of the imputation; the intent was an inference of law, to be done; for the judges used to tell them that drawn from the paper, with which the jury had nothing to do. The legislature has said that that is not so, but that the whole case is to be left to the jury."

In Reeves v. Templar, 2 Jur. 137, it was said by Lord Abinger, referring to Fox's libel act: "Before that statute a practice had arisen of considering that the question, libel or no libel, was always for the court, independent of the intention and meaning of the party publishing. That statute corrected the error, and now, if the intention does not appear in the body of the libel, a variety of circumstances are to be left to the jury from which to infer it; but it was never intended to take from the court the power of deciding whether certain words are per se libelous or not.

In the case of Parmiter v. Coupland, 6 Mees. & W. 105, Parke, B., said to counsel, during the course of the argument: "In criminal cases the judge is to define the crime and the jury are to find whether the party has committed that offense. Mr. Fox's act made it the same in cases of libel, the practice having been otherwise before." And in the opinion rendered by him in the case, he further said: "Mr. Fox's libel bill was a declaratory act, and put prosecutions for libel on the same footing as other criminal cases."

It is, therefore, in the language of Mr.

Justice Harlan, in Sparf v. United States, 156 U. S. 98, 39 L. ed. 360, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 273, 10 Am. Crim. Rep. 168, "a mistake to suppose that the English libel act changed in any degree the general common-law rule in criminal cases as to the right of the court to decide the law, and the duty of the jury to apply the law thus given to the facts, subject to the condition, inseparable from the jury system, that the jury, by a general verdict, of necessity determined in the particular case both law and fact as compounded in the issue submitted to them. That act provides that 'the court or judge before whom such indictment or information shall be tried shall, according to their or his discretion, give their or his opinion and directions to the jury on the matter in issue between the King and the defendant, in like manner as in other criminal cases.'"

'This seems' Mr. Justice Curtis well said, 'to carry the clearest implication that, in this and all other criminal cases, the jury may be directed by the judge; and that, while the object of the statute was to declare that there was no other matter of fact besides publication and the innuendoes to be decided by the jury, it was not intended to interfere with the proper province of the judge to decide all matters of law.' United States v. Morris, 1 Curt. C. C. 55, Fed. Cas. No. 15,815."

In 23 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 549, it is stated that this act "did not change in any degree the general common-law rule in criminal cases as to the right of the court to decide the law, and the duty of the jury to apply the law thus given to the facts, subject to the condition, inseparable from the jury system, that the jury by general verdict of necessity determine in the particular case both the law and the fact, as compounded in the issue submitted to them."

The first constitutional provision of this character adopted in America seems to have been that contained in the Constitution of Pennsylvania, which was adopted in 1790, and is substantially the same as the provision of our Constitution. This occurred while the controversy over the rights of juries was at its height in England, after the trial of the case of the Dean of St. Asaph, and Fox's libel bill was still pending in Parliament.

After the disagreement of the judges in the case of People v. Crosswell, 3 Johns. Cas. 365, supra, in 1804, and while that case was still pending, the legislature of the state of New York enacted a statute declaring that "whereas, doubts exist whether, on the trial of an indictment or information for a libel, the jury have a right to give their verdict on the whole matter in issue 1. Be it therefore declared and enacted, etc.: That on every such indictment or information, the jury who shall try the same shall have a right to determine the law and the fact, under the direction of the court, in like manner as in other criminal cases, and shall not be directed or required by the court or judge, before whom such indictment or information shall be tried, to find the defendant guilty, merely on the proof of the publication by the defendant of the matter charged to be libelous, and of the sense ascribed thereto in such indictment or information: Provided, nevertheless, that nothing herein contained shall be held or taken to impair or destroy the right and privilege of the defendant to apply to the court to have the judgment arrested, as hath heretofore been practised. 2. . . That in every prosecution for writing or publishing any libel, it shall be lawful for the defendant, upon the trial of the cause, to give in evidence, in his defense, the truth of the matter contained in the publication charged as libelous: Provided, always, that such evidence shall not be a justification, unless, on the trial, it shall be further made satisfactorily to appear that the matter charged as libelous was published with good motives and for justifiable ends." "We are thus introduced," in the language of the supreme court of New Jersey, in Drake v. State, 53 N. J. L. 23, 20 Atl. 747, "to the very language of that part of our constitutional provision which affords a complete defense to one prosecuted for libel, when he makes it appear to the jury that he published the truth with good motives, and for justifiable ends, and which establishes the right of the jury, in such prosecutions, to determine the law and the fact. Its sources, I [we] think, render its meaning evident."

The enactment of this statute was largely influenced by the argument of Alexander Hamilton in the case of People v. Crosswell, supra, and by the opinion of Chancellor Kent, rendered in the case. Hamilton only contended for the right of juries in libel cases to render a verdict as broad as the issue involved, and this contention was upheld by Chancellor Kent in the opinion rendered by him in the case. This provision was incorporated into our first Constitution, adopted in 1817, while this controversy over the rights of juries in libel cases was fresh in the minds of all men conversant with the then recent history of this country and of England. Had this controversy never arisen, there would have been no necessity for the adoption of this provision. Since the controversy centered around the rights of juries to render a general verdict in libel cases, as broad and comprehensive as such a verdict is in all other criminal cases, the conclusion is irresistible that its adoption was for the purpose of settling the right of juries so to do, and not to confer upon them the right to determine the law for themselves without the assistance, or against the direction, of the court. Indeed, any doubt on this point ought to be removed by the language of the Constitution itself, for it does not simply provide that the jury shall determine the law and the facts, but provides that it shall do this "under the direction of the court." State v. Burpee, 65 Vt. 1, 19 L.R.A. 145, 36 Am. St. Rep. 775, 790, 25 Atl. 964, 9 Am. Crim. Rep. 536; Com. v. Anthes, 5 Gray, 185; Drake v. State, 53 N. J. L. 23, 20 Atl. 747; 2 McClain, Crim. Law, § 1070; 3 Greenl. Ev. § 179; Com. v. McManus, 143 Pa. 64, 14 L.R.A. 89, 21 Atl. 1018, 22 Atl. 761; State v. Syphrett, 27 S. C. 29, 13 Am. St. Rep. 617, 2 S. E. 624; Brown v. State, 40 Ga. 689; Edwards v. State, 53 Ga. 428; Sparf v. United States, 156 U. S. 51, 39 L. ed. 343, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 273, 10 Am. Crim. Rep. 168; Cooley Const. Lim. 7th ed. 665; Franklin v. State, 12 Md. 236; Harris v. State, 7 Lea, 538.

If juries have the right to determine the law of libel for themselves, free from the control of the court, the result would be not only that the law would be uncertain, because of the different views which different juries might take of it, but their judgment of the law, however erroneous, would be final; for in that event neither the trial court nor this court would have any right to review same, and could grant no relief to a defendant, however erroneously he may have been convicted. The court would have no right to decide any question of law which might arise on the trial, by demurrer or otherwise. Should a citizen, under this construction of the Constitution, be indicted for libel, and the matter charged to be such be never so harmless or lawful, the court would be powerless to prevent his conviction and punishment, should the jury decide that, in its judgment, the matter charged was libelous. The jury would be the judge of the meaning of the Constitution and statutes, whether statutes were valid, what the common law is, what the law of privilege is,—in short, of all questions of law which could arise on the trial. We are aware that those courts which have construed similar constitutional provisions in accordance with appellant's contention deny that this result follows therefrom; but in doing so they have involved themselves in all sorts of absurdities by attempting to limit the right of juries to determine the law for themselves, when, if the Constitution confers such a right, it confers it without limit. Our view of the result of such an interpretation of this provision of the Constitution is sanctioned by the great name of Story in United States v. Battiste, 2 Sumn. 240, Fed. Cas. No. 14,545, and by the Supreme Court of the United States in Sparf v. United States, 156 U. S. 51, 39 L. ed. 343, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 273, 10 Am. Crim. Rep. 168. It is true these were not libel cases; but it will not be questioned that the principles therein announced apply to such cases. It follows, from the foregoing views, that the court committed no error in granting the instruction now under consideration; neither did the court err in refusing to permit counsel to read law books to the jury. Ayers v. State, 60 Miss. 709; Bangs v. State, 61 Miss. 363.

Complaint is made of the action of the court below in granting the sixth and seventh instructions requested by the state, and in refusing the seventh instruction requested by appellant. The instructions granted by the court on behalf of the state are as follows: (6) "The law implies a malicious intent from the deliberate publication of any matter which imputes to another the commission of any criminal offense, and it is not necessary that any express malice or evil intent should be shown." (7) "If, therefore, the jury believe from the evidence, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the defendant, J. C. Oakes, falsely published a handbill or circular in evidence, charging that Robt. L. Bullard violated the law in his official capacity, then the defendant is guilty as charged, and the jury should so find; and this is true without reference to whether the defendant's motives were good or bad, and without reference to whether he believed them to be true or untrue." By the seventh instruction requested by the defense and refused by the court, the court was requested to charge the jury, among other things, that, if they "believed from the evidence that the matters contained in the circular and alleged in the indictment to be libelous were published of and concerning a public officer, and were matters of public interest, and that the defendant proceeded with good motives, upon probable grounds, upon reasons which were apparently good, but upon a supposition which afterwards turned out to be unfounded, then the defendant was excusable, and the jury should acquit him, although they may believe that the charges were in fact untrue."

The exact question we are called upon by this assignment of error to answer, and the one to which our response shall be limited, is this: Is a communication, false in fact, addressed to the general public, imputing the commission of a criminal offense or of moral delinquency to a public officer in the discharge of his official duties, privileged, when same is made in good faith and on probable cause? If the defendant is limited to the defense provided by the Constitution and statute, he is entitled to an acquittal only in the event the statements made by him are true, or do not appear beyond a reasonable doubt to be false. Appellant claims, however, that he is not limited to the language of the Constitution and statute, but is entitled to invoke, and that the requested instruction announces, the law of privilege. The law of privilege relating to communications addressed to the general public concerning public officers is thus stated in 18 Am. & Eng. Enc. of Law, 2d ed. p. 1041: "The official acts of public officers may lawfully be made the subject of fair comment and criticism, not only by the press, but by the members of the public. But the prevailing rule is that charges imputing a criminal offense or moral delinquency to a public officer cannot, if false, be privileged, though made in good faith; and this though the charge relates to an act of the officer in the discharge of his official duties." In 25 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 402, the rule is stated as follows: "Comment on and criticism of the acts and conduct of public men are privileged, if fair and reasonable and made in good faith. But the right to criticize does not embrace the right to make false statements of fact, to attack the private character of a public officer, or to falsely impute to him malfeasance or misconduct in office." The rule as stated by these texts is fully supported by the legion of authorities there cited. A communication imputing the commission of a criminal offense or of moral delinquency to a public officer, even in the discharge of his official duties, is therefore not privileged, and the only defense for so doing is that same is true, and, in addition, was published from good motives and for justifiable ends. If the communication is in fact untrue, the motive with which it is published is wholly immaterial. The court, therefore, committed no error in granting and refusing the instructions now under consideration.

Appellant testified in his own behalf on the trial in the court below, and while on the stand was asked by his counsel what his motive in publishing the circular was, and what was the end he expected thereby to accomplish. To those questions objections were interposed by the state and sustained by the court. Should the jury have believed that the matter charged to be libelous was true, then, but, of course, not until then, appellant's motive in publishing same became very material; for it must still appear that the publication was made "with good motives and for justifiable ends." There was no direct evidence of motive, and the jury were left to ascertain same from circumstances. On the evidence it is difficult to determine what the defendant's motive was. It may have been one of several, which we will not, for obvious reasons, set out or comment upon. Some of them would have been good; others, bad. This evidence, therefore, was aimed at what may have been one of the most material points in the case. We are not advised upon what ground same was excluded by the trial court. It may be, as indicated in the brief of counsel for appellant, that it was excluded upon the theory that a witness is disqualified from testifying to his own intent or motive, where that intent or motive is material to be investigated; but the rule is otherwise. Such a witness is not disqualified from so testifying. 1 Wigmore, Ev. § 581. The defendant was entitled to tell the jury what his motive was, so that the jury might consider his statement thereof, along with all the other evidence in the case, in arriving at the truth of the matter under investigation.

This action of the court was fatal error; and, since the judgment of the court below must be reversed therefor, it becomes unnecessary for us to notice the many other assignments of error.

MISSOURI SUPREME COURT.

JOSEPH DIENER, Appt.,

v.

STAR-CHRONICLE PUBLISHING COMPANY, Respt.

(230 Mo. 613, 132 S. W. 1143.)

Appeal — rulings on pleadings — bill of exceptions.

1. Rulings on pleadings cannot be presented to the appellate court by bill of exceptions, if the pleadings appear only in such bill.

Libel — power to decide on demurrer.

2. The court may determine as matter of law on demurrer that a publication relied on without innuendo to be libelous per se is not so, or that an innuendo seeking to give words of hidden meaning a libelous intent

Note. — For a discussion of the effect of provisions that the injury shall determine the law and the facts in libel cases, see Oakes v. State and the note appended thereto, ante, 207.

is forced and unnatural, or that an attempt to put a libelous edge on ambiguous words is an unnatural and forced construction, and that therefore no libel is alleged, although the Constitution provides that in libel suits the jury shall, under the direction of the court, determine the law and the facts.

Evidence — judicial notice — general elections.

3. The court takes judicial notice of the dates of general elections provided for by general statutes of the state.

Libel — reciting killing by chauffeur — effect.

4. An article inquiring into the eligibility for re-election to office of a coroner if he was the one who failed to hold for inquiry a chauffeur who, with his automobile, ran down and killed a child in the street, is not libelous on the chauffeur, although it uses with reference to him such words as "killed a little child" and "mangled little tots," and this is, by innuendo, alleged to have charged him with a crime involving moral turpitude, since the words do not import a felonious intent.

Same — privilege.

5. A newspaper article animadverting upon the conduct of a coroner in letting go a chauffeur without inquiry, after he had run down and killed a child, which simply states the facts, without any indication of malice, is privileged so far as the chauffeur is concerned, since it is a matter of interest to the public.

(November 12, 1910.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for the City of St. Louis, sustaining a demurrer to the petition in an action brought to recover damages for the alleged publication of a libel. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Robert & Robert, for appellant:

The amended petition states a cause of action for libel per se, as the publication charged the plaintiff with the commission of a crime, and held him up to public scorn.

Mo. Rev. Stat. 1899, §§ 1815-1817, 1835, 2259, 2375; Meriwether v. Publishers: Geo. Knapp & Co. 224 Mo. 617, 123 S. W. 1100; Julian v. Kansas City Star Co. 209 Mo. 35, 107 S. W. 496; Minter v. Bradstreet Co. 174 Mo. 485, 73 S. W. 668; Noeninger v. Vogt, 88 Mo. 589; Ferguson v. Evening Chronicle Pub. Co. 72 Mo. App. 462; Hermann v. Bradstreet Co. 19 Mo. App. 229; Commercial Pub. Co. v. Smith, 79 C. C. A. 410, 149 Fed. 704; O'Shaughnessy v. New York Recorder Co. 58 Fed. 653; Holt v. State, 89 Ga. 316, 15 S. E. 316; Pool v. State, 87 Ga. 526, 13 S. E. 556; Brown v. 33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Com. 13 Ky. L. Rep. 372, 17 S. W. 220; Clark, Crim. Law, 2d ed. 186, 187; 1 Wharton, Crim. Law, 329.

The word "killed" imputed to the plaintiff the crime of murder, and is actionable per se.

Jones v. Murray, 167 Mo. 25, 66 S. W. 981; Noeninger v. Vogt, 88 Mo. 589; Button v. Heyward, 8 Mod. 24; Cooper & Smith, 1 Rolle, Abr. 77; Doan v. Kelley, 121 Ind. 413, 23 N. E. 266; O'Conner v. O'Conner, 24 Ind. 218; Thomas v. Blasdale, 147 Mass. 438, 18 N. E. 214; McLaughlin v. Cowley, 131 Mass. 70, 127 Mass. 316; Democrat Pub. Co. v. Jones, 83 Tex. 302, 18 S. W. 652; Curley v. Feeney, 62 N. J. L. 70, 40 Atl. 678; Carroll v. White, 33 Barb. 615; Hays v. Hays, 1 Humph. 402; Cady v. Minneapolis Times Co. 58 Minn. 329, 59 N. W. 1040; Palmer v. Smith, 21 Minn. 419.

Messrs. Nathan Frank and Richard A. Jones, for respondent:

If the sufficiency of the matter charged in the petition to constitute a cause of action is challenged, it is properly within the scope of the functions of the court to determine this, even though it may involve an inquiry as to the quality of the publication, whether defamatory or otherwise.

Heller v. Pulitzer Pub. Co. 153 Mo. 205, 54 S. W. 457; Duncan v. Williams, 107 Mo. App. 539, 81 S. W. 1175; Hall v. Adkins, 59 Mo. 144; Trimble v. Foster, 87 Mo. 49, 56 Am. Rep. 440.

The publication is not libelous.

Spurlock v. Lombard Invest. Co. 59 Mo. App. 225; Baldwin v. Walser, 41 Mo. App. 243; Legg v. Dunleavy, 80 Mo. 558, 50 Am. Rep. 512, affirming 10 Mo. App. 461; Branch v. Publishers: George Knapp & Co. 222 Mo. 598, 121 S. W. 93; Blackwell v. Smith, 8 Mo. App. 43; Christal v. Craig, 80 Mo. 367; Salvatelli v. Ghio, 9 Mo. App. 155; Wood v. Hilbish, 23 Mo. App. 389; Klos v. Zahorik, 113 Iowa, 161, 53 L.R.A. 235, 84 N. W. 1046; Barr v. Providence Telegram Pub. Co. 27 R. I. 101, 60 Atl. 835; Curry v. Collins, 37 Mo. 324; Brown v. Tribune Asso. 74 App. Div. 359, 77 N. Y. Supp. 461; Foot v. Pitt, 83 App. Div. 76, 82 N. Y. Supp. 464; Ramscar v. Gerry, 16 N. Y. S. R. 789, 1 N. Y. Supp. 635; Kilgour v. Evening Star Newspaper Co. 96 Md. 16, 53 Atl. 716; Hollenbeck v. Hall, 103 Iowa, 214, 39 L.R.A. 734, 64 Am. St. Rep. 175, 72 N. W. 518; Homer v. Engelhardt, 117 Mass. 539; Hanaw v. Jackson Patriot Co. 98 Mich. 506, 57 N. W. 734; Edwards v. Chandler, 14 Mich. 471, 90 Am. Dec. 249; Bearce v. Bass, 88 Me. 521, 51 Am. St. Rep. 446, 34 Atl. 411; Dunneback v. Tribune Printing Co. 108 Mich. 75, 65 N. W. 583; Brown v. Boynton, 122 Mich.

251, 80 N. W. 1099; Keyer v. Rives, 21 Ky. L. Rep. 1706, 56 S. W. 4.

Lamm, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Tort for libel. Cast on demurrer to his original petition, plaintiff pleaded over. Cast on demurrer to his amended petition, he stood, refused to plead over, suffered judgment, filed a motion for a new trial, excepted to the order overruling the same, had his bill of exceptions settled, allowed, and filed, and came up on appeal. The amended petition reads: "Now comes Joseph Diener, plaintiff in the above-entitled cause, files this amended petition, and for his cause of action states: That the defendant, Star-Chronicle Publishing Company, is and was at all times hereinafter mentioned a corporation duly organized and existing under the laws of the state of Missouri. That at the time hereinafter mentioned said defendant was the publisher, proprietor, and printer of a certain daily newspaper of large circulation in and about the city of St. Louis, which said newspaper is published in the city of St. Louis, state of Missouri, and is known as the 'St. Louis Star-Chronicle.' That on, to wit, the 1st day of November, 1906, there was printed and published in said newspaper the following false, defamatory, and libelous article or language, of and concerning the plaintiff, to wit: 'Is He the Same Coroner? Isn't Coroner Jules C. Baron, present incumbent and candidate for re-election, the public official who joined with the police in letting Health Commissioner Bond's chauffeur go free, without bond or charge or investigation, after the latter had run down and killed a little child in the street? and if he is, would this be a good reason for continuing his term of service? Voters with or without children, who think there should always be an inquiry into the mangling of such little tots, please answer at the polls.' That at all times referred to in said publication, the plaintiff was the chauffeur of Health Commissioner Bond, which fact the defendant well knew, and that this plaintiff was the chauffeur to whom the defendant referred in said publication, and that by said publication defendant thereby meant to charge this plaintiff with a crime involving moral turpitude, and with having wilfully and wantonly taken the life of a human being. Plaintiff further states that said publication was wilful and malicious, and that he has been damaged thereby in the sum of $10,000. Wherefore plaintiff prays judgment in the sum of $10,000, together with his costs." The demurrer reads: "Comes defendant, Star-Chronicle Publishing Company, and demurs to the amended petition of plaintiff, filed in the above-entitled cause, for that: The matter and things stated and charged therein are not sufficient to constitute a cause of action against this defendant."

1. Plaintiff assumed to preserve his petition, the demurrer, the ruling sustaining it, his exception thereto, a motion for a new trial, and his exception to overruling the latter, in a bill of exceptions. Fortunately, it happens in this instance that no harm came to him by that course. This for the reason that the record proper, brought up in his abstract, also preserved such matter and his point. But inadvertence in the use of rules of practice results in cases riding off on appeal without a disposition of the merits. In this view, caution is better than cure, as the precept puts it. Therefore, it is wise, to stamp out heresies, to put up signs at the point of divergence from the beaten path. Via tria est tutissima. Re Isle of Ely, 10 Coke, 142. To illustrate, if the ruling on the demurrer, the demurrer itself, and the trial petition had been preserved nowhere else than in a bill of exceptions, this appellant would have nothing here to review; for if anything is settled, it is that such matter has no place in a bill of exceptions. It is part of the record proper, and if it appear only in such bill, it is the same as if it did not appear at all. The rules to go by are:

(a) A demurrer is part of the record proper. It must appear there. It needs no bill of exceptions to preserve it. The ruling on it is likewise a part of the record proper, and no exceptions are necessary to have that ruling reviewed, provided error on the demurrer is not waived by pleading over. Spears v. Bond, 79 Mo., loc. cit. 469; Tarkio v. Clark, 186 Mo., loc. cit. 293, 294, 85 S. W. 329; Mallinckrodt Chemical Works v. Nemnich, 169 Mo., loc. cit. 395, 69 S. W. 355.

(b) It results, as a sequence, that a motion for a new trial is not necessary in order to review the ruling on a demurrer, since that motion is directed to matters of mere exception. And so we have ruled over and over. Hannah v. Hannah, 109 Mo. 236, 19 S. W. 87; Dysart v. Crow, 170 Mo. 280, 70 S. W. 689; McKenzie v. Donnell, 151 Mo., loc. cit. 448, 52 S. W. 214; Thorp v. Miller, 137 Mo., loc. cit. 238, 239, 38 S. W. 929. Vide, Houtz v. Hellman, 228 Mo. 655, 128 S. W. 1001.

So much to show disapproval of the plan of plaintiff to keep life in his point by a motion for a new trial, and by a bill of exceptions.

This brings us to the real question in the case, which is:

2. Does the amended petition state a cause of action? We think not, because:

(a) A demurrer lies to a petition sounding in tort for libel the same as to any other petition, if certain conditions are present, this, in spite of the constitutional provision (art. 2, § 14, of the Bill of Rights [Anno. Stat. 1906, p. 135]), that, in libel, "the jury, under the direction of the court, shall determine the law and the facts." To illustrate: If A sue B for libel without matter of innuendo or inducement, on the theory that the words published are libelous per se, and they are not libelous per se, the sufficiency of A's petition may be challenged by demurrer, and is for the court. Again, if A sue B for libel for words not actionable per se, and the pleader, claiming they bear a hidden or latent libelous meaning because of certain extrinsic circumstances, sets such extrinsic circumstances forth by prefatory allegations by way of inducement, and follows up the libelous words by an innuendo applying the words to the matter so pleaded by way of inducement, in such cases, such innuendo should not be a forced and unnatural construction and application of the words, but a reasonable and natural construction and application of them. A vice of that sort can be reached by demurrer, and is for the court. Again, if the words of the libel are ambiguous, and the pleader can only put a libelous tang or edge upon them by a wholly unnatural and forced construction, and tries to do so by an innuendo, that vice can be reached by demurrer, and is for the court. So, if the petition be not challenged by way of demurrer, in limine, and the case be fully developed on trial, and if, under the pleadings and evidence, no case is made, the court may take the case from the jury by a peremptory instruction in the nature of a demurrer. So far as above indicated, libel suits, though sui generis (in a sense), are subject to those rules of practice found wise and useful in administering justice generally in the courts.

The propositions just ruled lie well within the holding and reasoning of Heller v. Pulitzer Pub. Co. 153 Mo. 295, 54 S. W. 457; Ukman v. Daily Record Co. 189 Mo. loc. cit. 390, 88 S. W. 60; and the fourth proposition discussed in the Ukman Case, 189 Mo. loc. cit. 393, et seq., 88 S. W. 60, and cases and text-books cited; Branch v. Publishers: George Knapp & Co. 222 Mo. loc. cit. 587, 588, 121 S. W. 93; Capitol & Counties Bank v. Henty (H. L.) L. R. 7 App. Cas. 741, 52 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 232, 47 L. T. N. S. 662, 31 Week. Rep. 157, 47 J. P. 214. And the student in jurisprudence, curious in that behalf, may find in those cases and authorities the reasoning supporting those propositions.

It may not be amiss, in passing, to borrow and quote a bit of wisdom ancient demurrers in libel and slander from a very good authority. Henry, Lord Cromwell, brought suit for slander against Denny, a vicar, in the King's bench, during the time of Queen Elizabeth. Cromwell v. Denny, 4 Coke, 14a. In commenting on that case, Sir Edward Coke quaintly says: "In this case, reader, you may observe an excellent point of learning in actions of slander, to observe the occasion and cause of speaking of them, and how it may be pleaded in the defendant's excuse. When the matter in fact will clearly serve for your client, although your opinion is that the plaintiff has no cause of action, yet take heed you do not hazard the matter upon a demurrer; in which, upon the pleading, and otherwise, more perhaps will arise than you thought of; but first take advantage of the matters of fact, and leave matters in law, which always arise upon the matters in fact ad ultimum, and never at first demur in law, when, after the trial of the matters in fact, the matters in law (as in this case it was) will be saved to you." But having regard to the dangers of a demurrer suggested by that profound lawyer, and the precept that abundant caution does no injury, we think the propositions heretofore announced are accepted modern doctrine; and they may be taken as not a little fortified by another settled proposition, viz., that it is for the court, and not the jury or the pleader, to determine by judicial construction the legal effect and force of the terms of a written instrument, provided those terms are unambiguous, and are set forth in the petition as the foundation of the cause of action. Donovan v. Boeck, 217 Mo. 70, 116 S. W. 543. It follows that a demurrer which admits the fact of publication and the words used does not admit an unfair and forced construction put upon the words by the pleader. We are not saying that a court, as a matter of law, can by instruction declare a given publication libelous. Such power is denied by our Constitution. But we are saying that a court, in a given case, may declare it not libelous as a matter of law. In libel a defendant has two strings to his bow,—the court and the jury; plaintiff but one,—the jury. Such is the doctrine of the Heller, Ukman, and Branch Cases, supra.

In so far forth, then, as learned counsel apparently argue that it was for the jury by their verdict, and not for the court, by its ruling on a demurrer, to dispose of the questions discussed on the demurrer, we disallow the argument.

(b) It will be observed that enough appears in the alleged libelous article to show that a political campaign was in progress. Indeed, from the date of the article, November 1, 1906, we judicially know that under our statutes a general election was pending, and that a candidate for coroner must have been theretofore nominated, if at all. The article deals primarily and broadly with that election, and with the candidacy of Dr. Baron for re-election to that office. It is addressed to the body of the voters of the city of St. Louis in a matter of public concern. It is couched in the form of argumentation by interrogation,—a method of persuading and convincing respectably vouched for by no less authority than Socrates himself, as we are told by his pupil, Plato., viz., that of asking questions adroitly framed to suggest the answer, and to put those who sensibly answer them in the attitude of establishing the propositions the questioner hopes to maintain and establish.

This case was argued at our bar with another where the same plaintiff sues the same defendant on another alleged libel relating to the same casualty. We are referred by briefs to the record in that case. Going there, we find that an article appeared in defendant's newspaper in May, 1906, complaining of Dr. Baron, as coroner, for his conduct in and about the investigation of the death of a little girl, Gertrude Copeland, who, the article says, was torn to pieces by the automobile of Health Commissioner Bond, driven by plaintiff as chauffeur. We stand informed then, by express consent of counsel, that the article in hand refers to that tragedy and the conduct of the coroner at the time. It wants to know if Dr. Baron is the same coroner who let the chauffeur "go free, without bond or charge or investigation, after the latter had run down and killed a little child in the street." It asks the voters of St. Louis whether, if Dr. Baron be the same coroner, this would be a good reason for re-electing him. It proceeds on the assumption that all voters, those having children and those having none, who think there should always be an official inquiry (before the coroner plants himself as in favor of a chauffeur) when little children are mangled by automobiles, should answer a certain question at the polls, viz., whether a coroner who does not live up to such rule of official conduct should be continued in office? The libelous poison, as to plaintiff, is said to lurk in the phrase, "run down and killed a little child in the street," and the other, "the mangling of such little tots." It is charged by way of innuendo that "defendant thereby meant to charge this plaintiff with a crime involving moral turpitude, and with wilfully and wantonly taking the life of a human being." The question, then, narrows itself and comes to be: Whether the article is libelous per se as to the chauffeur, or will reasonably bear the innuendo and construction put upon it by the pleader. In expounding the matter, certain settled propositions of the law of libel must be reckoned with, viz.:

First. A party cannot support a charge of libel by showing that the same publication libeled another. To make a case, the publication must be libelous as to the plaintiff, not another. The malice supporting the charge must flow from defendant to plaintiff, and be personal to him alone, and not another. Speaking to the point, Foster, J., in Bearce v. Bass, 88 Me., loc. cit. 542, 51 Am. St. Rep. 446, 34 Atl. 413, said: "If, therefore, the defendants' criticism of the plaintiffs' work was fair and reasonable, and had no reference to their private or business character, and there was no proof of actual malice on the part of the defendants towards the plaintiffs, then, however much malice may have existed between the defendants and Mr. Beal [another party criticized] cannot make the defendants' criticism libelous. If the criticism of the defendants was fair and reasonable, and in reference to a matter of public concern, and the plaintiffs are not attacked either in their private or business reputation, then it constitutes no libel, because not defamatory; and it cannot be made libelous by any attack upon the private or business reputation of some person other than the plaintiffs, no matter to what extent such malice may exist. Odgers, Libel & Slander, 39, 268. Newell, Defamation, 324." So, in this case, we are not concerned with a libel on Baron that may or may not lurk in the comments made on his official acts, as bearing on his worthiness as a candidate for re-election. Baron is not suing here, and the plaintiff cannot recover because the article is censorious of him. In libel every tub stands on its own bottom.

Second. Since one part of a publication may explain another part, and since the intent and the meaning must be gathered not only from the words singled out as libelous, but from the context, the maxim, Noscitur a sociis, applies; and (broader yet) all parts of the publication must be read together to collect the true meaning. Phrases and words must not be singled out and wrenched from a context explanatory or indicative of the meaning. The whole article is its own best interpreter. So, words take color from the occasion of speaking them. In Kilgour v. Evening Star Newspaper Co. 96 Md., loc. cit. 27, 53 Atl.

718. it was said: "In the opening sentences of the publication, it is stated that many prominent citizens were greatly agitated, 'on account of the alleged stifling by the state's attorney of an investigation of the mysterious death, etc.,' and it is insisted that the word 'stifling' was used in its offensive sense, and implied that the state's attorney acted from corrupt motives. But we cannot accept this view if the whole article be considered, as must be done if we are to arrive at the true meaning and force of particular words or phrases. It is not proper to separate words or phrases from the context. All parts of the paper should be read in connection, to collect their true meaning." Gaither v. Advertiser Co. 102 Ala. 458, 14 So. 788; Donaghue v. Gaffy, 53 Conn. 43, 2 Atl. 397. It is from such rules that the related one is deduced, viz., that, if the omission of any part of the libelous publication from the pleading makes a material alteration in the sense, the omission is fatal. Meriwether v. Publishers: Knapp & Co. 211 Mo., loc. cit. 209, 16 L.R.A. (N.S.) 953, 109 S.W. 750. Therefore in this case the word "killed" and the word "mangled" must be considered in the light of the context. Attending to the context, we find the word "chauffeur" used and the phrase "run down." Now, a chauffeur is the driver of a heavy self-propelled vehicle plying on the public streets and capable of great speed,—a vehicle propelled by internal combustion engines, steam engines, or electric motors,—one well calculated to give joy and comfort to its occupants, but abounding in danger and terror to pedestrians. But an automobile is not a lethal weapon like a gun, a pistol, a dagger, or a billy. Hence no evil intent to kill or harm is presumed by its mere use. It does not fill the malignant office of poison in taking life. If it take the life of, or mangle, a child or adult, it is by means of a collision, through negligence or accident. In other words, it runs them down. Appellant's counsel cite us to cases of doctors suing for libel because of publications accusing them of killing their patients,—a tender point. To others, where the libel consists in a charge of killing a pupil by corporal punishment, or a slave in like manner. To other old cases where the bald charge was made of killing, without any explanation of instrument, means, or occasion. Cooper & Smith, 1 Rolle, Abr. 77. But none of those cases are in point. At any rate, we shall not follow them here, where a form of the verb "to kill" is not used in a connection showing it means to charge a crime.

Third. Libel may lurk in ironical words. (Witness the funeral oration of one Marcus Antonius on a notable occasion.) It may lurk in a double entente, as in the case put by Rabelais:

"The devil was sick, the devil a monk would be;
The devil was well, the devil a monk was he."

It may lurk in questions so framed as to indicate the affirmance of a fact, though that affirmance be adroitly veiled. The law may well be as astute to reach and cure as is the libeler to hide and do harm. Courts no longer construe words in their most favorable and mild sense when an offensive and libelous sense may be fairly deduced from the trend of the publication, indirectly, by sarcasm, invective, and abuse, or by direct statement. Otherwise, as put by Lord Chief Justice De Grey in Rex v. Horne (a case of profound interest to our Revolutionary fathers and students of history) Cowp. pt. 2, loc. cit. p. 687: "A man might defame in one sense and defend in another." "Words are now construed by courts, as they always ought to have been, in the plain and popular sense in which the rest of the world naturally understand them." Per Ellenborough, Ch. J., in Roberts v. Camden, 9 East, loc. cit. 96. But while courts will not bother themselves to hunt for the mildest sense to be put upon his words, to find a loophole of escape for a libeler by construction, neither will they hunt for a forced and strained construction to put upon them, but they will be construed fairly by their natural import, according to the ideas they were calculated and intended to convey to those to whom they were addressed, and pinned down to some one commonly accepted meaning, one generally understood,—mindful always that language is as significant in suggestion as in expression, that a libelous charge may be sprung by insinuation, and that defamation begins where honest criticism leaves off.

Bringing the alleged libelous publication to book, is there any sarcasm or abuse or irony in a bad sense? None whatever. The force of the publication is leveled and spent at the coroner and his dereliction of duty,—not at the chauffeur. The aim and purpose of the writer is entirely fair and honest, without any badge of malice. It is to inculcate and accent the idea and duty of an immediate and drastic investigation when a child is killed by an automobile. The chauffeur is brought in merely as an incidental factor to identify the transaction concerning which the coroner is criticized. The writer could not have said much less about the chauffeur than he did if the point he was making against the coroner and the moral he sought to draw were to be comprehended by the reader. To be sure, he might have used daintier language, and put his screed into a softer or more round-about form. He might have said the child was overtaken by an automobile and came to its death thereby, or its death was caused thereby, or that its death ensued, or that it gave up the ghost, etc. But those forms of expression would have lacked nervous force and pith. Instead he used the word "killed." Is there anythink fairly ambiguous in that word—any sign that the writer was paltering in a double sense? Or meant anything more than it was deprived of life? None that we can see. The kernel of the thing is, after all, that, if the child died as the result of the collision, it was killed thereby. Such is the long and short of it, and the only fair import of the word, taken with its context.

Under such circumstances, the court would not allow the testimony of any witness to the effect that the word conveyed to him as a reader, the idea of the felonious taking of a human life. A construction of that sort would be forced and strained, not natural and reasonable. Neither was there anything for a jury to pass on by way of putting a libelous meaning or edge on the word "killed." This conclusion is within the doctrine of the Heller, Ukman, and Branch Cases, supra; nor does the Julian Case, 209 Mo. 35, 107 S. W. 496, aid plaintiff. The language in judgment in that case, "did well in a legislative way," was construed to be ambiguous; one natural sense of it being libelous. In such case the doctrine applies that the apprehension of the reader is the touchstone of interpretation. It was happily said by Goode, J., in a case on which I cannot put my finger, that in this aspect a libel or slander is like unto a jest,—i. e., the prosperity of each lies in the ear of the hearer,—thus hitching the gravity of the law to the car of the light philosophy of Rosalind.

"A jest's prosperity lies in the ear
Of him who hears it, never in the tongue
Of him that makes it."

—Love's Labour Lost, Act V., Sc. 2.

Fourth. Finally, freedom of speech is guaranteed to the individual and newspaper by the Constitution. Courts are charged with the duty they may not premit, to see to it that it is not abridged. It is however, the use, and not the abuse, of free speech and free press that is guarded by the fundamental law as sacred. So long as a publication is not directed to a public officer by charging criminal misfeasance or nonfeasance, so long as it is not directed to the defamation of an individual in his private character or business, but is directed to a matter of live public concern, and is for an honest, and not a defamatory, purpose, it is qualifiedly privileged. Within lines suggested, it would be intolerable to hold that a newspaper or individual—the one the same as the other—might not comment fairly, freely, with vigor and severity. "Everyone has a right to comment on matters of public interest and general concern, provided he does so fairly and with an honest purpose, . . . however severe in their terms, unless they are written intemperately and maliciously. Every citizen has full freedom of speech on such subjects, but he must not abuse it. . . . The right to comment upon the public acts of public men is the right of every citizen, and is not the peculiar privilege of the press. . . . Every one of the public is entitled to pass an opinion on everything which in any way invites public attention." Odgers, Libel & Slander, 34-36. Such is the universal rule in this vital matter. Bearce v. Bass, 88 Me., loc. cit. 542, 51 Am. St. Rep. 446, 34 Atl. 413, supra; Branch v. Publishers; George Knapp & Co. 222 Mo., loc. cit. 587, 588, 121 S. W. 93, supra; Triggs v. Sun Printing & Pub. Assn. 179 N. Y. 144, 66 L.R.A. 612, 103 Am. St. Rep. 841, 71 N. E. 739, 1 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 326. And see an illuminating article by Van Vechten Veeder in Harvard Law Review, vol. 23, p. 413.

The right of freedom of speech, of fair comment with an honest purpose in matters of public concern is on the foot of pro bono publico and founded on public policy. Free discussion is the foundation on which free government itself is builded. That lost, all is lost; the two exist or perish together. They mean the same thing. It is only in despotisms that one must speak sub rosa, or in whispers, with bated breath, around the corner, or in the dark, on a subject touching the common welfare. It is the brightest jewel in the crown of the law to seek and maintain the golden mean between defamation, on one hand, and a healthy and robust right of free public discussion, on the other.

The office of coroner is of great antiquity and dignity. The power of that office at common law involves the duty of investigating the causes of sudden, violent, and unnatural deaths. 7 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 602. "The most important function of the office of coroner is that of holding inquests as to the causes of violent and extraordinary deaths." Id. p. 603. His common-law powers are also declared by statute. "A coroner . . . shall take inquests of violent and casual deaths happening . . . [in his county] or where the body of any person coming to his death shall be discovered in his county. . . ." Rev. Stat. 1899, § 6629, Anno. Stat. 1906, p. 3297. Another section (6633 [page 3298]) refers to his duty to investigate when he is notified of the dead body of any person "supposed to have come to his death by violence or casualty."

We shall not hold that the death of a child on the public street, killed by an automobile, is not a matter of intense interest to the public. The injury of one, in that behalf, is truly the concern of all. We shall not hold that the act of a coroner in releasing the chauffeur, or in refusing an inquest at the outset, to locate the blame, if any, for such a casualty, is not the proper subject for animadversion by any public print in an article couched in the terms of that complained of when the chauffeur who drove the machine is referred to as having run down and killed the child.

The article being fair and with an honest purpose, in no wise earmarked with abuse and vituperative indications of malice, it was privileged as a matter of law. We hold it was not libelous per se, and that the innuendo pleaded was a forced and strained one.

The ruling on the demurrer was well enough.

Let the judgment be affirmed.

It is so ordered.

This case came into banc on a dissent from the foregoing divisional opinion. In banc, on a rehearing, it was adopted by a majority of the judges; Valliant, J., concurring in the result; Gantt, Graves, and Kennish, JJ., concurring in full; Woodson, J., dissenting; Burgess, Ch. J., absent.

WISCONSIN SUPREME COURT.

MATHILDA KNUDSEN, Admrx., etc., of Olaus Knudsen, Deceased, Appt.,
v.

LA CROSSE STONE COMPANY, Respt.
(145 Wis. 394, 130 N. W. 519.)

Master — duty to servant.

1. The master should furnish his servants

Headnotes by MARSHALL, J.

Note. — The applicability of the safe place rule where the conditions of the work are changing is treated in the notes to Citron v. O'Rourke Engineering Constr. Co. 19 L.R.A. (N.S.) 340, and Smith v. North Jellico Coal Co. 28 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1267.

As to the applicability of that rule where servants are engaged in the work of removing dangerous conditions, see note to Neagle v. Syracuse, B. & N. Y. R. Co. 25 L.R.A. (N.S.) 321.

33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

with a reasonably safe place to work, reasonably safe instrumentalities with which to do the work, and fellow servants provided should be reasonably safe as such; the standard of care as to each duty being such as is exercised by the great mass of mankind under the same or similar circumstances.

Evidence — presumption — care of master.

2. The presumption of fact is in favor of the master having performed the duties mentioned, till overcome by evidence establishing the contrary to a reasonable certainty.

Master — changing conditions — duty.

3. The safe place rule having been satisfied at the start, and the conditions being such that hereafter the servants necessarily are expected to make their own working places, which must, necessarily, change from time to time and at short intervals as the work proceeds, dangers created are not attributable to the master.

Same — acts of fellow servant.

4. In the circumstances last mentioned, negligence of one or more of several servants, not excepting the foreman of the crew, rendering the working place of some other servant or servants unsafe, is negligence of a fellow servant.

Same — changing conditions — safe place rule.

5. In operations where the servants necessarily make their own working place, the safe place to work rule has little or no application.

Same — foreman as fellow servant.

6. The foreman of a crew erecting a water tank, or removing heavy machinery from a car to a factory, or moving a pile driver, or in charge of a train crew or the crew of a vessel or a dock crew, in regard to all the details of the general employment as regards the safe place rule, is a fellow servant of the men under him.

Same — stone quarry crew — foreman and blaster.

7. A blaster working with others under a foreman, all constituting a stone quarry crew, is a fellow servant of such foreman in respect to duties of the latter as to guarding against the working place of those under him being made unsafe by the rolling down from one level to another of earth or rock, in the course of quarry work.

(Siebecker, Kerwin, and Timlin, JJ., dissent.)

(March 14, 1911.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for La Crosse County in favor of defendant notwithstanding a verdict in her own favor, in an action brought to recover damages for the alleged negligent killing of her intestate. Affirmed.

Statement by Marshall, J.:

Action to recover damages for the death of plaintiff's intestate. The deceased, while employed by defendant as a blaster, was killed, and, as alleged, under the following circumstances.

The intestate and others under a foreman were put to work for defendant in its stone quarry. There was a shelf of rock some 10 feet wide, 50 to 70 feet long, and about 50 feet above the surface below, composed of rock. From the back side of the shelf a bank of rock and earth rose upwards, at a sharp angle backward, 15 to 20 feet, to the top of a hill or bluff. Plaintiff on the day in question, by direction of the foreman, was at work on the shelf drilling blast holes. Other employees had partially loosened portions of rock and earth from the edge of the bank above. A large mass at the edge had been loosened so as only to be retained from rolling down by the frozen condition and roots. While the situation was such that the partly loosened mass was liable to fall at any time, that was not apparent to a person on the shelf below. The rule of the quarry was that the foreman should personally see that no chunks of earth or rock were allowed to be so circumstanced as to be liable to unexpectedly roll down and injure employees, and to see that no such dangers existed before putting employees at work, as in the case in question, and, further, to have due warning given to employees within the zone of danger, before allowing chunks of earth and rock to be loosened and rolled down the side of the bluff. The situation in the particular case should have been known to the foreman before sending deceased to work on the shelf. The latter was entirely ignorant of such situation, and was not guilty of any want of ordinary care in respect thereto. As directed he commenced operations on the shelf in the forenoon of December 31, 1909. He was not warned of the danger as before indicated. He was assured that the place was safe, and relied thereon. While engaged in his work a large chunk of earth and rock suddenly became detached from the side of the bluff above and rolled down upon and killed him.

There were other allegations requisite to make out a cause of action, if defendant was actionably negligent in respect to the cause of the death aforesaid.

Defendant answered putting in issue all allegations making out a breach of duty on its part, and pleaded contributory negligence.

The evidence showed, or tended to show, this: The physical conditions were as alleged in the complaint. In the progress of the work, from time to time, it was necessary to uncover rock further back on the bluff than the shelf where deceased was directed to work, and above that point. The work of uncovering at the particular time of year, because of the earth being frozen, required employees to go to the proper place at the crest of the bluff above the shelf, and by the use of wedges, crack off the frozen earth by strips and allow the same to roll down. In the forenoon of the day in question, the foreman directed one of the crew to do work of that sort, and marked off the particular strip of earth to be thrown down. By noon such strip had been sufficiently loosened to open up a seam back of it about 6 inches wide on the surface, and about 10 feet long. The employee was then directed to help deceased on the shelf, which was in the pathway of the partly loosened strip. The two commenced work on the shelf about 2 o'clock in the afternoon. They worked together a short time before noon. The foreman did not make any effort to discover the condition of things above the shelf. It was not observable to one circumstanced as the deceased was on the shelf, and he did not know of it. While he was busily engaged, and the foreman and one or two others were near by the strip of frozen earth came wholly loose, rolled down and swept him from the shelf, causing him to fall on the rocks below with fatal effect. The foreman was under instructions to guard employees against such dangers. It was the custom for the foreman of a quarry to see that overhanging earth or rock was not left so as to be liable to roll down where employees were required to work, and endanger their personal safety. The foreman in this case could have seen by casual observation before he sent the men to work in the afternoon, that the strip of earth he had directed to be loosened had not been thrown down. Defendant relied upon such dangers as the one in question being prevented by the foresight of its foreman. He had full charge of the workmen and working conditions in the quarry. He directed operations as was necessary, and himself took a hand in doing the work, sometimes at one place and sometimes at another.

The jury found thus: The working place where deceased was stationed was not reasonably safe. The frozen strip of earth was loosened by directions of the foreman. He directed deceased to work where he was located when swept from the cliff. The foreman did not know of the conditions respecting the strip of earth which had been partly loosened prior to the accident. In the exercise of ordinary care he ought to have known thereof. He did not warn deceased of the danger. The latter did not know of the strip of earth having been loosened. He was not guilty of any want of ordinary care in that regard. He did not have facilities equal to the foreman for knowing of the danger. Such danger was the proximate cause of the disaster complained of. The direction given to the deceased to work where he did, under the circumstances, was a proximate cause of his death. The failure of the foreman to warn deceased of the danger was a proximate cause of his death. The deceased was not guilty of contributory negligence. If on the facts plaintiff is entitled to recover, the measure thereof should be $7,900.

Judgment was rendered notwithstanding the verdict, in favor of the defendant.

Messrs. Jesse E. Higbee and Frank Winter, for appellant:

A risk which the employer, by the exercise of reasonable care, can obviate, is an extraordinary risk not assumed by the servant, and the master is responsible for injury resulting therefrom.

1 Labatt, Mast. & S. § 270; Hough v. Texas & P. R. Co. 100 U. S. 213, 25 L. ed. 612; Hill v. Winston, 73 Minn. 80, 75 N. W. 1030; Streicher v. Davenport Brick & Tile Co. — Iowa, —, 124 N. W. 327; Kaukola v. Oliver Iron Min. Co. 159 Mich. 689, 124 N. W. 591.

The negligent act is not the creation of the danger by the employer, but the failure of the employer to notify the ignorant employee of the dangerous condition, when he directs the latter to work in a place subject to danger.

2 Labatt, Mast. & S. § 479; 1 Labatt, Mast. & S. §§ 240-242; Salem Stone & Lime Co. v. Griffin, 139 Ind. 141, 38 N. E. 411; Ryan v. Tarbox, 135 Mass. 207; Consolidated Coal Co. v. Wombacher, 134 Ill. 57, 24 N. E. 627; Colorado City v. Laife, 28 Colo. 468, 65 Pac. 630; Baxter v. Roberts, 44 Cal. 187, 13 Am. Rep. 160; Hill v. Winston, 73 Minn. 80, 75 N. W. 1030; Streicher v. Davenport Brick & Tile Co. — Iowa, —, 124 N. W. 327; Bell v. Northern P. R. Co. — Minn. —, 128 N. W. 829; Strahlendorf v. Rosenthal, 30 Wis. 674, 10 Mor. Min. Rep. 676; Gussart v. Greenleaf Stone Co. 134 Wis. 425, 114 N. W. 799; Behm v. Armour, 58 Wis. 1, 15 N. W. 806; Jones v. Florence Min. Co. 66 Wis. 268, 57 Am. Rep. 269, 28 N. W. 207; McDougall v. Ashland Sulphite Fibre Co. 97 Wis. 382, 73 N. W. 327; Yess v. Chicago Brass Co. 124 Wis. 406, 102 N. W. 932; Fleming v. Northern Tissue Paper Mill, 135 Wis. 157, 15 L.R.A. (N.S.) 701, 114 N. W. 841; Wedgwood v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 41 Wis. 482; Naylor v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 53 Wis. 665, 11 N. W. 24; Hobbs v. Stauer, 62 Wis. 110, 22 N. W. 153; Steffen v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 46 Wis. 265, 50 N. W. 348; Nadau v. White River Lumber Co. 76 Wis. 129, 20 Am. St. Rep. 29, 43 N. W. 1135.
33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Deceased and McBride were not coemployees when the foreman directed the deceased to work in a dangerous place without instructing him as to the danger which he knew was impending in the fall of frozen earth.

Klochinski v. Shores Lumber Co. 93 Wis. 417, 67 N. W. 934; Horn v. La Crosse Box Co. 123 Wis. 399, 101 N. W. 935; Gussart v. Greenleaf Stone Co. 134 Wis. 418, 114 N. W. 799; McMahon v. Ida Min. Co. 95 Wis. 308, 60 Am. St. Rep. 117, 70 N. W. 478.

Messrs. Quarles, Spence, & Quarles, with Messrs. McConnell & Schweizer, for respondent:

Where the place where the work is being done and the attendant perils from hour to hour are practically created by the servants in the prosecution of their work, and the conditions are constantly shifting by reason of their own acts, of which, as well as their probable consequences, they must be held to have had notice, the rule that the master must furnish the servant a reasonably safe place to work in does not apply.

Larsson v. McClure, 95 Wis. 539, 70 N. W. 662; Mielke v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 103 Wis. 1, 74 Am. St. Rep. 834, 79 N. W. 22; Russell v. Lehigh Valley R. Co. 19 L.R.A. 340; and note 188 N. Y. 344, 81 N. E. 122; Labatt, Mast. & S. § 269; King v. Ford, 121 App. Div. 404, 106 N. Y. Supp. 50; Hencke v. Ellis, 110 Wis. 532, 86 N. W. 171.

Whether employees are fellow servants does not depend upon the rank or grade of the negligent servant, but "upon the nature of the service being performed by them in which the negligence occurs."

Wiskie v. Montello Granite Co. 111 Wis. 443, 87 Am. St. Rep. 885, 87 N. W. 461; Gereg v. Wilwaukee Gaslight Co. 128 Wis. 35, 7 L.R.A. (N.S.) 367, 107 N. W. 289; Okonski v. Pennsylvania & O. Fuel Co. 114 Wis. 448, 90 N. W. 429; McKillop v. Superior Shipbuilding Co. 143 Wis. 454, 127 N. W. 1053.

Deceased was charged with knowledge of what took place, and of what other men were doing. He owed it to himself for his own safety, and to his fellow workman, to know where they were and what they were doing. He could not close his eyes to what was going on about him, without assuming the consequences.

Dahlke v. Illinois Steel Co. 100 Wis. 431, 76 N. W. 362.

If Stiglitz knew that he had left the piece of earth in a dangerous condition, and failed to warn deceased, his working partner, such failure was the negligence of a fellow servant, which precludes a recovery.

McMahon v. Ida Min. Co. 101 Wis. 102, 76 N. W. 1098; Dahlke v. Illinois Steel Co.

100 Wis. 431, 76 N. W. 362; 26 Cyc. Law & Proc. pp. 1165, 1166.

There was no express or implied assurance of safety, and no liability on the part of the master.

Hencke v. Ellis, 110 Wis. 532, 86 N. W. 171; Larsson v. McClure, 95 Wis. 539, 70 N. W. 662.

Messrs. Bunge & Bosshard also for respondent.

Marshall, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

So it will be seen the defendant, in the legitimate pursuit of an important industry, a vocation which it was as important to the public and defendant's employees should be carried on as to the defendant itself, sent a crew to its stone quarry property for the purpose of operating the same. The working place was safe as the crew took possession thereof. Thereafter they necessarily made, in great part, their own respective working places. The safety of one was greatly dependable upon the conduct of his fellows. All were employed in the common employment. From day to day the work went on. Proper regulations, so far as any were required, were made. The working place was in proper condition in the morning in question. So far as appeared to respondent up to the instant of the accident, the foreman and all associated with the blaster, Mr. Knudsen, were reasonably careful men, and competent in every way for performance of the duties assigned to them. The instrumentalities furnished for the work were all right. It was left to the crew so organized and equipped to do the work, the foreman being specially charged to look after the safety of the men, and, particularly, as regards dangers from being in the pathway of earth and rock that might roll down the bluff.

The operation which resulted in creating the danger was conducted for considerable length of time, and not more than about 25 feet from Knudsen's working place. While he may have been so circumstanced that he could not see the person at work while creating the danger, the manner and kind of work was such that he must have known what was going on, and known when, later in the day, the workman left the point above on the crest of the cliff and joined him, that the strip of earth and rock the former had been endeavoring to disengage had not been thrown down, though it must be there was no appearance of danger of its falling which he observed, or could well have observed.

As Knudsen was working in supposed security, the very person aiding him who had been the immediate instrumentality in making the working place unsafe, and the foreman who had charge of the whole work and aided manually from time to time, near by, no one apparently appreciating the danger, the chunk of frozen earth came loose, rolled down the cliff, and in an instant, as it were, Knudsen was swept over the cliff and his life terminated, with the necessary distressing consequences to those dependent upon him.

Thus passes before us another of those tragedies which are constantly recurring in the drama, so to speak, of our official life. Is there a remedy for the damage caused by the inadvertent taking of Knudsen's life? The question is not whether there ought to be a remedy from the view point of moral standards. It matters not how much we may think such sacrifices should be compensated in some way, and that the loss must inevitably be paid for in the end by the mass of mankind, if not in a way to reimburse appreciably those upon whom the loss first falls. Courts cannot shape their decrees to meet their personal ideas, or merely satisfy human sensibilities to human sorrow and suffering; moreover, at the expense of those neither guilty of a legal or moral wrong.

The world does not appreciate the high order of courage and firmness required to deal with these painful tragedies, and at all times be reasonably sure of judgment reigning supreme, instead of being swayed by sympathy, which we may venture to say is no more keenly felt than by the judges of our courts. However, to execute their functions, they must, the best they can, come up to the high ideal of this picture so truly and so beautifully painted by Chief Justice Ryan, and which is to go down the ages inscribed upon the shaft erected in his honor:

"In other places in life, the light of intelligence, purity of truth, love of right, firmness of integrity, singleness of purpose, candor of judgment, are relatively essential to high beauty of character. On the bench they are the absolute condition of duty. The judge who palters with justice, who is swayed by fear, favor, affection, or hope of reward, by personal influence or public opinion, prostitutes the attribute of God and sells the favor of his Maker. But the light of God's eternal truth and justice shines on the head of the just judge, and makes it visibly glorious."

So, the only question before us for decision is this: On the undisputed facts disclosed by the evidence, has appellant a legal remedy against respondent? It cannot be decided by any system of arbitration. It cannot be decided by bending established principles out of their legitimate sphere, or developing new ones to meet the dire necessities of the particular case. That the time is at hand when a just way will be found for transferring the loss inflicted by such sacrifices, to so broad a field that all will be compensated, and the participating compensators carry the load and think the burden light, if they appreciate it at all,—the writer has faith.

As we view the case it is governed by a few legal principles. We will endeavor to state them briefly, concisely, and with but little discussion. Their application to the facts will be seen easily from their logical arrangement.

A master owes the duty to his servants of furnishing them a reasonably safe place in which to do their work, of using ordinary care to keep such place reasonably safe, of furnishing them reasonably safe instrumentalities with which to perform their work, and of exercising ordinary care in the selection of servants, whose work would otherwise imperil the personal safety of their fellows.

The presumption of fact, at the start, as to any given situation where liability of the master to the servant or through him is in controversy, is that the duties of the former, indicated, have been performed, and such presumption should prevail wherever the fact is called in question, till overcome by evidence establishing the contrary to a reasonable certainty.

The master having furnished his servant a safe working place, and satisfied the other conditions, or put such servants to work under such conditions that they must necessarily or reasonably make their own working place, or the place originally furnished is changeable naturally by the members of the crew as the work progresses, dangers thus created are not attributable to the master. Peschel v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 62 Wis. 338, 21 N. W. 269; Walaszewski v. Schoknecht, 127 Wis. 376, 106 N. W. 1070; Miller v. Centralia Pulp & Water Power Co. 134 Wis. 316, 13 L.R.A. (N.S.) 742, 113 N. W. 954.

The master having complied at the start with the conditions mentioned, negligent conduct of one or more of a working crew proximately causing injury or death of an associate, is negligence of a fellow servant, and not breach of duty of the master. Who is and who is not a fellow servant depends upon the nature of the service. So the foreman of a crew, in exercising his functions as such in the common employment to accomplish a common purpose under one general management, some working at one detail, and some at another, is a fellow servant, and the negligence of one is not attributable to the master, except where, aside from his fellow servant duty, that one performs by direction, express or implied, the work of the master as regards safe instrumentalities and safe fellow servants or a safe place to work.

To illustrate the rule that where a working crew necessarily makes the working place or places, for the members thereof, or in due course constantly or at brief intervals change the same, we have this:

A crew under a foreman was employed to erect a water tank. The working place in general and particular was under the control of the foreman, and, as to one member of the crew upon a particular occasion was dangerous, causing an injury to him. The negligence was held to be that of a fellow servant. Peschel v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 62 Wis. 338, 21 N. W. 269.

In situations, in general, where the dangers of a working place are created by the servants themselves, including the foreman, and changed from time to time in the due course of operations, the safe place rule does not apply. Strehlau v. John Schroeder Lumber Co. 142 Wis. 215, 125 N. W. 429. That was applied to a quarry crew in Mielke v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 103 Wis. 1, 74 Am. St. Rep. 834, 79 N. W. 22, where a piece of rock rolled down onto a workman very much as in this case, and again so applied in Pern v. Wussow, 144 Wis. 489, 129 N. W. 622, where the fact was that a chunk of frozen dirt was cracked off by a workman, as was the case here, and it rolled down and injured a fellow workman.

The following are illustrations of the rule that the foreman of a working crew carrying out the details of an enterprise is a fellow servant of the men under him: A gang in the erection of a water tank. Peschel v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. supra. That case applies to the safe place rule and this feature of the law as well. A gang engaged in removing a heavy machine out of a car and into a factory. Hamann v. Milwaukee Bridge Co. 127 Wis. 550, 106 N. W. 1081, 7 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 458. A crew laying gas mains. Gereg v. Milwaukee Gaslight Co. 128 Wis. 35, 7 L. R.A. (N.S.) 367, 107 N. W. 289. The men engaged in removing a pile driver. McKillop v. Superior Shipbuilding Co. 143 Wis. 454, 127 N. W. 1053. A conductor is the fellow servant of a train crew under him. Pease v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 61 Wis. 163, 20 N. W. 908. The master of a vessel of his mate and other members, of the crew. Mathews v. Case, 61 Wis. 491, 50 Am. Rep. 151, 21 N. W. 513. The dock foreman and his crew as to all details of their general employment. Okonski v. Pennsylvania & O. Fuel Co. 114 Wis. 448, 90 N. W. 429. The foreman of a blasting crew and the men under him. Wiskie v. Montello Granite Co. 111 Wis. 443, 87 Am. St. Rep. 885, 87 N. W. 461.

Now, look upon these familiar and thus plainly illustrated principles and then on the picture of this case. Does not the one fit the other perfectly? No complaint about the working place, except as to the change created by Mr. Knudsen's associates after the crew went to work in the morning. No complaint about suitable tools or fellow associates up to the time of the accident. The foreman was very close to the members of the crew, going now here and now there directing operations, taking part from time to time in the physical labor, helping this one and then that one as occasion required or opportunity afforded. But a few hours before the accident, he, with Knudsen and another or others, worked clearing off loose dirt a short distance from where the fatal occurrence took place. The breaking down of earth and removing it from over the rock to be quarried was one of the ordinary and frequent operations in the quarry, particularly in the vicinity of where Knudsen was required to work, and preparatory to such work. It was from every view point one of the plainest of details in producing the general result to be accomplished. If due care on the part of the master required promulgation of rules in respect to preventing such dangers as that in question, it seems that was done, and the difficulty was respecting proper observation thereof.

Would it not be a plain violation of the stated principles to hold that it was the duty of the master to be present in person or by proxy with reference to such details as those mentioned? Such a rule would be utterly impracticable of observation. Here the master took the precaution to admonish the foreman to be alert in preventing just such dangers as the one which proved fatal to Knudsen; but that was plainly one of his ordinary duties as foreman, the proper performance of which Knudsen and all members of the crew took the chances of as ordinary risks of their employment. Such admonishment instead of being regarded as a transference of the master's duty to the foreman, and so fix the negligence of the latter upon the former, should be viewed as an extra and creditable precaution exercised to the end that the foreman, as one of the crew, should see that the particular detail was properly attended to.

So we cannot see any escape from the conclusion that the negligence which terminated the life of Knudsen is that of the man who loosened the bank of earth, leaving it in a dangerous condition, and then went to work with him in the line of danger from it, without informing him thereof; or the negligence of the foreman, or both, in any event, within the fellow servant rule. Principles of law, which are as binding on this court as written law, command it, furnishing one more in number of illustrations of the necessity for some practicable way of dealing with industrial accidents, minimizing the misfortune thereof, in line with the enlightened spirit of the age which has been responded to in most every civilized country but our own, and which only the lawmaking power can furnish.

The judgment is affirmed.

Timlin, J., dissenting (Filed March 20, 1911):

I make no claim to possess that degree of tenderness and sympathy for the laborer expressed in the foregoing opinion and in Houg v. Girard Lumber Co. 144 Wis. 337, 129 N. W. 639, and in Driscoll v. Allis-Chalmers Co. 144 Wis. 451, 129 N. W. 408. I proceed solely upon my understanding of the law and justice.

The decedent, while engaged in drilling in a quarry with a rock drill, was killed by a piece of frozen earth falling on him from a clay ledge above. This frozen chunk had been loosened by some other workman some hours before, and left hanging in a dangerous position. After verdict in plaintiff's favor, judgment was rendered against her on the sole ground that the deceased was a coemployee with McBride, the foreman in charge. This is the only question in the case.

The defendant was a corporation, and one of its officers testified:

We had delegated to McBride the full charge and supervision of the work in the quarry. He had authority to hire and discharge men, and the direction of the men in the quarry. There was no one above him in the control of the work there. . . . At the time of this accident we had a rule in force for the operation of our quarry, which dealt with the matter of hanging rocks and partially loosened rocks or earth. The rule was to have everything as safe as possible.

Q. What was the rule in regard to dealing with overhanging rocks or loosened or partially loosened rocks or earth in your quarry?

A. Why, the foreman who had charge of the quarry understands what was necessary to make it as safe as possible. He understood this by his own knowledge of everything about a quarry.

Q. Did Mr. McBride understand this?

A. Certainly.

Q. And you had instructed him to keep the quarry as safe as possible?

A. Yes, sir; as safe as possible.

Q. He was the sole person in charge of that duty?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You had at that time a rule in your quarry that overhanging rocks or loosened or partially loosened masses of earth were to be wholly detached, thrown down, or blasted off?

A. Not any particular rule.

Q. Isn't that a common customary rule in force in quarries at all times?

A. That is customary for the foreman to do that. If he didn't do it, he would not be a competent foreman.

Q. And you expected Mr. McBride to do so?

A. Yes sir.

Q. And that was his duty?

A. Yes, sir; where there was an overhanging rock or dirt cliff near the face of the rock or above a man's head, or some loose rock or dirt partially loosened, it was the duty of the foreman to get this down before the men worked around it.

Q. You required your foreman to do that?

A. Yes; he was to do that.

Q. That is the sole purpose of having a foreman there? That is why you have a foreman, to see if the quarry is safe before the men have to work around it?

A. The foreman has charge of all the work in the quarry. Everything that is done in a quarry is important work. The action of the foreman in taking down loose rock is not the only protection which the men have. If there is any overhanging rock or cliff forms when the men are working, they are expected to take it down.

The foreman, McBride, testified:

I told Knudsen[decedent] to go to the ledge and drill. I didn't make any effort to find out anything about the top of the bluff before I told him to go in there. I know that men had been working up there during the day, but I didn't go up to ascertain whether there was any loose or partially loosened earth up there. There was a path leading up there. It was about 10 or 15 feet above Knudsen's head.

There is a statement that all were expected to take down loose rock, but, on the evidence above quoted, there arises a fair question for the jury whether the corporation master did not assume to take charge of the safety of the place, and attempt to exercise this duty through McBride. To my mind the foregoing evidence is sufficient to support a verdict that the proprietor of the quarry charged McBride, the foreman, with the duty of making and keeping a safe place. On sufficient evidence the jury found McBride negligent. This was a 33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

duty of the master, which he might intrust to the foreman in charge. But in the exercise of that duty the foreman was a vice principal, and not a fellow servant with Knudsen. I think this principle runs through all the cases. It is cited in Baumann v. C. Reiss Coal Co. 118 Wis. 330, 335, 95 N. W. 139, 141, as follows: "The evidence is all one way that Roth had full charge of the work upon the dock, that defendant left him the duty of proving [providing?] a safe working place for the men, and that he was not personally engaged with them in removing the coal. That made him in every sense a vice principal in respect to the safety of the trestle and all other matters affecting the character of the working place in which he placed respondent and his associates."

If he was the foreman in charge, and had this duty put upon him by the proprietor or master, in addition to the duty of directing the work, and sole control of the operation, it would make no difference that he occasionally or intermittently helped in some other part of the work. McMahon v. Ida Min. Co. 95 Wis. 308, 60 Am. St. Rep. 117, 70 N. W. 478, At a time when it was the settled law of this state that the brakemen and section men on a railroad were fellow servants, it was nevertheless held that, where the section foreman had imposed on him the duty to keep the track clear of obstructions at a point where the brakeman was obliged to run along the track in the discharge of his duty, the section foreman was not a fellow servant with the brakeman so far as regards the duty of making or keeping the place safe. Hulehan v. Green Bay, W. & St. P. R. Co. 68 Wis. 520, 32 N. W. 529. To the same effect is Schultz v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 48 Wis. 375, 4 N. W. 399; Hill v. Winston, 73 Minn. 80, 75 N. W. 1030; Streicher v. Davenport Brick & Tile Co. — Iowa, —, 124 N. W. 327; Kaukola v. Oliver Iron Min. Co. 159 Mich. 689, 124 N. W. 591; Horn v. La Crosse Box Co. 123 Wis. 399, 101 N. W. 935.

To recapitulate. The evidence hereinbefore quoted was sufficient in my opinion to warrant the jury in finding that the corporation defendant had, through its officers, assumed the duty, and charged its foreman, McBride, with the duty, of making and keeping the place safe. There is no law that I know of against its assuming this duty, whether the place of operations be a quarry or a railway. Having, as the evidence shows, assumed and undertaken to discharge that duty through the foreman, it should be liable for its negligent failure to carry out the duty. The decedent, with knowledge of such practice, might lawfully rely upon the foreman to discharge that duty, and thus be misled and lulled into false security. He was negligently killed without fault on his part, as established by the verdict. The plaintiff was therefore entitled to a judgment on the verdict.

I am authorized to say that Mr. Justice Stebecker and Mr. Justice Kerwin concur in this dissent.

ILLINOIS SUPREME COURT.

PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF ILLINOIS,
Appt.,
v.

ESTATE OF MARSHALL FIELD,
Deceased, et al.

(248 Ill. 147, 93 N. E. 721.)

Succession tax — rights under antenuptial contract.

A sum provided by antenuptial agreement to be paid the wife in case of her surviving the husband, in lieu of all claims and rights which she might otherwise have upon her husband's estate as his widow, is subject to succession tax.

(December 21, 1910.)

Note. — Succession tax upon provision in lieu of dower.

It will be noted that the case of PEOPLE v. FIELD is based upon the principle of Billings v. People, 189 Ill. 472, 59 L.R.A. 807, 59 N. E. 798, that the words "intestate laws," in a statute imposing a transfer tax upon property passing by the intestate laws of the state, refer to the laws which govern the devolution of the estates of persons dying intestate, including applicable rules of the common law which are in force, so that the tax will be applicable to a widow's dower interest and her award under the administration laws. The decision of the Billings Case, however, does not come within the scope of the present note, for the reason that, in that case, the widow renounced the provision made for her in the will, and elected to take her dower and legal statutory share of the estate, thus eliminating any question of the liability of a provision in lieu of dower to tax. It may, however, be well to note that the case was affirmed on another point in 188 U. S. 97, 47 L. ed. 400, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 272.

As a further illustration of the cases in which the wife renounced the alternative provision, attention is directed to Connell v. Crosby, 210 Ill. 380, 71 N. E. 350, holding that a statute exempting a life estate in any property devised or bequeathed to the wife of a testator, from the tax, has no application where the wife renounces the provisions of the will, and takes other interest in the property to which she is entitled by statute.

33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

APPEAL by the People from a judgment of the County Court of Cook County, affirming an order of the County Judge, refusing to subject a certain amount received by the widow of Marshall Field, deceased, pursuant to an antenuptial contract, to an inheritance tax. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. W. H. Stead, Attorney General, and Walter K. Lincoln, for the People:

The sum of $1,000,000 described in the antenuptial contract, and received by Delia S. Field, widow, "represented her dower" and other rights of inheritance, and is subject to taxation under the inheritance-tax laws.

Billings v. People, 189 Ill. 472, 59 L.R.A. 807, 59 N. E. 798; Jordan v. Clark, 81 Ill. 465; Adams v. Storey, 135 Ill. 448, 11 L.R.A. 790, 25 Am. St. Rep. 392, 26 N. E. 582; Clarke v. Lott, 11 Ill. 105; Long v. Barton, 236 Ill. 551, 19 L.R.A. (N.S.) 384, 86 N. E. 127.

Mr. Roy Wright also for the People.

Messrs. Wilson, Moore, & McIlvaine for appellees.

Farmer, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal by the people from the

In this connection, see also Commonwealth's Appeal, 34 Pa. 204, holding that where a testator devised his whole estate to his executors in trust for certain legatees and devisees, and the widow refused to take under the will, but thereafter, by an arrangement with the executors, accepted a sum less than the value of her dower right in the estate, and relinquished her claim to the remainder, she took such sum by virtue of her statutory right as widow of the testator; and therefore, so far as such amount was concerned, the estate of the testator was not taxable under the collateral inheritance tax law, as having passed by the will to the beneficiaries.

The question upon which some of the cases coming within this note are made to depend—whether a succession tax is enforceable upon dower, curtesy, statutory homestead, or allowances—is the subject of the note appended to Re Kennedy, 29 L.R.A. (N.S.) 428.

On the liability of community property to succession tax, see the note in 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) 208.

Opposed to the decision in the FIELD CASE is Re Baker, 83 App. Div. 530, 82 N. Y. Supp. 390, affirmed without opinion in 178 N. Y. 575, 70 N. E. 1094, holding that an antenuptial contract in which the husband agreed to give his prospective wife a certain sum before the marriage, and to make provision for her by will in a certain sum, in consideration of the marriage and of the acceptance by the wife of such provision in lieu of her dower and other rights, was not within the meaning of a statute imposjudgment of the county court of Cook County in an inheritance tax proceeding in the estate of Marshall Field. The county court held that $1,000,000 paid to his widow, Delia S. Field, according to the provisions of an antenuptial contract, was not subject to an inheritance tax, and that amount was deducted from the value of the estate before fixing the inheritance tax.

Marshall Field and Delia S. Caton were married September 5, 1905. Prior to their marriage, and in contemplation thereof, they entered into an antenuptial contract, by which it was agreed, among other things, that if Mrs. Field survived her husband, she should receive $1,000,000 out of the property and estate of Marshall Field, in satisfaction of all claims, demands, and rights which she might otherwise have in and to the property or estate of her husband as his widow. Marshall Field died in January, 1906, leaving Delia S. Field surviving him as his widow. She presented a claim in the probate court for $1,000,000, based on the antenuptial agreement, which was allowed and paid to her by the executors of the estate of Marshall Field.

Counsel for the appellant contend that "the antenuptial contract was a method of admeasurement of dower, substituted by the parties for the method provided by law for determining the same, and said $1,000,000 was paid to and received by Delia S. Field, widow, as the full amount of her dower and other rights of inheritance." Counsel for the appellees contend that the right of Mrs. Field to the $1,000,000 did not vest in her by virtue of the intestate laws of the state of Illinois, but "was a legal debt due to her under a valid contract, made upon a valuable consideration, and was not an inheritance."

Whatever may have been decided in other jurisdictions, it is settled in this state that dower, less the exemption provided by statute, is subject to the inheritance tax. Billings v. People, 189 Ill. 472, 59 L.R.A. 807, 59 N. E. 798. It would seem logically to follow that, if the provision made for Mrs. Field in the antenuptial contract was in lieu of and a substitute for her dower and other rights she would have had in the estate of Marshall Field as his widow, it would also be subject to the inheritance tax. This court said in Billings v. People, supra: "It will be noticed that neither dower, nor any provision made in lieu of dower, is exempted."

In Long v. Barton, 236 Ill. 551, 19 L.R.A. (N.S.) 384, 86 N. E. 127, the court had un-

ing a tax upon transfers of property by deed, grant, bargain, sale, or gift, made in contemplation of the death of the grantor, or intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment at or after such death, it not appearing that it was entered into in bad faith or with intent to evade the statute. The court said that the contract was founded upon a perfectly good and valuable consideration, and was one which is regarded with favor by the law, and that therefore it represented a claim against the estate in the nature of a debt which should not be subject to taxation any more than if it were a debt represented by a bond or note. In this connection attention is directed to Re Craig, 97 App. Div. 289, 89 N. Y. Supp. 971, affirmed without opinion in 181 N. Y. 551, 74 N. E. 1116, holding that where, before the passage of any transfer tax law, one made a deed containing no power of revocation, and reciting that it was made in contemplation of marriage, by which he conveyed all of his property to trustees, to pay the income to him during his life, and upon his death to pay the principal in certain proportions to the widow and the issue of the marriage, the interests of the remaindermen accrued under the trust deed, and could not be subjected to a transfer tax upon the death of the life tenant, the court saying that the deed in this instance was not made in contemplation of death, but of marriage; and was designed to make an effective provision in presenti for the prospective wife and possible offspring. While it does not appear in this case that the provision was made in lieu of dower, it would seem that such must have been its intended effect.

So, no tax can be enforced upon the basis of an annuity to which a widow was entitled under an agreement whereby the husband, in consideration of the wife's release of all her rights against him or in his estate, agreed to pay her a life annuity, provided that, if she should survive him, the trustee might, if the wife so elected, demand payment from the estate of a gross sum in satisfaction of the payments thereafter to fall due, to be ascertained upon the basis of her expectancy as of the date of the husband's death, where her right of election has not been exercised; and a clause in the husband's will, directing the trustee to continue the annuity in case of the widow's failure to elect, and giving directions as to the manner in which the obligation should be provided for, since it confers no additional benefit upon her, does not warrant the imposition of the tax. Re Daniell, 40 Misc. 329, 81 N. Y. Supp. 1033.

It has been held that the widow's estate of dower in the lands of the husband becomes, independently and not by virtue of the will, vested as an inchoate interest upon her marriage, and consummated upon the husband's death; and therefore it is not subject to a transfer tax. Re Weiler, 122 N. Y. Supp. 608, affirmed in 139 App. Div. 905, 124 N. Y. Supp. 1133.

It seems, however, that where the provision in lieu of dower is of a testamentary character, it is subject to the tax.

Thus, it has been held that a testator cannot avoid the tax upon bequests of per-der consideration a claim filed by the divorced wife on an antenuptial contract against the estate of her former husband, who died testate. By the antenuptial contract, Philip H. Barton agreed that Tonie Long, with whom he contemplated marriage, should, upon his death, receive out of his estate, in lieu of dower, the sum of $5,000; and Tonie Long agreed to accept that sum and relinquish all her dower rights in the estate of Barton that might accrue to her by reason of marriage, under the laws of the state of Illinois. The parties married, but afterwards the wife procured a divorce from her husband on the charge of extreme and repeated cruelty. In the divorce case she was awarded $2,000 in lieu of, and in full satisfaction of, her contingent right of dower and of other rights in the estate of her husband. The $2,000 was paid to her, and afterwards Barton died testate. The divorced wife filed a claim against his estate for $5,000 mentioned in the antenuptial contract. This court held she was not entitled to an allowance of the claim, and said (236 Ill.

553): "The antenuptial contract is not an unconditional promise to pay $5,000, but it is to be paid in lieu of dower. If appellant had died before her husband, all rights under the antenuptial contract would have been extinguished. The effect of the antenuptial contract was to substitute a sum of money for appellant's right of dower in her husband's land. Anything that would extinguish her right of dower would extinguish that which by agreement was substituted in its place."

The antenuptial contract before us was not an unconditional promise to pay Mrs. Field $1,000,000 in consideration of her marrying Marshall Field. The contract recites that marriage was contemplated between the parties, and they, being desirous of making a settlement of their respective rights in the property of each other, entered into a contract for that purpose. It was agreed that each would retain control of his or her separate property, or property that they should acquire, respectively, after the marriage, and the contract provides that if Mrs. Field should survive

sonal property, by making a bequest of money to his wife, upon condition that it be accepted by her in lieu of dower and other interests, dower being an interest in real estate, not subject to a tax nor to the testator's disposition. Re DeGraff, 24 Misc. 147, 53 N. Y. Supp. 591.

So, it is held that where the widow accepts testamentary provisions in lieu of dower, the estate of the testator is not to be diminished for the purposes of taxation by deducting her dower right. Re Barbey, 114 N. Y. Supp. 725 (surrogate's decision).

And in Re Riemann, 42 Misc. 648, 87 N. Y. Supp. 731, holding taxable a legacy accepted by a widow in lieu of dower, it was contended that the testamentary provision in lieu of dower in lands of which the husband died seised should be the subject of taxation, not in her hands, but in the hands of those receiving the land; at least, to the extent of the value of the dower right in the land from the time of the husband's death; and that the provisions accepted by her must be regarded as a consideration for the sale by her of her dower right; and that the immediate effect of the provision, would be, in case of her acceptance, to free the land from dower, and thus enhance its value; and that therefore, to the extent of such enhancement, at least, the person succeeding to the lands should be subjected to the tax; for to that extent such successors, and not she, had succeeded to the land. The court, while declaring that the dower right is property which exists inchoately during the husband's lifetime, and passes to the widow regardless of the law governing the disposition of property, and that therefore it is not a transfer or succession subject to the tax, held that it makes no difference what the motive of the alternative transfer is,—if the devise or bequest be accepted, then the transfer is made by will; and that therefore, whatever the value of the dower might have been, and although it could not have been taxable under the transfer tax act, since it would not be a transfer by will, the moment she accepted the provision in lieu of such right, a tax under and by virtue of the transfer tax act immediately attached, and by her acceptance of the legacy, she released all claim to the dower and to every right which she would have had under the same.

In Atty. Gen. v. Henniker, 7 Exch. 331, it was held that where a power given by father to son by will, to appoint an annuity chargeable upon the estate, to the latter's wife, and the power was exercised by will providing that the annuity should be in satisfaction of dower, the transaction constituted not a purchase of dower, but an appointment of a legacy upon condition, which was subject to legacy duty. The court said that the gift was taken under the will of the first testator, and that, if he had imposed the condition, it might be that the duty would have been payable only upon the excess of the whole annuity over the value of the dower; but that, under the facts of the case, the duty was payable upon the whole annuity. The circumstance suggesting the foregoing query was involved in Sweeting v. Sweeting, 1 Drew, 331, 22 L. J. Ch. N. S. 441, 17 Jur. 123, 1 Week. Rep. 122, where the father authorized the son to appoint to his wife a jointure in bar of dower, but the court held that legacy duty was payable, saying that since the legacy was to be regarded as passing under the original will, it was immaterial whether the condition was imposed by the instrument exercising the power, or that creating it. L. A. W.

her husband, she should have and receive out of his property and estate $1,000,000, "which shall be received by her in lieu of, and in full satisfaction of, any and all claims, rights, and interests and demands which she might have or claim in and to the property and estate of the said party of the first part [Marshall Field], under or by virtue of the laws of the state of Illinois, or of any other state or country; it being agreed between the parties hereto that the said sum so agreed to be paid to the said party of the second part out of the property and estate of the said party of the first part shall satisfy all the claims, demands, and rights which the said party of the second part might otherwise have in and to any of the property or estate of the said party of the first part as his widow." By the plain language of the contract, the $1,000,000 was to be paid to and accepted by Mrs. Field, if she survived her husband as his widow, as a substitute for and in lieu of dower and all other rights she would be entitled to, as widow, under the law. Its payment to her was conditional upon her surviving her husband as his widow. If she had died before her husband, the liability of his estate upon the antenuptial contract would have been extinguished; or if the marriage had been dissolved by divorce for her fault, her right under the antenuptial contract would have been terminated. Clarke v. Lott, 11 Ill. 105; Jordan v. Clark, 81 Ill. 465.

In the last-cited case, Clark entered into an antenuptial contract with Mary Jordan, by which she was to receive out of his personal estate $2,000 in lieu of all dower, distributive share, and allowances of all kinds out of his estate, and she relinquished all right of dower and distributive share in Clark's estate. The marriage was subsequently consummated, and the parties lived together about two years, when the wife left her husband, and he afterwards obtained a divorce from her on the ground of desertion. Upon his death, the divorced wife filed a claim against his estate for the $2,000 mentioned in the antenuptial contract. The claim was disallowed, and she brought the case to this court by appeal. The judgment of the lower court was affirmed; this court holding that the contract was to be treated as a provision made for the wife as a substitute or equivalent for dower. The court said (81 Ill. 467): "The argument is, the divorce operates only upon those rights and obligations created by law, and given to or cast upon the parties by law, in consequence of the assumption of the relation of husband and wife, and hence has no effect whatever upon the rights and obligations created by or dependent upon the contract of the parties. The difficulty is not so much in the logic of the argument as in the want of application to this case. The error consists in the assumption the husband, by the contract, took upon himself the relation and obligation of a debtor to his intended wife. The contract will not admit of this construction."

It appears to us that no reasonable construction can be placed upon the language of the antenuptial contract in this case other than that the $1,000,000 for Mrs. Field, if she survived her husband as his widow, was a substitution for her dower and all other rights she would otherwise have been entitled to in his estate. That it was competent for the parties, by contract, to agree upon an amount the widow should receive in lieu of the right she was entitled to under the law, is not the subject of controversy, and that such an agreement constitutes a liability of the estate cannot be denied; but, when so made as a substitution for and in lieu of dower and other rights, it must, for the purpose of the inheritance tax, be treated the same as dower would be, and is not to be considered as an indebtedness, to be deducted from the market value of the estate. In the Billings Case the widow renounced the provisions made for her in the will of her husband, and elected to take under the statute. It was there contended that the inheritance tax act, which is the same act that governs this case, did not apply to property that passed to the widow as dower; but the court held that neither dower, nor any provision made in lieu of it, could be exempted from the market value of the estate in fixing and determining the inheritance tax.

If we are correct in the construction we have placed on the antenuptial agreement, it necessarily follows, then, that the $1,000,000 received by Mrs. Field is not exempt. Illustration is not necessary to show that any other rule would enable parties desiring to do so to, in a measure, defeat the object and purpose of the statute.

In our opinion the county court erred in deducting the $1,000,000 provided for in the antenuptial contract from the market value of the estate in fixing and determining the tax. The judgment is therefore reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to the county court to proceed and render judgment in accordance with the views herein expressed.

Petition for rehearing denied February 9, 1911.

KANSAS SUPREME COURT.

JAMES M. MASON, Appt.,
v.
SKIP D. HARLOW.

(— Kan. —, 114 Pac. 218.)

Injunction — against foreign suit.

1. Equity has power to restrain a party within its jurisdiction from prosecuting a suit in the courts of another state, and in a proper case will not hesitate to exercise the power.

Same — grounds of relief.

2. Courts will not enjoin a suit in another state merely on the ground of convenience of parties, but will do so when such restraint is necessary to prevent one citizen from doing an inequitable thing, as where the action has been brought maliciously in order to vex and harass another citizen, or to interfere with or prevent the free administration of justice in a suit pending in this state.

Pleading — sufficiency.

3. The petition in this case examined, and held to state a cause of action, and that it was error to sustain a demurrer to the petition and to refuse a restraining order.

(March 11, 1911.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the District Court for Wyandotte County, Second Division, refusing to grant a temporary restraining order, and sustaining a demurrer to the petition, in a suit to enjoin the prosecution of an action by defendant in the courts of Arkansas seeking to recover damages against plaintiff for alleged libelous matter contained in certain letters. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. J. M. Mason, Lawrence J. Mason, and E. E. Chesney, for appellant:

It is monstrous for a court of equity in the jurisdiction where all of said persons live, to deny an injunction against the prosecution of a malicious, groundless suit in the foreign jurisdiction.

Andrews v. Lembeck, 46 Ohio St. 41, 15 Am. St. Rep. 547, 18 N. E. 483; Powers v. Arkadelphia Lumber Co. 61 Ark. 504, 54 Am. St. Rep. 276, 33 S. W. 842.

The Constitution of the United States, in proper cases, permits equity courts of one state to control persons within their jurisdiction from prosecuting suits in another state.

Headnotes by PORTER, J.

Note. — As to right to enjoin action or proceeding in foreign jurisdiction, generally, see notes to Thorndike v. Thorndike, 21 L.R.A. 71, and O'Haire v. Burns, 25 L.R.A. (N.S.) 267, and other annotation referred to in the latter note.
33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Cole v. Cunningham, 133 U. S. 107, 33 L. ed. 538, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 269; Story, Eq. Jur. §§ 890, 899; Cole v. Young, 24 Kan. 435; Pickett v. Ferguson, 45 Ark. 177, 55 Am. Rep. 545; Vail v. Knapp, 49 Barb. 299; Cunningham v. Butler, 142 Mass. 47, 56 Am. Rep. 657, 6 N. E. 782; Butler v. Goreley, 146 U. S. 313, 36 L. ed. 986, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 84; Engel v. Scheuerman, 40 Ga. 206, 2 Am. Rep. 573; Dehon v. Foster, 4 Allen, 545; Hawkins v. Ireland, 64 Minn. 339, 58 Am. St. Rep. 534, 67 N. W. 73; Field v. Holbrook, 3 Abb. Pr. 377; Kittle v. Kittle, 8 Daly, 72; Vermont & C. R. Co. v. Vermont, C. T. R. Co. 46 Vt. 792; Gage v. Riverside Trust Co. (C. C.) 86 Fed. 984; Kempson v. Kempson, 63 N. J. Eq. 783, 58 L.R.A. 484, 92 Am. St. Rep. 682, 52 Atl. 360, 625; Hazen v. Lyndonville Nat. Bank, 70 Vt. 543, 67 Am. St. Rep. 680, 41 Atl. 1046; Kendall v. McClure Coke Co. 182 Pa. 1, 61 Am. St. Rep. 688, 37 Atl. 823; Hager v. Adams, 70 Iowa, 746, 30 N. W. 36; Dinsmore v. Neresheimer, 32 Hun. 204; O'Haire v. Burns, 45 Colo. 432, 25 L.R.A. (N.S.) 267, 132 Am. St. Rep. 191, 101 Pac. 755; Wilson v. Joseph, 107 Ind. 490, 8 N. E. 616; Keyser v. Rice, 47 Md. 213, 28 Am. Rep. 448; Sandage v. Studabaker Bros. Mfg. Co. 142 Ind. 148, 34 L.R.A. 363, 51 Am. St. Rep. 165, 41 N. E. 380; 1 High, Inj. 2d ed. § 105.

Mr. Frans E. Lindquist also for appellant.

Messrs. John A. Hale and Richard J. Higgins, for appellee:

There will be no interference by equity where there is an adequate remedy at law.

Jordan v. Updegraff, McCahon (Kan.) 103; Howe Mach. Co. v. Miner, 28 Kan. 441; Laithe v. McDonald, 12 Kan. 340; Cole v. Young, 24 Kan. 435; Hilliard Inj. § 34; Birmingham R. & Electric Co. v. Birmingham Traction Co. 122 Ala. 349, 25 So. 192; Carson v. Dunham, 149 Mass. 52, 3 L.R.A. 203, 14 Am. St. Rep. 397, 20 N. E. 314; Wyeth Hardware & Mfg. Co. v. H. F. Lang & Co. 54 Mo. App. 147; Fletcher v. Rodgers, 27 Week. Rep. 97; Burgess v. Smith, 2 Barb. Ch. 276; Bank of Bellows Falls v. Rutland & B. R. Co. 28 Vt. 470; Wurmser v. Stone, 1 Kan. App. 134, 40 Pac. 993; Marbourg v. Smith, 11 Kan. 554; Willman v. District Court, 4 Idaho, 11, 35 Pac. 692; Mason v. Grubel, 64 Kan. 835, 68 Pac. 660; State ex rel. Ayres v. Stockwell, 7 Kan. 98; State ex rel. Elsbree v. Bridgman, 8 Kan. 458; Beardsley v. Bennett, 1 Day, 107; Whitsell v. Study, 37 Ind. App. 429, 76 N. E. 1010; Brand v. Hinchman, 68 Mich. 590, 13 Am. St. Rep.

362, 36 N. W. 667; Mendenhall v. School Dist. No. 3, 76 Kan. 177, 90 Pac. 773.

Porter, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

James M. Mason brought this suit against Skip D. Harlow to enjoin the prosecution of an action in the courts of Arkansas, in which Harlow sought to recover against him damages for alleged libelous matter contained in certain letters. The court refused to grant a temporary restraining order, and sustained a demurrer to the petition. This court, in order to preserve the status, issued an order restraining the prosecution of the action in Arkansas pending the appeal from the decision of the district court.

The only question to be determined is whether the petition stated a cause of action. If it did, the court erred in refusing the restraining order, and in sustaining the demurrer. The petition is lengthy and contains a great deal of unnecessary verbiage and averments of evidentiary facts which have no place in a pleading. Briefly, the facts stated are that Mason is a regular practising attorney of the Wyandotte county bar. He brought a suit in the district court of that county for his client Maggie A. Hanke, against Harlow, to set aside a deed from her conveying her homestead to J. H. Peterson, on the ground that Harlow had, by fraudulent misrepresentations, induced her to exchange her property for a worthless tract of land in Fulton county, Arkansas. The defendant served Mason with notice to take the depositions of a number of witnesses at Mammoth Springs, Arkansas. Mason corresponded with one Brittain, of Mammoth Springs, who claimed to be a lawyer, and retained him to represent the plaintiff in taking the depositions and in procuring evidence for other depositions on behalf of Mrs. Hanke. Being unable to obtain any information from Brittain with regard to the depositions after they had been taken, and learning that they were being withheld, Mason went to Arkansas for the purpose of investigating the situation. While there he served notice to take other depositions at the same place on August 26, 1909. He was there solely as the attorney of his client, and not for any matter personal to himself, and was engaged in looking after her interests. While there Harlow sued him in the circuit court of Fulton county, Arkansas, for $25,000 damages for an alleged libel in a letter of instructions which he had written to Brittain, and caused Mason to be served with process on August 24th, two days before the time set for taking depositions. The action was not brought in good faith, but for the purpose of preventing Mason from properly discharging his duties to his client, and was inspired solely by vindictive and malicious purposes. Mason owned no property in Arkansas, and there were no debts owing to him there. Harlow and Mason both resided in Wyandotte county, Kansas.

The demurrer admits the facts pleaded, and it is difficult to discover on what ground the court sustained the demurrer, and refused the restraining order. The petition alleges that the action in Arkansas was not brought in good faith, but maliciously, and for the purpose of harassing the plaintiff and preventing him from properly attending to the business of his client in an action pending in court. On the same principle that the courts quite generally hold parties, witnesses, and even attorneys privileged from the service of process while in attendance on courts and other judicial proceedings, public policy and the interests of justice alike require that courts shall protect litigants from the malicious prosecution in other jurisdictions of suits the purpose of which is to interfere with or prevent the due administration of justice. Equity has power to restrain a party within its jurisdiction from prosecuting a suit in the courts of another state, and in a proper case will not hesitate to exercise the power. Cole v. Young, 24 Kan. 435; Gordon v. Munn, 81 Kan. 537, 541, 25 L.R.A. (N.S.) 917, 106 Pac. 286, and cases cited; Pickett v. Ferguson, 45 Ark. 177, 55 Am. Rep. 545; Snook v. Snetzer, 25 Ohio St. 516; Vail v. Knapp, 49 Barb. 299; Keyser v. Rice, 47 Md. 203, 28 Am. Rep. 448. Courts will not enjoin a suit in another state merely on the ground of the convenience of parties, but will do so when the ends of justice require it. Bank of Bellows Falls v. Rutland & B. R. Co. 28 Vt. 470.

In Hawkins v. Ireland, 64 Minn. 339, 58 Am. St. Rep. 534, 67 N. W. 73, it was held that an injunction would lie when necessary to enable justice to be done by the court, and prevent one citizen from obtaining an inequitable advantage of another. In White, Stokes, & Allen v. Caxton Book Binding Co. 10 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. 146, it was held that courts will not enjoin the prosecution of an action already commenced in another state, unless it was not brought in good faith, but in order to vex and harass the defendant. To the same effect are Clafin v. Hamlin, 62 How. Pr. 284; Dinsmore v. Neresheimer, 32 Hun, 204; Dehon v. Foster, 4 Allen, 545.

The power of the court in this instance to enjoin the appellee cannot be doubted. 22 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 813. Both parties are citizens of this state and subject to the jurisdiction of the court, and equity will enjoin the prosecution of a suit in another state whenever the circumstances make such restraint necessary to prevent one citizen from doing an inequitable thing, and especially when the action in the other state has been brought maliciously and in order to vex and harass another citizen, and to interfere with or prevent the free administration of justice in a suit pending here.

The petition stated a cause of action, and the judgment will be reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to overrule the demurrer and grant the restraining order.

All the Justices concurring.

MASSACHUSETTS SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

LAURENCE MINOT et al., Trustees, etc.,

v.

ELMER A. STEVENS.

(207 Mass. 588, 93 N. E. 973.)

Succession tax — failure to exercise power.

The interest of those who will take under a will or deed upon failure of a donee of a power of appointment therein to exercise it is not so far vested that the imposition of a succession tax upon the passing to them of the estate, in case of such failure, can be considered as a taking of property without due process of law.

(February 13, 1911.)

Note. — Inheritance or succession tax on property covered by power of appointment.

I. Taxability under donee's will.

a. Under statutes not expressly covering powers.

1. Where power is not exercised, 236.

2. Where power is exercised.

(a) Generally, 237.

(b) Statute enacted after creation of power, 238.

(c) In cases of nonresidents, 239.

b. Under statutes expressly covering powers.

1. Powers not exercised, 240.

2. Powers exercised.

(a) Generally, 240.

(b) Statute enacted after creation of power, 243.

(c) In cases of nonresidents, 248.

II. Present taxability under donor's will, 248.

33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

PRESERVATION by the Supreme Judicial Court for Suffolk County for the consideration of the full bench of an appeal by the trustees from a decree of the Probate Court imposing a succession tax upon the trust estate held by them. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Frank Brewster, for appellants:

Mrs. Wharton's heirs take exactly the same estate they would have taken, if the power of appointment had been omitted altogether from the deed of trust.

Crawford v. Langmaid, 171 Mass. 309, 50 N. E. 606; Moore v. Weaver, 18 Gray, 305.

The legislature cannot impose a succession tax upon remainders created before the act was passed, because they may be defeated by a power of appointment, which is not in fact exercised.

Re Pell, 171 N. Y. 48, 57 L.R.A. 540, 89 Am. St. Rep. 791, 63 N. E. 789; Re Lansing, 182 N. Y. 238, 74 N. E. 882; Re Chapman, 133 App. Div. 337, 117 N. Y. Supp. 679, 196 N. Y. 561, 90 N. E. 1157; McElroy, Transfer Tax Law, 1st ed. 35; Chandler v. Kelsey, 205 U. S. 472, 51 L. ed. 886, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 550.

When a trust provides that the property shall be held for the benefit of a person for life, remainder at his death to his heirs at law, if such heirs at law are children, they acquire upon birth a vested interest which they can transfer, or which can be taken from them by proceedings in bankruptcy or insolvency.

Putnam v. Story, 132 Mass. 205; Whipple v. Fairchild, 139 Mass. 262, 30 N. E. 89; Wainwright v. Sawyer, 150 Mass. 168, 22 N. E. 885; Stocker v. Foster, 178 Mass. 601, 60 N. E. 407; Crawford v. Langmaid, 171

III. Power of appointment reserved by grantor, 250.

IV. Miscellaneous cases, 250.

I. Taxability under donee's will.

a. Under statutes not expressly covering powers.

1. Where power is not exercised.

See also Re Langdon, infra I. a, 2 (b).

The New York court has held that the transfer effected by an instrument in which the grantor conveyed property in trust, to pay the income to himself during his life and upon his death to give the remainder to his daughter, if she should be living, or if she should be dead, then to such persons as she should by will appoint, or in default of appointment, then to such persons as would be entitled to the same if she had died intestate and in possession of the property,—is, the power not having been exercised, embraced within the mean-

Mass. 311, 50 N. E. 606; Stevens v. Mulligan, 167 Mass. 87, 44 N. E. 1086; Alexander v. McPeck, 189 Mass. 43, 75 N. E. 88; Butterfield v. Reed, 160 Mass. 361, 35 N. E. 1128; Crocker v. Shaw, 174 Mass. 266, 54 N. E. 549.

Messrs. Dana Malone, Attorney General, and Fred T. Field, for appellee:

The property at Mrs. Wharton's death vested in possession and enjoyment in her heirs at law.

Gardiner v. Fay, 182 Mass. 492, 65 N. E. 825; Putnam v. Story, 132 Mass. 205; Daniels v. Eldredge, 125 Mass. 356; Whipple v. Fairchild, 139 Mass. 262, 30 N. E. 89; Wainwright v. Sawyer, 150 Mass. 168, 22 N. E. 885; Butterfield v. Reed, 160 Mass. 361, 35 N. E. 1128; Alexander v. McPeck, 189 Mass. 34, 75 N. E. 88; Sewall v. Roberts, 115 Mass. 262; Loring v. Thorndike, 5 Allen, 257; Minot v. Winthrop, 162 Mass. 113, 26 L.R.A. 259, 38 N. E. 512.

Statutes similar to that here in question have been generally sustained as constitutional.

Magoun v. Illinois Trust & Sav. Bank, 170 U. S. 283, 42 L. ed. 1037, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 594; Billings v. Illinois, 188 U. S. 97, 47 L. ed. 400, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 272; Brown v. Elder, 32 Colo. 527, 77 Pac. 853; Kochersperger v. Drake, 167 Ill. 122, 41 L.R.A. 446, 47 N. E. 321; Re Fox, 154 Mich. 5, 117 N. W. 558; State ex rel. Foot v. Bazille, 97 Minn. 11, 106 N. W. 93, 7 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 1056; s. c. and note, in 6 L.R.A. (N.S.) 732; State ex rel. Slabaugh County v. Vin-

ing of the act of 1892, enacted before the execution of the instrument by the grantor, and providing that a tax shall be imposed when the transfer is of property by deed, grant, bargain, sale, or gift made in contemplation of death of the grantor, or intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment at or after such death. Re Cruger, 54 App. Div. 405, 66 N. Y. Supp. 636, affirmed without opinion in 166 N. Y. 602, 59 N. E. 1121. The court pointed out that the donee took a vested remainder subject to be defeated by her death before that of the grantor, and that her next of kin took a contingent remainder dependent upon her death within the lifetime of the donor, unmarried, without issue, and without having exercised the power of appointment. The court also said that, although the remainders must be held to have vested, subject to be defeated by certain contingencies, yet the remaindermen could not have had actual possession and enjoyment or right of possession until the death of the grantor.

But a widow who, by her husband's will, is given property during her natural life, "to be retained or disposed of as she may think proper," takes an absolute estate under the New York real property statute, providing that where a power of disposition is given and no remainder is limited on the estate of the grantee of the power, such grantee is entitled to an absolute fee, and therefore the failure of the widow to exercise the power of appointment does not cause the property to descend to the testator's heirs at law, so as to warrant the assessment of a transfer tax against them. Re Lynn, 34 Misc. 681, 70 N. Y. Supp. 730.

2. Where power is exercised.

(a) Generally.

In the absence of a specific statutory provision to the contrary, those who take under a power of appointment derive their titles under the grant of the power, and not under its exercise. Com. v. Williams, 13 Pa. 29.

An application of this rule led to the result that where a testator gave his daughter a life estate in property, and provided that upon her death it should pass to such persons as she should by will appoint, and she exercised the power by appointing her brothers and sisters, the lineal descendants of the original testator, the interest of such descendants was not taxable under a statute imposing a collateral inheritance tax upon estates passing by will to any person except lineal descendants, for the reason that such persons took lineally under the will of the original testator, and not collaterally under the will of the donee of the power. Ibid.

So, where a power of appointment created by a testator in favor of his daughter was exercised by her in favor of her brother and stepmother, the son and wife of the testator, it was held that their estate was derived from the testator's will, and was not subject to the collateral inheritance tax. Com. v. Sharpless, 2 Chester Co. Rep. 246.

In Lisle's Estate, 22 Pa. Super. Ct. 262, it appeared that a testatrix devised property to her four children in fee, share and share alike, but requested them in making their wills to give the property so received, "unless the strongest reasons should urge them to the contrary," to the direct heirs of the testatrix and her husband; that three of the children died, and their shares became vested in the fourth, under wills complying with the request of the testatrix; and that upon the death of the survivor, after having made a will disposing of all of the property so transferred by the testatrix, to the survivor's nephews and nieces, a collateral inheritance tax was sought to be imposed upon the interest passing to the latter. Applying the doctrine that an absolute estate given by will is reduced to a life estate with remainder in trust, by succeeding words of desire, expectation, or confidence, the court held that the children took life estates with remainder to the "direct heirs," subject to the power of appointment, and that therefore the nieces and nephews took to the extent of the three portions which the donee acquired under the wills of her sisters, by virtue of her absolute sonhaler, 74 Neb. 675, 105 N. W. 472; Nunemacher v. State, 129 Wis. 190, 9 L.R.A. (N.S.) 121, 108 N. W. 627, 9 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 711; Beals v. State, 139 Wis 544, 121 N. W. 347; Knowlton v. Moore, 178 U. S. 41, 44 L. ed. 969, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 747; Beers v. Glynn, 211 U. S. 477, 53 L. ed. 290, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 186; State v. Clark, 30 Wash. 439, 71 Pac. 20; Re McKennan, — S. D. —, — L.R.A. (N.S.) —, 126 N. W. 611; State ex rel. Garth v. Switzler, 143 Mo. 287, 40 L.R.A. 280, 65 Am. St. Rep. 653, 45 S. W. 245; Cope's Estate, 191 Pa. 1, 45 L.R.A. 316, 71 Am. St. Rep. 749, 43 Atl. 70.

Knowlton, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This case comes before us by reservation on an appeal from a decree of the probate court, instructing the trustees that a successation tax is due upon certain property referred to in a deed of trust which conveyed the property to trustees, who were to pay the income of it to Nancy Willing Wharton for her life, and, on her death, to convey it to such person or persons as she by her will, or by any instrument of appointment in the nature of a will, should devise or bequeath it to, or should order and appoint to receive it; and in default of such will or instrument of appointment, to convey it in fee to her heirs at law. Mrs. Wharton has deceased, leaving a will in which she expressly disclaimed any intention to exercise any power of appointment that she might have.

The respondent claims a succession tax upon the property under Stat. 1909, chap. 527, § 8, the first part of which is as follows: "Whenever any person shall exercise a power of appointment derived from ownership, subject to the payment of the collateral inheritance tax, but that the other portion, passing under her power of appointment to them as lineal descendants of the original testatrix, was not liable to such tax. Of course, so far as the interest which vested absolutely in the donee is concerned, no question of power of appointment was involved, and the case throws little light upon the question here considered. See also Re Lynn, supra I. a, 1. So, in Com. v. Sharpless, supra, the share of a granddaughter which, under the grandfather's will, was subject to her father's power to appoint such uses in respect thereof for the benefit of herself and "issue" as he should see fit, and which she willed to her brother, was held subject to a collateral inheritance tax as part of her estate, notwithstanding the father's attempt to declare a trust for her life with absolute testamentary power of disposal in her. The decision was upon the ground that the father's power did not extend to conferring an absolute power of disposal upon her; and therefore she took an absolute estate, subject only to the trust declared by the father for her lifetime.

And a somewhat analogous case is Com. v. Stoll, 132 Ky. 237, 114 S. W. 279, 116 S. W. 687, holding that where a testator devised property to his wife in fee, with absolute power to dispose of the same by will or otherwise, but attempted to dispose of any remainder that should not be disposed of by the wife, the devise over was void, and therefore persons entitled to the property upon the death of the wife intestate took it from her by descent, and not under the will of the testator, and the property was therefore subject to an inheritance tax, under a statute enacted subsequently to the death of the testator.

As to power to create remainder after life estate, with absolute power, of disposal, see note in 6 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1186, 33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

(b) Statute enacted after creation of power.

Since an estate created by the execution of a power of appointment takes effect in the same manner as if it had been created by the instrument which raised the power, the estate is not taxable where the power is created by will before the enactment of the statute imposing the tax, even though the power is exercised afterwards. Re Harbeck, 161 N. Y. 211, 55 N. E. 850.

So, it has been held that, under an act imposing a tax in respect of property or any interest therein or income therefrom passing by will, no tax is enforceable when property passes to a person by virtue of the exercise, even after the passage of the act, of a power of appointment created before the passage of the act, for the appointee does not take from the donee of the power, but takes in the same manner as if his name had been inserted in the power, or as if the power and the instrument executing it had been expressed in that creating it. Atty. Gen. v. Parker, 31 N. S. 202.

And it was held in Emmons v. Shaw, 171 Mass. 410, 50 N. E. 1033, that the donor, and not the donee, of an absolute power of disposition, was the "decendent," within the meaning of an act imposing a tax upon the property of a decedent which should pass by will or other instrument intended to take effect on his death, to persons who did not sustain to him the relation described in the act, and therefore that a remainder which went to the appointee after the death of the donee was not subject to the tax, where the statute was enacted subsequently to the death of the donor. The court pointed out that the statute did not provide for a tax on all property transmitted by will, but only on the property passing by will to persons who did not sustain to the decedent the relation described in the act, and that any disposition of property made prior to September 1st, 1907, such appointment, when made, shall be deemed to be a disposition of property by the person exercising such power, taxable under the provisions of chapter 563, of the acts of the year 1907, and of all acts in amendment thereof and in addition thereto, in the same manner as though the property to which such appointment relates belonged absolutely to the donee of such power, and had been bequeathed or devised by the donee by will. And whenever any person possessing such a power of appointment, so derived, shall omit or fail to exercise the same within the time provided therefor, in whole or in part, a disposition of property taxable under the provisions of chapter 563 of the acts of the year 1907, and all acts in amendment thereof and in addition thereto, shall be deemed to take place to the extent of such omission or failure, in the same manner as though the persons or corporations thereby becoming entitled to the possession or enjoyment of the property to which such power related had succeeded thereto by a will of the donee of the power failing to exercise such power, taking effect at the time of such omission or failure." This statute was intended to cover certain cases where property passing into the possession of new owners was not previously subject to a tax upon the succession, and other cases where, with a possible construction of previous statutes, the property might be subject to a tax under them. It provides that the taxation shall be in the same manner as though the property belonged absolutely to therefore any argument that the tax was in the nature of a duty or excise on the privilege of transmitting property by will was of no assistance in determining whether the donor or the donee was to be regarded as the decedent.

So, where the testator gives the donee a life estate, and the remainder to certain named persons, and the power of appointment in the donee is confined to prescribing the manner and proportion in which the remaindermen shall take, the latter take under the will of the testator, and not under the will of the donee, and are therefore not subject to United States revenue act of 1898, which was enacted before the power of appointment was exercised, but after the death of the donor, and which purports to subject to the tax any person having in charge or trust as administrators, executors, or trustees, any legacies or distributive shares passing after the passage of the act from any person possessed of such property, either by will or by the intestate laws. The court said that the donee was not "the person possessed," within the meaning of the statute, for the reason that the appointees took nothing from the donee, but simply took after her, and that although the corpus of the estate was passed on to them from her after she was through with it, it passed in continuation of its original passage from the testator, who was clearly the person possessed, within the meaning of the statute. The precise ground of this decision, it seems, is that the persons who occupy the position of appointees in this case were really named by the testator himself, the donee of the power being authorized only to specify the proportion which they should take. Fidelity Trust Co. v. McClain, 113 Fed. 162, affirmed without additional opinion in 57 C. C. A. 679, 122 Fed. 1020.

A fortiori, no tax is enforceable under a statute enacted subsequently to the testator's death, upon property covered by his will, by which he gave another a life estate with power of disposition, and provided that, if any residue should remain undisposed of, it should pass to two named persons, where the donee of the life estate and power provided in his will that his executors should distribute the property according to the provisions of the former will, for in such circumstances the property is deemed to have passed directly to the remainderman under the first will. Re Langdon, 153 N. Y. 6, 46 N. E. 1034. In this case the court regarded the provision in the donee's will as a failure to exercise, rather than an exercise of, the power.

And where one devises land to another by a will giving the latter a privilege to use therefrom during her life, and simultaneously makes a contract with her that she will always keep on hand a will devising a half of the property to a third person, the latter takes under the will of the original testator, and is therefore not subject to an inheritance tax under a statute passed subsequently to the death of the first testator, but before that of the second. Winn v. Schenck, 33 Ky. L. Rep. 615, 110 S. W. 827.

But the New York transfer tax law of 1892, providing that such a tax shall be imposed when any person becomes beneficially entitled, in possession or expectancy, to any property or the income thereof by any transfer, whether made before or after the passage of the act, was held to embrace and render taxable the interest of an appointee who had no previous existence as beneficiary until the exercise, after the enactment of the statute, of a power of appointment created by a will which became effective before the passage of the statute, such appointee being a person who has become beneficially entitled in possession to property after the passage of the act, by a transfer previously made. Re Brooks, 65 N. Y. S. R. 255, 32 N. Y. Supp. 176.

(c) In cases of nonresidents.

Upon the theory that an appointee deprives title immediately from the donor of the power, it was held in Com. v. Duffield, 12 Pa. 277, that no collateral inheritance tax was enforceable against either the appointee or the executrix of the donee, where the power related to a certain amount of the donee of the power, and had been bequeathed or devised by the donee by will. In this respect the provision is different from the construction that was given by this court to the previous statute, in its application to the taxation of property passing under the execution of a power. Emmons v. Shaw, 171 Mass. 410, 50 N. E. 1033. The statute must be held to cover all cases that come within its terms, and to supersede all previous inconsistent legislation applicable to such cases.

The facts of the case before us are strictly within the language and purpose of the statute, and our decision must be governed by this enactment, if it can be supported as constitutional.

It is contended that it calls for a taking of property without due process of law, because the persons who would take under a previously existing will or deed containing a power of appointment, if the power is not exercised, have a vested right in the property under the will or deed, such that their subsequent acquisition of it, in possession and enjoyment, is not a succession, and cannot be taxed as such.

It generally has been held that a title derived through a power of appointment in a will or deed is to be taken as coming from the donor of the power, rather than from the donee. But in many particulars the donee is often more directly responsible for the possession and enjoyment of the beneficiary than the donor. This is referred to in some of the cases from the money, and was created by the foreign will of a nonresident, although the donee's will was probated in Pennsylvania.

So, the doctrine that the title derived from the exercise of the power relates back to the instrument creating it has been applied so as to vest the title in a nonresident appointee prior to her death, and thus subject the property to an inheritance tax as a part of her estate, under the laws of 1887 as amended by the laws of 1891, providing that all property which shall pass by the will of a nonresident shall, if located in New York, be subject to a tax, notwithstanding the property was removed from the state before the appointee's will was administered, and although, if the property were to be regarded as passing under the residuary clause of the donee's will, it would not have been subject to the tax under the appointee's will for the reason that she died before the former will was probated. Re Lord, 111 App. Div. 152, 97 N. Y. Supp. 553, affirmed without opinion in 186 N. Y. 549, 79 N. E. 1110.

b. Under statutes expressly covering powers.

1. Powers not exercised.

In this connection note MINOT v. STEVENS.

The interest which a child takes after the failure by his mother to exercise a power of appointment created in a deed conveying property to trustees to pay the income to the mother during her life, and remainder to such of her children as she should by will appoint, and in case of her failure to make appointment, to her lawful issue, is taxable under the provision of the New York amendatory act of 1897, providing that when any person possessing a power of appointment derived from any disposition of property made before the passage of the act shall omit or fail to exercise the same within the time provided, a taxable transfer shall be deemed to take place to the extent of such omission or failure, in the same manner as though the person thereby becoming entitled to the possession or enjoyment of the property to which such power related had succeeded thereto by a will of the donee of the power failing to exercise such power, taking effect at the time of such omission or failure. Re Bartow, 30 Misc. 27, 62 N. Y. Supp. 1000.

2. Powers exercised.

(a) Generally.

In the English Case of Platt v. Routh (1840) 3 Beav. 257, 10 L. J. Ch. N. S. 131, the testator gave his residuary personal estate upon trust to pay the interest thereof to his daughter for life, and after her death upon trust for such persons, excepting the members of three families, and in such manner, as she should by will appoint, and the testator further provided that if his daughter should intermarry with a certain member of one of the families or his relations, or should reside with or receive visits from him or them, the bequest in her favor with power of appointment given to her should be absolutely void. The daughter exercised the power by appointing the residuary estate among various persons. Three questions were presented in the case: First, whether the daughter or her estate was liable to pay any legacy duty beyond that which was payable on the life interest given to her for her own benefit; second, whether any probable duty was payable on the probate of her will in respect of her father's residuary estate thereby appointed; and third, what, if any, legacy duty was payable upon the sum appointed by her will. The first and third questions were held to be dependent upon whether the power of appointment given to the daughter was general and absolute, and the court having held that, notwithstanding the exception of the members of three families in the grant of a power of appointment otherwise general, and notwithstanding that the daughter was forbidden to intermarry or to have social intercourse with any of the members of one of the families, the power of appointment was general and absolute, and that therefore a legacy duty was payable on the residue under the first will, by virtue of the provision of § 18 of the statute of 36 Geo. III. chap. 52, pro-

English reports that are cited in Emmons v. Shaw, 171 Mass. 410-413, 50 N. E. 1033. In England it is expressly provided by statute that, in the case of a general power, the person executing the power shall be deemed to be the one from whom the estate is received. The reasonableness of this doctrine is also shown in the opinion in Chanler v. Kelsey, 205, U. S. 466, 51 L. ed. 882, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 550.

The condition of property which is subject to a general power of appointment contained in a will or deed, and which, in default of appointment, is to be given over to persons named, is peculiar. The donee of the power has no title to it, but he has an absolute right to dispose of it by the exercise of the power. If the power is to dispose of it by an instrument in the nature of a will, signed by three witnesses, as was the fact in this case, if he exercises the power, the property becomes a part of his estate for administration after his death, and may be used for the payment of his debts. His relation to it is very much like that of an owner. Clapp v. Ingraham, 126 Mass. 200; Olmev v. Balch, 154 Mass. 318, 28 N. E. 258. Those who would take in default of an appointment have only an interest which is contingent upon the conduct of the donee of the power, who can make it vest in them absolutely in possession, or can defeat it altogether. He can make it vest in possession by an appointment to the persons named as the takers in default of appointment, in which case it will be theirs, subject only to a possible use for the payment of his debts, viding that where any property should be given for a limited interest, and a general and absolute power of appointment should also be given to any person, to whom the property would not belong in default of such appointment, such property, upon the execution of the power, should be charged with the same duty and in the same manner as if the same property had been immediately given to the person having and executing the power. after allowing any duty before paid in respect thereof. It was also held with respect to the third question, that since the power of appointment was general and absolute, a legacy duty was payable on the same residue as appointed under the will of the daughter, by virtue of the 7th section of the same act, defining legacies which are subject to duty to be any gift by will or testamentary instrument which shall, by virtue of such instrument, have effect or be satisfied out of the personal estate of the person dying, or out of any personal estate which such person shall have power to dispose of as he or she shall think fit. In reaching this conclusion, the court stopped to point out that its opinion was not founded upon the notion that the residue of the original testator's estate had become the property of the daughter, but upon the notion that the property, in the circumstances of this case, was specifically charged by the act. But the court expressly held that the residue over which the daughter had the power of appointment was not her property, and could not be recovered by her executors by virtue of the probate; and that the second question should be answered in the negative, for in such circumstances the property was not "the estate and effects of the deceased, for or in respect of which the probate" should be granted, within the meaning of the statute of 55 Geo. III. chap. 184, imposing probate duties. This decision was affirmed sub nom. Drake v. Atty. Gen. 10 Clark & F. 257 (1843).

In Re Lovelace (1850) 4 De G. & J. 340. 28 L. J. Ch. N. S. 489, 5 Jur. N. S. 694, 7 Week. Rep. 675, a duty was sought to be 33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

imposed upon appointees in respect of the execution in their favor of a power of appointment by the will of one who died subsequently to the passage of the succession duty act of 16 and 17 Victoria, chap. 51, the power having been created by an instrument which became effective before such act was passed. It was contended, on the one hand, that the appointees were subject to the duty by virtue of the provision of § 2 of this statute, declaring that every past or future disposition of property by reason whereof any person had or should become beneficially entitled to any property upon the death of any person dying after the time appointed for the commencement of the act, either immediately or after any interval, either certainly or contingently, and either originally or by way of substituted limitation, should be deemed to have conferred, or to confer, a succession on the person entitled by reason of such disposition. It was contended, on the other hand, in effect at least, that § 4 of the act relating to powers of appointment must be deemed to constitute an exclusive legislative declaration in respect of the taxation of powers of appointment, and since such section, which provided that where any person should have a general power of appointment under any disposition of property taking effect upon the death of any person dying after the time appointed for the commencement of the act, over property, he should, in the event of his making any appointment, be deemed to be entitled, at the time of exercising such power, to the property or interest thereby appointed, as a succession derived from the donor of the power, and that where any person should have a limited power of appointment under a disposition taking effect upon any such death, over property, any person taking any property by the exercise of such power should be deemed to take the same as a succession derived from the person creating the power as predecessor,—since such section did not embrace the situation in controversy, which involved a general power of appointment, in which case, under § 4, the donee should, or he can do it by an omission to exercise the power, or he can dispose of it by an appointment to others, thus terminating the contingent interest and leaving the contingent remaindermen nothing. After a will or deed containing such a power has taken effect, and before the donee of the power has acted under it, have all rights of succession in possession and enjoyment so vested that there is no possibility of a succession that will come into existence later, when the final disposition of the property is determined by an exercise of the power or by a failure to exercise it? It is held, and so far as we know without dissent, that, through the exercise of the power, a right of succession to property may come into existence afterwards, which properly may be a subject for the imposition of a tax. Emmons v. Shaw, 171 Mass. 410, 50 N. E. 1033; Crocker v. Shaw, 174 Mass. 266, 54 N. E. 549; Re Dows, 167 N. Y. 227, 52 L.R.A. 433, 88 Am. St. Rep. 508, 60 N. E. 439; Re Cooksey, 182 N. Y. 92, 74 N. E. 880; Chanler v. Kelsey, 205 U. S. 466, 51 L. ed. 882, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 550. The tax is imposed as of the time when the succession in possession and enjoyment occurs through the happening of the event that determines it.

The cases above cited, from the New York court of appeals and the Supreme Court of the United States, show that the succession is not so vested in those who will take if the power is not exercised, that it may not go to the appointee through the exercise of the power of appointment. Until the time comes for the final determination, be deemed the successor of the donor, no duty was enforceable. The court, however, held that the appointees were subject to the tax under § 2, which expressly embraced the situation, and that the mere fact that a power of appointment was involved, not included within § 4, did not operate to exclude it from the provisions of § 2. It was further held in this case that § 2 was applicable notwithstanding the appointee and the donee of the power were domiciled outside of the British Empire, and in this respect the case was followed in Re Wallop, 1 De G. J. & S. 656, 5 New Reports, 679, 33 L. J. Ch. N. S. 351, 10 Jur. N. S. 328, 10 L. T. N. S. 174, 12 Week. Rep. 587, which involved a general power of appointment, and in which the court on another point followed Platt v. Routh, as affirmed in Drake v. Atty. Gen. and regarded such case as having settled the rule that § 18 of the act of 36 Geo. III. chap. 52, so far as it related to general powers of appointment, applied to the duties payable by the donees of the powers, and not to the duties payable by the appointees, leaving the latter to depend upon the 7th section. In construing the latter section, the court alluded to the fact that it is held not to apply to legacies given by wills of persons domiciled outside of Great Britain, and to be paid out of their personal estates, and stated that usually such construction is based upon the doctrine that the personal estate follows the person, but held that this doctrine could have no application to the present case, where the legacies were given by the exercise of a power, there being no property in the donee of the power. The court observed, however, that the real question was as to what the legislature intended by the language of § 7, in terms applying to legacies given by wills of persons to be satisfied out of their personal estate, or out of any personal estate of which they might have had power to dispose, and held that it must have been intended that the same rule should apply to different members of the same class,—that is, that since no duties were payable by legatees under the wills of persons domiciled outside of Great Britain, none should be chargeable against appointees under the wills of nonresident donees, and that therefore no legacy duty was payable in the case.

Considerable litigation has arisen in New York under the amendatory act of 1897, providing that whenever any person shall exercise a power of appointment, such appointment, when made, shall be deemed a transfer taxable in the same manner as though the property to which the appointment related belonged absolutely to the donee of such power, and had been bequeathed or devised by him by will. As will be seen, the constitutionality of this act is upheld in cases cited infra I. b, 2 (b).

In Re Walworth, 66 App. Div. 171, 72 N. Y. Supp. 984, the court applied the rule that the amendatory act of 1897 was intended to change the rule that the appointees under the power take by virtue of the will creating the power, and not by virtue of the will by which the power is exercised, with the result that the tax should be fixed "as though the property to which such appointment related belonged absolutely to the donee of such power, and had been bequeathed or devised by such donee by will, and held that where a testator gave his son a life estate with power of appointment limited so that the same should be exercised only in favor of descendants of the testator, and the donee exercised the power in favor of his own nephews, who were lineal descendants of the testator, the tax was assessable at the general rate, and not at the rate provided for lineal descendants. The court said that since the enactment of the amendatory statute of 1897, the word "decendent" in the act of 1892 must be held to refer to the deceased person who should exercise the power, and not the deceased person who should create it.

So, under the amendatory act of 1897, the value of the estate of appointees, who were named by one who was given a life estate in property, with power to dispose it is not established as belonging to anyone. Then comes the statute which we are considering, and which was considered in the above-cited cases in New York and in the Supreme Court of the United States. It declares, in substance, that the exercise of the power shall be considered as giving the succession to the appointees, and that the refusal or omission to exercise the power shall be considered as giving the succession to the persons who are to take in default of the exercise of it. The statute treats the result as depending upon the conduct of the donee, who may appoint or refrain from appointing. If he appoints, the succession under the statute is to be created as determined by him, and the right thus acquired by the appointee is treated as taxable, because received as a benefit under our law. Can there be any doubt of the power of the legislature so to treat the coming of the appointee into the succession? It seems not. To this extent the cited cases seem to go.

It is but a short step further to apply the second part of the statute, which refers to coming into succession through the conduct of the donee in refusing or omitting to make an appointment that might carry the succession elsewhere. While he has the power of appointment, he is in control of the succession. He may allow it to go to the persons named in the will or deed, or he may transmit it elsewhere. By exercising the power he may even give his own creditors the benefit of it after his death. When property is held subject to such possibilities of disposition, it is usur-of the remainder, is the value of the property passing under the power of appointment, and not merely the value of the remainder upon the death of the donor of the power. Re Tucker, 27 Misc. 616, 59 N. Y. Supp. 699.

And by virtue of that statute, it has been held that property passing under a power of appointment, the donee and appointee both being residents, comes within the principle that the inheritance tax is a tax on the right or privilege of disposing of property by will, so that the tax is payable in respect of the property, whether it is located within the state or not. Re Hull, 111 App. Div. 322, 97 N. Y. Supp. 701, affirmed without opinion in 186 N. Y. 586, 79 N. E. 1107.

It was held in Re Rogers, 71 App. Div. 481, 75 N. Y. Supp. 835, affirmed without opinion in 172 N. Y. 617, 64 N. E. 1125, that property passing by virtue of the exercise of a power of appointment is taxable under the amendatory act of 1897, notwithstanding the appointee is a creditor of the donee, in satisfaction of whose debt the appointment is made. The court said that the creditor was not obliged to accept such provision in the instrument exercising the power, apparently upon the theory that he could refuse the provision, and prove his debt against the estate, but that if he did accept it, he was subject to the tax.

(c) Statute enacted after creation of power.

See also Re Lovelace, supra I. b, 2 (a).

Real property subject to a power of appointment, which before the exercise of the power has been converted by the trustees into personalty, will be subject to the transfer tax provided for the exercise of such power upon personalty, although at the time of the execution of the will creating the power, the tax was not applicable to the transfer of real property. Re Dows, 167 N. Y. 227, 52 L.R.A. 433, 88 Am. St. Rep. 509, 60 N. E. 439, affirmed in 183 33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

U. S. 278, 46 L. ed. 196, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 213.

In the last case it was sought, under the New York statute of 1897, which is set out in the preceding subdivision, to enforce a transfer tax upon the exercise of a power of appointment by one in favor of his children, created by the will of his father, giving to the son a life estate in the property, and providing that upon the latter's death, the property should vest in such of his surviving children as he should by his last will appoint, and that if he should die intestate, then the property should vest absolutely and at once in his surviving children, share and share alike. The court of appeals, applying the doctrine that the right to take property by devise is not an inherent or natural right, but a privilege accorded by the state, which it may tax or charge for, and that therefore the right of a testator to make a will or testamentary instrument is equally a privilege, and equally subject to the taxing power of the state,—held that when the original testator devised his property to the appointees under the will of his son, he necessarily subjected it to the charge that the state might impose upon the privilege accorded to the son of making a will; and that the title of the appointees must be considered as derived from the exercise of the power, and not from the original will. The case was taken to the United States Supreme Court (reported sub nom. Orr v. Gilman, 183 U. S. 278, 46 L. ed. 196, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 213), where it was insisted, among other things, that upon the death of the original testator, who at that time had a legal right to transfer by will his property or any interest therein to his grandchildren, without any diminution or impairment then imposed by the law of the state upon the exercise of that right, the grandchildren acquired a vested right in the property transferred, and that the subsequent law operated to diminish and impair such vested right. But the Supreme Court adopted the construction placed upon the statute by the New York court of ap-pation or an unlawful interference with vested rights, for the legislature to say that the succession in possession and enjoyment is not yet determined, that it belongs to no one until it is determined, that the determination of it depends upon the will and conduct of the donee of the power, and that, when it is determined by his conduct, either by action or by refraining from action, it shall be subject to a tax? We think it is in the power of the legislature to say, in reference to succession in possession after the death of the persons whose decease is awaited, that property so held is not vested in anybody, and that when it vests in possession through a proper disposition of it, which is dependent upon the will and conduct of the donee, a succession tax shall be imposed. We think that Chanler v. Kelsey, ubi supra, looks in this direction, although it does not discuss this particular subject. The decision in Moffit v. Kelly, 218 U. S. 500, 54 L. ed. 1086, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 79, published since the argument in the present case, is almost, if not quite, decisive of the question.

The decision to the contrary in Re Lansing, 182 N. Y. 238, 74 N. E. 882, was by four of the judges, two others dissenting in a well-reasoned opinion. So, the decision in Re Chapman, 133 App. Div. 337, 117 N. Y. Supp. 679, which was afterwards affirmed by the court of appeals in 196 N. Y. 561, 90 N. E. 1157, without an opinion, was by three judges, while two others joined in a dissenting opinion.

We hold that the decree of the probate court was correct.

Decree of Probate Court affirmed.

peals, and held that as so construed the statute infringed none of the provisions of the 14th Amendment of the United States Constitution.

In Re Vanderbilt, 60 App. Div. 246, 63 N. Y. Supp. 1079, affirmed without opinion in 163 N. Y. 597, 57 N. E. 1127, a testator who died after the enactment of the inheritance tax law of 1885, but before the amendment of 1897, bequeathed property in trust to pay the income thereof to his son for life, and upon his death, to his issue in such shares or proportions as he might by his last will appoint, and in default of such appointment, the gift was made directly to the issue. It does not appear from the case whether in the latter alternative provision any particular proportion in which the donee's children should take was specified. The donee, who died subsequently to the enactment of the amendment of 1897, had exercised the power by a will giving one of his children a specified portion of the property, and the balance to his other children equally. It was contended in this case, for the purpose of defeating the tax, that the amendment, if held applicable in this case, would be an unconstitutional deprivation of property without due process of law, as interfering with vested rights, as well as an impairment of the obligation of a contract of the state. The court held that there was no complete vesting of the estate in the children of the donee or life tenant until the power was exercised, and that while appointees take by relation back, so as to derive their title under the donor, they must take their specific shares from the time of the execution of the power, and that the authority of the state to impose the tax on the right of succession continued until the time at which the extent of that right was finally fixed by the exercise of the power of appointment. On the point relating to obligation of contracts, it was insisted that the statute of 1885, under which the will of the donor was subjected to a tax in the form then imposed upon the right of inheritance by will, constituted a contract 33 L.R.A.(N.S.)

between the state and the donor, that if he should die while such statute was in full operation and unchanged, his estate might be disposed of without the imposition of any further tax, which contract was unconstitutionally impaired by the amendment of 1897, making the appointment a taxable transfer; but the court held that by passing the act of 1885, the state had not disposed of its power to tax the right of succession to property, and that such right was properly exercised by the enactment of the amendment.

Substantially the same question was presented in Re Delano, 176 N. Y. 486, 64 L.R.A. 279, 68 N. E. 871, petition for rehearing denied in 177 N. Y. 540, 69 N. E. 1122, which involved a conveyance by deed before the act of 1897 was passed, of property to the grantor's daughter for life, with remainder to her brothers and sisters, or their issue per stirpes, the deed further providing that the daughter might by will appoint the property among the persons named, in such shares as she chose. She died without issue after the passage of the act of 1897, and after having appointed her nephew beneficiary. The court said that it did not regard the question as open since the decision in the Vanderbilt and Dows Cases, but went on to say that it was quite immaterial that there was no statute imposing a succession tax of any kind in force when the original disposition of the property was made, and the power was created, for the reason that it is the practical transfer through the exercise of the power by will that is taxed, and nothing else, and that the right of the legislature to impose a tax on the privilege of exercising a power by will is not affected by the fact that no such tax was imposed when the power was created. It was also pointed out that while the lower court gave no consideration to the Dows Case, it attempted to distinguish the Vanderbilt Case upon the ground that there the power of appointment was created by will, whereas in the then present (Delano) case, the power was created by a deed, and also upon the ground that the will by which the power was created in the Vanderbilt Case was made after the enactment of the inheritance tax law. The latter distinction was disposed of by the remarks of the court to which reference has just been made, and the former distinction was repudiated with the statement that the effective agency of the power of appointment to produce the result intended is neither strengthened nor weakened by the nature of the instrument used by the donor of the power to create it, and that the power, however or whenever created, authorized the donee by her will to divest certain defeasible estates, and to vest them absolutely in one person, and that therefore the statute applied to all powers alike, without distinction on account of the method of creation, since it provided that the exercise of the power should be deemed a taxable transfer of the property, the same as if it had belonged absolutely to the donee of the power, and had been bequeathed or devised by such donee. This case also went to the United States Supreme Court, and is reported sub nom. Chanler v. Kelsey, 205 U. S. 466, 51 L. ed. 882, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 550, where it was held that the statute as so construed did not take property without due process of law, and that the fact of the reduction of the estate resulting from the imposition of the tax did not render the statute repugnant to the United States Constitution as impairing contract obligation. From the decision of the majority of the latter court, Justice Holmes dissented upon the ground that in this case there was no succession. His idea seemed to be that the means of executing the power depended in the first place upon the deed creating it, and that if the creative instrument had permitted the execution of the power by deed rather than by will, then there would have been no question but that the inheritance tax law had no application; and that since the required method of executing the power could be ascertained only by an inspection of the deed creating the power itself, it was the latter instrument that determined ultimately to whom and how the property should pass, and, such instrument being a deed not of a testamentary character, no question of succession could arise. From this, the conclusion was that, since in such circumstances there is no succession, a statute purporting to impose a tax only upon successions, but construed or expressly declared to be applicable in this case, was void.

In Re Lansing, 182 N. Y. 238, 74 N. E. 882, the testator devised property in trust to pay the income to his daughter for life, and after her death to pay the remainder to her heirs at law, subject, however, to a power given to the daughter to dispose by will of the remainder in fee after the termination of the trust estate by her death, "among her heirs at law and her collateral relatives in such proportion and manner and with such limitations as she may desire." The daughter exercised the power by devising and bequeathing the property to her only daughter in fee simple, and the question before the court was whether the appointee took by virtue of the power of appointment, in which case the property was subject to an inheritance tax, or whether she took under the will of the donor, who died before the enactment of the statute, in which case no tax could be enforced. The appointee insisted that since the exercise of the appointment gave her nothing to which she would not have been entitled under the will in case the power had not been exercised, the property passed to her directly from the donor, it appearing that she rejected the title from the appointment, and elected to take under the former instrument. The court adopted this view, holding that, since the exercise of the power was made in such a manner as not to alter the destination of the property, such attempted exercise was a mere formality, and of no effect, and that, upon the death of the donor, the appointee took a vested interest in remainder, being "a person in being who would have an immediate right to the possession of the lands upon the ceasing of the intermediate or precedent estate," within the meaning of a statute relating to remainders, and that therefore the tax was not enforceable. It should be noted that while it has just been said that the court held that she took a vested remainder, this statement may perhaps be regarded as more of a recital, than as a decision, for, at another point in the opinion, the court said that it was not at all necessary to determine whether the remainder was vested or contingent, for the reason that if it was merely contingent, it was acquired under the donor's will at the instant of his death, and that while it was true that her estate was subject to be defeated by her death before that of the donee, or by diminution if the donee should leave other children, her right to the estate was indefeasible if she survived the donee. The court distinguishes the Delano Case upon the ground that there the appointee could have taken an undivided fourth through the deed of the donor, and could have thus escaped the transfer tax, but that he was entitled to the entire estate under the exercise of the power of appointment by the donee, and that when he claimed the entire property, he necessarily elected to take under the power of appointment.

In the Lansing Case, the court also distinguished Re Cooksey, 182 N. Y. 92, 74 N. E. 880, where, notwithstanding the death of the donor before the enactment of the inheritance tax law of 1896, and its amendment of 1897, it was held that the property was taxable as it passed under the exercise of the power which was effected subsequently to the enactment of the statute, where the donor devised and bequeathed his residuary estate to trustees to pay his daughter the income during her life, and upon her death to such of her children as she should by will designate and appoint, and in such manner and upon such terms as she might impose, and provided that in case she should die intestate, the funds should vest absolutely and at once in her children, share and share alike, to be paid to them as follows: As each should attain the age of twenty-one years, there should be paid to him or her not to exceed a certain sum; and as each should attain the age of twenty-five, a further sum not to exceed a certain amount; and as each should attain the age of thirty years, the remainder. The donee exercised the power by appointing her children to receive the estate share and share alike, but she provided in her will that as each should attain the age prescribed in the donor's will, he or she should be paid precisely the maximum amount specified in the donor's will. The court held that the property was taxable under the statute for the reason that it vested under the exercise of the power, and this was put upon the ground that, although the share received by each appointee would have been the same whether it vested under the power of appointment or under the will of the donor, the latter instrument left it within the discretion of the trustees as to whether the maximum amount be paid, whereas by the exercise of the power, the donee fixed definitely such maximum amount as the sum to be paid to the children, and without qualification, leaving no discretion in the trustees, and that therefore the exercise of the power could not be treated as a nullity. The variation effected by the exercise of the power in this case should be compared with that in the Ripley Case following, where an apparently greater change in the destination of the property was regarded as insufficient to make the property pass under the exercise of the power.

Whereas in the Lansing Case some importance was attached to the fact that the will of the donor provided that the remainder should pass to the children, and that it was only in case of the exercise of the power in favor of other persons that the operation of the original will would be defeated, the court in Re Lowndes, 60 Misc. 506, 113 N. Y. Supp. 1114, relies upon such circumstance absolutely, for the purpose of distinguishing the Lansing Case and following the Cooksey Case. In the Lowndes Case, it appeared that the donor provided that her property should vest in trustees, and that the income should be paid to her daughter during life, and that upon the death of the daughter the property should pass according to the will of the daughter, and in default of a will, to the issue of the daughter, and the daughter exercised the power by giving her husband a life estate, and providing that upon his death the property should pass to the children.

So, quoting the Lansing Case, the New York court held in Re Ripley, 122 App. Div. 419, 106 N. Y. Supp. 844, affirmed in 32 L.R.A. (N.S.);

192 N. Y. 536, 84 N. E. 574, that where the will gave a life estate, and provided that upon the death of the life tenant the property should, "unless otherwise disposed of" by the life tenant, pass to the issue of the life tenant, share and share alike, and the life tenant by his will provided that the property should be divided equally between his wife and children,—the children took under the will of the first testator directly, and that their interest therefore was not subject to taxation, such testator having died before the enactment of the laws of 1897. The court points out that the first testator did not say that the children should take in case the life tenant failed to exercise any power of disposition or appointment, but that they should take unless the trust fund was otherwise disposed of, and it is this feature of the case which leads the court to the conclusion that the property passed under the will of the first testator, and not under the exercise of the power of appointment. It was regarded as wholly immaterial that the share of the children was reduced by the provision in the will exercising the power, that the wife should be entitled to one share, whereas the original will provided for an equal division among the children without any mention of the wife, the court saying that, inasmuch as the four fifths (there were four children) were not otherwise disposed of than as provided in the will of the original testator, the provision and direction of his will became operative, and the children took their interest directly thereunder, and independently of the power of appointment. (See, however, the Cooksey Case, supra.) The affirmance of this case by the court of appeals was per curiam, the court merely pointing out that the power of appointment was limited, and could be exercised only in favor of persons who did not take under the will creating it, and that the children took directly under the original will, except as their interest might have been devested or cut down by a valid exercise of the power.

The settled rule under the act of 1897 seems to be that where the persons named as appointees take under the exercise of the power just exactly what they would have taken under the original will if the power of appointment had not been exercised, their interest vests upon the death of the original testator, subject, of course, to be defeated by their death before that of the donee, and by the exercise of the power adversely to their interest; and their interests are not taxable, where the original testator died before the enactment of any inheritance or transfer tax law. Re Chapman, 133 App. Div. 337, 117 N. Y. Supp. 679, appeal dismissed without opinion in 196 N. Y. 561, 90 N. E. 1157.

The Lansing Case was expressly followed in Re Spencer, 119 App. Div. 883, 107 N. Y. Supp. 543, where about the only allusion to the state of facts is the remark of the court that the conditions were substantially the same as in the Lansing Case; and the court lays great stress upon the fact that the will of the donee of the power neither added to nor took from any of the final beneficiaries the benefits which the will of the donor of the power expressly conferred upon them.

So, following the Lansing Case, it was held in Re Haggerty, 128 App. Div. 479, 112 N. Y. Supp. 1017, that where the donee of the power exercised it by naming the person who was entitled to take under the will of the donor in case the donee failed to exercise the power, the interest of such donee or beneficiary was not taxable, the will of the original testator having become effective in 1875.

In Re Lewis, 129 App. Div. 905, 113 N. Y. Supp. 1136, the court, upon the authority of the Lansing and Haggerty Cases, affirmed without further opinion 60 Misc. 643, 113 N. Y. Supp. 1112, where it appears that the donee exercised the power in favor of her children, who by the will of the donor were made the beneficiaries in case the donee should fail to exercise the power.

So, without any discussion whatever, but citing Re Lansing as authority, the New York court in Re Backhouse, 110 App. Div. 737, 96 N. Y. Supp. 466, affirmed without opinion in 185 N. Y. 544, 77 N. E. 1181, held that where a testator gave his son a life estate with remainder to his heirs, or to such person or persons as the son should appoint by will, and the son in his will appointed his children, the latter took under the will of the first testator, and were vested with the estate when such will became effective, and that therefore the transfer was not subject to tax, for the reason that the transfer tax law was not enacted until after the will of the first testator became effective.

And where the testator gives a life estate to his daughter with remainder to such persons as she should by will appoint, and in case of her failure to exercise the power, to her lawful issue in the same manner as if she should die intestate, and she appoints her lawful issue, the latter's interests vest under the will of the original testator, and are therefore not taxable under the act of 1897, where the original testator died before the enactment of an inheritance or transfer tax law. Re Chapman, 133 App. Div. 337, 117 N. Y. Supp. 679, appeal dismissed without opinion in 196 N. Y. 561, 90 N. E. 1157.

On the other hand, where the donee, in exercising the power, makes a disposition of the property substantially different from the alternative provision by the donor, to be effective if the donee fails to act, the property is deemed to pass by the exercise of the power, and the act of 1897 is held applicable.

Thus, where the testator gives his daughter a life estate with remainder to her issue, share and share alike, and his will further provides that the daughter shall have power to appoint the remainder by will among the testator's descendants living at her death, in such proportions as she shall think proper, and the daughter dies leaving four daughters and two sons, after having exercised the power by providing that the property shall be divided in equal proportion among her daughters, the latter take under the power of appointment, and not under the will of the testator, and their interest is subject to taxation under the amendatory act of 1897, the daughter having died after the enactment of such statute, although the testator died before its enactment. Re Potter, 51 App. Div. 212, 64 N. Y. Supp. 1013.

And where the donor, who died in 1879, provided that upon the termination of the life estate of the donee, the property should pass to such persons and in such proportions as the donee should by will appoint, and upon failure to appoint, to the heirs of the donee as if the donee had died seized and possessed thereof, and the donee gave his wife a life estate with remainder to three of his four children, it was held that the children did not take under the original will, but that their rights and estates were created and fixed by the exercise of the power, and that therefore they were required to pay a transfer tax under the amendatory act of 1897, the court pointing out that the power of appointment was exercised so that instead of an equal and immediate division of the estate among the four children upon the death of the donee, which would have occurred if the latter had not exercised the power, the division was postponed during the life of the donee's wife, and the absolute estate was given to only three of the four children. Re Warren, 62 Misc. 444, 116 N. Y. Supp. 1034.

And it was held in Re Seaver, 63 App. Div. 283, 71 N. Y. Supp. 544, that under the amendatory act of 1897, the interest of an appointee acquired under his mother's will, which became effective after the passage of the act, in property devised to the mother by one who gave her a life estate with absolute power of disposition of the same by will, was subject to taxation. The court took pains to say that it did not mean to intimate that the actual title to the property for other than taxing purposes was derived from the mother; but that its conclusion was based upon the fact that the statute explicitly declared that it is the exercise, and not the creation, of a power of appointment which effects the transfer upon which the tax is enforced.

So, where a testator gives a life estate to his widow, and authorizes her to dispose of the remainder by will, and provides that in case of her failure to do so, a life estate shall be given to her brother with remainders over at his death to the widow's heirs at law, next of kin according to the New York law in cases of intestacy, and the widow exercises the power by giving her brother the property absolutely, the property passes by virtue of the exercise of power, and the transfer thereby affected is taxable under the act of 1897. Re Rogers, 71 App. Div. 461, 75 N. Y. Supp.

835, affirmed without opinion in 172 N. Y. 617, 64 N. E. 1125.

Upon the ground that, under the amendatory act of 1897, the tax is imposed upon the transfer effected by the exercise of the power of appointment, it was held in Re Buckingham, 106 App. Div. 13, 94 N. Y. Supp. 130, that where a testator whose will became effective in 1888 transferred property in trust in favor of his nephew for life with the remainder of the nephew's children, or in default of issue, to such persons as the nephew should appoint, the interest of the person who took as appointee under the exercise of the power by the nephew was subject to taxation under the amendatory act of 1897, notwithstanding the transfer to the life tenant and donee had previously been excessively taxed under the inheritance tax law in force at the time of the death of the original testator, by computing the tax upon the basis of the value of the principal fund, rather than upon the value of the life estate in the donee. The court pointed out that it is not the property that is taxed, but it is the interest taken by the respective beneficiaries, and that the fact that the life tenant was excessively taxed did not operate to prevent an enforcement of the amendatory act of 1897 as against another person, the appointee, whose claim was based upon the exercise of the power, which was distinctive from the transfer under which the person already taxed claimed.

(c) In cases of nonresidents.

See also Re Lovelace and Re Wallop, supra I. b, 2 (a).

In Re Thomas, 39 Misc. 136, 78 N. Y. Supp. 981, the court held that since, in the Vanderbilt and Dows Cases, the constitutionality of the amendatory act of 1897 had been upheld upon the ground that the tax is not upon property, but upon transfers of property made by will or descent, where the right to make or receive such transfers is accorded by the laws of the state, and which right the sovereign power of the state lawfully exercises by imposing the tax,—the interest on an appointee was not taxable under such statute where the will creating the power of appointment was executed by a nonresident, and disposed of property having its situs in the foreign state, until paid over in due course, after the exercise of the power by the donee became effective, the court saying that while it was true that the will exercising the power was that of a resident, its legal effect depended entirely upon the law of the foreign state, and that if its probate in New York was necessary or useful for any purpose, it was only because the law of the foreign state so declared.

And where a nonresident donee exercised a power of appointment over property having its situs in a foreign state, in favor of beneficiaries of the class limited by the will creating the power, executed by a resident at such an early date that the transfer, if effected by it, was not subject to an inheritance or transfer tax, and the will exercising the power was executed in the foreign state, and was probated under the laws thereof, it was held that the property was not subject to taxation under the amendatory act of 1897, the court invoking the doctrine that the tax is upon the privilege of transferring property by will, and that since the privilege of exercising the power was granted by the foreign state, the state of New York could impose no tax upon the transfer so effected. Re Kissel, 65 Misc. 443, 121 N. Y. Supp. 1088.

And declaring in favor of the doctrine that, irrespective of the time when the instrument creating the power was executed, it was the actual transfer effected by the exercise of the power which was to be taxed under the amendment of 1897, the New York court in Re Fearing, 200 N. Y. 340, 93 N. E. 956, held that where a resident testator who died before the enactment of any transfer tax law devised his property in trust for the life of his daughter, and gave her the power to appoint by will the person to whom the trustee should set over the remainder upon her death, and the daughter, a nonresident, exercised the power of appointment by a will made under and by virtue of the laws of her domicile, no tax was enforceable against the property included within the power, notwithstanding a part of it consisted of bonds secured by mortgages of real estate situated in New York. One apparent ground of this decision is that since, by the amendment of 1897, the tax is upon the transfer affected by the appointment, that is, is exacted by the state in return for its indulgence in permitting property to be transferred by will, there is no ground for upholding the tax where the power is exercised by a will whose existence and validity depend upon the laws of another state.

II. Present taxability under donor's will.

A succession tax cannot be assessed at the death of the testator upon the corpus of the estate, when property is devised in trust for a period of twenty years, during which time annuities shall be paid to certain persons named, among whom the estate shall be distributed at the expiration of that period if they are alive at that time, and if they are not alive, among persons whom they shall appoint, and certain persons named by the testator, under a statute authorizing a tax against a person who "shall become beneficially entitled, in possession or expectation, to any property or income thereof," where the tax rate differs according to the relationship of the testator and the person who ultimately becomes entitled to the property. People v. McCormick, 208 Ill. 437, 64 L.R.A. 775, 70 N. E. 350.

Money received under a power given by will to a trustee, to appoint the residuary estate to any of certain persons, was held in Re Stewart, 131 N. Y. 274, 14 L.R.A. 336, 30 N. E. 184, to pass "by will," within the meaning of the New York inheritance tax law of 1885, imposing a tax upon all property which should pass by will or by the intestate law from any person who might die seised or possessed of the same, to all but certain excepted persons, in trust or otherwise, or by reason whereof any but the excepted persons should become beneficially entitled, in possession or expectancy, to any property or the income thereof. The court applied the doctrine that when the donee of a power has the right of selection, the interest appointed vests in the appointee at the time of the appointment, but that his title relates to and is acquired under the instrument creating the power. It was insisted that the legislature had failed to provide any method for valuing or taxing contingent or uncertain interests, not capable of valuation and assessment immediately upon the death of the decedent; but the court held that although the interest was contingent, and therefore not capable of valuation at the testator's death, it could, after it became vested and ascertained by the appointment, be appraised, by virtue of a provision of such inheritance tax law, authorizing the appointment of an appraiser "as often and whenever occasion requires." The decision in this case was adopted in Hoyt v. Hancock, 65 N. J. Eq. 688, 55 Atl. 1004, the court remarking that the statute involved in the latter case was substantially identical with the New York statute.

In Howe v. Howe, 179 Mass. 546, 55 L.R.A. 626, 61 N. E. 225, it was held that an interest in property passes by will within the meaning of an inheritance tax act, although its destination is by the will made subject to the appointment of a third person, it being pointed out that the statute specified as subject to the tax any form of interest in property whatsoever. The question before the court was as to the present taxability of property which was subject to the power of appointment.

No present tax is assessable upon the death of a testator who transferred property to trustees to divide it into equal shares for his children, and to pay the income and so much of the principal of any share as the trustee should deem advisable to each child, and upon the death of any child, to give so much of his share as remained in such manner as he should designate in his will, or if he should make no such designation, then to his issue if any, and if there should be no such issue, then to the survivors or survivor of the testator's children, under the amendatory statute of 1899, providing that when property is transferred in trust or otherwise, and the rights, interests, or estates of the transferees are dependent upon contingencies or conditions whereby they may be created, defeated, etc., a tax shall be imposed upon the transfer at the highest rate which, on the happening of any of the contingencies or conditions, would be possible under the provisions of the act, and that the tax so imposed should be due and payable forthwith out of the property transferred. Re Howell, 34 Misc. 432, 69 N. Y. Supp. 1016.

Upon the theory that under the provision of the amendatory act of 1897, it is the exercise of the power of appointment, and not the creation of that power, which effects the transfer which the statute makes taxable, it was held in Re Howe, 86 App. Div. 286, 83 N. Y. Supp. 825, affirmed without opinion in 176 N. Y. 570, 68 N. E. 1118, that the remainder is not taxable until the time comes for the exercise of the testamentary power of appointment conferred upon the life beneficiary, and by this the court obviously meant until the death of the life beneficiary after having made, or having failed to make, a will exercising the power. It was insisted in this case that the amendment of 1897, relating to powers of appointment, was impliedly repealed by an amendment enacted in 1899 providing that when property is transferred in trust or otherwise, and the rights of the transferees are dependent upon contingencies or conditions whereby they may be wholly or in part created, defeated, etc., a tax shall be imposed upon said transfer at the highest rate which, on the happening of the said contingencies or conditions, would be possible under the provisions of the act, and such tax so imposed shall be due and payable forthwith out of the property transferred. The court denied this contention saying, in effect, that there is nothing in the amendment of 1899 making a general provision in respect of the manner of taxation of contingent and conditional estates, which must necessarily be regarded as repealing a former amendment to the same statute, making specific provision for the taxation for such conditional or contingent estates as shall arise from the creation of a power of appointment. And the court further said that while the donee might be regarded as the original transferee of the property devised in trust for his benefit, it could not fairly be said that his right or estate was dependent upon contingencies or conditions whereby they might be wholly or in part created, defeated, etc.

It was held in Re Field, 36 Misc. 279, 73 N. Y. Supp. 512, that no present tax could be assessed upon the death of the testator upon so much of the property covered by the will as had been subjected to a power of appointment in a donee, the will transferring the property in trust to pay the income to the testator's wife for life, the remainder to his nephew, and a codicil having been made giving the wife power to appoint a certain specified portion of the value of the estate to any descendants of the testator's father in such proportions as she might see fit.

On the other hand, by a surrogate's decision in Re Le Brun, 39 Misc. 516, 80 N. Y.

Supp. 486, decided before the Howe Case, supra, that a present tax was enforceable upon the death of a testator who transferred his property in trust to pay an income to his daughter for life, with power given to her thereafter to dispose by will of a certain percentage of the estate to and among such persons who might be living at her death, and as she should think proper, and the balance of the remainder to and among any of the testator's descendants, notwithstanding such remainders were not ascertainable until after the death of the life beneficiary, and the persons to take it should be disclosed by her will. The court said that in reaching this conclusion, it did not overlook the laws of 1896 as amended by the laws of 1897, and that when the donee of the power should have exercised it, the question might then arise whether the payment of the tax presently to be imposed would or would not relieve the remainderman of the payment of any new tax because of the transfer effected by the exercise of the power, but that it was sufficient for the then present purposes that, within the meaning of the amendatory act of 1899, transfers from the estate of the decedent had been made upon which it was the court's duty to impose a tax.

III. Power of appointment reserved by grantor.

Of course, where a person reserves to himself a power of appointment in a deed by which he transfers property to a trustee to pay the income to the grantor during his life, and after his death, to such persons as he shall by will appoint, or in default of appointment, to his next of kin, etc., although the legal title passes to the trustee, the property and all interest therein really remained in the grantor; and where he by will appointed the persons to whom the trust company should convey after his death, the property passing to the appointees was taxable under the act of 1885 as amended by the act of 1887, providing that any property which shall be transferred by deed, grant, etc., made or intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment after the death of the grantor, shall be subject to a tax. Re Ogsbury, 7 App. Div. 71, 39 N. Y. Supp. 978.

And where one deeds property in trust for the purpose of paying the income to the grantor during her life, and of conveying it after her death to such persons as she shall by will appoint, the property is within the meaning of the collateral inheritance statute imposing a tax upon property passing by deed, grant, sale, or gift made or intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment after the death of the grantor; and the property is taxable thereunder, and the statute is constitutional, and it is immaterial if the deed of trust was executed before the statute went into effect. Croker v. Shaw, 174 Mass. 286, 54 N. E. 549. 33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

IV. Miscellaneous cases.

Dispositions by a testatrix in pursuance of a general power of appointment, by a will in which she also disposed of her personal estate, are legacies, within the meaning of a provision of the will directing her executors "to pay out of my residuary estate any and all transfer or inheritance taxes that may be imposed or become due upon any of the legacies hereinbefore made," and are such as are entitled to have the taxes paid out of her residuary estate. Isham v. New York Asso. 177 N. Y. 218, 69 N. E. 367.

The fact that one who had an absolute title under an unrecorded deed, and who was given a life estate therein with power of testamentary disposition, under the will of the grantor of the deed, ignored his absolute title and submitted to a transfer tax upon his life estate, and thereby precluded his administrator upon his death intestate, from vacating the assessment upon the ground that the unrecorded deed was found among the intestate's effects after his death, does not prevent the intestate's next of kin and heirs at law, who were made residuary legatees and devisees in case the intestate should fail to exercise the power of disposition, from relying upon the deed of the ancestor, rather than upon his will, and therefore from taking the remainder free from the imposition of a transfer or inheritance tax. Re Mather, 90 App. Div. 382, 85 N. Y. Supp. 657, affirmed without opinion in 179 N. Y. 526, 71 N. E. 1134.

Under a statute imposing a tax upon all estates passing from any person who may die seised and possessed thereof, transferred by deed, will, grant, etc., made or intended to take effect in possession after the death of the grantor, deviser, etc., the value at the death of the donee of the power of appointment, who has exercised the power, and not the value at the time of the death of her husband, by whose will the power was created, is to be taken for the purpose of computing the tax. Fisher v. State, 106 Md. 104, 66 Atl. 661.

L. A. W.

MICHIGAN SUPREME COURT.

CLAIRVIEW PARK IMPROVEMENT COMPANY OF GROSSE POINT, Limited, Plff. in Err.,

v.

DETROIT & LAKE ST. CLAIR RAIL-WAY et al.

(164 Mich. 74, 129 N. W. 353.)

Appeal — accepting benefit of judgment — effect.

Compelling surrender of the parcel awarded plaintiff in an action of ejectment and payment of taxed costs, by threat of executing the writ of restitution which had been issued, prevents him from attempting to reverse the judgment on appeal, although he was denied relief as to a large parcel of land upon which he claimed that defendant had wrongfully encroached.

(December 22, 1910.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Wayne County to review a judgment for plaintiff for less than the relief demanded in an action brought to recover possession of certain land. Dismissed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. William M. Mertz, for plaintiff in error:

An equitable interest is of no avail in an ejectment action.

Wood v. Michigan Air Line R. Co. 90 Mich. 339, 51 N. W. 263; Wilson v. Muskegon, G. R. & I. R. Co. 132 Mich. 471, 93 N. W. 1059; Nowlin Lumber Co. v. Wilson, 119 Mich. 410, 78 N. W. 338; Michigan Land & Iron Co. v. Thoney, 89 Mich. 231, 50 N. W. 845; Buell v. Irwin, 24 Mich. 149; Nowlen v. Hall, 128 Mich. 275, 87 N. W. 232.

Messrs. Gray & Gray, for defendants in error:

Plaintiff, having availed itself of so much of the judgment as was in its favor, cannot appeal from so much of it as was against it.

Sterne v. Vert, 108 Ind. 232, 9 N. E. 127; Raborn v. Woods, 33 Ind. App. 171, 70 N. E. 399; Easton v. Lockhart, — N. D. —, 59 N. W. 75; Moore v. Williams, 132 Ill. 594, 24 N. E. 617; Com. v. South, 80 Ky. 582; Garner v. Garner, 38 Ind. 139; Bechtel v. Evans, 10 Idaho, 147, 77 Pac. 212; Chase v. Driver, 34 C. C. A. 668, 92 Fed. 780; Manlove v. State, 153 Ind. 80, 53 N. E. 385; Williams v. Richards, 152 Ind. 528, 53 N. E. 765; Babbitt v. Corby, 13 Kan. 612; Cronkhite v. Evans-Snyder-Buel Co. 6 Kan. App. 173, 51 Pac. 295; Re Raber, 4 N. Y. S. R. 845; Smith v. Coleman, 77 Wis. 343, 46 N. W. 664; Murphy v. Spaulding, 46 N. Y. 556; Bennett v. VanSyckel, 18 N. Y. 481; Knapp v. Brown, 45 N. Y. 208; Laird v. Giffin, 84 Wis. 286, 54 N. W. 584; Portland Constr. Co. v. O'Neil, 24 Or. 54, 32 Pac. 764; Flanders v. Merrimac, 44 Wis. 621; Webster-Glover Lumber & Mfg. Co. v. St. Croix County, 71 Wis. 317, 36 N. W. 864; Corwin v. Shoup, 76 Ill. 246; Holt v. Rees, 46 Ill. 181; Bolen v. Cumby, 53 Ark. 514, 14 S. W. 926; Alexander v. Alexander, 104 N. Y. 643, 10 N. E. 37.

Note. — As to right to accept favorable part of decree, judgment, or order, and appeal from the rest of it, see note to McKain v. Mullen, 29 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1. 33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Stone, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action in ejectment brought to recover possession of two strips of land, one occupied by defendant's tracks and ties, and the other by a wooden supporting wall known as the "bulkhead." Defendant's track runs upon Wier lane a distance of about 800 feet from the so-called boulevard in the rear, to Jefferson avenue in front, and clips the corner off the property just as it turns into and across Jefferson avenue; then continues northerly toward Mt. Clemens. The second strip is substantially 150 feet long and about 20 feet wide along the shore of Lake St. Clair, extending northerly from the end of Wier lane, parallel with Jefferson avenue, between defendant's tracks and the lake. In and upon this parcel defendant has maintained spiles and a wooden supporting wall known as the "bulkhead," and this last-named strip of land is itself referred to in this record as the "bulkhead." The latter was intended to strengthen the support of the track where it turns from Wier lane along the lake front. A blue print in the record shows the general situation.

Upon the trial, only that portion of the property clipped off where the track turns upon Jefferson avenue was, by the verdict of the jury, awarded to the plaintiff. As to the Wier lane proper, the verdict was for the defendant, and it omitted any finding as to the strip of land between the track and the lake known as the "bulkhead." However, the formal verdict and judgment, as entered, show a finding for defendant as to the "bulkhead" also.

The plaintiff tendered a bill of exceptions which it claims was settled and signed April 26, 1910. The printed record does not contain the exact date of settlement.

The plaintiff caused a writ of error to be issued out of this court on June 9, 1910. No supersedeas bond was filed. On June 8, 1910, the plaintiff caused a writ of possession and of execution to be issued out of the circuit court for the enforcement of the judgment in regard to the property awarded to it, and for the payment of costs. This writ was not actually delivered to the sheriff, but was held by the plaintiff's attorney.

As early as April 29, 1910, plaintiff's attorney wrote to defendant's attorneys calling their attention to the judgment, and asking the following question: "Will the defendant move its tracks off of the corner of Wier lane and Jefferson, or will it be necessary for a writ of restitution to issue?" He also requested the payment of the taxed costs. On May 2, 1910, defendant's attorneys replied that they would confer with the defendant, and advise plaintiff's attorney.

As to the subsequent interviews and acts, there is some conflict, as shown by the affidavits on file. It appears, however, that on May 27, 1910, plaintiff's attorney again wrote defendant's attorneys relative to tracks and costs, and counter costs, and concluded as follows: "As to tracks at corner, they are a nuisance and cut in entirely too far. Besides, on a new trial, I think I can show that they are over boundary line of lane on premises proper, all the way down from boulevard. It is bad enough to have them there at all, let alone such encroachment. The company lets the lane grow up with weeds and brush, and so long as they monopolize the lane, pending outcome of suit, they should get off the corner and make sure the tracks are not outside the lane all along."

Again, on June 6, 1910, plaintiff's attorney wrote defendant's attorneys as follows: "I wrote you on April 29th regarding Clairview Park Improv. Co. v. Detroit & L. St. C. R. Co. and received a letter in reply that you would let me know as to inquiry about payment of costs taxed and also removal of tracks. I have heard nothing since, and wrote you over a week ago, to which I have no reply. I gave citations to Mr. Trowbridge over phone showing that D. U. R. were not entitled to costs, and that the costs should be paid as taxed. He seems to have misapprehended regarding the matter. If I am to receive no reply from you definitely on my inquiry, I should at least be obliged for the courtesy of immediate information to that effect."

On June 17, 1910, defendant's attorneys sent a check for the taxed costs to the plaintiff's attorney.

On August 17, 1910, plaintiff's attorney wrote defendant's attorneys as follows: "I am much disappointed at receiving no indication of the D. U. R. or the Detroit & Lake St. Clair Railway's making any move as to tracks at corner of Wier road on Jefferson. Mr. Trowbridge will, of course, know how I have withheld the writ upon the company's promise to move and also to see as to plan of movement. I will have to let the sheriff act in this matter unless the company sees fit to act immediately. I shall not consider that they intend to act unless it is given immediate consideration by them."

The tracks were moved on the corner on the night of September 21, 1910, but it is the claim of the plaintiff that they were not wholly removed from the corner of Wier lane and Jefferson, but that they still remain outside of Wier lane on said corner, and that said tracks still encroach on said corner for which plaintiff had judgment.

On September 30, 1910, defendant's attorneys entered a motion in this court to dismiss the writ of error, and all proceedings thereunder, for the reason, that the plaintiff appellant has exercised its rights under the judgment below in such a way as to estop it from questioning the same, or further to seek its reversal. This motion was held until the hearing of the case, and should first be disposed of. Counsel have at some length presented arguments and authorities upon the question whether the same rule should apply in an action of ejectment, where there has been a partial recovery, as where the appealing party has obtained satisfaction of judgment in other actions. Counsel seem to agree, however, that, if the state of the case is such that the contention cannot be otherwise than speculative, and no rights of the parties can be changed in point of law, it is not incumbent on this court to formulate an opinion, where the plaintiff could have no legal interest in the result.

The plaintiff contends that the judgment is not in accord with its just rights, and that its recovery was for a small part only of the premises involved, and that almost the whole of Wier lane in front of the boulevard, and the "bulkhead," remain in dispute, and that it seeks judgment for the entire property described in the declaration; and it claims that it was the understanding between the parties and their counsel that what was done by way of payment of costs, and getting possession of the small part recovered by the judgment, was to be without prejudice to its rights upon appeal. It also claims that the writ of possession was not executed, that it was issued at the suggestion of defendant's counsel, and that a copy of the writ was given to them by arrangement; and finally it is urged that the entire premises recovered have not been surrendered or vacated.

It does appear that while the plaintiff was prosecuting a writ of error for the purpose of reviewing this judgment, it enforced the judgment on the parts thereof which passed in its favor, namely, as to the corner, or a part thereof, and as to costs. It also clearly appears that this was brought about by its repeated statements that if the track was not moved and the taxed costs paid, the same would be enforced by the writ then in possession of its attorney. The motion to dismiss the writ of error is based upon the proposition that a party cannot, while availing himself of the judgment so far as it passed in his favor, seek its reversal. Either party to a judgment in ejectment may of right demand a statutory new trial. There is here but one judgment. If it were to be reversed at all, it must be reversed in its entirety. If the judgment should be reversed, it would follow that it would be only under an invalid judgment that the defendant had been compelled to move its tracks.

It should be borne in mind that no part of the plaintiff's claim was admitted by the defendant, but the entire claim was denied and contested. It is an established rule of procedure that a party to an action cannot receive a benefit under a judgment, and then appeal from it, when the effect of his appeal may be to annul the judgment, unless his right to the benefit is absolute, and cannot possibly be affected by a reversal of the judgment. Easton v. Lockhart, — N. D. —, 89 N. W. 75. The earlier case of Tyler v. Shea, 4 N. D. 377, 50 Am. St. Rep. 680, 61 N. W. 488, is referred to by Chief Justice Wallin in the above case.

As Tyler v. Shea is cited by plaintiff's attorney, the following excerpt therefrom is quoted: After stating the rule as above, and citing many authorities in support thereof, the court says: "We must be careful not to ignore an important qualification of the general doctrine. Where the reversal of the judgment cannot possibly affect the appellant's right to the benefit, he has secured under the judgment, then an appeal may be taken, and will be sustained, despite the fact that the appellant has sought and secured such benefit. To illustrate this doctrine, we may instance the case of an action to recover $1,000, in which the only defense is a counterclaim for $500. It is obvious that $500 of plaintiff's claim is admitted. If the defendant succeeds in establishing his counterclaim, thus reducing plaintiff's recovery to $500, the plaintiff may collect the $500 awarded to him by the judgment, and still appeal from such judgment to secure a reversal, to the end that he may defeat the counterclaim and recover judgment for his entire demand on a new trial. The $500 he is entitled to absolutely. The reversal of the judgment and the second trial of the case cannot impair his right to it. Accepting this sum is therefore not inconsistent with his attempt to reverse the judgment, that he may on a new trial recover more. He can never recover less. It is the possibility that his appeal may lead to a result showing that he was not entitled to what he has received under the judgment appealed from, that defeats his right to appeal. Where there is no such possibility, the right to appeal is unimpaired by the acceptance of benefits under the judgment appealed from. The following decisions enforce this doctrine: Reynes v. Dumont, 130 U. S. 354-394, 32 L. ed. 934-945, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 486; Embry v. Palmer, 107 U. S. 3, 27 L. ed. 346, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 25; Higbie v. Westlake, 14 N. Y. 281; Mellen v. Mellen, 137 N. Y. 606, 33 N. E. 545; Cocks v. Haviland, 55 Hun, 605, 7 N. Y. Supp. 870; Portland Constr. Co. v. O'Neil, 24 Or. 54, 32 Pac. 764; Morris v. Garland, 78 Va. 215; Upton Mfg. Co. v. Huiske, 69 Iowa, 557, 29 N. W. 621; Dudman v. Earl, 49 Iowa, 37. The case of United States v. Dashiell, 3 Wall. 688, 18 L. ed. 268, belongs to this class. The reasoning of the opinion delivered in denying the motion to dismiss is unsatisfactory in its statement of the grounds on which the decision rests, but, when we turn to the opinion of the court on the merits (United States v. Dashiell, 4 Wall. 182, 18 L. ed. 319), we discover that the defendant did not dispute his liability for the amount for which judgment was rendered against him, but only with respect to the balance of the claim; his defense as to such balance being that the money was stolen from him, and that therefore he was not accountable for it to the government, whose money it was in his custody as paymaster in the Army of the United States. The judgment was rendered for this amount not in dispute, and a portion of it was collected before the writ of error was sued out. The motion to dismiss was properly denied, because the reversal of the case could not affect plaintiff's right to what he had collected. Defendant conceded that so much was due. Again, cases will arise —they have arisen—in which the appellant has the right to ask for a more favorable judgment in the appellate court without having the case sent back for a new trial, on which, of course, the whole matter would be open again for investigation, which might result in a judgment not so favorable to plaintiff, or even one that would be adverse to him. In the class of cases in which a new trial of the whole case may result from the appeal, the element does not exist that exists in the one we have already alluded to. No portion of plaintiffs claim is admitted. Everything is in controversy. Under such a state of the pleadings, it is obvious that a reversal of the judgment and a new trial may result in a decision showing that the plaintiff was not entitled to what the former judgment gave him. In such a case the plaintiff cannot accept what that judgment gives him, and then by appeal pursue a course which may overthrow the right of which he has availed himself. But if it is possible for him to obtain a more favorable judgment in the appellate court, without the risk of a less favorable judgment from a new trial of the whole case there or in the lower court, then the acceptance of what the judgment gives him is not inconsistent with an appeal for the sole purpose of securing, without retrial of the whole case, a decision more advantageous to himself. There are several cases in which this doctrine has been enforced, and others in which it has been recognized. Monnet v. Merz, 28 Jones & S. 256, 17 N. Y. Supp. 380, affirmed in 131 N. Y. 646, 30 N. E. 866; Clowes v. Dickenson, 8 Cow. 328, as explained in Knapp v. Brown, 45 N. Y. 208; Tarleton v. Goldthwaite, 23 Ala. 346, 58 Am. Dec. 296; Inverarity v. Stowell, 10 Or. 261."

The case of Raborn v. Woods, 33 Ind. App. 171, 70 N. E. 399, is in point. It was ejectment for 80 acres of land. The judgment was in favor of the plaintiff for the east one half of the 80, and in favor of the defendants for the west one half. The plaintiff and appellant took possession of the 40 acres awarded to him, and exercised all acts of ownership over the same. The court said: "It appears in this case that appellant has elected to receive the benefit of what he is alleging is an erroneous judgment and decree of the court. He has taken possession of the land awarded to him by the judgment, and is receiving the rents and profits therefrom, and is here seeking a reversal of the decree as to the other part of the land, which, by the judgment of the court, was given to appellees. This he cannot do. A reversal of the judgment under the assignment of error could only result in a new trial of the whole case. 33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

The parties to the action could not be placed in the same position that they occupied at the time the action was commenced, because it is alleged, and is not denied, that appellant accepted the benefit of the judgment and decree, and is in possession of a part of the real estate. . . . We think the case falls fully within the rule that a party cannot accept any benefit of an adjudication, and afterward allege it to be erroneous." See also Sterne v. Vert, 108 Ind. 232, 9 N. E. 127; Moore v. Williams, 132 Ill. 594, 24 N. E. 617; Smith v. Coleman, 77 Wis. 343, 46 N. W. 664; Laird v. Giffin, 84 Wis. 286, 54 N. W. 584; Rariden v. Rariden, 33 Ind. App. 284, 104 Am. St. Rep. 252, 70 N. E. 398; Chase v. Driver, 34 C. C. A. 668, 92 Fed. 780. Many more cases might be cited to the same effect. Counsel for the plaintiff seeks to distinguish some of these cases from the instant case by reason of the statute, but we are unable to distinguish them.

In Talbot v. Mason, 60 C. C. A. 145, 125 Fed. 101, it was held that a claimant who, on the entry of an order denying his petition for an allowance from a fund in court, on the ground that he had no legal or equitable claim thereon, accepted an offer made in open court by counsel for opposing interests to consent to an allowance of a smaller sum, which allowance was accordingly made, based expressly on the consent, and who accepted payment thereunder, was thereby equitably estopped to prosecute an appeal from the order disallowing his claim. We might cite many cases holding that one who accepts the benefits of a decree or judgment is thereby estopped from reviewing it, or from escaping from its burdens.

It will be noted that this writ of error seeks a reversal of the entire judgment. Should the case be reversed, the judgment below would no longer exist for any purpose.

While there is some disagreement as to the conduct of the plaintiff in seeking the benefits of its judgment, the essential facts are not disputed, that the plaintiff sought the benefit of its judgment by asserting its right under the writ of possession and execution, and is thereby, we think, precluded from prosecuting its appeal.

It is equally undisputed that the defendant at first declined to submit to the demands of the plaintiff, and it was only when threatened with service of process, that the tracks were moved. The motion to dismiss the writ of error was made within ten days after the tracks were moved. We do not think that defendant was guilty of any laches here. Nor do we find that defendant by its conduct misled the plaintiff. The plaintiff from the first persisted in its course. The parties were adversaries in a lawsuit, and dealt with each other at arm's length. At most, the defendant stood upon its rights.

We think that the motion to dismiss the writ of error should be granted. Motion granted.

Petition for rehearing denied.

GEORGIA SUPREME COURT.

J. C. MCAULIFFE, Plff. in Err.,
v.

W. J. VAUGHAN.

(135 Ga. 852, 70 S. E. 322.)

Sunday — contract to sell newspaper plant — validity.

1. Where a person who had been conducting and publishing a newspaper made a contract to sell the property, business, and good will to another person, who was in the employment of the publisher of a different newspaper, such a contract was not freed from the invalidity arising from having been made on Sunday, on the ground that selling and buying newspapers was not the ordinary business of either party.

Same — ratification.

2. Although a contract for the sale of a newspaper outfit and the good will of the business may have been invalid, because it was made on Sunday, yet where possession of the property had been delivered on a week day, before the signing of the contract, to one who, in the original negotiations, was expected to be a copurchaser, but who did not sign the written contract finally executed, though forming a partnership with the purchaser, and where, after the contract was signed, the purchaser retained possession, and (having paid one instalment of the purchase money when the contract was made) paid the balance in instalments on other days than Sunday, and the seller received them without objection because of the time when the contract was signed, the parties thereby ratified such contract, and its terms were enforceable as if it had not been made on Sunday.

Headnotes by LUMPKIN, J.

Note. — On the general subject of the validity of a contract partially made on Sunday, and perfected on a secular day, see note to Jacobson v. Bentzler, 4 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1151. As to delivery on week day, pursuant to a contract made on Sunday, see note to King v. Graef, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) 86.

As to validity of agreement by employee 33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Contract — sale of newspaper plant — restraint of trade.

3. Where one who had been engaged in publishing a newspaper in a certain county sold the property connected therewith and the business and good will to another, and agreed not to conduct, either directly or indirectly, any other newspaper in that county without the consent of the other party, his heirs and assigns, such a contract was not void, as being in general restraint of trade, or unreasonable in its terms.

Same — consideration.

4. In such a contract, the amount paid by the purchaser furnished a consideration, not only for the transfer of the physical property, but also for the business and good will, and for the agreement of the seller not to conduct another newspaper in the same county.

Same — default in instalments — breach.

5. Although the instalments of purchase money may not have been paid on the exact days when they were due under the contract, yet, where the seller received them afterward, he could not claim that this was such a breach on the part of the buyer as authorized him to disregard the agreement not to conduct another newspaper in that county.

Same — sale as agent — effect.

6. The seller having sold the property and made the contract under seal in his own name, it furnished no defense to a proceeding to enjoin him from conducting another newspaper in the same county, in violation of the contract, to set up that the property which he sold actually belonged to his wife, and that he had no pecuniary interest in it.

(February 18, 1911.)

ERROR to the Superior Court for Baldwin County to review a judgment in defendant's favor in an action brought to enjoin him from entering into or conducting a newspaper business in a certain city and county. Reversed.

Statement by Lumpkin, J.:

W. J. Vaughan and J. C. McAuliffe entered into the following written contract:

State of Georgia, Baldwin County.

This indenture, made this the 7th day of March, in the year of 1908, between W. J.

not to engage in competing business, as affected by its scope in time and territorial extent. see note to Taylor Iron & Steel Co. v. Nichols, 24 L.R.A. (N.S.) 933. As to validity of agreement in restraint of trade ancillary to the sale of a business or profession, as affected by its territorial scope, see note to Fleckenstein Bros. Co. v. Fleckenstein, 24 L.R.A. (N.S.) 913.

Vaughan, of said state and county, as party of the first part, and J. C. McAuliffe, of Richmond county, said state, as party of the second part. Witnesseth: That the said party of the first part agrees to sell to the said party of the second part the following described property, in consideration of the sum of five thousand ($5,000) dollars, payable as follows: One thousand ($1,000) dollars cash, the receipt of which is hereby acknowledged, at and before the sealing and delivery of these presents; one thousand ($1,000) dollars on the 14th day of March; one thousand ($1,000) dollars on the 21st day of March, 1908; two thousand ($2,000) dollars on the 1st day of May, 1908; each note bearing interest from date at 8 per cent per annum.

Upon the payment of the above-mentioned notes, according to their tenors and effect, the party of the first part agrees to sell to the party of the second part, his heirs and assigns, the newspaper known as the "Milledgeville News Publishing Company," together with all the equipment, the title of which is warranted, consisting of one Cincinnati cylinder press and equipment, one Price & Chandler job press and equipment, one Price & Chandler paper cutter, one typewriting machine and equipment, one roller top desk, and all other furniture and equipment and property of any nature or value connected with said newspaper and office, including the good will and established business of said newspaper and job office, except stationery.

The party of the first part agrees not to conduct, either directly or indirectly, any other newspaper in the city of Milledgeville, or in the county of Baldwin, without the written consent of the said party of the second part, his heirs and assigns.

In witness whereof, the party of the first part and the party of the second part hereof have hereunto set their hands and seals, in duplicate.

This was signed and sealed by the two parties, and was attested by three witnesses, one of whom was a notary public. On August 10, 1910, McAuliffe filed an equitable petition against Vaughan, seeking to enjoin him from entering into or conducting a newspaper business in the city of Milledgeville, and Baldwin county, which it was alleged he was preparing to do, and for that purpose was organizing a company. The defendant contended that the contract was invalid because, while dated March 7th, it was in fact executed on Sunday, March 8th; that it was also invalid because it was in restraint of trade; that the $5,000 was paid for the articles of personal property enumerated in the contract, and there 33 L.R.A. (N.S.) was no consideration for the added agreement not to conduct another newspaper in Baldwin county; that the plaintiff did not pay the amounts due promptly at the times when he agreed to pay them, and this amounted to a breach on his part (it was not denied that the entire amount had been paid); and that the property was in fact that of his wife, and that he had no financial interest in the sale. It is recited in the bill of exceptions that the presiding judge held that the contract was null and void, because executed on the Sabbath day, and because it was in restraint of trade. He denied the injunction, and the plaintiff excepted.

Messrs. Sanford & Sanford and Hines & Vinson, for plaintiff in error:

Defendant's contention that the contract did not contain a valid agreement on his part not to conduct a newspaper in the city of Milledgeville, for the reason that there was no consideration for this clause of the contract, and that the $5,000 was for personal property described in the contract, is not maintainable.

Jefferson v. Market, 112 Ga. 505, 37 S. E. 758; Kramer v. Old, 119 N. C. 1, 34 L.R.A. 389, 56 Am. St. Rep. 654, 25 S. E. 813; Horner v. Graves, 7 Bing. 743, 5 Moore & P. 768, 9 L. J. C. P. 192.

Admitting that said contract was made on Sunday, this does not render the contract null and void.

Drury v. Defontaine, 1 Taunt. 131; Bloxsome v. Williams, 3 Barn. & C. 233; 5 Dowl. & R. 82, 1 Car. & P. 294, 2 L. J. K. B. 224, 27 Revised Rep. 337; Sandiman v. Breach, 7 Barn. & C. 96, 9 Dowl. & R. 796, 5 L. J. K. B. 298, 31 Revised Rep. 169; Rex v. Whitnash, 7 Barn. & C. 596; 1 Moody & R. 452, 6 L. J. Mag. Cas. 26; Sanders v. Johnson, 29 Ga. 526; Dennis v. Sharman, 31 Ga. 607; Hill v. Wilker, 41 Ga. 449, 5 Am. Rep. 540; Meriwether v. Smith, 44 Ga. 541; Morgan v. Bailey, 59 Ga. 683; Hennington v. State, 90 Ga. 399, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 413, 17 S. E. 1009; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Hutcheson, 91 Ga. 252, 18 S. E. 297; Keck v. Gainesville, 98 Ga. 423, 25 S. E. 559; Hayden v. Mitchell, 103 Ga. 440, 30 S. E. 287; Dorrough v. Equitable Mortg. Co. 118 Ga. 178, 45 S. E. 22; Adams v. Candler, 114 Ga. 152, 39 S. E. 893; Ellis v. State, 5 Ga. App. 615, 63 S. E. 588; Southern R. Co. v. Wallis, 133 Ga. 555, 30 L.R.A. (N.S.) 401, 66 S. E. 370, 18 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 67; Hayden v. Mitchell, 103 Ga. 448, 30 S. E. 287.

If the contract was made on Sunday, in the ordinary calling or business, it can be ratified.

Calhoun v. Phillips, 87 Ga. 482, 13 S. E.

593; Meriwether v. Smith, 44 Ga. 543; Catlett v. Methodist Episcopal Church, 62 Ind. 365, 30 Am. Rep. 197; Adams v. Gay, 19 Vt. 358; Banks v. Werts, 13 Ind. 203; Sumner v. Jones, 24 Vt. 317; Russell v. Murdock, 79 Iowa, 101, 18 Am. St. Rep. 348, 44 N. W. 237; Harrison v. Colton, 31 Iowa, 16; Sayles v. Wellman, 10 R. I. 468; Tucker v. West, 29 Ark. 386; Gwinn v. Simes, 61 Mo. 335; Campbell v. Young, 9 Bush, 240; Whitmire v. Montgomery, 165 Pa. 253, 30 Atl. 1016; Clark, Contr. 398, note 46.

Provisions in restraint of trade, unlimited in point of time, do not render the contract void.

Rakestraw v. Lanier, 104 Ga. 189, 69 Am. St. Rep. 154, 30 S. E. 735; Holmes v. Martin, 10 Ga. 503; Jenkins v. Temples, 39 Ga. 655, 99 Am. Dec. 482; Spier v. Lambdin, 45 Ga. 319; Goodman v. Henderson, 58 Ga. 567; Brewer v. Lamar, 69 Ga. 656, 47 Am. Rep. 766; Newman v. Wolfson, 69 Ga. 764; Swanson v. Kirby, 98 Ga. 586, 26 S. E. 71; State v. Central R. Co. 109 Ga. 725, 48 L.R.A. 351, 35 S. E. 37; Bullock v. Johnson, 110 Ga. 486, 35 S. E. 703; Grundy v. Edwards, 7 J. J. Marsh, 368, 23 Am. Dec. 409; Smith's Appeal, 113 Pa. 579, 6 Atl. 251; Cobbs v. Niblo, 6 Ill. App. 60; Kramer v. Old, 119 N. C. 1, 34 L.R.A. 389, 56 Am. St. Rep. 650, 25 S. E. 813; Hitchcock v. Coker, 6 Ad. & El. 447, 1 Nev. & P. 796, 2 Harr. & W. 464, 6 L. J. Exch. N. S. 266; Bunn v. Guy, 4 East, 180, 1 Smith, 1, 7 Revised Rep. 560; Chesman v. Nainby, 2 Strange, 739; Wickens v. Evans, 3 Younge & J. 318; Story, Sales, 1st ed. § 493; Cook v. Johnson, 47 Conn. 175, 36 Am. Rep. 66; Bowser v. Bliss, 7 Blackf. 344, 43 Am. Dec. 95; 2 Addison, Contr. Abbott's ed. 1153; Wharton, Contr. § 432; Metcalf, Contr. 232; Benjamin, Sales, § 525; Pemberton v. Vaughan, 10 Q. B. 87, 16 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 161, 11 Jur. 411.

Messrs. Allen & Pottle and W. T. Davidson for defendant in error.

Lumpkin, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The denial of the interlocutory injunction was evidently based not upon conflicting evidence in regard to controlling issues, but on the idea that the contract was void. The Code of this state does not contain any direct statement that contracts made on Sunday are void. That result is generally reached through a consideration of two sections. Section 422 of the Penal Code of 1895 (Penal Code 1910, § 416) declares that "any person who shall pursue his business, or the work of his ordinary calling, on the Lord's Day, works of necessity or charity only excepted, shall, be 33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

guilty of a misdemeanor." By § 3608 of the Civil Code of 1895 (Civil Code 1910, § 4253) it is declared that "a contract which is against the public policy of the law cannot be enforced." It has been held heretofore that where one, in pursuing his business or the work of his ordinary calling on the Sabbath, makes a contract, it is invalid, and cannot be enforced.

1. It was contended that, inasmuch as Vaughan's business was carrying on a newspaper, or, as he expressed it in his answer, that of a "printer," and that of McAuliffe was employment connected with another newspaper, the sale and purchase of a newspaper and outfit was not within the ordinary business or calling of either of them. This contention is unsound. In Morgan v. Bailey, 59 Ga. 683, "where a farmer, a part of whose ordinary business was the purchase and cultivation of land, bought a tract of land on Saturday, and agreed to consummate the trade on the next day by signing the necessary papers, and did sign a note for the purchase money on that day (Sunday)," it was held "that the contract was illegal, and, in a suit on the note, the courts would not assist in its collection." Thus buying land in bulk for farming purposes was considered to be so connected with the business of farming that such a contract made on Sunday was illegal. It would be a very narrow verbal construction to hold that, if one merchant contracted to buy out the stock of another on Sunday, for the purpose of continuing the mercantile business, he could say that the contract was not invalid because his business or ordinary calling was to sell at retail, and not to buy entire stocks of goods; or to rule that a manufacturer might proceed on Sunday with the erection of a building to be used in connection with his business, on the ground that manufacturing, not building, was his ordinary business. We think that the contract before us does not escape the test of having been executed on Sunday on the ground that the ordinary business of these two men was not buying and selling newspapers.

2. Assuming that the contract was made on Sunday, the performance of it was carried on between the parties on other days. On a week day prior to the execution of the written contract now sought to be enforced, possession of the property had been delivered to one who, under the original negotiations, was to have joined with McAuliffe in making the purchase, but who did not sign the written contract finally executed (with somewhat different terms), though there was evidence that he formed a partnership with the purchaser. After the contract was signed, McAuliffe proceeded to use the property and carry on the newspaper, and apparently paid Vaughan all the money, except one payment, on other days than Sunday. The latter received the money without any objection or contention that the contract was illegal, because executed on the Sabbath. The question is whether, under such circumstances, after the payment of the amount stipulated in the contract, and while the purchaser was in possession of the property and conducting the business, he could enforce the provision of the contract that Vaughan should not conduct another newspaper in Baldwin county, or whether, though one retained the property and the other received on subsequent week days and retained the money, that provision of the contract was not enforceable. There are two lines of authority on the subject of ratification of contracts made on Sunday. One class of decisions holds that, if the contract was void because made on Sunday in connection with the business of one of the parties, it could not become valid by a subsequent ratification. The other class holds that the illegality which infects such a contract is not general in its character; that it does not consist in any wrong or impropriety in the contract itself, but simply in the time of its making; that if it were a contract which would be valid if made on a week day, and both parties recognize it on such a day, after it is made, and proceed to carry it out, they thereby ratify the contract, and purge it of the illegality arising from the time when it was entered into. See Adams v. Gay, 19 Vt. 358; Sumner v. Jones, 24 Vt. 317; Jacobson v. Bentzler, 7 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 634, and note 127 Wis. 566, 4 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1151, 115 Am. St. Rep. 1052, 107 N. W. 7. Though there may be some preponderance of authority against ratification, this court has taken its stand with those courts which hold in favor of the doctrine; at least, where the parties on a subsequent day proceed to carry out a contract made on Sunday. Meriwether v. Smith, 44 Ga. 541; Bryant v. Booze, 55 Ga. 438 (6), 448. Following these decisions, the uncontradicted evidence showed a ratification, and the parties were bound as if the contract had been signed on a day other than Sunday.

3. It was contended that the contract was invalid because it was in restraint of trade. The Code declares that contracts "in general in restraint of trade" cannot be enforced. Civil Code 1895, § 3668; Civil Code 1910, § 4253. This section was a codification of the antecedent law, not a new enactment. As early as 1851 it was held in the case of Holmes v. Martin, 10 33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Ga. 503, that "a contract in general restraint of trade is void; but, if in partial restraint of trade only, it may be supported, provided the restraint be reasonable and the contract founded on a consideration." In that case an owner of a town lot sold it to another, with a restriction contained in the deed that the house and lot should not be used for tavern purposes. In Ellis v. Jones, 56 Ga. 504, it was recognized that, where a merchant sold his stock of goods and good will, and agreed not to do business in the town where the stock was located, this was an enforceable contract. In Goodman v. Henderson, 58 Ga. 567, a contract to retire forever from the business of purchasing in the Savannah market green hides, sheepskins and hides, and skins dried by butchers, and that the parties so agreeing would use their influence in favor of the other party to the contract, to whom they transferred their good will, for a valuable consideration, was held not an illegal contract as being in general restraint of trade. A distinction was drawn between a contract unlimited as to territory, and therefore territorially general, and one unlimited as to time. See also Brewer v. Lamar, 69 Ga. 656, 47 Am. Rep. 766; Bullock v. Johnson, 110 Ga. 486, 492, 35 S. E. 703; Seay v. Spratling, 133 Ga. 27, 29, 65 S. E. 137. In Rakestraw v. Lanier, 104 Ga. 188, 69 Am. St. Rep. 154, 30 S. E. 735, two physicians formed a partnership, and it was agreed by one of them that, in the event the firm should at any time be dissolved, he would not locate or engage in the practice of medicine, surgery, or obstetrics in the town where the two partners resided, or at any place within a radius of 15 miles of the drug store of the other partner, without first obtaining the written consent of such other. It was held that "a contract, in restraint of trade, unlimited as to time, and the enforcement of which literally as made would in certain contingencies likely to arise, and which must necessarily have been in contemplation of the parties, result in needlessly oppressing one of them without affording any corresponding benefit or protection to the other, is unreasonable and should not be enforced." In the opinion a distinction was drawn between cases in which property and the good will of a business were sold, and those in which a covenant was made between professional men, where no property or property rights were conveyed in the contract which imposed the restriction. It was held that the contract there involved was in partial restraint of trade, but that its terms were unreasonable. In the case now under consideration there was a sale of property, an established business, and the good will connected with it. The vendor agreed not to enter into the same character of business in the county where the newspaper sold was published, although there was no limitation on the time of such restriction. Under the decisions cited, this contract was not invalid as being in general restraint of trade, or unreasonable.

4-6. The judge of the superior court apparently rested his refusal to grant an injunction on the ground that the contract was invalid, because made on Sunday and in general restraint of trade. As the judgment will be reversed, we may state that the other contentions of the defendant were entirely without merit. The sale of the newspaper property and good will, and the agreement not to conduct another newspaper in the same county, were parts of one contract, and were covered by the consideration thereof. Wellmaker v. Wheatley, 123 Ga. 201 (2), 203, 51 S. E. 436. Although the purchaser may not have paid the agreed amounts promptly at the time fixed by the contract, yet the vendor could not accept them later, put the money in his pocket, break the obligation imposed on him by the contract, and set up by way of defense that the payments were slow. Vaughan contracted in his own name, under seal. When an injunction was sought against him to prevent his violating his contract not to conduct another newspaper in Baldwin county, it furnished no defense to him to say that the property which he sold was really the property of his wife. Judgment reversed.

All the Justices concur.

Petition for rehearing denied February 27, 1911.

ILLINOIS SUPREME COURT.

PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF ILLINOIS
EX REL. JOHN E. W. WAYMAN, Appt.,

v.

LEROY T. STEWARD et al.

(249 Ill. 311, 94 N. E. 511.)

Policemen — physical examination — unconstitutional search.

The constitutional provision against unreasonable searches and seizures does not extend to the protection of a policeman against a physical examination to ascertain his continued fitness for his position.

(February 25, 1911.)

APPPEAL by relator from an order of the Circuit Court for Cook County overruling 33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

ing a demurrer to a plea to an information in the nature of a quo warranto filed to require defendants to answer by what warrant they claimed the right and privilege of compelling policemen to submit to a physical examination. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. A. D. Gash for appellant.

Messrs. Edward J. Brundage and Clyde L. Day, for appellees:

The general superintendent of police of Chicago has power to order a member of the police force to submit to a physical examination by physicians detailed by such superintendent for that purpose; and such an order does not contravene "the right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures."

Boyd v. United States, 116 U. S. 616, 29 L. ed. 746, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 524; 9 Enc. Ev. pp. 791, 793; People ex rel. Apfel v. Casey, 66 App. Div. 211, 72 N. Y. Supp. 945; People ex rel. Metcalf v. McAdoo, 109 App. Div. 896, 96 N. Y. Supp. 868; People ex rel. Price v. Bingham, 125 App. Div. 723, 110 N. Y. Supp. 136.

Refusal to obey the reasonable order of the general superintendent of police, or physical disability, or physical incapacity to perform police duty, constitute causes for discharge of policemen in the classified service within the meaning of the civil service act.

Joyce v. Chicago, 216 Ill. 466, 75 N. E.

Note. — Right to compel public employee to submit to physical examination to determine fitness.

This question seems to have been before the courts in but one other case. In People ex rel. Mosher v. Roosa, 43 App. Div. 611, 60 N. Y. Supp. 244, there was an alternative writ of mandamus to determine the relator's right to the office of chief of police or policeman in a village. The return averred that the relator was lame and otherwise physically disabled, and thereby incapacitated to perform the duties of chief of police. In the affidavit which was made the basis for granting the order from which the appeal was taken, no oral examination was sought, but simply a physical examination of the person of the relator; nor was it therein stated that the defendants were not informed of his physical condition, or that they were unable to prove his physical incapacity by other available evidence. The court said that it was clear that no case was made which authorized the order applied for, even though authority in law existed for having such an examination, but there was no authority in law for having the examination of the person of the party in such an action.

W. A. S.

184; 28 Cyc. Law & Proc. pp. 509, 510; Chicago v. Bullis, 124 Ill. App. 15; Rockford v. Compton, 115 Ill. App. 406; Heaney v. Chicago, 117 Ill. App. 405; Chicago v. Gillen, 124 Ill. App. 210; Fitzsimmons v. O'Neill, 214 Ill. 494, 73 N. E. 797.

Cartwright, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

By leave of court granted in pursuance of an affidavit of Jeremiah Cronin and others, who were police patrolmen of the city of Chicago, an information in the nature of quo warranto was filed in the circuit court of Cook county in the name of the people, on the relation of the state's attorney, against the city of Chicago and the superintendent of police, requiring the defendants to answer by what warrant they claimed to hold and execute the right and privilege of compelling police patrolmen to submit to a physical and medical examination by a board of physicians, and expending moneys of the city for that purpose. The defendants filed a plea, which was demurred to by the relator; and, the demurrer being overruled, the relator elected to stand by it, and there was judgment for the defendants. An appeal to this court was allowed, on the ground that a constitutional question was involved in the decision of the case.

The act to provide for the incorporation of cities and villages, under which the city is organized, authorizes the city council to regulate the police of the city, to pass and enforce all necessary police ordinances, and to prescribe the duties and powers of a superintendent of police, policeman, and watchmen. The following facts are alleged in the plea, and admitted by the demurrer:

On March 20, 1905, the city council passed an ordinance establishing the department of police, embracing a superintendent of police, patrolmen and other employees, and creating the office of superintendent of police. The ordinance provided that the superintendent should have the management and control of all matters relating to the department, its officers, and members; that all members of the department should be subject to such rules and regulations as should be prescribed, from time to time, by the superintendent; that he should hear and determine all cases not under the jurisdiction of any trial board, for the violation of any rule, regulation, or other breach of discipline; and that the superintendent should be the head of the police department, with full power and authority over the same, subject to the laws of the state and the rules of the civil service commission. The civil service act (Hurd's Rev. Stat. 1909, chap. 24a) was adopted 33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

by the city, and the civil service commission adopted certain rules, one of which provides that the head of the department may file charges against any officer, which shall be investigated by the commission or some board appointed by it, and that notice shall be served upon the officer, and he shall be given an opportunity to be heard in his own defense. It is the duty of the superintendent of police to enforce strict discipline, and to ascertain, by physical and medical examination conducted under his direction, from time to time, whether active patrolmen are able to perform the duties required of them, to the end that he may make assignments of patrolmen to such duties as they shall be physically able to perform, and that, if any are permanently or totally incapacitated, he may prefer charges of physical incapacity against them before the civil service commission, in order that an investigation may be made, as required by law. An appropriation was duly made for the expense of such examination.

The information charged that the police patrolmen named therein, and who made the affidavit upon which leave to file the information was granted, were appointed under the provisions of the civil service act. The power of the civil service commission to require a physical and medical examination of an applicant for a position on the police force is not denied, and counsel for the relator says that patrolmen must necessarily submit to such examination; but he contends that after such examination there is no power granted by the statute for a subsequent examination. It is also admitted that the civil service commission has power, under § 12 of the civil service act, to try a patrolman upon a charge duly presented alleging that he has become incapacitated or unable to do the work prescribed for him; but it is contended that there is no power in the superintendent of police to require a physical and medical examination for the purpose of securing evidence of the incapacity or inability of the officer to perform his duties, which may afterwards be made the subject of such a charge. The ground of that claim is that an examination which requires a patrolman to remove his clothing is an invasion of his constitutional right, secured by § 6 of article 2 of the Constitution, which provides: "The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated." The substance of the proposition of counsel is that, while one who has become physically unable to perform the duties of a patrolman may properly be dismissed from the service by the civil service commission, on a charge of that nature, the Constitution prohibits the superintendent of police from ascertaining by the only practicable and available means, whether the condition exists.

The immunity of the citizen guaranteed by the Constitution is against unreasonable searches, and the courts have never looked upon a physical examination to determine the fitness of a person for a particular service as a search, within the meaning of the constitutional provision. The history and purpose of the provision, and its close relation to the other provision of the same article, that no person shall be compelled in any criminal case to give evidence against himself, were reviewed at considerable length by the Supreme Court of the United States in Boyd v. United States, 116 U. S. 616, 29 L. ed. 746, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 524, where extensive quotations were made from the opinion of Lord Camden in Entick v. Carrington, 19 How. St. Tr. 1029. There is not in that case, or any other of which we have knowledge, any rule or principle by which the constitutional provision can be applied to the situation here. The physical examination under the direction of the superintendent of police, which will enable him to exercise his powers and discharge his duties, is not different in any respect from an examination for military service, or admission to the military or naval school of the government, or any other examination conducted for the purpose of ascertaining the qualifications of a person to perform some particular duty or fill some particular position. The case of a policeman is like that of a soldier, where physical ability is a necessary and material part of an examination; and this is practically conceded by counsel in his admission that such examination may be made by the civil service commission in passing upon the qualifications of applicants. If such an examination is one that is prohibited by the Constitution as unreasonable, it would be no less unreasonable when conducted by the civil service commission than when required by the superintendent of police. The Constitution does not secure to any person the right to be a policeman, and if he desires to be one he must submit to the orders and regulations under which he is admitted to the service. The examination is not for the purpose of obtaining evidence to be used against the patrolman in a criminal prosecution, and it is not necessarily for the purpose of securing evidence upon which to base a charge of incapacity. It is the duty of the superintendent to maintain a capable and efficient police force, and as the duties of policemen are various, and require different degrees of physical strength, an examination would enable the superintendent to assign a policeman to a position where he could perform the duties required of him. It is not contended that the superintendent has authority forcibly to make, or cause to be made, a physical examination of a member of the police department. If a policeman does not choose to submit to the examination and to abide by the rules and regulations of the department, he merely commits the offense of disobeying the superintendent, and subjects himself to a charge of that kind before the civil service commission. No distinction is made, under the constitutional provision, between unreasonable searches of the person and other searches which are unreasonable; but the searches referred to have always been understood as those which are made for the purpose of finding and seizing private papers or articles of personal property, or securing evidence of violations of the law. Even searches of that kind are not necessarily unreasonable, and one who is in legal custody may have his person searched by officers of the law, without violating the provision of the Constitution.

An argument is drawn from the rule of this court, that in a civil suit the court has no power to compel a physical examination of a party to the suit. There is no similarity between the two cases, nor is there any claim that the superintendent may compel the examination of a policeman. But the rule that the court cannot compel an examination of a party does not rest upon immunity, under the Constitution, from an unreasonable search. There is no doubt that a statute might be enacted requiring a party to submit to an examination as a condition of maintaining the suit, and many courts have held that such an examination either rests in the discretion of the court, or may be demanded by the opposite party as a matter of right. In any view of the case, we cannot see how it can be said that the superintendent of police is compelled by the Constitution to remain in ignorance of the physical capacity of policemen to perform the duties required of them, with the necessary consequence that the policemen may retain positions which they are incapacitated to fill, and draw salaries for services they are unable to perform. Even if the examinations conducted for the purpose of ascertaining the facts should be characterized as searches of the person, they cannot be considered unreasonable.

The court did not err in overruling the demurrer, and the judgment is affirmed.

Petition for rehearing denied April 5, 1911.

KANSAS SUPREME COURT.

GIRARD TRUST COMPANY

v.

THOMAS OWEN, Jr., Appt.

(83 Kan. 692, 112 Pac. 619.)

Appeal — service of case made — conflict in testimony — certificate.

1. Where there is conflicting testimony in this court as to whether a case made was served before the expiration of the time allowed, the certificate of the trial judge that the service was made in due time will control.

Limitation of action — acknowledgment to assignor of note.

2. The payee of a note who has assigned it as collateral security has still such an interest therein that a written acknowledgment made to him by the debtor may serve to toll the statute of limitations.

Same — assignor of mortgage.

3. In virtue of the statute (Gen. Stat. 1909, §§ 5214, 5215) making payments to the record owner of a mortgage binding upon the real owner, a part payment to a mortgagee who has made an unrecorded assignment is sufficient to toll the statute of limitations.

Note — reduction in debt — extending payment — provision for maturity — effect.

4. Where the parties to an overdue note enter into a written agreement founded upon a sufficient consideration, by the terms of which a part of the debt is forgiven and the time for paying the reduced amount is extended, a provision therein that a default in the payment of interest shall mature the new principal implies that the debtor is not to forfeit the benefit of the Headnotes by MASON, J.

Note. — Statute of limitations: person to whom acknowledgment or new promise must be made to toll the statute or remove bar.

The early cases upon this question are gathered in the note to Doran v. Doran, 25 L.R.A. (N.S.) 805, and the present note covers only the subsequent decisions.

Acknowledgments to the following persons were held sufficient in the appended cases:

—acknowledgment to solicitors of creditor, Cooper v. Kendall [1909] 1 K. B. 405, 78 L. J. K. B. N. S. 580; 100 L. T. N. S. 251, 53 Sol. Jo. 243; —acknowledgment by maker of notes, in bankruptcy proceedings of payee, made when he knew the notes had been assigned to plaintiff, Catholic University v. Waggaman, 32 App. D. C. 307.

And where the creditor of an employee of the government wrote the secretary of the department to ascertain what course reduction by a failure to meet promptly the terms of the readjustment.

(January 7, 1911.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Cheyenne County in plaintiff's favor in an action on a note and mortgage. Modified.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. J. L. Finley and Wheeler & Switzer for appellants.

Messrs. Dempster Scott and Bowersock & Hall for appellee.

Mason, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The Girard Trust Company, trustee, obtained judgment against Thomas Owen upon a note and mortgage, and he appeals. A preliminary question is presented by a motion to dismiss on the ground that the case made was not served in time. The judgment was rendered December 8, 1908, and the time then allowed for serving a case expired April 7, 1909. A written acknowledgment of service recited that it was made April 8th, and affidavits have been filed here stating such to be the fact. On the other hand, the defendant presents affidavits that service was made at an earlier date. The certificate of the trial judge made at the time of settlement, May 25, 1909, includes a recital that the case made had been served in due time. This is not ordinarily conclusive (Gimbel v. Turner, 36 Kan. 679, 14 Pac. 255), but it is competent evidence (Jones v. Kellogg, 51 Kan. 263, 271, 272, 37 Am. St. Rep. 278, 33 Pac. 997). It amounts to a finding made at a hearing of which the adverse party had notice, and will be regarded in this instance as controlling, inasmuch to pursue to collect his debt, an affidavit filed by the debtor with the secretary in response to the latter's inquiry, in which the debtor unequivocally acknowledged an indebtedness of a certain amount, which he promised to make an effort to pay when he was better situated, was held sufficient to defeat the running of limitations, since, when he made such affidavit, he had reason to understand that it would be transmitted to the creditor and would influence his action. Strong v. Andros, 34 App. D. C. 278, 19 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 101.

But the fact that the obligors of a bond secured by a mortgage state that the obligations are existing liens on the land will not remove the bar of limitations where such acknowledgment is made to strangers, notwithstanding such strangers, without the obligors' knowledge, at the time contemplated buying the mortgage. Swinley v. Force, — N. J. Eq. —, 78 Atl. 249.

J. T. W.

as the conflict of testimony would otherwise leave the fact in doubt. The justice of this solution of the controversy is especially obvious because if the trial judge had found that the case made had been served too late, the defendant would still have had abundant time within which to institute an appeal under the new Code. The note sued on was due June 1, 1892. The action was begun April 2, 1907. To toll the statute of limitations, the plaintiff relies upon a written acknowledgment in the form of an extension agreement signed June 20, 1901, and upon a payment of interest found to have been made May 27, 1902. The defendant maintains that the acknowledgment and the payment were of no effect because neither was made to the owner of the note. The note and mortgage were made payable to Thomas Frahm, who was the cashier of the McKinley-Lanning Loan & Trust Company, to which he shortly transferred them. According to the evidence they were then turned over to the plaintiff as collateral security. While the plaintiff held them, the defendant signed an extension agreement acknowledging the indebtedness, which was described as owned by the McKinley-Lanning Loan & Trust Company. This written agreement was brought about by, and was delivered to, W. H. Lanning, who was the agent of Frahm and the McKinley-Lanning Company, but not of the plaintiff, so far as the record shows. The subsequent payment was likewise made to him.

In Investment Securities Co. v. Bergthold, 60 Kan. 813, 58 Pac. 469, it was held that a written acknowledgment incorporated in an extension agreement made with the payee after the assignment of the note does not interrupt the running of the statute. In that case, however, no suggestion seems to have been made regarding the effect of a subsequent adoption by the owner of the acts done by one having no authority at the time to represent him. Possibly the ratification might operate retrospectively by relation. See, as having some bearing upon this phase of the matter, Dresser v. Wood, 15 Kan. 344; Service v. Farmington Sav. Bank, 62 Kan. 857, 62 Pac. 670; Haines v. Watts, 53 N. J. L. 455, 21 Atl. 1032; 31 Cyc. Law & Proc. pp. 1283, 1290. Moore v. Roper, 35 Can. S. C. 533, tends to the contrary. In 19 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. pp. 317, 318, it is said that "an acknowledgment made to the assignee [obviously a misprint for the assignor] after the assignment is of no effect." Of the two cases cited in support of this text one (Maxwell v. Reilly, 11 Lea, 307) holds that after the death of the owner of a note, an acknowledgment made to his widow does not inure to the benefit of an administrator subsequently appointed. The widow claimed to own the note by gift, and the decision was based upon that fact. In the other case (Stamford Bkg. Co. v. Smith [1892] 1 Q. B. 765, 66 L. T. N. S. 306, 40 Week. Rep. 355, 56 J. P. 229, 61 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 405, 16 Eng. Rul. Cas. 165) a payment made to a former owner of the note was held not to suspend the statute, because the giving of money to a stranger was not a payment upon the note. The principle of ratification was suggested and might have been applied, but it happened that the adoption of one payment would have been involved recognizing enough others to have wiped out the debt.

In the present case the acknowledgment was sufficient, irrespective of the effect of a subsequent ratification. Although the McKinley-Lanning Company, to whose agent the acknowledgment was made, had previously transferred the note and mortgage, the evidence shows that the transfer was for security. By such a transfer the company lost the right of collection and control, but did not part with all interest in the claim. It was entitled to any surplus over the amount secured, and was itself liable for any deficiency. It had a substantial interest in the payment of the note, and cannot be regarded as a stranger to it. The cases holding that an acknowledgment made to a stranger is without effect have no application to such a situation. This readily appears from an examination of collections in 25 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 1362, and 19 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 316, and notes in 102 Am. St. Rep. 754, and 5 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 811. In the note last cited it is said (page 812): "If the relationship between the person to whom the acknowledgment is made and the creditor is such that they have an interest in common in the debt, or that there is privity between them, the acknowledgment will be sufficient to toll the statute."

A situation somewhat analogous to that here presented arises where, upon the death of a creditor, the debtor admits the indebtedness to an heir who has no legal title, but is interested in the payment. By the weight of authority such an acknowledgment is as effective as one made to the administrator. These cases tend to support that view: Haines v. Watts, 53 N. J. L. 455, 21 Atl. 1032; Hodnett v. Gault, 64 App. Div. 163, 71 N. Y. Supp. 831; Hill v. Hill, 51 S. C. 134, 28 S. E. 309; Robertson v. Burrill, 22 Ont. App. Rep. 356; Croman v. Stull, 119 Pa. 91, 12 Atl. 812. The following have a contrary tendency: Visher v. Wilbur, 5 Cal. App. 562, 90 Pac. 1065, 91 Pac. 412; Kisler v. Saunders, 40 Ind. 78.

Ordinarily, a part payment is effective to suspend the running of the statute, only when it is made to the creditor or someone authorized to represent him. The reason has already been referred to,—the giving of money to a stranger is not in fact a payment on the debt. Here, however, that reason does not apply. Owen was entitled to credit for the payment made in 1902 to Lanning, the agent of the mortgagee, because at that time no assignment of the mortgage had been recorded. The statute (Gen. Stat. 1909, §§ 5214, 5215) makes payments to the record owner of a mortgage binding upon the real owner; it in effect makes the one the agent of the other for the purpose of receiving payments. As a payment made to such a statutory agent reduces the debt, it gives a new starting point for the period of limitation. Prior to the extension agreement nothing had been paid upon the principal, which was $500. At that time a payment of $100 was made, and Owen signed a new contract which recited that the unpaid balance was $250, and provided for the payment of half of that amount in one year, and the remainder in two years, interest to be paid semi-annually, coupons therefor being attached. Judgment was rendered for the full amount of the original note and interest, less such payments as had actually been made. Owen maintains it should not have been for more than $250 and interest.

The question for our determination is what contract the parties in fact made. It was, of course, competent for them to agree either that the execution of the instrument relating to the extension should of itself reduce the amount of the debt by the absolute forgiveness of a portion of it, or that such reduction should result only if the new promise to pay the less amount were fully kept. 1 Enc. L. & P. 637, 642. A witness for the plaintiff undertook to give the transaction the latter color, but his testimony must be regarded as expressing merely his view of the legal effect of the writing signed by Owen, for he stated no facts bearing on the matter. The negotiations leading up to the signing of the new contract were conducted by correspondence, and there was no evidence as to the contents of any communication on the subject. The question must therefore be determined upon the face of that instrument.

The new contract was supported by abundant consideration. For one thing the place of payment was changed, and for another Owen's wife, who had not previously been personally bound, assumed liability for the debt. The writing described the original note and mortgage, and recited that $250 of the principal remained unpaid. It contained nothing to suggest the payment under any circumstances of a larger sum than it stated to be still owing on the note. It provided, among other things, that, in case of default in the payment of the interest coupons attached to it, the mortgagee might declare the "said principal sum" (referring to the $250) immediately due and payable. This express provision that a failure to meet the interest promptly should mature the new principal fairly implies that the parties did not intend such a default to have a greater effect,—that there was no purpose to make a delay in meeting the readjusted payments work a forfeiture of all the benefits to Owen of the readjustment.

The judgment will be modified by reducing the amount to the sum due by the terms of the extension agreement.

All the Justices concurring.

WISCONSIN SUPREME COURT.

PETER McARTHUR, Resp't.,

v.

JAMES MOFFETT et al., Appts.

(143 Wis. 564, 128 N. W. 445.)

Action — joinder — quieting title — trespass.

1. A statutory action to quiet title and a common-law action to recover damages for trespass upon the property involved may be joined under a statute permitting the joinder of causes which arise out of transactions connected with the same subject of action.

Same — transaction — physical presence.

2. The physical presence of the injured person is not necessary to effect a transaction within the meaning of a statute permitting the joinder of causes of action arising out of the same transaction, or transactions connected with the same subject of action.

Note. — As intimated in the foregoing opinion, the judicial interpretations of the Code phrase "subject of action," as used in the provisions with respect to the joinder of causes of action, as well as in the other Code provisions, are very numerous; but this case appears to be the only one that has passed upon the specific question whether a statutory cause of action to quiet title to land, and a cause of action for trespass on the same land, may be joined under the Code provision for the joinder of causes of action which arise out of the same transaction, or transactions connected with the same subject of action.

Same — possessory and proprietary actions.

3. In possessory and proprietary actions, whether involving real or personal property, the subject of action, causes arising out of transactions concerning which may, by statute, be joined in a single action, is composed of the plaintiff's primary right, together with the specific property itself.

(November 15, 1910.)

APPEAL by defendants from an order of a Circuit Court for Douglas County, overruling a demurrer to the complaint in an action brought to quiet title to certain land, and to recover damages for alleged unlawful trespassing and cutting of timber thereon. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. C. R. Fridley for appellants.

Messrs. Grace & Hudnall, for respondent:

Two causes of action, one in equity and one at law, may be joined; the equitable cause to be first tried by the court, and afterwards the legal cause with a jury.

Harrison v. Juneau Bank, 17 Wis. 340; Gunn v. Madigan, 28 Wis. 158; Hammel v. London Queen Ins. Co. 50 Wis. 240, 6 N. W. 805; Cameron v. White, 74 Wis. 425, 5 L.R.A. 493, 43 N. W. 155; Endress v. Shove, 110 Wis. 133, 85 N. W. 653; Krakow v. Wille, 125 Wis. 284, 103 N. W. 1121, 4 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 1016.

Equity having obtained jurisdiction to quiet title, or remove cloud from title, will retain such jurisdiction for the purpose of doing entire justice between the parties, and, if necessary, give a money judgment for damages to the land caused by cutting and removing the timber, rather than turn the plaintiff over to an action at law.

McLachlan v. Staples, 13 Wis. 448; Blake v. Van Tilborg, 21 Wis. 672; Bassett v. Warner, 23 Wis. 673; Turner v. Pierce, 34 Wis. 658; Moon v. McKnight, 54 Wis. 551, 11 N. W. 800; Brickner Woolen Mills Co. v. Henry, 73 Wis. 229, 40 N. W. 809; Leinenkugel v. Kehl, 73 Wis. 238, 40 N. W. 683; Pinkun v. Eau Claire, 81 Wis. 301, 51 N. W. 550; Swihart v. Harless, 93 Wis. 211, 67 N. W. 413; 16 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 106.

The two causes of action stated in the complaint arose out of the same transaction.

Emerson v. Nash, 124 Wis. 369, 70 L.R.A. 326, 109 Am. St. Rep. 944, 102 N. W. 921.

The subject of plaintiff's action is his right and the invasion of that right by the defendant.

Brahm v. M. C. Gehl Co. 132 Wis. 674, 112 N. W. 1097.

The transactions are connected with the subject of the action.

Kruczynski v. Neuendorf, 99 Wis. 264, 74 33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

N. W. 974; Grignon v. Black, 76 Wis. 674, 45 N. W. 122, 938; Leinenkugel v. Kehl, 73 Wis. 238, 40 N. W. 683; 23 Cyc. Law & Proc. pp. 412, 420; Rogers v. Wheeler, 89 App. Div. 435, 85 N. Y. Supp. 981; McKinney v. Collins, 88 N. Y. 216.

An action in equity can be joined with one ex delicto.

Bishop v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 67 Wis. 610, 31 N. W. 219; Alliance Elevator Co. v. Wells, 93 Wis. 5, 66 N. W. 796; State ex rel. Alliance Elevator Co. v. Helms, 101 Wis. 280, 77 N. W. 194.

Winslow, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The complaint contains two counts: The first states a statutory cause of action under § 3186, Stat. 1898, to quiet plaintiff's title to a number of tracts of unoccupied land to which the defendants "make some claim." The second states a cause of action at law to recover damages for trespass and the cutting of timber on said lands prior to the commencement of the action. A demurrer to this complaint for improper joinder of causes of action was overruled, and the defendants appeal.

The exact question presented is whether a statutory cause of action to quiet title to land and a cause of action for trespass on the same land "arise out of the same transaction, or transactions connected with the same subject of action" within the meaning of subdivision 1, § 2647, Wis. Stat. 1898. These words are found in the first subdivision of that section of our Code which authorizes the joinder of different causes of action in the same complaint. They were first introduced into the New York Code by amendment in 1852. They were incorporated into our original Code in 1856, and have remained there unchanged since that date. They are also to be found substantially unchanged in the Codes of nearly, if not quite all, of the Code states. It would seem that at this late date there ought to be little doubt as to their true scope and meaning. Courts and text writers have been busy for more than half a century drafting and redrafting definitions of the words "transaction" and "subject of action" as new cases have presented themselves, but, on the whole, it may well be doubted whether the discussions have resulted in clarity of thought. The words are general to the last degree; indeed, they must be so, for they are intended to provide for and apply to the myriad difficulties that may arise between man and man in all kinds of situations, and no words of limited or narrow meaning could be used.

The difficulty lies not merely in the unfortunate paucity and poverty of human language, but in the equally unfortunate incapacity of the human mind to appreciate in advance and provide for future difficulties arising out of new situations and complications. In view of what has been said, it may seem somewhat presumptuous for us to enter upon a new discussion of the subject, or to attempt to make new definitions, and thus perhaps only make confusion worse confounded. We would never willingly "darken counsel by words without knowledge," and we hope not to do so now, but we feel that the case demands a careful re-examination of the meaning of the words in question in the light of all that the various courts and text writers have said about them. It may be that we shall add nothing useful to the discussion, yet it seems as though every treatment of the subject by an intelligent mind viewing it from a new standpoint, and as applied to new circumstances, and aided by the experience and suggestions of previous investigators, should be helpful. Section 143 of the original New York Code of 1848 (chap. 379, N. Y. Laws 1848) provided for the joinder of several causes of action in the same complaint, but it contained no provision of this kind. It simply provided that "the plaintiff may unite several causes of action in the same complaint where they all arise out of (1) contract, express or implied;" and then followed six subdivisions or classes of actions, the section closing with this provision: "But the causes of action so united must all belong to one only of these classes, and must equally affect all the parties to the action, and not require different places of trial." It will be noticed that the section contains no provision expressly allowing the joinder of legal and equitable causes of action, nor does it contain the provision now under consideration, namely, the provision allowing joinder where the different causes "arise out of the same transaction, or transactions connected with the same subject of action."

The cold, not to say inhuman, treatment which the infant Code received from the New York judges is matter of history. They had been bred under the common-law rules of pleading, and taught to regard that system as the perfection of logic, and they viewed with suspicion a system which was heralded as so simple that every man would be able to draw his own pleadings. They proceeded by construction to import into the Code rules and distinctions from the common-law system to such an extent that in a few years they had practically so changed it that it could hardly be recognized by its creators. Although the Code by its terms abolished all existing forms of pleading, and prescribed one general form of pleading which should be used in all actions, the courts early decided that the distinctive features of pleadings at law and in equity still remained, and so they easily held that what was formerly called a cause of action at law could not be joined with what was formerly called a cause of action in equity. To meet and counteract this narrow and illiberal construction of the law, the amendments of 1852 (Laws 1852, chap. 392) were adopted, providing expressly that legal and equitable causes of action might be joined, provided they both belonged to one of the seven classes, and further creating a new class of joinable actions, to wit, those which arise out of the "same transaction, or transactions connected with the same subject of action." It is very clear that the legislative intent in making these amendments was to permit and encourage the joinder of causes of action which could reasonably be said to involve kindred rights and wrongs, and thus settle such kindred rights and wrongs in one proceeding, rather than to require them to be settled by piecemeal in different actions, with much greater expenditure of time and money.

Some other conclusions seem equally clear concerning these amendments. They were all intended to accomplish some definite purpose,—some change in the existing condition of things. They were not inserted to fill up space or for rhetorical effect. The word "transaction" was intended to define one thing, and the words "same subject of action" another and different thing; and both were intended to define a different thing from the words "cause of action." To hold that any two of these three terms mean the same thing is to make nonsense of the whole phrase. Again, it is very apparent that the dominant idea was to permit joinder of causes of action legal or equitable in case there was some substantial point of unity between them. It was contemplated evidently that this point of unity might be very near to the causes of action,—i. e., that both causes of action might arise directly out of the same event or affair (called a "transaction" in the statute), in which case they were joinable; and it was also contemplated that the point of unity might be further off in the chain of events,—i. e., that, while the two causes of action had their immediate inception in different "transactions," still, if these different transactions were both connected with one fundamental matter or thing, or combination of matters or things, called the "subject of action," there was still a sufficient element of unity to justify their being joined in one action. Now it is manifest that the principal difficulty here consists in the meaning of the term "subject of action." The words "cause of action" and "transaction" present no very serious difficulties, but "subject of action," as before said, is a very general and comprehensive term which must be applied to very many and very diverse situations. It is relatively easy to give it a definition in terms equally general; for instance, one can say that it is some fundamental matter or thing common in greater or less degree to each cause of action, and without the prior existence of which the cause of action itself could have no existence; but this definition affords little help in applying the words to a concrete case. The definition is as general and vague as the words which it is supposed to define.

The difficulties surrounding the accurate definition of these words were at once appreciated by the courts of New York. Judge Comstock, in 1858, said of the amendment of 1852: "Its language is, I think, well chosen for the purpose intended, because it is so obscure and so general as to justify the interpretations which shall be found most convenient and best calculated to promote the ends of justice. It is certainly impossible to extract from a provision so loose and yet so comprehensive any rules less liberal than those which have long prevailed in courts of equity." New York & N. H. R. Co. v. Schuyler, 17 N. Y. 592. In 1876 Chief Justice Church said: "This language is very general and very indefinite. I have examined the various authorities upon this clause, and I am satisfied that it is impracticable to lay down a general rule which will serve as an accurate guide for future cases. It is safer for courts to pass upon the question as each case is presented. To invent a rule for determining what the 'same transaction' means, and when a cause of action shall be deemed to 'arise out' of it, and what the 'same subject of action' means, and when transactions are to be deemed connected with it, has taxed the ingenuity of many learned judges, and I do not deem it necessary to make the effort to find a solution to these questions." Wiles v. Suydam, 64 N. Y. 173. The well-known allusion to that unfortunate class of people who rush in where "angels fear to tread" may occur to the irreverent mind at this point, but we feel compelled to proceed with our investigations nevertheless.

As before indicated, it is entirely certain that the three expressions "cause of action," "transaction," and "subject of action," mean different things as used in this statute. To say that "subject of action" means the same thing as "transaction" is to say that the legislature chose to be wilfully obscure and misleading at a time and place where clarity was above all things necessary. To say that it means the same thing as "cause of action" would make the clause proclaim that causes of action may be joined if the same cause of action is common to both of them,—a construction which involves a manifest absurdity. Our main concern here is with the meaning of the words "subject of action;" because, if the two causes of action are joinable at all, it is because they arise out of transactions connected with the same subject of action, rather than because they arise out of the same transaction. The intimate relationship between the three terms, "cause of action," "transaction," and "subject of action," in the sentence, however, and the evident necessity of the drawing of some fairly accurate distinction between them in order that the true significance of the latter term may be arrived at, renders it proper, if not absolutely necessary, to consider them all. As the meaning of the first two terms seems to be quite well settled, both in this state and in the Code states generally, it seems wise to take them up first in the discussion.

1. The term "cause of action" occurs several times in the original Wisconsin Code. Perhaps its appearance is most significant in subd. 2 of § 47 of that Code (chap. 120, Laws 1856), now subd. 2 of § 2646 of the Statutes of 1898, which provides that the complaint shall contain "a plain and concise statement of the facts constituting each cause of action, without unnecessary repetition." This makes it very clear that, in the minds of the makers of the Code, the "cause of action" is made up of the facts necessary to be pleaded and proved in order to establish the defendant's liability to the plaintiff. These must be of two classes: (1) The facts which show the plaintiff's right, and (2) the facts which show the defendant's violation of that right. Pomeroy says (Pom. Code Remedies, 4th ed. § 347): "The cause of action as it appears in the complaint, when properly pleaded, will therefore always be the facts from which the plaintiff's primary right and the defendant's corresponding primary duty have arisen, together with the facts which constitute the defendant's delict or act of wrong." Substantially this definition is supported by the authorities generally. It is supported in this state in Bruil v. North Western Mut. Relief Assn. 72 Wis. 430, 39 N. W. 529. Rapalje's definition is there quoted,—"The fact or combination of facts which give rise to a right of action,"—and it is said: "A cause of action does not arise until the facts exist which constitute the cause of action, and not merely the one fact which may be the breach of duty." In South Bend Chilled Plow Co. v. George C. Cribb Co. 105 Wis. 443, 81 N. W. 675, it is said: "In every cause of action there must exist a primary right, a corresponding primary duty, and a failure to perform that duty." In Emerson v. Nash, 124 Wis. 369, 387, 70 L.R.A. 326, 109 Am. St. Rep. 944, 102 N. W. 921, 928, it is said: "A cause of action consists of those facts as to two or more persons entitling at least some one of them to a judicial remedy of some sort against the other or others for the redress or prevention of a wrong. . . . There should be a right to be violated and a violation thereof." There seems no logical escape from the conclusion that the term "cause of action" must include the facts showing (1) the plaintiff's right; (2) the defendant's corresponding duty; and (3) the defendant's breach of that duty; or, to put it more tersely, the plaintiff's right and its violation by the defendant.

2. The word "transaction" is defined in Pomeroy's Code Remedies, 4th ed. § 367, as follows: "A negotiation, or a proceeding, or a conduct of business, between the parties, of such a nature that it produces as necessary results two or more different primary rights in favor of the plaintiff, and wrongs done by the defendant which are violations of such rights." In Craft Refrigerating Mach. Co. v. Quinpiac Brewing Co. 63 Conn. 551, 25 L.R.A. 856, 29 Atl. 76, it is defined as "something which has taken place whereby a cause of action has arisen. It must . . . consist of an act or agreement or several acts or agreements having some connection with each other in which more than one person is concerned, and by which the legal relations of such persons between themselves are altered." This court defines it in the Emerson Case, 124 Wis. 369, at page 389, as follows: "Any event in which two or more persons are actors, involving a right which may presently, or by what may proximately occur in respect thereto, be violated, creating a redressible wrong, is a transaction within the meaning of the statute." This seems practically to be the same as Pomeroy's definition. In Scarborough v. Smith, 18 Kan. 399 (a very interesting and instructive case), it is defined thus: "A transaction is whatever may be done by one person which affects another person's rights, and out of which a cause of action may arise." At first glance both Pomeroy's definition and the definition given in the Emerson Case 33 L.R.A. (N.S.) might seem to imply that both parties to the action must be active participants in the event or affair in order that it constitute a "transaction." If this were so, neither a trespass on land in the absence of the owner, nor an unfounded claim of title to land in like absence, would amount to a transaction, and it would necessarily follow that neither cause of action here stated arises out of a "transaction" within the meaning of the statute, and hence there could be no connection between either cause of action and the subject of the action. The definitions referred to, however, do not, when properly understood, mean that both parties must actually be present in order that an event or affair may arise to the dignity of a transaction. If the act of one person wrongfully invades or infringes upon the right of another, there is undoubtedly a transaction," though the injured party be not physically present. He may, in such case, truly be called a participant in the act, because he is represented by his right which is invaded or violated by his adversary's act. The definition in the Kansas case cited exactly fits this view. With this understanding of its meaning, there seems no reason to doubt that the definition given by this court in the Emerson Case is substantially correct.

3. We pass now to the consideration of the phrase "subject of action," which presents much greater difficulty as well as greater confusion in the authorities. We start with a proposition which seems to us incontrovertible; namely, that the makers of the Code not only had some definite and certain idea in mind when they used these words, but that such idea was a different idea from the ideas embodied in the words "cause of action" or "transaction." It is entirely true that in literature, logic, and grammar the word "subject" means that which is treated of, the theme of discourse, or that of which something is affirmed or predicated; hence it could logically be said, if there were no other considerations to be kept in view, that the subject of an action is the defendant's invasion of the plaintiff's right, because this is the matter which is the paramount theme treated of. It by no means follows, however, that this definition can or ought to be applied here. The question is not necessarily what do literary purists or lexicographers mean by the word, although this is helpful and should be considered, but what did the legislature mean by it? It is not a word like "horse" or "cow," which can mean but one thing in whatever position it be placed, but it may be applied and probably rightly applied by different minds to different things, tangible or intangible, under the same circumstances. For example, in an action of ejectment, one mind might arrive at the conclusion that the land alone was the subject of the action, another that its title was the subject, another that the defendant's wrongful possession was the subject, and still another that all these things together constitute the subject. All of them are treated of in the action. Which or how many of them did the legislature intend to refer to when it spoke of the "subject of action?" This is the problem which it is necessary to solve in order to decide the present case. In considering this question it is important in the first place to note that the term is used several times in the original, as well as in the present, Code, in entirely different connections. Of course, it must be assumed that, wherever it is used in the same act, it means the same thing; and it ought to be helpful to ascertain the meaning which seems ascribed to the term in its other connections, if any particular meaning be apparent.

In the original Wisconsin Code the term was used at least seven times, including the instance under discussion. The first instance seems to be in § 21 (chap. 120, Laws 1856), now § 2602, Stat. 1898, which provides that "all persons having an interest in the subject of the action and in obtaining the relief demanded may be joined as plaintiffs." The inference here would seem to be that tangible property might, in some cases, at least, be considered the subject of the action, but perhaps the inference is not very persuasive, and we pass to the next instance of the use of the term, which occurs in § 27 of the original Code, now appearing in slightly altered form as § 2619, Stat. Wis. 1898. This section provides that four classes of actions must (subject to the power of the court to change the venue) be tried in the county in which the subject of the action or some part thereof is situated. These classes of actions are: (1) actions for the recovery of real property, or of any estate or interest therein, or for the determination in any form of such right or interest, or for injuries to real property; (2) actions for the partition of real property; (3) actions for the foreclosure of a mortgage of real property; and (4) actions for the recovery of personal property distrained for any cause. It will be noticed that these are all actions involving either the title or some interest in or lien upon specific real or personal property. Now, can there be any doubt from the language of the section and the careful grouping of these actions which all involve specific tangible property that the legislature meant to refer to that specific tangible property as the subject of the action, and to require that the action be tried in the county where it is situated? Again, is there any doubt that the profession and the courts have so construed the section without question, from 1856 up to the present time? We believe no case will be found in this state where it has been even suggested by court or counsel that this section means anything but that the actions named are local actions whose locality (subject to change of venue for sufficient cause) is fixed by the locality of the real or personal property involved, which real or personal property is called by the legislature the "subject of the action." Young v. Lego, 38 Wis. 206; West v. Walker, 77 Wis. 557. 46 N. W. 819.

But any lingering doubt as to the meaning of the term here must surely be removed when we consider subds. 3 and 4 of § 40 of the original Code, now found in expanded form in subds. 1, 3, and 7 of § 2639 of the Statutes of 1898. This section provides for service of the summons by publication where personal service cannot be made. Such substituted service may be made under these subdivisions (1) where the defendant is a nonresident, but has property within the state, and the action is on contract, "and the court has jurisdiction of the subject of the action;" and (3) where "the subject of the action is real or personal property in this state, and the defendant has or claims a lien or interest, actual or contingent, therein, or the relief demanded consists wholly or partly in excluding the defendant from any interest or lien therein." Here it is definitely stated that there are actions in which the subject of action is real or personal property. Here, also, we think, there has been a universal consensus of opinion among lawyers and courts that the last-mentioned clause was intended to, and did, apply to all controversies involving the title of specific real or personal property situated within the state, and that in such cases there could be service by publication, because of the fact that such property was the subject of the action, and was within the state. In § 49 of the original Code, now § 2649, Stat. 1898, it is provided that the defendant may demur to the complaint when it appears upon the face thereof that the court has "no jurisdiction of . . . the subject of the action," and in § 55, Id., now § 2656, Stat. 1898, it is provided that the defendant may interpose by way of counterclaim "a cause of action arising out of the contract or transaction set forth in the complaint as the foundation of the plaintiff's claim, or connected with the subject of the action," and, lastly, in § 73, Id., now § 2647, Stat. 1898, we find the provision for joinder of causes of action legal or equitable "where they arise out of the same transaction, or transactions connected with the same subject of action."

Some time and space have been spent in collating and considering these various instances of the use of the term "subject of action," in the original Code, not only to show that it must have been used by the Code makers deliberately and advisedly, but also because it seems that in many of the discussions of its meaning as used in the joinder and counterclaim sections there has been little or no attention paid to the help which might be derived from considering the obvious meaning attached to it when used in the other sections above referred to. Possibly some of the confusion in the authorities might have been avoided had all the provisions of the act in which the term is used been viewed together. That there is much confusion upon the subject, both in the decisions and in the text-books, cannot be denied, and there seems to be as much in Wisconsin as elsewhere. In Scheunert v. Kaehler, 23 Wis. 523, it was said, considering the counterclaim statute, that the subject of an action for conversion of money was the "tort or wrong committed;" and in Stolze v. Torrison, 118 Wis. 315, 95 N. W. 114, it was said of an action of trespass upon real estate that the subject of the action is not the land nor the title to the land, but the torts alleged. These two cases seem to indicate that in actions for torts committed upon property, the tort, and not the property, is the subject of the action. On the other hand, it is said in Cornelius v. Kessel, 58 Wis. 237, 16 N. W. 550 (still considering the counterclaim statute), that in ejectment "the subject of the action is the land in controversy;" and in Kruczynski v. Neuendorf, 99 Wis. 264, 74 N. W. 974, it is said that an equitable cause of action to remove a cloud fraudulently placed on the title of land, and a legal cause of action to recover possession of the land, with rents and profits for its use, may be joined under the statute because "the subject of the action is the land." In Leinenkugel v. Kehl, 73 Wis. 238, 40 N. W. 683, which was an action to quiet title to land, the conclusion seems to be based upon the idea that the land is the subject of the action, although the proposition is not definitely stated in the opinion. In Grignon v. Black, 76 Wis. 674, 45 N. W. 122, 938, which was an action to quiet title, it was said, considering the counterclaim statute, that the subject of the plaintiff's action was "their title and right of possession to the land in 33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

question." The radical inconsistency in these holdings is very apparent. In a trespass action, which is brought to redress a wrongful entry on land, the subject is the tort, and not the land. In an ejectment action, which is brought to redress a wrongful holding of land, the subject is the land, and not the tort, while in quia timet the subject is said in one case to be the land itself, and in another to be the plaintiff's title and right of possession of the land.

But this is not all. As we have seen, it was held in the Scheunert Case, in the twenty-third Wisconsin, that in an action for conversion the subject was the tort or wrong committed; but in the later case of Mulberger v. Koenig, 62 Wis. 558, 22 N. W. 745, which was an action in equity to prevent the wrongful obstruction of a mill race, it was said that the subject of the action "is nothing more or less than the facts constituting the plaintiff's causes of action." This latter case was followed in Telulah Paper Co. v. Patten Paper Co. 132 Wis. 425, 112 N. W. 522 (another water power case), where it was said that the subject of the plaintiff's action is "his right and the invasion of that right" by the defendant, and this definition was approved and applied in Brahm v. M. C. Gehl Co. 132 Wis. 674, 679, 112 N. W. 1097. Now, can it be possible that it is true that the subject of the action, as the term is used in the Code, means the plaintiff's right and the defendant's invasion of that right? If so, then it is synonymous with "cause of action," and we should be able to substitute the words "subject of the action" for "cause of action" wherever they occur in the Code, and vice versa. It is very certain that we cannot do this without making nonsense of the Code and convicting its authors of the reckless use of misleading language in the crucial paragraphs of a law which was intended to completely revolutionize all legal procedure.

There is another class of cases in this court in which the subject has received passing consideration. viz., the cases involving the winding up of the affairs of insolvent corporations, and the enforcement of the liabilities of corporate officers and stockholders. In these cases the settlement of the corporate affairs, the enforcement of the various liabilities, and the administration of the trust fund have been said to constitute the "subject" or "subject-matter" of the action (not, however, in direct reference to the joinder section of the statute), and it has also been said in these cases that the various liabilities sought to be enforced in such actions are not separate causes of action, but mere incidents of one cause of action; i. e., the "settlement of the corporate affairs." In the first of the cases cited below, "subject-matter" and "cause of action" seem to be considered practically the same. Gager v. Maraden, 101 Wis. 598, 604, 77 N. W. 922; Harrigan v. Gilchrist, 121 Wis. 127, 296, 99 N. W. 909; Foster v. Posson, 105 Wis. 39, 81 N. W. 123.

Again, there are several cases, which can hardly be classified under any given head, in which the question was whether one or several causes of action are stated in the complaint, and in the treatment of that question the term "subject of action" or "subject of litigation" has been used and given a meaning, not, however, with direct reference to the joinder statute. Thus, in Zinc Carbonate Co. v. First Nat. Bank, 103 Wis. 125, 74 Am. St. Rep. 845, 79 N. W. 229, which was an action by a corporation against alleged conspirators, to recover back corporate assets and set aside a fraudulent judgment, it was said, in answer to the objection that two causes of action were improperly joined, that "there is but one subject of action,—the conspiracy to defraud, and its consummation to the damage of plaintiff." In Jordan v. Warner, 107 Wis. 539, 83 N. W. 946, which was a claim against an estate for the proceeds of lands alleged to belong to the plaintiff, but sold by the deceased as plaintiff's agent, involving also a claim that a deed of the lands made to the deceased was in fact a mortgage, it was said: "The sole primary subject of the litigation was the alleged indebtedness of the estate to plaintiffs." In Adkins v. Loucks, 107 Wis. 587, 83 N. W. 934, which was an action by the creditor of a deceased person to enforce the liability of heirs under § 3274, Stat. 1898, who had received the real estate of deceased, other parties being joined to whom part of the land had been fraudulently conveyed, it was said: "The infallible test by which to determine whether a complaint states more than one cause of action is, Does it present more than one subject of action or primary right for adjudication?" And again: "The sole subject of the action stated in the complaint being to recover plaintiff's claim out of the land that descended to the Loucks heirs," the setting aside of the fraudulent deeds is germane to that subject. Other Wisconsin cases in which casual attention has been given to the subject are Alliance Elevator Co. v. Wells, 93 Wis. 5, 66 N. W. 796; Endress v. Shove, 110 Wis. 133, 85 N. W. 653; Aultman Co. v. McDonough, 110 Wis. 263, 85 N. W. 980; Koepke v. Winterfield, 116 Wis. 44, 92 N. W. 437; Krakow v. Wille, 125 Wis. 284, 103 N. W. 1121, 4 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 1016; Tallman v. Barnes, 54 Wis. 181, 11 N. W. 478, and 33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Kuhn v. Sol. Heavenrich Co. 115 Wis. 447, 60 L.R.A. 585, 91 N. W. 994, but in none of them do we find any helpful discussion of the question. It seems very evident to us that the cases in this court cannot be harmonized, and we shall not undertake the task. The confusion is hopeless. Looking to the decisions in New York and other Code states, as well as to the attempts of text writers to solve the difficulty, we find the same confused condition. To attempt to analyze the decisions would be impossible within any permissible limits, but the conclusions of the leading text writers may profitably be considered.

Mr. Pomeroy, in his valuable work on Code remedies, has made three attempts to define the term "subject of action." At § 369, 4th ed. he says: "The term 'subject of action' found in the Code in this and one or two other sections was doubtless employed by its authors and the legislature as synonymous with, or rather in place of, 'subject-matter of the action.' I can conceive of no other interpretation which will apply to the phrase and meet all the requirements of the context. 'Subject-matter of the action' is not the 'cause of action' nor the 'object of the action.' It rather describes the physical facts, the things real or personal, the money, lands, chattels, and the like in relation to which the suit is prosecuted. It is possible, therefore, that several different 'transactions' should have a connection with this 'subject-matter,' or, what seems to me to be the same thing, with this 'subject of action.'" This seems a fairly definite and workable definition as applied to actions relating to specific real or personal property, but in § 384 of the same work, after discussing and criticizing the definition given by Mr. Calvert in his work on Parties, he says: "In equitable actions there is generally, if not quite always, a fund, or estate, or property, which is the subject of the suit, as well as questions concerning the same to which the term may also be applied. The provisions of the Codes, however, embrace legal actions; and in them it cannot generally be said that there is any fund, property, or estate in relation to which the questions at issue have arisen, and which can be regarded as the 'subject.' In a very large proportion of legal actions, therefore, the term 'subject of the action' can only be conceived of in the second sense which has been attributed to it, and denotes the totality of questions at issue between the parties, embracing, in short, both the primary rights and duties of the litigants, and the remedial rights and duties which have sprung from the injuries complained of. The term does not seem capable of any clear and complete analysis, and the result is that it may denote the 'thing' if any,—land, chattel, person, fund, estate, and the like,—in respect of which rights are sought to be maintained and duties enforced, or it may denote the sum of the questions between the parties to be determined by the judgment of the court. The latter meaning is distinguishable, and is to be distinguished from the 'object of the action,' which is always the relief to be obtained by the determination of the questions which constitute the 'subject of the action.'" This seems sufficiently vague and confusing, but when we come to the discussion of the term under the counterclaim section, at § 651 of the same work, we find a definition which seems to disregard the previous discussions entirely, viz: "It would, as it seems to me, be correct to say in all cases, legal or equitable, that the 'subject of the action' is the plaintiff's main primary right, which has been broken, and by means of whose breach a remedial right arises. Thus the right of property and possession in ejectment and replevin, the right of possession in trover and trespass, the right to the money in all cases of debt, and the like, would be the 'subject' of the respective actions. Although in a certain sense and in some classes of suits the things themselves, the land or chattels, may be regarded as the 'subject,' and are sometimes spoken of as such, yet this cannot be true in all cases; for in many actions there is no such specific thing in controversy over which a right of property exists. The primary right, however, always exists, and is always the very central element of the controversy around which all the other elements are grouped, and to which they are subordinate. In possessory and proprietary actions this right, which will then be always one of property or of possession, will be intimately associated with the specific thing itself which is the object of the right; but this relation is not, and cannot be, universal. It seems, therefore, more in accordance with the nature of actions, and more in harmony with the language of the statute, to regard the 'subject of the action' as denoting the plaintiff's principal primary right, to enforce or maintain which the action is brought, than to regard it as denoting the specific thing in regard to which the legal controversy is carried on. In this manner alone can we arrive at a general rule applicable to all possible cases, and the rule thus reached fully satisfies all the requirements of the legislative language, and can be invoked in all classes of actions. While I suggest and adopt this meaning of the term 'subject,' I freely concede that no decision, so far as I have discovered, pro-ounces this interpretation to be the only one admissible. Many cases sanction it, none directly reject it; but none, on the other hand, have gone so far as to declare in its favor to the exclusion of all other meanings. The construction proposed, as it has been judicially approved in many instances, would remove all doubt and conflict of opinion, and would furnish a simple and practical rule of universal application." Acknowledging as we do Mr. Pomeroy's very valuable services to the profession and to the law, we think it must be admitted that he also has left the question of the meaning of "subject of action" in great confusion.

Mr. Nichols, in volume 1 of his work on New York Practice, at page 68, quotes Mr. Pomeroy's first definition, "the physical facts, the things, real or personal, the money, lands, chattels and the like in relation to which the suit is prosecuted," and escapes any further difficulty by not attempting any additional discussion of the subject.

Mr. Bliss, in his work on Code Pleading, 3d ed. has also attempted to reach a conclusion on the subject, and perhaps with some greater degree of success. Thus he says at § 126: "The cause of action has been described as being a legal wrong threatened or committed against the complaining party, and the object of the action is to prevent or redress the wrong by obtaining some legal relief. The subject of the action is clearly neither of these. It is not the wrong which gives the plaintiff the right to ask the interposition of the court, nor is it that which the court is asked to do for him, but it must be the matter or thing, differing both from the wrong and the relief, in regard to which the controversy has arisen, concerning which the wrong has been done; and this is ordinarily the property or the contract and its subject-matter or other thing involved in the dispute." He then proceeds to state what he deems to be the subject-matter of various contract actions, and proceeds with the consideration of tort actions, as follows: "In an action for a tort, the injury complained of is the wrong, and the subject of the action would be that right, interest [relation], or property which has been affected,—as, in replevin or trover, the property taken; for libel or slander, the plaintiff's character or occupation; for an injury to a servant, the service; for the seduction of, or for harboring, a wife, the marital relation; for negligence, the duty, property, or person in respect to which the negligence occurred; for false imprisonment, the plaintiff's liberty; and for trespass upon property, the property." He also clearly appreciates that the words should be held to mean the same thing wherever used, and in § 373 makes the following observations concerning the term as used in the counterclaim statute: "I know of no reason why the same interpretation should not be given it in this connection as when it is used to designate a class of causes of action that may be united in one proceeding, and the reader is referred to the view heretofore taken. This general view is not elaborated in any of the reported cases. It is not, perhaps, the duty of judges to write essays, only to apply the law to the facts before them; but by a preponderance of authority it is recognized, and the cloudiness, if not blunders, that are seen in this connection, have arisen chiefly from a failure to distinguish the 'subject' of the action from the 'cause,' or from the 'object' of the action, or from the facts which constitute it. Our system of pleading will never be reduced to scientific accuracy until the statutory phrases embodying it come to have a fixed signification. Technics are essential to exact knowledge. The pleader may state in common language the facts that constitute his cause of action because he describes the common events of life; and yet, at every step, he is controlled by the stern rules of legal logic. Looseness, indefiniteness, uncertainty in the interpretation of phrases that control his action, leave him wholly at sea, and tossed about by the shifting winds of mere opinion, or, perhaps, caprice. It is because a fixed and definite meaning has not been given to the term 'subject of action,'—because it so often fails to present to the mind any distinct conception,—that we find so many differences of opinion in respect to this class of counterclaims; and, as we shall presently see, nowhere does the conception seem to be less certain than in the great state to whose jurisprudence we owe so much, and whose enlightened bar first called the new system into existence."

In this connection we will again refer to the case of Scarborough v. Smith, 18 Kan. 309, where, under the joinder clause which we are considering, it was held that an action of ejectment, an action to recover the value of the rents and profits of the same property, and an action for partition thereof, could be joined because they all arose out of transactions connected with one subject of action, which was said to be the "right to use and enjoy in the manner he chooses his said interest in said real property, with all the proceeds and avails thereof;" and it is further said: "Of course, the 'subject of action' is not the 'cause of action' or the cause of any action or any cause of action. It is simply one of the elements of each of the several causes of action, uniting and binding them together in one action."

We are not to be understood as approving without qualification the propositions laid down by Pomeroy and Bliss in the quoted paragraphs. The quotations have been made rather for the purpose of showing the drift of thought on the subject in two acute legal minds. We do not propose in the present case to attempt to lay down any hard and fast definition which shall be applicable to all cases which may arise. "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof." But we feel that we must recede from the proposition laid down in the Telulah Case, to wit, that the subject of the action is composed of the plaintiff's right and the defendant's invasion thereof. If the phrase stood alone, this might be logically correct; but when we face the fact that we must differentiate "subject of action" from "cause of action," and when we also know that the definition last quoted must be applied to "cause of action," we must find some other meaning for "subject of action." It seems probable, as Mr. Pomeroy suggests, that the Code makers used the term having in mind the term "subject-matter of the action," which was in use before the Code, and which is defined by Bouvier as "the cause, the object, the thing in dispute." It seems also probable that they had in mind equitable actions involving complicated matters arising out of and surrounding a single parent stem or primary right, which manifestly ought to be all handled at the same time and by the same court in order to settle closely related rights; but we cannot assent to the suggestion of Mr. Pomeroy (§ 369, Id.) that it probably has no application to legal causes of action, although it was said by this court in the Emerson Case, supra, at page 389 of 124 Wis., that "doubtless . . . the second clause of the statute applies more generally, if not exclusively, to equitable suits." There can be little doubt that the clause will find its most frequent application in equitable actions, but the Code makers neither had nor expressed any intention to limit it in that way. The very wording of the introductory words of the clause precludes that idea. Causes of action "whether . . . legal or equitable or both" may be joined where they arise out of transactions connected with the same subject of action. They intended to give the court power to lay hold of, sift out, and determine in one action rights and wrongs between the same parties which had this element of unity, and they did not intend to limit this broad power in any way. It should be construed and administered by the courts with a view to most effectively and fully carry out its purpose so far as may be consistent with the orderly and prompt administration of justice and the preservation of the rights of litigants.

We have before us two causes of action,—one by the owner of certain lands to prevent the further assertion of a wrongful claim of title to those lands, and another to recover for a wrongful entry on the same lands by the same person. Can they be joined? They do not arise out of the same transaction. One arises out of some oral or written claim, the other out of an actual physical entry on the land. Both of these are transactions under the rule heretofore given, but are they both connected with the same subject of action? Evidently we are obliged to define the words "subject of action" to reach an answer. If we say that the subject of the action is the plaintiff's alleged right alone,—i. e., his title,—then could it be said logically that the physical trespass on the land was in any way connected with the subject? On the other hand, if we say that the subject of the action is the land alone, and not the plaintiff's title thereto, could it be said logically that the false claim of title was connected with the subject? The questions suggest that either holding would be too narrow, and that with better reason it should be said in a case like the present that the subject of the action is composed both of the land and the plaintiff's alleged title, taken together. Indeed, this seems the only logical holding. How can the title be dissociated from the land itself? The land must exist in order that there be any title; and both land and title must exist together if the plaintiff have any standing in court or any right to ask for affirmative action by a court of justice in his behalf.

Now, if the subject of the action in cases like the present be the land and the plaintiff's title taken together, then any transaction which is connected with either the land or the title is connected with the subject of action, because the two are inseparable.

There are two reasons why, in actions involving conflicting claims or interests in specific real or personal property, the property itself must be considered as an essential part, at least, of the subject of the action: First. Because, if it be not so, then the Code provisions before cited, which provide (1) that certain classes of actions shall be tried in the county where the subject of the action is situated; and (2) that the summons may be served by publication where the subject of the action is real or personal property in this state, become nonsense, because they can apply to nothing. Second. Because, when it is admitted that in using the words "subject of action" the Code makers had in mind the idea of subject-matter, as used before the Code, it must also be admitted that the words cover the specific real estate in any action where conflicting claims to such real estate are in issue. "Subject-matter" as used before the Code, when applied to such a case, meant the real estate itself. Burrall v. Eames, 5 Wis. 260. But, if it were to be held that the words in question refer only to specific real and personal property, then they could not apply to the actions involving only rights and wrongs not connected with specific property, and as to these latter actions, comprising the great mass of ordinary litigation, there would either be no subject of action at all, or the subject of action would be something of entirely different nature. It seems that something like a uniform rule should be established if it be possible. The Code makers were striving for uniformity as well as for simplicity. If some essential basic element can be found which inheres in all causes of action, local as well as transitory, real as well as personal, which, in actions involving specific property, can be joined with the specific property, both together forming the subject, and which in other actions can stand alone or in connection with the intangible thing involved, like the character in slander, and form the subject, it would seem that this might be said to solve the problem.

It seems to us that this basic and fundamental element is to be found in the plaintiff's main primary right, for the invasion of which the action is brought. Thus, in controversies involving conflicting claims to specific real or personal property, the property itself plus the right, title, interest, claim, or lien upon that property which the plaintiff alleges, and which gives him his standing in court, is to be considered as forming the subject of the action, and he may join to his first cause of action another based on a different transaction from the first, but which is connected with reasonable directness with either the property itself or with the plaintiff's title or interest therein alleged in the first cause of action. It seems to us that this solution of the questions harmonizes all of the Code provisions which use the term, and that it also solves to a very large extent, if not completely, the difficulties found by Mr. Pomeroy, and which seem to have compelled him to disagree with himself. We think the principle will be found to be capable of satisfactory application to actions not involving property, but simply involving personal rights and wrongs. As said by Mr. Pomeroy at § 651: "The primary right, however, always exists, and is always the very central element of the controversy around which all the other elements are grouped, and to which they are subordinate."

We therefore come to this conclusion: That in possessory and proprietary actions, whether involving real or personal property, the subject of action is composed of the plaintiff's primary right, together with the specific property itself. Further than this we do not go, except to say that as it seems to us, the plaintiff's primary right, which is alleged to have been invaded, must in all other actions be held to be an essential part, and perhaps in many cases the whole, of the "subject of the action," as those words are used in the Code.

It follows that the two causes of action before us are properly joined.

Order affirmed.

Vinje, J., took no part.

NORTH DAKOTA SUPREME COURT.

JOHN J. LEE, Sheriff, Resp't.,
v.

JOHN CHARMLEY
and

V. J. WINSET et al., Appts.

(— N. D. —, 129 N. W. 448.)

Officer — bond — liability of sureties.

1. The sureties upon the official bond of a deputy sheriff, who undertake that he Headnotes by ELLSWORTH, J.

Note. — Liability of sureties on bond of officer for an illegal arrest.

Analogous questions relating to the liability of sureties on officer's bonds have been previously annotated in this series. The note appended to Growbarger v. United States Fidelity & G. Co. 11 L.R.A. (N.S.) 758, deals with the liability of sureties on the bond of a peace officer for the death of a person, due to the act or default of the principal or one of his deputies.

And the question of the liability of sureties on a constable's bond for assault made in serving or executing a civil writ or process is discussed in the note appended to Greenberg v. People, 8 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1223.

Attention is also directed to the note appended to Martin v. Smith, 29 L.R.A. (N.S.) 463, on the question of the liability of sureties on the bond of a peace officer for the latter's act in killing or injuring one person while attempting to execute criminal process against another.

The precise question indicated by the foregoing title was considered in subdivision VI. of the note to Leger v. Warren, 33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

shall faithfully and impartially discharge the duties of his office, are liable for any unlawful or oppressive act done by such officer under color or by virtue of his office.

Same — purpose of bond.

2. The purpose of an official bond is to provide indemnity against malfeasance and misbehavior in public office, the misuse of powers belonging to the office, and the assumption, under guise of official action, of powers not belonging to it. All acts so performed, though unlawful or wrongful, are official acts within the meaning of an undertaking that an officer shall faithfully and impartially discharge the duties of his office; and as such may be reasonably considered to have been within the contemplation of the sureties at the time they entered into the undertaking, as constituting a breach of its conditions.

Same — arrest under pretended warrant — liability.

3. A deputy sheriff who, falsely claiming to have a warrant for the arrest of a person not formally charged with crime of any kind, goes to his house in the nighttime, and, under guise of the authority of his office, arrests and takes such person into custody, has committed an unauthorized and unlawful act under color of his office, for which the sureties upon his official bond are liable in a proper action.

(December 31, 1910.)

A PEAL by defendant's Winset et al. from an order of the district court for Ward County overruling a demurrer to the complaint in a suit upon the bond of a deputy sheriff. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

51 L.R.A. 193, and only cases decided since the preparation of that note are included within the present one.

The bond of a city marshal, stipulating that he will faithfully perform the duties required or to be required of him by ordinance or law, is sufficiently broad to cover an unlawful arrest. Com. use of Rosenthal v. Teel, 33 Ky. L. Rep. 741, 111 S. W. 340. And the same is true of a policeman's bond stipulating that he will "well and truly perform each and all of the duties . . . required of him by law." Connelly v. American Bonding & T. Co. 113 Ky. 903, 69 S. W. 959.

The surety's undertaking is, and is only; that his principal shall faithfully discharge the duties of his office according to law; and when the officer, assuming to act as such, commits a wrong under circumstances not imposing upon him any duty to act at all, the wrong is not a violation of any official duty, and consequently is not embraced within the sponsorship of the surety. Felonicher v. Stingley, 142 Cal. 630, 76 Pac. 504; Gomez v. Scanlan, 155 Cal. 528, 102 Pac. 12.

Messrs. Murphy & Woledge, for appellants:

An officer must have something—other than mere holding of office—which appears to give him authority to act, which, if valid, would authorize the act, to bring his act within color of his office.

State, Allen, Prosecutor, v. Conover, 28 N. J. L. 224, 78 Am. Dec. 54; Taylor v. Parker, 43 Wis. 78; Gerber v. Ackley, 32 Wis. 233, 37 Wis. 43, 19 Am. Rep. 751; Kendall v. Aleshire, 28 Neb. 707, 26 Am. St. Rep. 367, 45 N. W. 167; Marquis v. Willard, 12 Wash. 528, 50 Am. St. Rep. 906, 41 Pac. 889; Huffman v. Koppelkom, 8 Neb. 344, 1 N. W. 243; Ottenstein v. Alpaugh, 9 Neb. 237, 2 N. W. 219; State use of Wilson v. Fowler, 88 Md. 601, 42 L.R.A. 849, 71 Am. St. Rep. 452, 42 Atl. 201; Feller v. Gates, 40 Or. 543, 56 L.R.A. 630, 91 Am. St. Rep. 492, 67 Pac. 416; Greenberg v. People, 225 Ill. 174, 8 L.R.A.

(N.S.) 1223, 116 Am. St. Rep. 127, 80 N. E. 100; McLendon v. State, 92 Tenn. 520, 21 L.R.A. 738, 22 S. W. 200; State ex rel. Bruns v. Clausmeier, 154 Ind. 599, 50 L.R.A. 73, 77 Am. St. Rep. 511, 57 N. E. 541; Leger v. Warren, 62 Ohio St. 500, 51 L.R.A. 193, 78 Am. St. Rep. 738, 57 N. E. 506; Brown v. Wallis, 100 Tex. 546, 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1019, 101 S. W. 1070; Allison v. People, 6 Colo. App. 83, 39 Pac. 903; Palmer v. St. Albans, 60 Vt. 427, 6 Am. St. Rep. 131, 13 Atl. 569; State ex rel. Russell v. Hendricks, 88 Mo. App. 560; Dysart v. Lurty, 3 Okla. 601, 41 Pac. 724; San Luis Obispo County v. Farnum, 108 Cal. 562, 41 Pac. 447.

An official bond is not an engagement for general good behavior on the part of the principal, nor an undertaking that he shall in all things keep the peace, but rather a limited and literal contract to the effect

The doctrine that where the act of the officer is done not virtute officii, but colore officii, the bondsmen are liable only when the illegality consists in an abuse of authority, as distinguished from a usurpation, was apparently regarded as the proper criterion in State ex rel. Brennan v. Dierker, 101 Mo. App. 636, 74 S. W. 153. The decision in this case was that the sureties were not liable, for the reason that the arrest complained of was not colore officii, although the officer thought he was acting officially, and was personally liable for his misconduct, the arrest having been made without a warrant, for a misdemeanor not committed in his view, and his bond having been conditioned merely for the faithful performance of his duty.

So, the failure to show that a constable was acting under color of his office is fatal to a complaint upon his bond, alleging that he, in his official capacity, and without authority, law, or right, maliciously made an assault upon the plaintiff, compelling her to submit to an examination of her person, and taking from her certain property. Felonicher v. Stingley, supra.

And a complaint in an action for the unlawful arrest of the plaintiff was held in Connelly v. American Bonding & T. Co. supra, to be insufficient as against a demurrer of the surety upon the officer's bond, for failing properly to allege that the arrest was without authority of law.

A sheriff acts extraofficially in making an arrest in his own county, upon a warrant issued in another county, by a justice of the peace, and directed to any sheriff or constable of that county, but without having been indorsed by a magistrate of the former county, as required by statute; and in such circumstances, the sureties on the sheriff's bond cannot be held responsible in an action for false imprisonment, although the sheriff is personally liable. Sneed v. McFatridge, 43 Tex. Civ. App. 592, 97 S. W. 113. 33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

So, where an arrest is made under a void warrant, or without a warrant, in a case where a warrant is required, or if not made in such circumstances as justify the arrest without a warrant, the officer does not act officially, so as to warrant an action upon his official bond. People use of Tamplin v. Beach, — Colo. —, 113 Pac. 513.

And it is no part of the duty of a constable, for which his bondsmen are in any way liable, to make affidavit for the arrest of a party, and no action can be maintained against them by one arrested on such an affidavit, no matter how maliciously it may have been made. State ex rel. Ostman v. Meyer, 138 Mo. App. 507, 120 S. W. 116.

But it was held in Roberts v. Brown, 43 Tex. Civ. App. 206, 94 S. W. 388, that where a sheriff made an unlawful arrest upon a warrant issued upon his own void complaint to the justice of the peace, and kept the prisoner confined for a period of forty hours, with no opportunity to make bond, the sureties upon the sheriff's bond would be liable in damages.

The requirement that the complaint must show that the act of the constable must have been committed under color of office, or in the line of his official duties, was held in Gomez v. Scanlan, 155 Cal. 528, 102 Pac. 12, to have been satisfied as against general demurrer by allegations that the constable, acting in his capacity as constable, did arrest and imprison the plaintiff on a pretended charge of grand larceny, such a charge being one upon which he had authority as a peace officer to make an arrest without a warrant.

The sureties on the bond of an officer, conditioned for the faithful discharge of his duties, are liable thereon to the party injured, where, in making an arrest under color of his office, with or without warrant, and without probable cause, he uses more force and violence than is necessary. Drolesbaugh v. Hill, 64 Ohio St. 257, 60 N. E. 202.

that such officer will not violate some duty resting upon him as a public officer.

Feller v. Gates, 91 Am. St. Rep. 533, note; Gerber v. Ackley, 37 Wis. 43, 19 Am. Rep. 751; Kendall v. Aleshire, 28 Neb. 707, 26 Am. St. Rep. 367, 45 N. W. 167; Marquis v. Willard, 12 Wash. 528, 50 Am. St. Rep. 906, 41 Pac. 889; State use of Willson v. Fowler, 88 Md. 601, 42 L.R.A. 849, 71 Am. St. Rep. 452, 42 Atl. 201; State v. Timmons, 78 Am. St. Rep. 420, note.

Messrs. John E. Greene, R. H. Bosard, and G. W. Twiford, for respondent:

The sureties on an official bond are liable for acts done by the principle colore officii.

Lammon v. Feusier, 111 U. S. 17, 28 L. ed. 337, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 286.

It is as much the duty of an officer to refrain from corruptly usurping or assuming powers not pertaining to his office as to refrain from corruptly exercising those which properly belong to it.

State v. Wedge, 24 Minn. 150; Hall v. Tierney, 89 Minn. 407, 95 N. W. 219; Clancy v. Kenworthy, 74 Iowa, 740, 7 Am. St. Rep. 508, 35 N. W. 427; Turner v. Sisson, 137 Mass. 191; Drolesbaugh v. Hill, 64 Ohio St. 257, 60 N. E. 202; Ader v. Foley, 50 La. Ann. 1262, 24 So. 333; State v. Leach, 60 Me. 58, 11 Am. Rep. 172.

Ellsworth, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The action in which this appeal is taken is brought by the plaintiff, as sheriff of Ward county, against defendant Charmley, as a deputy sheriff appointed by him, and the other defendants as sureties upon the deputy's bond. The conditions of the bond, as set out in the complaint, are to the effect that "if the said John Charmley shall faithfully and impartially discharge the du-

The decision in Bonebrake v. Hunt, 11 Ariz. 98, 89 Pac. 544, is merely to the effect that the failure to allege that the arrest was unlawful rendered insufficient a complaint upon a sheriff's bond for the arrest of the plaintiff by the sheriff's deputy, although it negatived conditions which characterize lawful arrest, and the court, having so held, declared that it was unnecessary to determine whether, in any event, the sheriff and the sureties upon his bond could be held responsible for an unlawful arrest by the deputy.

But it has been held that a sheriff is liable on his bond for the killing by a deputy of a third person under the mistaken belief that he was one for whose arrest on a charge of felony he had a warrant, and that the killing was necessary to prevent his escape, where the statute provides that the sheriff shall be liable upon his bond for any misconduct or default of his deputies. Johnson v. Williams, 111 Ky. 289, 54 L.R.A. 220, 98 Am. St. Rep. 416, 63 S. W. 759.

Punitive damages cannot be awarded against a sheriff's bond for the wrongful act of the sheriff's deputy in killing a third person under the mistaken belief that he was a felon for whose arrest the deputy had a warrant, and that the killing was necessary to prevent his escape. Ibid. This case was regarded in Scott v. Com. 20 Ky. L. Rep. 571, 93 S. W. 668, as holding that in no case can punitive damages be recovered on the bond of a police officer, the latter case holding that only compensatory damages could be recovered on the bond of a town marshal for false arrest.

A judgment against a United States marshal and the sureties on his bond, for the false arrest and imprisonment of the plaintiff under a warrant for the arrest of another, was affirmed in Bailey v. Warner, 55 C. C. A. 329, 119 Fed. 395, where it seems not to have been questioned that the officer's act was one for which the sureties might be responsible.

The rule that, in respect of the amount recoverable, the responsibility of the surety and the liability of the officer are measured by the same standard, was invoked in Gomez v. Scanlan, supra, where it was held that the measure of damages was not that adopted in actions for breach of contract, but was the amount which would compensate the plaintiff for all the detriment proximately caused by the injury, whether it had been anticipated or not, such being the statutory rule for fixing the damages in cases of tort.

It was held in United States Fidelity & G. Co. v. Crittenden, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 131 S. W. 232, that where a policeman's bond conditioned for the faithful performance of his official duty was made payable to the city, no action could be maintained against the sureties by a person unlawfully arrested by the policeman, in the absence of some express provision of law authorizing suits by the persons injured, although an action might be maintained against the officer independently of the bond.

But under a statute providing that the obligation required for the discharge or performance of any public office shall be a covenant to the commonwealth, and that actions may be brought on any such bond in the name of the commonwealth, for the benefit of any person injured by a breach of the condition, the right of one unlawfully arrested by a city marshal to maintain an action upon the latter's bond without making the city a party is not affected by the fact that a covenant in the bond is made to the city (Connely v. American Bonding & T. Co. 113 Ky. 903, 69 S. W. 959); or that it is made to the commonwealth, for the use of the city (Com. use of Rosenthal v. Teel, 33 Ky. L. Rep. 741, 111 S. W. 340).

L. A. W.

ties of said office of deputy sheriff, and render a true account of all moneys and property of every kind that shall come into his hands as such officer, and pay over and deliver the same according to law, then the above obligation to be void," etc. Then follows an allegation in these words: "That on or about the 8th day of July, 1905, at or about the hour of 11:30 P. M., in the nighttime, in the city of Kenmare, Ward county, North Dakota, the defendant, John Charmley, a deputy sheriff, did go to the home of one Edward J. Brown, and did, as deputy sheriff, wrongfully, unlawfully, and without reasonable cause or authority of law, place under arrest and take into custody the said Edward J. Brown; that said John Charmley, as deputy sheriff, at the time said arrest was made, had no warrant for the arrest of said Edward J. Brown, nor was there at such time any complaint filed charging the said Edward J. Brown with any crime, nor was any crime committed by the said Edward J. Brown; that the said John Charmley, as deputy sheriff, represented at the time said arrest was made that he had a warrant for the arrest of Edward J. Brown, which statement was false, and the said John Charmley compelled the said Edward J. Brown to accompany him as such deputy sheriff, and as such deputy sheriff took him into custody; that said acts were in violation of the duties of said John Charmley as deputy sheriff, and by reason thereof the said John Charmley did not faithfully and impartially perform his duties as deputy sheriff in the premises; that such acts were in violation of the conditions of the bond of said John Charmley as deputy sheriff, hereinbefore set forth, for the faithful performance of his duties as such deputy sheriff." Then follow allegations to the effect that, by reason of said unlawful acts of defendant Charmley, the plaintiff, as sheriff of Ward county, was sued by said Edward J. Brown, and a judgment recovered against him by said Brown in the sum of $652.65; that the defendant sureties were duly notified to come in and defend said action, and that one of them appeared and took some steps in the procedure; that the plaintiff was compelled to pay the amount of said judgment, and to expend large sums of money in the defense of said action, to his damage in the aggregate in the sum of $906.65, for which sum he demands judgment against the defendants. The defendant sureties appeared and jointly interposed a demurrer to the complaint on the ground that it does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action against them. A trial upon the issues of law presented by this demurrer was had before the 33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

district court of Ward county, which made an order overruling the demurrer. From this order of the district court the sureties have appealed to this court.

The only point, therefore, presented by this appeal or urged in this court, is that based upon the contention of appellants' counsel that the complaint does not state a cause of action against appellant sureties for the reason that the facts set forth in the complaint do not, though admitted, constitute such a breach of the official bond given by defendant Charmley as deputy sheriff as to render liable the appellants as sureties; that the complaint negatives the conclusion that the acts complained of were the official acts of the deputy sheriff, or that he acted under "color of office," and, on the contrary, show that he was a mere private trespasser.

The courts in their consideration of those acts of public officers which result in liability to the sureties upon their official bonds have found it convenient to divide such actions into three distinct classes: (1) Acts done by virtue of office; (2) acts done under color of office; and (3) acts done in a purely private or individual capacity. By an absolute agreement of authority, the sureties upon an official bond are liable for wrongful acts within the first class, and are not liable for those of the third class. Regarding those acts falling within the second class, there has been for generations an irreconcilable conflict of authority. We are cited to long lines of cases in which the holding of liability or nonliability of the sureties is based entirely upon the distinction between acts done virtute officii and colore officii; the courts of many different states having announced holdings that are diametrically opposed. The learned discussions contained in the opinions handed down in these cases are interesting, and serve admirably to accentuate the remark of the supreme court of Maryland that when authorities so eminent as Chief Justice Green of New Jersey, Judge Cowen of New York, and Judge Ruffin of North Carolina, are found in accord with one principle of liability, and Judge Shaw of Massachusetts, Tilghman of Pennsylvania, Bronson of New York, Thurman of Ohio, and Justice Gray of the Supreme Court of the United States, are committed to the opposite view, "it is apparent that the question is one of much difficulty." State use of Wilson v. Fowler. 88 Md. 601, 42 L.R.A. 849, 71 Am. St. Rep. 452, 42 Atl. 201. The distinction made between the official acts that serve as the bases of these conflicting lines of authority is that "acts done virtute officii are where they are within the authority of the officer, but in doing them he exercises that authority improperly, or abuses the confidence which the law reposes in him; whilst acts done colore officii are where they are of such a nature that his office gives him no authority to do them." Brandt, Suretyship, 3d ed. § 690; Gerber v. Ackley, 37 Wis. 43, 19 Am. Rep. 751; People ex rel. Kellogg v. Schuyler, 4 N. Y. 187. Under the rule of the common law adopted by the courts of New York, New Jersey, North Carolina, and Wisconsin, the sureties upon an official bond were held liable only for wrongful acts of the officer done virtute officii. Acts done colore officii within the meaning of the definition above quoted were classed as unofficial acts, in doing which the officer was a mere trespasser, and for which the sureties were not bound. State, Allen, Prosecutor, v. Conover, 28 N. J. L. 224, 78 Am. Dec. 54.

The almost universal current of the later cases, however, regards wrongful acts of a public officer colore officii as official acts for which the sureties upon his bond are liable. Such is the holding of the courts of last resort of Pennsylvania, Maine, Massachusetts, Ohio, Virginia, Kentucky, Missouri, Iowa, Nebraska, Texas, California, Minnesota, Illinois, and of the Supreme Court of the United States. And in reviewing these authorities this court, in one of its former opinions, has remarked: "While there is a dispute among the authorities whether the sureties on a sheriff's bond are liable for the wrongful act of their principal in seizing the property of a third person, the more numerous decisions are found arrayed in support of the rule that they are liable, and these cases appear to us to have the best of the argument. See Lammon v. Feusier, 111 U. S. 17, 28 L. ed. 337, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 286, where the authorities are reviewed and where the doctrine we deem sound is enunciated." Welter v. Jacobson, 7 N. D. 32, 66 Am. St. Rep. 32, 73 N. W. 65. In accepting the principle that the sureties upon an official bond are liable for the acts of the officer done colore officii as well as virtute officii, we are aided by the admission of appellants' counsel in his brief to the effect that "if the court should hold that, under the allegations of the complaint, Charmley acted under color of office, then these appellants are bound. If it should be held that he acted individually, unofficially, respondent has failed to state a proper cause of action and appellants are not liable." With whatever controversy, therefore, that has waged between conflicting principles based on the distinction of official acts done by virtue of office and by color of office we are not concerned, and the only point that remains for our determination is. Were the acts of defendant Charmley done either by virtue of office or color of office, or were they such as lacked all official character?

Summarized, the allegations of the complaint are to the effect that Charmley, as deputy sheriff, in the nighttime, went to the home of Brown, and, announcing that he had in his possession a warrant for the arrest of Brown, as such deputy sheriff took him into custody and compelled him to accompany him; which acts, being wrongful, unlawful, and without reasonable cause or authority of law, caused the damage upon which the suit against his principal, the sheriff, was based. By reason of such acts, it is alleged Charmley did not faithfully and impartially perform his duties as deputy sheriff, in accordance with the conditions of his bond. This status of fact admitted, appellants strenuously contend that "the acts alleged by the complaint do not constitute such a breach of the official bond of said deputy sheriff as to hold these appellants liable as sureties;" that "an officer must have something other than mere holding of office, which appears to give him authority to act, which, if valid, would authorize the act." This contention has apparent support in many cases which seem to predicate color of office wholly upon the fact that the officer was armed with a warrant or some process of that character, directing him to do some official act; and, this being the case, the fact that the unlawful act complained of was committed against the person or property of a party not named in the writ did not deprive it of the "color" requisite to its official character. Lammon v. Feusier, supra, and cases cited therein. Distinctions such as this, however, seem to us to be fanciful refinements rather than substantial reasoning. It is true that Charmley, as deputy sheriff, was authorized to make an arrest at night without a warrant only in case he had reasonable cause to believe that the person arrested had committed a felony. Rev. Codes, 1905, § 9733. It is also true that the complaint expressly negatives any such authority by the statement that, at the time of the arrest, the man arrested had not committed any crime, and that his arrest was made "without reasonable cause or authority of law." Yet it appears that Charmley went to Brown's house, demeaning himself as an officer, claiming that he had authority for making an arrest, and made the arrest, and compelled Brown to accompany him in his official character. In such character he was authorized to make the arrest if provided with a warrant, or without in case he had reasonable cause for believing that Brown had committed a felony. He pretended to have such authority, and intimidated, as we may presume, by such pretense, Brown, without resistance, submitted to arrest and to being held in custody. Charmley's official insignia was the means by which he was enabled to accomplish the wrongful act. It may safely be assumed that had he gone at such time and under such circumstances as a private citizen, he would have met with immediate resistance. He abused authority derived wholly from the fact that he held the office of deputy sheriff. An act so performed by a public officer seems to us clearly to have been done under color of office within any accepted definition of that term. Certainly, his act was given a color as distinctive as though he had held a warrant directed against a person other than Brown, which state of fact, according to the holding of all later authority, constitutes color of office. Viewed from any standpoint, it was gross misbehavior in office, the wrongful character of which was greatly aggravated by reason of being done under pretense of official authority. It is argued that the authority he assumed to exercise was wholly usurped; but "it is as much his duty as an officer to refrain from corruptly usurping or assuming powers not pertaining to his office as to refrain from corruptly exercising those which properly belong to it." State v. Wedge, 24 Minn. 160; Hall v. Tierney, 89 Minn. 407, 95 N. W. 219. The condition of his bond to which the defendant sureties subscribed was that he should "faithfully and impartially discharge the duties of said office of deputy sheriff." To use the powers pertaining to such office as a means of maltreating, oppressing, or injuring another within the jurisdiction in which he was authorized to exercise the functions of his office was not a faithful or impartial discharge of its duties. As said by the supreme court of Iowa in a case where a constable arrested without a warrant and maltreated a person whom he had no reasonable cause to believe was guilty of crime: "His act was in the line—direction—of official duty, but was illegal, because it was in excess of his duty. In the discharge of official functions he violated his duty and oppressed the plaintiff. This is all there is of it. If, in exercising the functions of his office, defendant is not liable for acts because they are illegal or forbidden by law, and for that reason are trespasses or wrongs, he cannot be held liable on the bond at all, for the reason that all violations of duty and acts of oppression result in trespasses or wrongs. For lawful acts in discharge of his duty, he, of course, is not liable." Clancy v. Kenworthy, 74 Iowa, 33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

740, 7 Am. St. Rep. 508, 35 N. W. 427: "An official act . . . means any act done by the officer in his official capacity under color and by virtue of his office." Turner v. Sisson, 137 Mass. 191.

We think, therefore, that the allegations of the complaint set out a wrongful malfeasance of Charmley, committed under the guise of an official act unquestionably under color of office, and with characteristics which might almost warrant a holding that it was done by virtue of office. Certainly it is such an act as the sureties upon his official bond should reasonably be held to have had in contemplation as constituting a breach of its conditions at the time they entered into their undertaking. Greenberg v. State, 225 Ill. 174, 80 N. E. 100, 8 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1223, 116 Am. St. Rep. 127, and note.

The action of the District Court in holding that the complaint stated facts constituting a cause of action against the defendant sureties was proper, and its order is affirmed.

All concur except Carmody, J., who did not participate in the decision.

GEORGIA SUPREME COURT.

R. E. MASON, Plff. in Err.,
v.
NASHVILLE, CHATTANOOGA, & ST.
LOUIS RAILWAY COMPANY.

(135 Ga. 741, 70 S. E. 225.)

Evidence — foreign record — unverified transcript.

1. What purported to be a certified transcript from the docket of the mayor's court of a town in Alabama, certified by a person signing himself clerk of such court, with no seal attached, and not certified as provided by the acts of Congress, adopted into the Code of this state (Civil Code 1910,

Headnotes by LUMPKIN, J.

Note. — Carriers: abusive language as justification for assault on passenger by a train employee.

For cases involving the general question as to the liability of a carrier for an assault by its employee upon a passenger, see note to Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Bush, 32 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1201.

Some of the cases hold that abusive or insulting language on the part of the passenger will not justify an assault by the carrier's employee, so as to relieve the carrier from damages resulting from the assault. Birmingham R. Light & P. Co. v. Mullen, 138 Ala. 614, 35 So. 701; Coggins §§ 5824, 5827), was not admissible in evidence.

(a) Nor was it rendered admissible because a person who testified that he presided in the mayor's court of the town mentioned stated that he had fined the defendant in that proceeding, and that he did not recollect the amount of the fine, "but the amount will be shown by the attached papers certified by the city clerk."

Venue — bringing action away from home — effect.

2. Where an action against a railroad company was brought in a county of this state, for the purpose of recovering damages on account of an injury alleged to have occurred in Alabama, after the judge had stated to the jury that the plaintiff had a right to bring his suit in any county of this state where the defendant company had an office or agent, it was error to add, "but the fact that he brought it away from his home, and among strangers, is a circumstance you may consider in so far as it may throw light, or tend to throw light, upon the alleged transaction."

Trial — instruction — duty of carrier.

3. In an action to recover against a railroad company on account of a battery committed by its conductor on a passenger, it was not a correct statement of the rule of duty on the part of the company towards the passenger to charge: "I charge you that carriers must treat their passengers

v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 18 Ill. App. 620; Hanson v. Urbana & C. Electric Street R. Co. 75 Ill. App. 474; Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. v. Davis, 44 Ind. App. 375, 89 N. E. 403; Danziger v. Interborough Rapid Transit Co. 104 N. Y. Supp. 845; McDade v. Norfolk & W. R. Co. 67 W. Va. 582, 68 S. E. 378.

Thus, in Neuer v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 143 Mo. App. 402, 127 S. W. 669, it was held that a carrier is liable for assault by its conductor under such circumstances precisely as the conductor would be liable personally.

In Williams v. Gill, 122 N. C. 967, 29 S. E. 879, the court says: "Insulting language does not justify an assault, and certainly an employee of a common carrier, on duty upon the carrier's train, ought to be the last to make an assault for insulting language used to him, for he stands in relation to a passenger as a protector and a guard."

In Coleman v. Yazoo & M. Valley R. Co. 90 Miss. 629, 43 So. 473, it was held that the company would be excused from liability for the conductor's act if he struck the passenger in response to abusive and insulting language, and not as a means of self-defense. It is to be noted, however, that while the assault was upon a passenger, the action was brought by an innocent bystander, who was accidentally injured by the conductor's act.

Other cases, however, hold that abusive language by a passenger toward the carrier's employee may relieve the carrier from liability for an assault by the employee upon the passenger. Wise v. South Covington & C. R. Co. 17 Ky. L. Rep. 1359, 34 S. W. 894.

Cases taking this view do so not so much on the ground that insulting language will justify the assault, as on the ground of contributory negligence on the part of the passenger in unfitting the employee from properly observing his duty toward passengers.

Thus, in Peavy v. Georgia R. & Bkg. Co. 81 Ga. 485, 12 Am. St. Rep. 334, 8 S. E. 70, where plaintiff was armed with a pistol and used profane and obscene language, and the conductor armed himself and ejected 33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

him from the train, and after being expelled and warned not to board the train again, he replied with grossly vituperative obscenity and profanity, whereupon the conductor shot him, the court, in denying recovery, says: "But for his fault, the conductor would not have been brought into a state of excitement from danger and insult which unfitted him for discharging his proper duties, either to the company or to the passenger. Whether the conductor was more or less in fault than the plaintiff was in the shooting, certainly the plaintiff was more in fault than the company; because the plaintiff was there upon the ground, stirring up excitement, and bringing on danger both to the conductor and himself. He unfitted the conductor for exercising the care and prudence that were essential to guarding the interest of the company, and essential to performing in a proper manner his duty to the company or to the plaintiff."

And to the same effect is City Electric R. Co. v. Shrophshire, 101 Ga. 33, 28 S. E. 508.

And the provocative language on the part of plaintiff may relieve the carrier from liability for the assault, though it would not be a defense to a criminal or civil action against the employee personally. Rohrbach v. Pullman's Palace Car Co. 166 Fed. 797; Scott v. Central Park, N. & E. River R. Co. 53 Hun, 414, 6 N. Y. Supp. 382.

Some cases which do not recognize abusive language as a complete defense for an assault by the carrier's employee, nevertheless recognize such conduct on the part of a plaintiff as an element in mitigation of damages. Jackson v. Old Colony Street R. Co. 206 Mass. 477, 30 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1046, 92 N. E. 725, 19 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 615; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Barger, 80 Md. 23, 26 L.R.A. 220, 45 Am. St. Rep. 319, 30 Atl. 560; Haman v. Omaha Horse R. Co. 35 Neb. 74, 52 N. W. 830; Freedman v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 89 App. Div. 486, 85 N. Y. Supp. 986.

In St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Myzell, 87 Ark. 123, 112 S. W. 203, and Mitchell v. United R. Co. 125 Mo. App. 1, 102 S. W. 661, while such conduct on the part of the passenger was not recognized respectfully, and protect them so far as they reasonably can, from injury or insult on the part of their employees."

Carrier — assault on passenger — justification.

4. Where a suit was brought against a railroad company for an assault and battery committed by its conductor upon a passenger, if the conduct of the passenger was such as to justify the act of the conductor, the company would not be liable. If the conductor's act was not justified, but mitigated by provocative words or conduct of the passenger at the time, such mitigation would inure to the benefit of the company. But if the conductor committed an assault and battery upon the passenger, and the words and conduct of the passenger were such as to arouse the anger of the conductor, and to tend to provoke a difficulty, but not such as to justify the act of the conductor, this would not free the company from liability.

(February 18, 1911.)

ERROR to the Superior Court for Dade County to review a judgment in defendant's favor in an action brought to recover damages for an alleged assault on plaintiff by defendant's servant, while a passenger on its train. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. J. P. Jacoway, H. P. Lumpkin, Paul D. Wright, J. E. Rosser, and W. M. Henry for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. Brown, Spurlock, & Brown and Payne, Foust, & Payne for defendant in error.

Lumpkin, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Mason brought suit against the Nashville, Chattanooga, & St. Louis Railway as a ground for mitigation of compensatory damages, it was held to preclude the recovery of exemplary damages.

And this rule is recognized in a dictum in Houston Electric Co. v. Park, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 135 S. W. 229.

And in Weber v. Brooklyn, Q. C. & Suburban R. Co. 47 App. Div. 306, 62 N. Y. Supp. 1, and Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Gerren, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 121 S. W. 905, it is held that while ordinarily abusive language will only be allowed to mitigate damages for an assault provoked thereby, yet, if the offensive language was addressed to the employee for the purpose of bringing about a conflict, it would prevent any recovery.

In Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Batchler, 37 Tex. Civ. App. 116, 83 S. W. 902, it was held that insulting words to train employees, while not a justification for an assault, may be shown in mitigation of damages; but that if there had been time for cool reflection after their use, or if the in-

Company to recover damages on account of an alleged assault by the conductor of the defendant. The defendant contended that the plaintiff was drunk and disorderly, used foul and abusive language to the conductor, and brought on the difficulty, and that the conductor was justified in what he did; or, at least, that the company was not liable. The jury found for the defendant. The plaintiff moved for a new trial, which was refused, and he excepted.

1. What purported to be a certified transcript from the docket of the mayor's court of Bridgeport, Alabama, certified by a person signing himself "Clerk Mayor's Court of Bridgeport," with no seal attached, and not certified as provided by the acts of Congress, adopted into our Code, was admitted in evidence over objection. The presiding judge, in admitting it, said: "As the certificate shows that he appeared and pleaded guilty, let it go in so far as it may show an admission that he was intoxicated on that day. Let it go in for that purpose." The certificate was not such as to render the purported transcript admissible in evidence. Civil Code 1895, §§ 5237, 5238 (Civil Code 1910, §§ 5824, 5827). Nor do we see how an inadmissible certificate became legal evidence because it undertook to certify to an admission or plea of guilty. This certificate was attached to answers of a witness to interrogatories, tending to show that the witness had presided in the mayor's court, and had fined the defendant in the proceeding when brought before him; and that he did not recollect the amount of the fine, "but the amount will be shown by the attached papers certified by the city clerk." This sulting words were themselves provoked by insulting words or disrespectful conduct of the employee, the principle of mitigation would not apply.

In Texas & P. R. Co. v. Williams, 10 C. C. A. 463, 23 U. S. App. 379, 62 Fed. 440, where defendant's conductor assaulted plaintiff in resenting an insult offered in response to an insult by the conductor in the first place, the defense offered was not on the ground that plaintiff's insult justified the assault, but that, in resenting the insult offered by plaintiff, the conductor was acting to avenge a personal wrong, and was therefore acting without the scope of his authority. It was held, however, that, inasmuch as the conductor was acting as conductor when he insulted plaintiff, this character would cover the whole transaction, and the question of the scope of his authority was not reasonably raised so as to require its submission to the jury.

R. L. S.

reference did not make the transcript admissible.

2. The court charged as follows: "Now, gentlemen, I will state in the outset that the plaintiff had the right to bring his suit in this county or in any other county where the defendant company had an office or agent; but the fact that he brought it away from his home, and among strangers, is a circumstance you may consider in so far as it may throw light, or tend to throw light, upon the alleged transaction." If the plaintiff had a legal right to bring suit in Georgia, this charge brought into the case a new issue,—his motive or reason for so doing. If this were an issue for the jury, the plaintiff and defendant could introduce evidence in regard to it, and a collateral question would be injected into the main trial. Suppose he had been asked why he had brought the suit in this state, and had replied that the rules of practice or evidence in Georgia were more favorable to such suits than those of Alabama,—would it have been competent to enter into a trial of the relative effect of the rules of practice or evidence of the two states on the subject of damage suits? Or suppose he had answered that the presiding judge of the circuit in Alabama where the suit could be brought was his personal enemy,—could evidence pro and con as to the truth of this statement have been introduced, and could a trial of the qualification of a foreign judge have been superimposed upon the trial of the claim for damages? Where would be the limit of the examination, if the motive or reason of a plaintiff in selecting a certain jurisdiction, where he had a right to sue, could be made an issue in the case?

The fact that counsel on both sides had commented on the location of the suit, and that the plaintiff's counsel orally requested a charge that the plaintiff had the right to bring it in the county where it was brought did not authorize an additional charge that his bringing it away from home and among strangers was a circumstance which the jury might consider, "in so far as it may throw light, or tend to throw light, on the alleged transaction." The "alleged transaction" was an assault by a conductor on a passenger, occurring in Alabama. How could a choice of jurisdiction, if lawful, throw light on the alleged assault? If there might be a case where something appearing on the face of the record or the manner of conducting a trial might furnish legitimate ground for the jury to consider, a mere selection authorized by law between two jurisdictions in which to sue does not open the door for a charge authorizing prejudicial inferences therefrom in regard to the alleged cause of action.

3. The court further charged: "I charge you that carriers must treat their passengers respectfully, and protect them, so far as they reasonably can, from injury or insult on the part of their employees." "A carrier of passengers is bound also to extraordinary diligence on behalf of himself and his agents to protect the lives and persons of his passengers." (Italics ours.) Civil Code 1895, § 2286 (Civil Code 1910, § 2714). This duty is due from the carrier, not only on behalf of himself, but on behalf of his agents to whom he intrusts its discharge. The charge quoted was erroneous.

4. A consideration of the charges of which complaint was made on the subject of the provocation by the plaintiff of the difficulty with the conductor will show that they were in some respects inaptly worded. But aside from any question of inaccuracy in expression on the part of the presiding judge, this court has said that if a passenger on a railroad train, by assault upon the conductor, or by abusive language, or the like, provokes a difficulty and unfits the conductor for the performance of his duties as such, and the latter commits an assault and battery upon him, the company is not liable, although the battery may not be entirely justifiable, or may be excessive in its character. In some instances even a broader mode of expression has been employed. See Peavy v. Georgia R. & Bkg. Co. 81 Ga. 485, 12 Am. St. Rep. 334, 8 S. E. 70; Georgia R. & Bkg. Co. v. Richmond, 98 Ga. 495, 25 S. E. 565; City Electric R. Co. v. Shropshire, 101 Ga. 33, 28 S. E. 508; Georgia R. & Bkg. Co. v. Hopkins, 108 Ga. 324, 75 Am. St. Rep. 39, 33 S. E. 965; Central R. Co. v. Motes, 117 Ga. 923, 62 L.R.A. 507, 97 Am. St. Rep. 223, 43 S. E. 990; Dannenberg v. Berkner, 118 Ga. 885, 889, 45 S. E. 682; Macon R. & Light Co. v. Mason, 123 Ga. 773, 776, 51 S. E. 569. Permission was given to review the decisions in these cases, so far as necessary on the point now under consideration. We will consider what such cases respectively decided; then whether the rulings actually made were sound and should be allowed to stand or not, so far as they seek to lay down a rule of law to be given in charge to the jury, or whether they should be reversed or modified. In doing this we will first deal with the matter more especially with reference to the statutes and decisions of this state, and will afterward refer somewhat to the decisions of courts in other jurisdictions, and to text-books based upon adjudications.

At the outset it is well to remember that in dealing with the general question of whether a master is liable for a wilful tort of his servant, the doctrine of respondet superior furnishes the basis for decision, if there are no statutory provisions on the subject; but that, in certain instances, there is a relation between the master and the injured person, out of which arises a duty of protection, and this duty is to be considered in addition to the general doctrine mentioned above. This is true as to a carrier and its passengers. The carrier owes to its passengers a duty of protection even against outsiders. A fortiori it must protect its passengers against its own employees engaged in the performance of its contract of carriage, and for whose acts in so doing it is responsible. Under Civil Code 1910, § 2714 (Civil Code 1895, § 2266), a carrier is bound not only for extraordinary diligence on his part or "behalf," but also on the part of his agents, for the protection of his passengers. A failure to bear this in mind has caused some confusion and lack of harmony in decisions.

Let us see what was actually decided in the cases under review, and what was the basis on which they rested. In Peavy v. Georgia R. & Bkg. Co. 81 Ga. 485, 12 Am. St. Rep. 334, 8 S. E. 70, there was strong evidence tending to show these facts: A drunken passenger, armed with a pistol, was using profane language while standing on the platform of a car forming part of a passenger train. The conductor approached him, and either took him by the collar or touched him on the shoulder, and admonished him not to swear. After some conversation, the plaintiff went into the car and took a seat. When the conductor came to take up tickets, the conversation was renewed, the passenger again cursing and using obscene language. He was profane and disorderly; and upon the conductor's trying to put him off the train, he drew a pistol. He had already made a threat as to what he would do if the latter sought to eject him. The conductor borrowed a pistol from a sheriff who happened to be a passenger, forced the passenger to lower his hand, and backed him off the train, and then shook the pistol in his face, and told him that if he got on the train any more he would get hurt. The passenger replied with grossly vituperative obscenity and profanity, too foul to be reproduced in the published opinion. The conductor shot at him, hitting him in the shoulder, and about the same time the plaintiff shot at the conductor, and they exchanged five shots, the conductor hitting three times, but not being hit. He still dared the conductor to leave the train, and when the latter went back into the car, endeavoring to get another pistol, the bell rope was pulled and the train moved on. Even then the ex-passenger attempted to board it again, and was last seen standing beside the track waving his pistol. The jury found a verdict for the plaintiff for $1,500. The presiding judge granted a new trial. On the next trial they found for him $2,250. The judge granted a second new trial. The plaintiff excepted, and assigned error on this grant. The actual ruling made by this court was thus stated: "We think the court below was well warranted in granting a second new trial." The judgment was affirmed, and we think rightly so. What was said by Bleckley, Ch. J., was in discussing the question whether, under the evidence, the presiding judge erred in not allowing the verdict to stand. No charge of the court was involved, and what was said in the opinion must be considered in view of the question actually before the court and decided. That distinguished jurist discussed the case in his usual terse and graphic style. Among other things he said: "He unfitted the conductor for exercising the care and prudence that were essential to guarding the interest of the company, and essential to performing in a proper manner his duty to the company or to the plaintiff. The plaintiff spoiled the instrument, and then sued the manager because the performer did not make good music. It was the plaintiff's fault that the conductor was out of tune." It was added that, according to the conductor's evidence, he was excusable; though it was also said that, even if the conductor was not altogether excusable, the plaintiff should not recover from the company.

30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

In Georgia R. & Bkg. Co. v. Richmond, 98 Ga. 495, 25 S. E. 565, a person purchased a railroad ticket, intending to take a train about to arrive, but failed to do so because he did not succeed in getting his baggage checked in time. He left the premises of the railroad company and registered at a hotel, intending to take a train for his destination the next morning. Afterward on the same day he returned to the station to make inquiries about, or arrange for the storage or checking of, his baggage, as he claimed. It was held that at the time he was not a passenger, but nevertheless had the right to go to the station for the purpose stated. While at the station, an altercation occurred about his being left, his treatment, and the failure to check his baggage for the train which he had desired to take. He sued the company for an assault and battery committed by the agent. One of the defenses was that the plaintiff had, without sufficient provocation, used to the agent opprobrious and insulting language, accompanied with sneers and contemptuous gestures; and this court was of the opinion that there was evidence to support this defense. It was held that the court erred in giving this charge without qualification: "Sneers, looks, or contemptuous gestures will not justify an assault by an agent of a railroad company upon one who has a ticket, and has become entitled under the contract to courteous treatment until the contract was fully carried out by the railroad company or its agents." A similar charge had been upheld in East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. v. Fleetwood, 90 Ga. 23, 15 S. E. 778, but it was said that in that case the plaintiff was a passenger actually riding upon the defendant's train, and entitled to protection at the hands of the conductor, who assaulted him, and that in other respects the facts were different. In the opinion in the Richmond Case, after declaring that for an unlawful battery by the agent upon one lawfully at the station to see about his baggage, the company would be responsible in damages, it was added: "It may, in this connection, be proper to add, however, that even if Richmond [the plaintiff] went to the station for the lawful purpose of attending to the business above mentioned, it was nevertheless incumbent upon him to treat the agent with the same respect due him by the agent. Therefore if, instead of so doing, he, without provocation, used insulting or opprobrious language to the agent, which naturally enough resulted in a difficulty, the company should not be held responsible. In other words, if Richmond, by his own improper behavior, unfitted the agent for exercising the care and prudence which were essential to his performing in a proper manner his duty to the company and to the plaintiff, the latter should not complain." The Peavy Case was cited as authority. The actual ruling made was that the plaintiff was not a passenger, and that a charge applicable to passengers did not apply to him. The quotation above shows on its face that it was an obiter dictum, and was something which the writer of the opinion merely thought it might be proper to add in connection with the ruling made. In the Peavy Case there was an actual assault and an endeavor to shoot the conductor, accompanied by threats and the foulest obscenity and profanity. In the Richmond Case, the evidence for the defendant tended to show harsh words, some rudeness of manner, and a declaration that the statement of the railroad agent that the plaintiff himself was at fault was untrue and the agent knew it. The altercation arose from a complaint on the part of the plaintiff that the agent had been negligent in the discharge of his duty, and had thereby caused him to get left. He used no profanity or obscenity, and committed no assault. It can hardly be thought that this court ever intended to lay down as a rule of law to be given in charge to juries that, if a person seeking to take passage on a train gets left by reason of his baggage not being checked and complains, even somewhat harshly, that the agent is at fault, he may be knocked down and beaten without responsibility on the part of the railroad company, if the act of the servant of the company is not justified. No such rule was established by the obvious obiter in that case.

In City Electric R. Co. v. Shropshire, 101 Ga. 33, 28 S. E. 508, there was evidence tending to show these facts: The plaintiff was not a passenger, but stopped an electric car and entered it in order to look for a bundle which he said belonged to his sister. He delayed the car, refused to get off, after it started caused it to stop again, and again refused to leave it, when the conductor informed him that the car was behind time, and that he could not "fool away" time with him. He replied by cursing the conductor and inviting the latter to put him off. When the conductor took hold of his arm, he struck the conductor in the breast and started to jump off, and while in the act of doing so, the conductor kicked him. As the car moved off he was hunting for rocks. The judge charged the jury, that "if the plaintiff brought about a difficulty, and a difficulty was had, and he brought it about by his own fault, and the defendant went too far and did more than it was authorized to do in ejecting him, in considering what amount of damage you would give, you would be authorized to diminish the amount of the damages proportionate to the fault of the plaintiff in bringing about the result that came upon him." It was held that this instruction cut the jury off from considering the evidence above mentioned for any other purpose save that of determining to what extent they should reduce the plaintiff's recovery, in the event they believed the conductor was not wholly justified in using the degree of force to which he resorted. In the headnote it was said that if, under the circumstances like those recited, the conductor used unnecessary violence in the expulsion, the company would not be liable in damages for personal injuries thus inflicted, provided the assault made upon its servant was of such a nature as to excite his passion, and render him unfit to perform duties devolving upon him. The reason for this ruling given in the headnote was as follows: "This is so because the person injured, by his own grossly improper conduct, is to be regarded as having forfeited his right to immunity from unnecessary violence, by inviting the conductor to disregard and abandon his official duties and enter into a personal encounter on his own account and upon his individual responsibility." Here there was an actual assault upon the conductor. But in the opinion broad language was used as to an act brought about "by his own grossly improper conduct." It was sought to suggest an analogy between the duty of a railroad company to use due care in the selection of machinery and appliances, and a duty to use similar care in the selection of its employees. This is an analogy that plainly does not exist, as between carrier and passenger. It is a confusion of the duty of a carrier to its passenger with that of the duty of a master to his servant, in which there is such an analogy. The master is not generally liable to one servant for the tort of a fellow servant, if he has used due care in the selection of the fellow servant. The statutory provision as to railroad employees, and the change made as to them by the act of August 16, 1909 (Civil Code 1910, §§ 2782-2787), need not be mentioned here. But a carrier is liable for the tort of its servant upon its passenger, and it is no reply to say that it used ordinary care, or even extraordinary care in selecting its servants. To hold that for a tort committed upon a passenger by a servant of the carrier, in the discharge of the business intrusted to him, the carrier could free itself from liability by showing that it used care in selecting the servant, would be to subvert all rules on that subject as heretofore laid down.

In Georgia R. & Bkg. Co. v. Hopkins, 108 Ga. 324, 75 Am. St. Rep. 39, 33 S. E. 965, in an action for an assault and battery by a night watchman of the company in charge of its station, the defense was that the plaintiff went to the station on a cold night, long before the arrival of the train, and when the station was not open, and asked the night watchman to be allowed to enter it and wait; that this was permitted, and the plaintiff and the persons with him were cautioned not to go among the cars standing near by or the cotton, on account of danger of fire from cigars and cigarettes; that, later in the night, the watchman had his attention directed to someone in a vacant car, and, on going to it, found the plaintiff and a woman, and another man and another woman, all engaged in acts of immorality; that the plaintiff took great offense at being required to come out, and cursed and abused the night watchman, continuing this after returning to the waiting room; that the watchman caught him by the coat sleeve and pulled him from the seat where he was, and he then assaulted the watchman and continued his insulting language; whereupon the watchman struck him. On the request of the defendant, the court charged: "If you believe that the plaintiff was guilty of immoral conduct in his acts in the depot of the defendant, and that, as a result of the discovery of such conduct, words followed between the plaintiff and the watchman, and that the plaintiff used insulting and opprobrious language to the watchman which naturally enough resulted in a difficulty, the company should not be held responsible for alleged assault by the watchman;" and added: "That I give you in charge in this connection, or with this added to it: That the assault by the watchman must not be disproportioned to the insult offered; it being still left a question of fact for you to determine whether the battery was disproportioned to the insult." On the authority of the Shropshire Case it was held error to add this qualification to the requested charge.

In Central R. Co. v. Motes, 117 Ga. 923, 62 L.R.A. 507, 97 Am. St. Rep. 223, 43 S. E. 990, a person who had been left by a railway train insisted on lying down and sleeping on the benches in the waiting room, and in spite of warnings from the company's servant in charge of the room that this was against the rule and could not be permitted, persisted in his conduct. Finally the official caught hold of him by the coat and pulled him from the position in which he was. The plaintiff contended that he was pulled out of his seat, and a button was broken off his coat, and that a threat was made to have him locked up. According to the evidence for the defendant, the company's servant caught hold of the plaintiff merely to pull him into a sitting position. It was said that "a passenger who displays a persistent determination to disregard such a regulation, and by his wrongful conduct so exasperates a servant of the company as to unfit him for properly performing the duty he owes his master with respect to his treatment of its patrons, cannot justly complain that the company's servant lost his temper and resorted to unnecessary force in compelling an observance of the regulation on the part of the passenger." The decision was by five justices, and was based on those already cited. This case seems to carry the doctrine of those preceding a step further. If the decision meant that, in an action for an assault or the use of unnecessary violence in the discharge of the duty of ejecting a person from a train or a station, the company is relieved from liability if the plaintiff is somewhat aggravating, and merely fails to promptly regard the rules of the company, it made a long advance.

In Dannenberg v. Berkner, 118 Ga. 885, 889, 45 S. E. 682, 683, it was merely said: "Nor was he [the court] bound to charge the principle laid down in Peavy v. Georgia R. & Bkg. Co. 81 Ga. 485, 12 Am. St. Rep. 334, 8 S. E. 70, the same not having been requested in writing,"—which does not seem to accord with statements in other cases supra, if the facts authorized the charge.

In Macon R. & Light Co. v. Mason, 123 Ga. 773, 51 S. E. 569, the question was whether a charge on the subject of punitive damages was authorized. A conductor of an electric car, in putting on the brake, struck a passenger who was standing on the platform of a "trailer." It was stated in the opinion that there was no dispute that this was unintentional, but there was a difference as to whether it was negligently done. The plaintiff demanded of the conductor what he meant by treating a gentleman that way; and the conductor responded that the passenger had no business standing there. The ruling was that this presented no case for a charge on the subject of punitive damages. In the course of the opinion it was said: "A conductor has been judicially recognized as human. . . . And this court is committed to the doctrine that if a passenger is himself responsible for exciting the anger of an agent or employee of a railway company, whereby he is for the time being unfitted for performing the exacting duties he owes to his employer with respect to his treatment of passengers, the company cannot be held accountable for improper conduct on the part of its servant." This was obiter dictum. There was no case of intentional assault, but a mere question of negligence.

These are the cases under review. It will be perceived that, from certain expressions used in the Peavy Case, carried by other cases into the domain of substantive propositions of law suitable to be given in charge, and aided by obiter dicta, has grown the present theory that if a passenger excites the anger of the servant of a railroad company, even of a conductor to whom is intrusted the company's duty of protecting him, whereby the conductor is for the time being unfitted for the performance of his duties, though the conductor unjustifiably assaults him, the company cannot be held liable.

Of course, if the conduct of the servant of the railroad was justifiable, neither the servant nor the master would be liable. But a rule which would free the carrier from liability, although holding its servant to whom it intrusted the performance of its contract of carriage not justifiable, presents, we think, an untenable doctrine. What shall be the legal test of the sufficiency of conduct on the part of the passenger to put a conductor "out of tune," or disqualify him by reason of anger from performing his duty, but not justify his action? Shall it be based on some theoretical average conductor; and, if so, shall we look to the average sensitiveness of conductors throughout the country, or only on a particular road? Or shall the question be determinable by the sensitive disposition and inflammable temperament of the particular conductor whose act is under consideration, and his condition at the time of the occurrence? Is it meant that a passenger must be entirely free from fault in order to hold a carrier liable for an assault and battery committed by its conductor? Or that imperfection of temper on the part of the conductor, if annoyed or aggravated by a passenger, will free the carrier from responsibility; and that the passenger alone is held to a rule of perfection in conduct, manner, and speech?

Let us now consider the statutes of this state and some of the decisions rendered before and after those above mentioned. By Civil Code 1895, § 3817 (Civil Code 1910, § 4413), it is declared that "every person shall be liable for torts committed by his . . . servant by his command, or in the prosecution and within the scope of his business, whether the same be by negligence or voluntary." By § 2321 (Civil Code 1910, § 2780), it is declared that "a railroad company shall be liable . . . for damage done by any person in the employment and service of such company, unless the company shall make it appear that their agents have exercised all ordinary and reasonable care and diligence; the presumption in all cases being against the company." Section 1861 (Civil Code 1910, § 2225) declares that "every corporation acts through its officers, and is responsible for the acts of such officers in the sphere of their appropriate duties." Section 902 of the Penal Code of 1895 (Penal Code 1910, § 925), codified from the act of 1881, declares that "the conductors of a train carrying passengers are invested with all the powers, duties, and responsibilities of police officers while on duty on their trains: Provided, nothing herein contained shall affect the liability of any railroad company for the acts of its employees. When a passenger is guilty of disorderly conduct, or uses any obscene, profane, or vulgar language, or plays any game of cards or other game of chance for money or other thing of value, upon any passenger train, the conductor of the train may stop it at the place where such offense is committed, or at the next stopping place of the train, and eject the passenger from the train, using only such force as may be necessary to accomplish the removal; and the conductor may command the assistance of the employees of the company and of the passengers on the train to assist in the removal," etc. These statutes were in force when the decisions under review were made. We fail to see in them any intimation that if a conductor is put "out of tune," or made angry by the conduct of a passenger, and commits an unlawful assault and battery upon him, or unjustifiably uses excessive force and violence upon him, the company shall not be liable. On the contrary, the statute last quoted contemplates that the passenger may be ejected if he is guilty of disorderly conduct, or uses obscene, profane, or vulgar language, or gambles on the train, but it distinctly declares that the conductor shall use "only such force as may be necessary to accomplish the removal," and also that nothing in the statute shall affect the liability of the company for the acts of its employees.

In Gasway v. Atlanta & W. P. R. Co. 58 Ga. 216 (decided before the Peavy Case in 81 Ga. 485, 12 Am. St. Rep. 334, 8 S. E. 70), it was ruled that "railroad companies are responsible to passengers for the torts of the conductors and other servants of the company employed in running trains, where such torts are committed in connection with the business intrusted to such servants, and spring from or grow immediately out of such business." The plaintiff, a negro, sought to obtain a check for the baggage of his wife, who had taken her seat in the car. The baggage master refused it, unless the plaintiff would produce his passenger, saying that this was not allowed by the rules of the company. As the plaintiff turned off, he said it was "a damned bad rule," if it was a rule. The baggage master testified that the plaintiff called him a damned fool. He jumped out of the car, followed the plaintiff alongside the train, and beat him. The conductor came up and took hold of the plaintiff's arm. It was held that for such a tort the railroad company was liable, and that a charge in regard to punitive damages should have been given on request. The court did not intimate at that time that the railroad would be freed from liability, if the baggage master was put "out of tune" by the language of the colored person with whom he was dealing, but not justified in the battery.

In Western & A. R. Co. v. Turner, 72 Ga. 292, 53 Am. Rep. 842, where a person entered a cab of a freight train and sought to take passage, which was refused, and a battery was committed by the conductor, it was held that it was the conductor's duty to refuse the passage in a polite manner, and give the plaintiff a reasonable opportunity to quit the cab, and, if he still refused to leave it, then to use such reasonable force as was necessary to eject him therefrom. It was said: "Whatever the conductor did in relation to either of these matters was, under the facts of this case, clearly done in the prosecution and within the scope of his business, and the company was liable for his conduct, even though it was voluntary." It was also held that the section of the Code (Civil Code 1910, § 3603) which states that "the principal is not liable for the wilful trespass of his agent, unless done by his command or assented to by him," must be construed in harmony with the section (Civil Code 1910, § 4413) which makes every person liable for torts committed by his servant, by his command, or in the prosecution and within the scope of his business, so as to allow both to remain of force in the cases to which they apply."

In Christian v. Columbus & R. R. Co. 79 Ga. 460, 7 S. E. 216, a widow brought suit for the homicide of her husband, alleging that, while in the office of the defendant's agent for the transaction of business pertaining to the agency, her husband was killed by the agent. In ruling in regard to a demurrer, it was said that "if the agent killed this lady's husband wrongfully, the company is liable for it, under the facts alleged in this declaration." There was also a count in the declaration which alleged that the agent was subject to mental aberration, and that the company employed him with knowledge of the fact. In regard to this it was said: "We think, also, that if the homicide was the result of insanity, and the railroad company was faultless in regard to employing the agent, anything that would excuse the agent criminally from the act would excuse the railroad company civilly." The opinion was written by the same justice who prepared that in the Peavy Case. The same case was again before this court in 97 Ga. 56, 25 S. E. 411, with the parties reversed in its statement. It was said (p. 58): "Of course, in such a case, if an employee, charged with the duty of executing upon the part of the master the contract of passenger carriage, should wrongfully inflict injuries upon the person of the passenger, the carrier would be liable." Again it was said (p. 60.): "If the patron were himself guilty of such disorderly conduct as would authorize his expulsion from the premises, the agent of the company might be authorized to expel him, using only such force as would be necessary to accomplish that purpose; but such conduct or provocation would not justify the homicide of the patron upon the part of the agent, and the company could not exonerate itself from liability for the consequences of the act of the agent done on its behalf, without showing that the agent was justified in the premises. Of course, if the homicide committed by the agent was justifiable, the justifiable act of the agent could not be made by relation the wrongful act of the company." And again: "If the homicide be wrongful, and committed in the course of the transaction of the business of the company, it can make no difference whether the offense committed by the agent be classed as manslaughter or murder, the company would nevertheless be liable; but if the agent was justified in its commission, no liability could arise against the company, whether the act was committed by him while engaged in the business of the company in the line of his duty, or otherwise." Here it was distinctly ruled that justification of the act of the agent was the test of whether the company would be freed from liability; not mere annoyance of the agent, or putting him "out of tune." It was said that it mattered not whether the homicide was murder or manslaughter as to relieving the company from liability. But a killing is not reduced from murder to manslaughter except by reason of an assault, or equivalent circumstances, justifying violent passion, but not amounting to justification of the act done. It cannot be that, if the servant of the company commits an unlawful battery, though aggravated or provoked by language or conduct of the passenger, the company is relieved from liability, but if the passenger dies from the effects of the battery, the company is liable. This would be to make the liability of the company for the same conduct of its servant depend rather upon the vigor or weakness of the passenger's constitution than upon the certainty of the law of the state.

In Thompson v. Wright, 109 Ga. 466, 469, 34 S. E. 560, 561, the following was quoted approvingly from Cooley on Torts: "The master who puts the servant in a place of trust or responsibility, or commits to him the management of his business, or the care of his property, is justly held responsible when the servant, through lack of judgment or discretion, or from infirmity of temper, or under the influence of passion aroused by the circumstances and the occasion, goes beyond the strict line of his duty or authority, and inflicts an unjustifiable injury upon another." In Central R. Co. v. Brown, 113 Ga. 414, 84 Am. St. Rep. 250, 38 S. E. 989, it was held that "a master is liable for the wilful torts of his servant, committed in the course of the servant's employment, just as though the master had himself committed them. This rule applies as well where the master is a corporation as where he is a private individual." In the opinion Chief Justice Simmons said: "The theory that one may be a servant one minute, and, the very next minute get angry, commit an assault, and in that act be not a servant, was to refined a distinction." It was also held that a master and servant might be jointly sued in trespass for a wilful tort committed by the servant within the scope of his employment. Now, suppose that, in the cases under review, the master and servant had been jointly sued in trespass for a battery committed by the servant,—how could it be said, consistently with the decision last quoted, that the jury should find that there was an unlawful battery, or a use of such excessive force as amounted to a battery, that this was a tort of the agent for which he was liable, but that the master was freed from liability because the injured person was guilty of conduct calculated to anger the servant, but not to justify him? Would there be a verdict for the plaintiff against the servant, but in favor of the master? At what point in the anger of the servant does his agency and the liability of the master cease? Or at what point, short of justification, does the liability of the agent continue and that of the master terminate? The relation of master and servant does not cease because the servant is mad, though aggravated. See also Savannah Street etc. R. Co. v. Bryan, 86 Ga. 312, 22 Am. St. Rep. 464, 12 S. E. 307; East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. v. Fleetwood, 90 Ga. 23, 15 S. E. 778; Southern R. Co. v. James, 118 Ga. 340, 63 L.R.A. 257, 45 S. E. 303; Savannah Electric Co. v. Wheeler, 128 Ga. 550, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1176, 58 S. E. 38.

In some jurisdictions opprobrious words will not justify a battery. In this state, on the trial of an indictment for an assault, or an assault and battery, the defendant may give in evidence to the jury any opprobrious words or abusive language used by the prosecutor or person assaulted or beaten, "and such words and language may or may not amount to a justification, according to the nature and extent of the battery, all of which will be determined by the jury." If the jury find that the opprobrious words of the passenger, or act by him amounting to an assault, would justify the servant, his conduct, so justified, would not furnish a ground for recovery against the master. But the rule works both ways. If the servant represents the master in his act, and the master is responsible for his tort, aggravation of the servant which will not justify him will not free the master from liability. Acts which may not amount to a justification may yet amount to a mitigation, and if the mitigating circumstances be strong, or the injury small, may furnish a basis only for recovery of nominal damages. Civil Code 1895, §§ 3905, 3892 (Civil Code 1910, §§ 4502, 4489). It would seem that provocation given by a passenger at a different time could not be considered. East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. v. Fleetwood, 90 Ga. 23(3), 15 S. E. 778, supra. In some jurisdictions it is held that words of provocation, not justifying, can only be considered to mitigate punitive damages. But in this state, where words may excuse entirely, they should be allowed to excuse in part; that is, mitigate. Thompson v. Shelverton, 131 Ga. 714, 63 S. E. 220. The test of whether the employee was justified was recognized as the correct one in New Orleans & N. E. R. Co. v. Jopes, 142 U. S. 18, 35 L. ed. 919, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 109, where it was held that "if an act of an employee be lawful and one which he is justified in doing, and which casts no personal responsibility upon him, no responsibility attaches to the employer therefor."

It will appear from what has been said that the decisions reviewed on the subject now under consideration are in conflict with earlier as well as later decisions of this court, and are not in harmony with the statute law or sound legal reason. They are therefore modified so as to accord with the rule herein enunciated. We are aware that in Harrison v. Fink, 42 Fed. 787, the United States circuit court upheld the direction of a verdict for a defendant railway company, and quoted at some length from the Peavy Case. This, however, had reference to the facts of the particular case, and whether they would authorize a finding for the plaintiff.

This opinion has already reached a length which precludes a full discussion of the views of text writers and of courts in other jurisdictions. It is sufficient to say that they are not in perfect harmony. Among 33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

the cases which hold abusive language, not justifying an assault by the conductor, will not free the company from liability, are Birmingham R. Light & P. Co. v. Mullen, 138 Ala. 614, 35 So. 701; Birmingham R. & Electric Co. v. Baird, 130 Ala. 350, 54 L.R.A. 752, 89 Am. St. Rep. 43, 30 So. 456; Weber v. Brooklyn, Q. C. & Suburban R. Co. 47 App. Div. 306, 62 N. Y. Supp. 1; Hanson v. European & N. A. R. Co. 62 Me. 84, 16 Am. Rep. 404; Haman v. Omaha Horse R. Co. 35 Neb. 74, 52 N. W. 830; Chicago & E. R. Co. v. Flexman, 103 Ill. 546, 42 Am. Rep. 33; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Barger, 80 Md. 23, 26 L.R.A. 220, 45 Am. St. Rep. 319, 30 Atl. 560; St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Berger (St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Jones) 64 Ark. 613, 39 L.R.A. 785, 44 S. W. 809. In the states where it had been held that abusive language, though not justifying the conductor, will relieve the company, it will usually be found that the theory prevails that a wilful tort by a conductor is, ipso facto, outside the scope of his employment,—a doctrine which has been distinctly repudiated by this court in cases heretofore cited. The only case outside of Georgia, cited by counsel to sustain this doctrine, was that of Scott v. Central Park, N. & E. River R. Co. 53 Hun, 414, 6 N. Y. Supp. 382, where it was said: "That while it might be true that the use of the abusive language to the driver [of a street car] did not justify the assault, so far as the driver was concerned, in the eyes of the criminal law, there was no reason for holding that where a passenger, by his own improper and insulting behavior, while a passenger on the road of the railway company, brought upon himself an assault, that the carrier should be held responsible;" and it was immediately added, "that it was clear that the act of the driver was not in the course of his employment." This view has not been followed in New York in later cases; but it has been held that provocation might be considered in mitigation of damages. Freedman v. Metropolitan Street Ry. Co. 89 App. Div. 486, 85 N. Y. Supp. 986; Weber v. Brooklyn, Q. C. & Suburban R. Co. 47 App. Div. 306, 62 N. Y. Supp. 1, supra; Stewart v. Brooklyn & Ct. R. Co. 90 N. Y. 588, 43 Am. Rep. 185. The injury for which the present suit was brought occurred in Alabama. Rulings of the supreme court of that state on the subject now under consideration have been cited above.

In 4 Elliott, Railroads, § 1638, it is said: "A carrier is bound to discharge the implied duty, arising out of its contract and imposed by law, that its passengers shall be protected from injury by its servants, and shall not be wilfully insulted and harmed by them; and if it commits the discharge of this duty to an employee, it may well be held to do so at its peril, notwithstanding the exercise of care on its part in selecting its servants. Either the company or the passengers must take the risk of infirmities of temper, maliciousness, and misconduct of the employees whom the company has placed upon the train and to whom it has committed the discharge of its duty to protect and look after the safety of its passengers."

It is not to be understood that this court approves of such conduct as the evidence for the defendant tended to show that the plaintiff was guilty of, but which he in part denied, though he admitted drinking about six glasses of beer shortly before entering the train and going out and standing on the step of the car, where he had no business to be. Without passing on the facts of the present case, we may say generally that we would lend no countenance to drunken rowdies going upon railroad trains, using foul and profane language, sometimes in the presence of women and children, seeking to terrorize or pick quarrels with the passengers or railroad employees, and then, when they bring trouble upon themselves, or are ejected from the train, asking juries to award them large damages against the company as salve for their besotted but wounded feelings. In this state, conductors in charge of trains are clothed with police powers, and on proper occasions must use them, though they must not abuse them. Hillman v. Georgia R. & Bkg. Co. 126 Ga. 814, 56 S. E. 68, 8 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 222. Honest juries should not make profitable such disorderly conduct on the part of passengers as that hypothetically mentioned. To do so would be a violation of their duty. If, in any case of that character, a jury should render a verdict which does not accord with justice and the weight of the evidence, the trial judge should grant a new trial. It would be his duty to do so. In Peavy's Case, 81 Ga. 485, 12 Am. St. Rep. 334, 8 S. E. 70, supra, the second grant of a new trial was sustained. But this is different from laying down an erroneous rule of law to be given in charge to the jury, lest perhaps juries may be biased, or judges may fail to fully discharge their duty.

Judgment reversed.

All the Justices concur.

33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

CONNECTICUT SUPREME COURT OF ERRORS.

MICHAEL SEIDLER

v.

JOHN J. BURNS, Appt.

(— Conn. —, 79 Atl. 53.)

Pleading — improper claims — demurrer — motion.

1. The striking out of portions of a complaint claiming improper elements of damage must be accomplished, not by demurrer, but by motion.

Damages — malicious prosecution — suffering under arrest.

2. One maliciously prosecuting another which results in his arrest is not answerable in damages for physical suffering caused by cold, want of bed, or deprivation of food, due to acts of persons over whom he had no control, and which he had no reason to anticipate.

Trial — instruction — support — evidence.

3. An instruction in an action to recover damages for malicious prosecution, that the damages might include an allowance for suffering caused by cold and lack of bed and food during his imprisonment, cannot be regarded as prejudicial where the only evidence to which it is applicable is to the effect that the bed furnished was hard and that plaintiff ate nothing, which may have been due to his own volition.

Damages — malicious prosecution — risk of conviction.

4. The risk of conviction is not an element of damages for malicious prosecution resulting in illegal arrest.

(March 8, 1911.)

Note. — Condition of place of imprisonment and treatment while in custody as elements of damages in action of malicious prosecution or false imprisonment.

While there is some conflict, it is generally held that these matters may properly be taken into consideration in reaching the amount of damages.

Actions for malicious prosecution.

Thus, in actions for malicious prosecutions the filthy and loathsome condition of the jail and surroundings may be shown. Fuqua v. Gambill, 140 Ala. 464, 37 So. 235; Grimes v. Greenblatt, 47 Colo. 495, 107 Pac. 1111, 19 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 608; Mexican C. R. Co. v. Gehr, 66 Ill. App. 173; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Rice, 36 Kan. 593, 14 Pac. 229; Drumm v. Cessnum, 61 Kan. 467, 59 Pac. 1078; Driggs v. Morgan, 10 Rob. (La.) 119; Stoecker v. Nathanson, 5 Neb. (Unof.) 435, 70 L.R.A. 667, 98 N. W. 1061.

The court in Stoecker v. Nathanson, supra, said: "On the question of the admis-

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for Hartford County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for alleged malicious prosecution. Reversed.

Statement by Prentice, J.:

As the result of the defendant's complaint a warrant for the plaintiff's arrest upon the criminal charge of wilfully injuring the defendant's property was issued by proper authority, and the plaintiff arrested thereon. He was placed in a cell in the Hartford police station, where he remained overnight. He continued in custody until the afternoon of the following day, when he was given his liberty. Upon his presentment to court later, he was found not guilty, and dis-sion of testimony as to the sanitary condition of the jail in which plaintiff was confined, we are cited to the case of Zebley v. Storey, 117 Pa. 478, 12 Atl. 569, which is a case squarely in point, tending to support defendant's theory as to the inadmissibility of this evidence. It appears, however, that this case is wrong in principle, and stands practically alone against the clear weight of authority both in the United States and in England. The well-considered cases on this question hold, with this single exception, that in an action for false imprisonment or malicious prosecution, proof of the circumstances of plaintiff's family and the filthy condition of the jail used for the imprisonment are admissible to prove special damages."

But it was held in Zebley v. Storey, supra, in an action for malicious prosecution, that the plaintiff could not show the nature of his treatment or the conditions of the jail while he was confined in it. The court said: "This testimony could hardly fail to inflame the minds of the jury and enhance the damages. And if the treatment referred to had been the act of the defendant, he would have no reason to complain of the admission of the evidence. But it is a matter with which he had nothing to do. He is not responsible for the way in which the county of Philadelphia, acting through its officials, treats persons confined in the county prison. He is responsible for the unlawful restraint of the plaintiff's liberty, if he has so restrained it, but it would be unreasonable, as well as unjust, to hold him liable for the acts or conduct of public officials, over whom he had no control."

This case is clearly against the weight of authority, and is also in conflict with Abrahams v. Cooper, infra.

The case, however, is supported by the decision in SEIDLER v. BURNS.

So, suffering from cold, from want of bed, and deprivation of food for many hours, have been held proper elements of damages. Abrahams v. Cooper, 81 Pa. 232.

And the facts that plaintiff was placed charged. Other facts are sufficiently stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Joseph L. Barbour and Stewart N. Dunning, for appellant:

It is the duty of the police station authorities to provide suitable accommodations for those confined there.

Zebley v. Storey, 117 Pa. 478, 12 Atl. 569; Garvey v. Wayson, 42 Md. 178..

Mr. A. Storrs Campbell, for appellee:

It was not obligatory upon the plaintiff to prove express malice. Any act done wilfully to the injury of another, which is unlawful, is malice.

Pullen v. Glidden, 66 Me. 202; Wills v. Noyes, 12 Pick. 324; Com. v. Snelling, 15 Pick. 337.

in jail and surrounded by the usual gloomy and depressing features of such places, and that the arrest was made before plaintiff's mother, have also been proper for consideration or the amount of damages. Flam v. Lee, 116, Iowa, 289, 93 Am. St. Rep. 243, 90 N. W. 70.

So, where a railroad employed a man to watch plaintiff, and if he found him stealing coal to arrest him, the person so employed acts within the scope of his authority in undertaking to give notice to the plaintiff's wife and friends, and his failure to perform the undertaking, and his efforts to have the plaintiff's sureties surrender him into custody, may be shown in an action for malicious prosecution. San Antonio & A. P. R. Co. v. Griffin, 20 Tex. Civ. App. 91, 48 S. W. 542.

And in Laing v. Mitten, 185 Mass. 233, 70 N. E. 128, it was held that while a defendant was not liable for any acts of the officers done in excess of the authority conferred by the warrant, yet, having started the prosecution, he was liable for anything done with such authority, and that this was so although the officer might have been a little more considerate than he was. The court said: "It may be said in passing that while the bill of exceptions recites that 'the arrest was made in an unusual manner, and with acts of unnecessary and unwarrantable cruelty and indignity,' the acts which are set forth in the bill, with the possible exception of the confinement in a cell not sufficiently warmed (and even this might have occurred with no fault upon the part of any person), are all plainly within the authority of the precept under which the officer acted. Unless there were acts besides those shown in the record, to which the words 'unnecessary' and 'unwarrantable' are applicable, the words would not seem to imply an act beyond the authority of the process. The exceptions applicable to this count must therefore be overruled."

And the same rule was applied in Spear v. Hiles, 67 Wis. 350, 30 N. W. 506, where the plaintiff and his wife were arrested, and while in jail he was kept separate

It is not necessary to prove actual damage; deprivation of liberty, and injury to reputation, feelings, and person, will support a verdict for the plaintiff.

Hogg v. Pinckney, 16 S. C. 387; Spear v. Hiles, 67 Wis. 350, 30 N. W. 506; Hampton v. Jones, 58 Iowa, 317, 12 N. W. 267; Closson v. Staples, 42 Vt. 209, 1 Am. Rep. 316; Hamilton v. Smith, 39 Mich. 222.

Prentice, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendant complains of the court's action in overruling his demurrer to the complaint, of several portions of its charge, and of a ruling upon the admission of testimony. The demurrer was properly overruled. It was a misdirected effort to have stricken from the complaint a portion of the allegations of one paragraph claimed to set out improper elements of damage in connection with others admittedly proper. A motion, and not a demurrer, was the appropriate proceeding to resort to to accomplish that end. Rules under the Practice Book 1908, p. 247, § 155c. In that part of the charge which dealt with the subject of damages, the jury were informed that the plaintiff might, in the event that he established a right of action, recover compensation for, among other things, "injury to the person by being imprisoned upon the defendant's charge, such as injury to his health, for physical suffering caused by cold, and want of a bed, and deprivation of food." By this broad and unqualified lanfrom her, which was lawful; but it was held that recovery could not be had in such an action for any unlawful restraints or acts of oppression to which the plaintiff was subjected by the keeper.

And in Marks v. Hastings, 101 Ala. 165, 13 So. 297, the number of persons present when the officer went to make the arrest was held inadmissible, since the defendants were not responsible for any wrong or abuse in the manner of making the arrest.

And in Vansickle v. Brown, 68 Mo. 627, evidence that the arresting officer conducted himself in an uncivil and insulting manner when arresting plaintiff was held not admissible where it was not shown that the defendant was connected with such conduct; but it was said that such evidence might be admissible if it was shown that the misconduct was instigated by the defendant.

And in Garvey v. Wayson, 42 Md. 178, the fact that, pursuant to the regular custom of the detective department, plaintiff's name was entered upon the detective police annals of the city, and open to the inspection and use by the police force, was held inadmissible to increase the damages, without proving that there was some law of which the defendant would be bound to take notice requiring such entries, or that it was the custom of such department to make such entries, and that the defendant had knowledge of that fact.

The right to take into consideration the kind of treatment received by the plaintiff was also assumed in the following cases, in passing upon the question whether the damages allowed were excessive: Neys v. Taylor, 12 S. D. 488, 81 N. W. 901 (plaintiff, who was sick, not treated with proper care by officer); Clarke v. American Dock & Improv. Co. 35 Fed. 478 (plaintiff, a respectable woman, committed to jail with disorderly persons); Clark v. Baldwin, 25 Kan. 120 (plaintiff contracted severe cold and suffered ill health in consequence); Rule v. McGregor, 115 Iowa, 323, 88 N. W. 814 (plaintiff was driven by the officer through a neighborhood where he was well 33 L.R.A. (N.S.) acquainted during part of an afternoon and the whole of a night, and, after his discharge, was rearrested in the presence of the members of a political convention to which he was a delegate).

Actions for false imprisonment.

It is also held that the filthy condition of the place of confinement and of the surroundings may be shown in actions for false imprisonment. Kindred v. Stitt, 51 Ill. 401; Fenelon v. Butts, 53 Wis. 344, 10 N. W. 501.

And in Hall v. Hall, 3 Allen, 5, an action for false imprisonment, evidence as to the manner in which the plaintiff lived while he was confined in jail was held admissible. The court said: "His detention in prison, and the inconvenience and suffering to which it subjected him, were direct consequences of the illegal acts of the defendant in the service of the warrant of distress; and proof of these facts was therefore competent to show the damage he had sustained, and the compensation which he ought justly to recover."

And in the following cases the matter in question was held to be an element of damages in actions for false imprisonment.

So it is proper to show that plaintiff was confined with persons charged with crimes, and compelled to sleep in a bed without adequate clothing. Miller v. Fano, 134 Cal. 103, 66 Pac. 183.

And evidence that a woman prisoner was incarcerated in a filthy cell, and not allowed food or water for eight hours, and, together with her husband, was separated during that time from her young child, is admissible on the question of damages. Johnson v. McDaniel, 5 Ohio S. & C. P. Dec. 717.

So, in an action for false imprisonment of a girl in an industrial school, testimony consisting of the description of the industrial school, and an account of the restraints on her and her treatment in the institution, including the fact that she was compelled to sleep with a colored girl, and also as to her journey from the county guage they were permitted to compensate the plaintiff for the physical consequences to him for cold, the lack of a bed, and deprivation of food while under arrest, whatever the circumstances attending those conditions might have been, and whoever might have been the responsible author of them. The defendant was made responsible for those conditions and consequences, although they might have been due to the conduct of persons over whom he had no control, and of conduct on the part of such persons of which he had no knowledge and no occasion to anticipate, and which was not in any way the natural or probable result of the plaintiff's arrest.

The authorities are in singular conflict as to the law upon the subject of these instructions. In several decisions it appears to have been held that in cases of this sort the prosecutor is legally responsible for all the consequences of the prosecution, which, through his malice, he caused to be brought without probable cause. Abrahams v. Cooper, 81 Pa. 232, 235; San Antonio & A. P. R. Co. v. Griffin, 20 Tex. Civ. App. 91, 95, 48 S. W. 542; Fenelon v. Butts, 53 Wis. 344, 349, 10 N. W. 501; Drumm v. Cessnum, 61 Kan. 467, 472, 59 Pac. 1078; Johnson v. McDaniel, 5 Ohio S. & C. P. Dec. 717.

court to the institution, was held properly received as bearing on the question of damages. Scott v. Flowers, 60 Neb. 675, 84 N. W. 81.

And in an action for the false imprisonment of a civilian by a military officer, the fact that the plaintiff was confined in the guardhouse with drunken soldiers, and compelled to labor with military culprits may be considered in fixing the damages. McCall v. McDowell, 1 Abb. (U. S.) 212, Fed. Cas. No. 8,673.

And in Dinsman v. Wilkes, 12 How. 390, 13 L. ed. 1036, where an action was brought by a marine who was imprisoned in a foreign prison by the commanding officer of a squadron, the court said: "And, further, that, under the order to imprison him in the fort, if the jury believe it to be truly stated in the defendant's testimony, the plaintiff was left at liberty to relieve himself from confinement at any moment by returning to his duty. But, on the other hand, the jury must likewise take into consideration the different punishments he received: his confinement in the fort on shore; the situation and condition of the place; the character of the persons by whose authority it was governed; his food, his clothing, and general treatment; and whether Captain Wilkes, through proper officers, inquired into his treatment and condition during the time of his confinement. For, certainly, when, from whatever motives he had placed him out of the protection which the ordinary place of confinement on shipboard afforded, in a prison belonging to and under the control of an

In the first-named and earliest of these cases, it was determined that the precise elements under discussion were proper ones for the jury's consideration. In Sedgwick on Damages, § 45, is a statement to the same effect, and in the same language; Abrahams v. Cooper, 81 Pa. 232, 235, being referred to as authority, and the sole authority, for it. Sutherland on Damages gives countenance to the rule, to the extent of saying that it is claimed for it that it has the support of the most numerous cases. Section 1237. Other cases either distinctly express or plainly indicate a different view. Zebbley v. Storey, 117 Pa. 478, 485, 12 Atl. 569; Flam v. Lee, 116 Iowa, 289, 293, 93 Am. St. Rep. 242, 90 N. W. 70; Garvey v. Wayson, 42 Md. 178, 189; Laing v. Mitten, 185 Mass. 233, 234, 70 N. E. 128; Lock v. Ashton, 13 Jur. 167, 12 Q. B. 871, 18 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 76. The reason assigned for the first-named position, and the only one which has been attempted, as far as we have been able to discover, is that expressed in the brief opinion in Abrahams v. Cooper, 81 Pa. 232, 235, as follows: "Malice was the gist of this action, and the natural and probable consequence of this arrest was the imprisonment of the plaintiff. The suffering of the plaintiff from cold, the want of uncivilized people, it was his duty, through proper and trustworthy officers, to inquire into his situation and treatment, and to see that it was not cruel or barbarous in any respect, and that he did not suffer for the want of those necessities which the humanity of civilized countries always provides even for the hardened offender."

And where a young man of industrious habits, while passing down a street in an orderly manner, is arrested by one not an officer, who in a loud voice accused him of stealing his bicycle, and, when the young man denied the charge and requested his accuser to go to some of the best citizens of the place to establish his innocence, his accuser roughly refused the request and handed him over to the night watchman, and in the presence of others told him that he believed the young man had stolen his bicycle, and the watchman kept the young man for an hour exposing him to passers-by and refusing to allow him to see those by whom he claimed he could establish his innocence, punitive damages may be allowed in an action for false imprisonment against his accuser, and a verdict of $300 is not excessive. Hight v. Naylor, 86 Ill. App. 508.

But in Stoness v. Lake, 40 U. C. Q. B. 320, in an action against justices of the peace, for causing an unlawful assault upon the plaintiff and his imprisonment, it was held that there could be no recovery against the defendants, for suffering from the harsh regulations of the prison during his imprisonment.

J. T. W.

a bed to lie upon, and deprivation of food for many hours sprang directly from the imprisonment to which the malice of the defendant exposed the plaintiff. Because others may have also been in fault, it does not take away the participation of the defendant in the wrong done to the plaintiff." Our examination of the authorities and text-books indicates that this decision is the original source of this doctrine. Notwithstanding the allegiance which it appears to have secured, it does not impress us as founded in sound reason. We fail to discover in the fact that the gist of these actions is malice any just reason why a prosecutor should be held responsible for the misconduct of others, including officials charged with the duty of taking proper action in directing the machinery of the law, and in executing its processes, which misconduct he has no part in bringing about, of which he has no knowledge, and which he had no reason to anticipate, either as being the natural or probable result of the prosecution or otherwise. The fact that Zebbley v. Storey, 117 Pa. 478, 485, 12 Atl. 569, was decided by the same court which laid down the broad doctrine of Abrahams v. Cooper, suggests either that the language of the earlier opinion has been misconstrued as to its scope, or that that court has come to realize that in the first instance it went too far. In the later case it was said: "He [the prosecutor] is not responsible for the way in which the county of Philadelphia, acting through its officials, treats persons confined in the county prison. He is responsible for the unlawful restraint of the plaintiff's liberty, if he has so restrained it, but it would be unreasonable, as well as unjust, to hold him liable for the acts or conduct of public officials over whom he had no control."

We are of opinion that the trial court was in error in instructing the jury with respect to these possible elements of damage in the unqualified language which was used. It is evident, however, that the defendant could not have been harmed by the error. The finding shows that the only facts relating to conditions or treatment claimed to have been productive of harmful results sought to be established by the plaintiff, which could have been regarded by the jury as being touched by the instructions in question, and therefore the only ones which could have been used in awarding damages under them, were that the bed in the cell was hard, and that the plaintiff ate nothing from the time of his arrest in the afternoon until after 3 p. m. the next day. One who is instrumental in the confinement of another in a cell may well be assumed to anticipate that a soft bed may not be provided. In this case it does not appear that the plaintiff claimed to have proved that the bed which was provided was harder and more uncomfortable than those usually furnished under such conditions, or than would be reasonably expected in such a place. As to the eating, there is no claim that it was established that the plaintiff's fasting for twenty-four hours was enforced by the action of his keepers in not providing food. For all that appears it was the result of his own volition.

The court further told the jury that it might consider as an element of damage the plaintiff's "risk of conviction." What it meant by the term as thus used is not apparent. Its language in the sentence immediately following, in which it took up the subject of mental suffering, plainly indicates that "risk of conviction" was not referred to for the purpose of calling the jurors' attention to a feeling of fear or apprehension of possible conviction which the plaintiff may have entertained as bearing upon the subject of mental anguish. If it were, the language of the court was unfortunately inapt and misleading. It is quite evident from its context that the term was used to point out an independent basis for the assessment of damages. We know of no authority, and can conceive of no reason, for such action. Risk of conviction of a criminal charge made without probable cause there is not, unless there is an utter failure of the judicial machinery. This situation is certainly not one which the law contemplates. The serious fault in the instruction is that the attention of the jurors was called to it as presenting a substantial matter for consideration and that they were invited to enter upon a field of speculative and indefinite inquiry in which, through ignorance of the legal conditions, or sympathy or prejudice, they might easily be led to unwarranted and harmful results.

The remaining reasons of appeal need not be considered.

There is error, the judgment is set aside, and a new trial ordered.

In this opinion the other Judges concur.

MISSISSIPPI SUPREME COURT.

ALEXANDER PALM et al., Appts.,
v.

CHARLES C. FANCHER et al.

(93 Miss. 785, 48 So. 818.)

Usury — compound interest.

A note is not made usurious by a provision that interest, which is the highest rate allowed by law, shall, if not paid at maturity, become principal, and bear interest at the same rate.

(March 29, 1909.)

A PPEAL by defendants from a decree of the Chancery Court for Attala County, foreclosing a mortgage on certain real estate. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Alexander & Alexander and J. G. Smythe for appellants.

Messrs. McWillie & Thompson, for appellees:

The usury law does not prevent the renewal of notes carrying interest already due into a new note, and making it bear interest.

Note. — Validity of agreement, made before interest becomes due, to pay interest on interest.

The complement of the question with which this note is concerned has already been discussed in a note to Sanford v. Lundquist, 18 L.R.A. (N.S.) 633, on "Validity of agreement to pay interest on interest, made after interest has become due."

Another question of collateral interest, viz., the right, in the case of renewal of a loan, to compute interest on the basis of including accumulated interest as part of the principal of the renewal, forms the subject of a note to Bramblett v. Deposit Bank, 6 L.R.A. (N.S.) 612.

An analysis of the decisions bearing on the question of the validity of agreements made before interest has become due, to pay interest on interest, discloses a curious lack of uniformity of opinion on a question which one might suppose would long since have been settled. This is doubtless due to the slow disintegration of the ancient prejudice against interest of any kind, which was based on economic and religious beliefs since shown to be erroneous. The majority of the decisions condemn such agreements without making the distinction observed in PALM v. FANCHER between agreements simply to pay interest on overdue interest, and agreements for the compounding of interest at regular intervals. Some of them make the distinction only where the interest is evidenced by a coupon note. But it is to be observed that the currency of this doctrine, which, as will subsequently be shown, is wholly rejected in some states, is due principally to statements of a purely obiter character. Where the question has been directly before the court, a tendency is apparent to avoid the effect of the doctrine wherever possible by restricting its operation by means of exceptions, the most important of which is in the case of the so-called coupon notes, which have just been mentioned. While some courts recognizing this exception have characterized it as purely arbitrary or illegal, and as based on commercial usage, others have assigned 33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Perkins v. Coleman, 51 Miss. 298; 29 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 493; Webb, Usury, § 127, p. 144; Scott v. Saf-fold, 37 Ga. 384.

Messrs. Dodd & Dodd also for appellees.

Mayes, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The chancellor has settled all questions in this case save one of law. On the 12th day of February, 1903, the appellants gave a mortgage on property therein described to secure the appellees in the sum of $356.42 then owing. The note is as follows: $356.42, McCool, Miss., Feb. 12, 1903.

On November 1, 1903, after date, we or either of us promise to pay to the order what seems to be the true reason, viz., that in such case the interest is not compounded indefinitely, but is only simple interest on the amount represented by the coupon.

The conflict of opinion with respect to the validity of an agreement before interest becomes due, that it shall, if unpaid, itself bear interest, has led in some states to the enactment of legislation legalizing such contracts, and in others, to statutory provisions forbidding them.

With regard to the matter of usury, it may be stated that it is generally held, even where the courts decline to enforce such agreements, as being oppressive and "savoring of usury," that they do not taint the obligation with usury, the stipulation being looked upon as in the nature of a penalty for default. As to whether they are enforceable where the interest on the original obligation plus the interest on the interest exceeds the amount of simple interest which the original obligation would yield at the maximum legal rate, there is a conflict of opinion.

As above stated, the doctrine to which most of the decisions declare their adherence is that an agreement, forming part of the original obligation, to pay interest on interest, will not be enforced by the courts, on grounds of public policy, as being oppressive and unjust, and tending to usury. This is supported by the following cases in which the question was directly involved: Sir Thomas Meers Case, cited in 1 Atk. 304, and Cas. t. Talb. 40 (a covenant in a mortgage that, if interest were not paid punctually, it should from that time, and so from time to time, be turned into principal and bear interest); Ossulston v. Yarmouth, 2 Salk. 449 (covenant in mortgage that if interest be behind six months, it should be accounted principal and carry interest); Es-lava v. Lepretre, 21 Ala. 504, 56 Am. Dec. 266 (agreement for converting interest into principal from time to time, as it should become due); Hochmark v. Richler, 16 Colo. 263, 26 Pac. 818 (note including interest to maturity, and bearing interest thereafter); Drury v. Wolfe, 134 Ill. 294, 25 N. E. 626 (see detailed statement of this case of Seward & Fancher three hundred and fifty-six and 42/100 dollars, for value received, negotiable and payable, without defalcation or discount, and with interest from maturity at the rate of 10 per cent per annum, and if interest be not paid annually, to become as principal, and bear the same rate of interest. If suit be instituted on this note, it is agreed that judgment shall include a reasonable amount as fee for the plaintiff's attorneys.

It is claimed that this note is usurious, because there is in it an agreement to compound the interest, if it be not paid annually as provided for in the note; and the case of Perkins v. Coleman, 51 Miss. 298, is relied on as authority on this point.

infra); Bowman v. Neely, 137 Ill. 443, 27 N. E. 758 (interest payable annually, and if not so paid, to become principal, and to bear the same rate of interest); Breckenridge v. Brooks, 2 A. K. Marsh. 335, 12 Am. Dec. 401 (interest agreed to be compounded annually if not paid); Henry v. Flagg, 13 Met. 64 (guaranty of compound interest); Hoyle v. Page, 41 Mich. 533, 2 N. W. 665 (interest to become principal if not paid at the end of each year); Gay v. Berkey, 137 Mich. 658, 100 N. W. 920 (agreement to compute interest with annual rests); Mason v. Callender, 2 Minn. 350, Gil. 302, 72 Am. Dec. 102 (agreement to pay interest after maturity of obligation on principal and interest); Lee v. Melby, 93 Minn. 4, 100 N. W. 379 (interest remaining unpaid when due, to bear interest thereafter); Perkins v. Coleman, 51 Miss. 298 (agreement that interest should be made part of principal so as to carry interest); Hager v. Blake, 16 Neb. 12, 19 N. W. 780 (overdue interest to draw interest); Cox v. Smith, 1 Nev. 161, 90 Am. Dec. 476 (interest not paid when due to be added to principal and bear interest at the same rate); Levens v. Briggs, 21 Or. 333, 14 L.R.A. 188, 28 Pac. 15 (interest not paid at the expiration of each year to be considered as an additional amount of principal to the original, and bear like interest per annum from the date of the expiration of each year, to be paid in like manner as the original).

In Drury v. Wolfe, 134 Ill. 294, 25 N. E. 626, where four notes were given for a loan, payable one, two, three, and four years after date, respectively, and bearing interest only after maturity, the amount of the last of the series being the balance resulting from a deduction of the amount of the first note from the amount of the principal, with one year's interest, then deducting the amount of the second note from the balance, plus another year's interest, and so on, it was held that the effect of this was to charge compound interest; and that the case came within the general rule that parties cannot be bound by any contract made before interest is due, for the payment of compound interest.

33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

We think that the case above referred to is, on its face, a different case from the one here presented. By the contract in Perkins v. Coleman it was provided that the principal debt was to run for twenty six months, bearing interest at 10 per cent annually, interest to be compounded and to become principal. No annual rest period was allowed for the payment of the interest, but the contract itself forbade the payment of interest under twenty six months, and required its compounding, thus making it imperative that the borrower pay a greater rate of interest than a straight 10 per cent on the principal amount borrowed, and the court held this contract to be usurious, because by its very terms it compelled the borrower to pay

The doctrine above stated is also supported by obiter dicta in the following cases: Blackburn v. Warwick, 2 Younge & C. Exch. 92, 6 L. J. Exch. N. S. 17; Moss v. Bainbridge, 6 De G. M. & G. 330; Clancarty v. Latouche, 1 Ball & B. 420; Bainbridge v. Wilcocks, Baldw. 536, Fed. Cas. No. 755; Paulling v. Creagh, 54 Ala. 646; Rose v. Bridgeport, 17 Conn. 243; Niles v. Sinking Fund Comrs. 8 Blackf. 158; Rodes v. Blythe, 2 B. Mon. 335; Parkhurst v. Cummings, 56 Me. 155; Von Hemert v. Porter, 11 Met. 210; Gunn v. Head, 21 Mo. 432; Wilson v. Davis, 1 Mont. 183; Stanford v. Coram, 26 Mont. 285, 67 Pac. 1005; Mowry v. Bishop, 5 Paige, 98; Connecticut v. Jackson, 1 Johns. Ch. 13, 7 Am. Dec. 471; Van Benschooten v. Lawson, 6 Johns. Ch. 313, 10 Am. Dec. 333; Quackenbush v. Leonard, 9 Paige, 334; Stewart v. Petree, 55 N. Y. 621, 14 Am. Rep. 352; Young v. Hill, 67 N. Y. 162, 23 Am. Rep. 99; Van Rensselaer v. Jones, 2 Barb. 643; Higbie v. Heath, 3 Thomp. & C. 783; Reusens v. Arkenburgh, 135 App. Div. 75, 119 N. Y. Supp. 821; Catlin v. Lyman, 16 Vt. 44; Childers v. Deane, 4 Rand. (Va.) 406; Fultz v. Davis, 26 Gratt. 903; Stansbury v. Stansbury, 24 W. Va. 634.

So, also, in Chambers v. Goldwin, 9 Ves. Jr. 254, 7 Revised Rep. 181, it was said by Lord Eldon that there is nothing unfair or perhaps illegal in taking a covenant originally that, if interest is not paid at the end of the year, it shall be converted into principal: but that a court of equity will not permit it, as tending to usury, though it is not usury.

And in Ferguson v. Fyffe, 8 Clark & F. 121, it was said that generally a contract or promise for compound interest is not available in England, except, perhaps, as to mercantile accounts current for mutual transactions.

"Now, in holding this to be the rule," said Alderson, B., in Blackburn v. Warwick, 2 Younge & C. Exch. 92, "I presume the courts suppose that some advantage immediately accrues to the mortgagee under the deed, ultra the allowance of £5 per cent interest, and that that advantage being secured by more than 10 per cent interest on the amount borrowed by him. Under the facts of this case there is no stipulation compelling the borrower to pay compound interest, except in the event of his failure to pay the annual interest at maturity. If the borrower, under the agreement in this case, fulfil his contract, it is impossible for the lender to collect more than the legal contractual rate of interest. The note provides for annual payment of interest, in default of which the interest then becomes principal and bears interest; but the note here does not, as did the contract in case of Perkins v. Coleman, forbid annual payment of interest, and require same to be compounded. There is a wilderness of authority on this subject. Decisions may be found taking almost any view of the question.

We do not think this contract is, in any sense usurious. It would never be doubted but that the parties might, under a separate agreement, after the interest became due and default therein, have executed a second note for the interest, and made this second note for the arrearage in interest become interest-bearing principal. It would not be seriously contended that such an agreement would constitute usury, though interest was thereby compounded. Conceding this, we fail to see why parties may not provide in the same instrument for the compounding of interest, when the stipulations of the contract are not such as require a compounding of the interest as a part of the contract, not leaving any option or right in the borrower to avoid paying compound interest. Such a contract is a mere matter of convenience to the parties, and places nothing in the contract they could not lawfully do as an independent transaction.

We concur in the view expressed in § 129 of Webb on Usury, which says: "It is difficult to understand how such an agreement, made after the loan contract, is generally accepted as valid; but, if made contemporaneously with the loan contract, it is in many cases held to be usurious."

Affirmed.

an original stipulation, the contract savors of usury. If the rule cannot be supported on that ground, it appears to me that it cannot be supported at all. I confess I do not see why such interest might not be allowed even where the stipulation to pay is contained in the original deed; but be that as it may, there the covenant, being part of the original terms of the contract, is part of the original advantage accruing to the mortgagee, and the courts will not sanction such a contract."

"The principle of not giving effect to a stipulation for the compounding of future interest upon a debt does not arise from the usury laws. It is merely adopted as a rule of public policy to prevent an accumulation of compound interest in favor of negligent creditors who do not collect their interest when it becomes due, which negligence is found in the end to be an injury rather than a benefit to the debtor." Quackembush v. Leonard, 9 Paige, 334.

The cases above cited, although, as shown, involving agreements both where the undertaking was simply to pay interest on interest and where the effect of the covenant was to compound interest indefinitely, seem to make no distinction between them. Such distinction, however, appears to have been taken in Cox v. Brookshire, 76 N. C. 314, in which it was held that although an agreement to pay interest upon interest not paid when it should become due is valid, an agreement that interest shall be compounded annually is usurious. But see Bowman v. Neely, 137 Ill. 443, 27 N. E. 758, in which an opportunity to make the distinction was deliberately rejected, the court saying: "In the case of coupons, the interest is not compounded indefinitely, and that is one of the reasons given by the courts for excepting them from the operation of the general rule; and it is said that interest is not here sought to be compounded indefinitely, but only upon the annual interest upon the principal sum as it fell due and remained unpaid. This is undoubtedly true; but it is here reserved or contracted to be paid in the same instrument, and the commercial usage before referred to, in respect of detached coupons, or which may be detached, and pass as independent commercial paper, cannot apply."

On the other hand, agreements of the kind under discussion have been recognized as valid in a number of states. See Scott v. Saffold, 37 Ga. 384 (where a stipulation that interest should be paid annually, otherwise counted as principal, was held to be valid and binding, being neither usurious, unconscionable, nor contrary to public policy); Merck v. American Freehold Land Mortg. Co. 79 Ga. 213, 7 S. E. 265, and Ellard v. Scottish American Mortg. Co. 97 Ga. 329, 22 S. E. 893 (where notes representing interest were made to bear interest from maturity); Pawling v. Pawling, 4 Yeates, 229 (agreement that if any part of the interest should remain unpaid for the space of three months, to allow the obligee lawful interest for the same from the end of the said three months until paid); Hale v. Hale, 1 Coldw. 233, 78 Am. Dec. 490, and Woods v. Rankin, 2 Heisk. 46 (set forth infra); Lewis v. Paschal, 37 Tex. 315 (agreement to compound interest); Yaws v. Jones, — Tex. —, 19 S. W. 443 (stipulation that, in case of failure to pay the note at maturity, the interest should be added to the principal, and the total draw interest with annual rests). And see also Burke v. Trabue, 137 Ky. 580, 126 S. W. 125, and Bura v. Thompson, 2 Clark (Pa.) 143.

The following cases may be taken as instances of the reasoning upon which the minority doctrine is based:

Thus, in Hale v. Hale, 1 Coldw. 233, 78 Am. Dec. 490, it is said that there is nothing illegal or immoral or contrary to public policy in an agreement at the time a loan is made that, if the interest is not paid at the time stipulated, it shall be deemed principal and bear interest, the court saying: "The interest is both legally and equitably due at the expiration of the period limited for its payment; and if, instead of paying the interest, it be converted into principal by the previous agreement of the parties, we think there can be no objection to enforcing such an agreement."

And in Woods v. Rankin, 2 Heisk. 46, an agreement in a note that it should bear compound interest eo nomine was held valid, the court saying: "Compounding interest is the charging of interest against a debtor upon a sum which has accrued as interest upon the principal debt. This is not allowed by law, except in cases where the debtor expressly contracts to pay it. If the debtor, at the time of contracting the debt, agree to pay interest upon interest, such a contract is not illegal. At the time of the creation of the debt, the creditor may stipulate with his debtor for the payment of the interest thereon at stated periods, with the condition expressed upon the face of the obligation for the debt, that if the interest is not paid at the time stipulated for its payment, it should thereafter bear interest. Or separate notes for the interest upon the debt might lawfully be taken, to fall due at the periods at which the interest upon the principal debt would amount to the sums for which they were severally given; and such notes, if not paid when they fell due, would bear interest, and would be enforced in our courts, as executed on a good and sufficient consideration. In either case, the promise would be to pay only the amount that would be due to the creditor for interest at the time at which the debtor was bound by his contract to pay it. So that there would be upon the face of such contracts no obligation or promise to pay more than legal interest upon the sum due, and therefore an agreement to pay interest upon interest is neither illegal nor usurious."

In Morgan v. Mather, 2 Ves. Jr. 15, 2 Revised Rep. 163, it was said by Lords Commissioner Eyre and Ashhurst, that there may be a previous contract for compound interest; but this dictum was subsequently overruled.

In Clarkson v. Henderson, L. R. 14 Ch. Div. 348, 49 L. J. Ch. N. S. 289, 43 L. T. N. S. 29, 28 Week. Rep. 907, a provision in a mortgage that all interest which should, during the continuance of the security, accrue due on the principal, and all interest which should accrue due on that interest, or upon any other interest which should be capitalized under the provision, should, if not paid within twenty-one days from the respective times of the same coming due, 33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

become principal and be added to the principal sum, as, or in the nature of, a further advance, and should carry interest, which should be considered to accrue and should be payable from time to time on the days thereinbefore appointed for the payment of interest on the original sum, was held good and valid.

Interest coupons.

As to the effect upon coupon notes of statutes forbidding compound interest, see under heading, "Effect of statutory provisions," infra.

For decisions upon the question whether interest-bearing coupon notes render a contract usurious, and upon the question whether such notes contravene statutory provisions fixing the maximum rate of interest, see under heading "The question of usury," infra.

A generally recognized exception usually attributed to commercial usage, but more logically based on the fact that the contract requires only the payment of interest on interest, and not an indefinite compounding of interest, exists in the case of separate obligations for the payment of interest, known as interest or coupon notes.

Thus, in Drury v. Wolfe, 134 Ill. 294, 25 N. E. 626, it is said that there is perhaps an exception to the rule that parties cannot be bound by any contract made before interest is due for the payment of compound interest, in the case of interest coupons annexed to commercial paper, as in such case interest is not compounded indefinitely, but is simply payable upon the amount of the face of the coupon.

And in Bowman v. Neely, 137 Ill. 443, 27 N. E. 758, it is said that while it is a well-settled rule that parties to a contract cannot stipulate in advance for the payment of interest upon interest, an exception to this rule is made in respect of interest-bearing coupons attached to bonds or other securities for the payment of money. By commercial usage, such coupons, when payable to bearer, have the legal effect of promissory notes by the law merchant, and possess the attributes of negotiable paper. They are written contracts for the payment of a definite sum of money on a given day, and pass from hand to hand by commercial usage as negotiable paper, and it is for this reason that they have been sustained.

In Hoyle v. Page, 41 Mich. 533, 2 N. W. 665, it is said that interest coupons attached to negotiable paper are for many purposes several contracts, and are in the nature of notes given in advance for interest to become due at a certain time.

In Lee v. Melby, 93 Minn. 4, 100 N. W. 379, it is said that coupon notes have always been treated as an illogical exception to the rule prohibiting the making of an agreement in a single instrument, obligating the promisor to pay interest after due upon interest then unmaturing.

In New England Mortg. Secur. Co. v.

Vader, 28 Fed. 265, a provision in a note, the interest on which was represented by coupons, that unpaid interest should bear interest at 10 per cent per annum, was held valid, the court saying: "By the law of this state (Sess. Laws 1880, p. 17), interest is allowed at '8 per centum per annum, and no more, on all moneys after the same become due; . . . but on contracts, interest at the rate of 10 per centum per annum may be charged by express agreement of the parties, and no more.' These interest notes are distinct contracts for the payment of money, and when they became due were entitled, under this statute, without any agreement of the parties on the subject, to draw interest at 8 per centum per annum until paid, or, by the agreement of the parties, they might draw 10 per centum. The provision of the statute is, in effect, that interest shall be allowed 'on all moneys after the same become due,' and that at least includes the case of money due on an interest or coupon note, or a promise or agreement in a principal note, to the effect that the interest thereon shall be paid at a certain period or periods prior to the maturity thereof. But interest concerning the payment of which no special promise is made, and which no otherwise exists or is due than as an increment of the principal sum, is not included in this statute as 'money' due and entitled to bear interest. But a promise to pay interest as a distinct debt or liability, either in or out of the principal contract, and before or as the principal sum falls due, is a promise to pay a sum of money which, when due, bears interest under the statute, either at the legal rate, or according to the agreement of the parties, within the limit allowed thereby."

Effect of statutory provisions.

The following decisions deal with the effect of statutory provisions, other than those relating to rates of interest, upon contracts to pay interest on interest.

In California it has been held that in view of Civil Code, § 1919, which provides: "The parties may, in any contract in writing whereby any debt is secured to be paid, agree that if the interest on such debt is not punctually paid . . . [the difference] shall become a part of the principal, and thereafter bear the same rate of interest as the principal debt," a stipulation that the deferred instalments of interest shall bear interest at a higher rate than that borne by the principal is wholly illegal and void. Yndart v. Den, 118 Cal. 533, 58 Am. St. Rep. 200, 48 Pac. 618.

In view of the Idaho statute, § 1266, Revised Statutes, forbidding compound interest, coupon notes given for the interest of the principal debt, which, by their terms, draw interest after maturity, are usurious, although the compound interest provided for in the coupon notes, when added to the simple interest, falls below the legal contractual rates fixed by law. Vermont Loan & T. Co. v. Hoffman, 5 Idaho, 376, 37 L.R.A. 509, 95 Am. St. Rep. 186, 49 Pac. 31'; Vermont Loan & T. Co. v. Tetzlaff, 6 Idaho, 105, 53 Pac. 104.

It was at one time the law of Louisiana that no stipulation in the original contract to pay interest upon interest should be valid. See Lee v. Goodrich, 21 La. Ann. 278; Compton v. Compton, 5 La. Ann. 618, in the last-cited of which cases such provision was regarded as rendering void a stipulation to pay 10 per cent on interest notes after maturity.

A provision that notes given for interest shall draw interest after maturity is not usurious, as there is in effect a capitalization of interest which brings the case within the provisions of art. 2924 of the Revised Civil Code. Scottish-American Mortg. Co. v. Ogden, 49 La. Ann. 8, 21 So. 116.

Where it is provided by statute that parties may contract in writing for the payment of interest, but the interest shall not be compounded oftener than once in a year, an agreement that interest may be compounded every six months is invalid. Moore v. Macon Sav. Bank, 22 Mo. App. 684; Citizens' Nat. Bank v. Donnell, 172 Mo. 384, 72 S. W. 925.

A statute providing that the parties to any note may stipulate that if interest is not punctually paid, such interest shall draw interest and become a part of the principal, but that the interest shall not be compounded oftener than once a year, renders void a contract that interest shall be paid semiannually, and that, if not paid when due, it shall be compounded. Murray v. Oliver, 3 Or. 539.

In Stanford v. Coran, 26 Mont. 285, 67 Pac. 1005, it seems to be implied that since the adoption in 1895 of the Civil Code, § 2587, which provides that parties may contract in writing for the payment of compound interest, an agreement to pay interest on interest not paid when due is valid.

But a statute providing: "The parties to any bond, bill, promissory note, or other instrument of writing, may stipulate therein for a greater or higher rate of interest than 10 per cent per annum, and any such stipulation contained in any such instrument of writing may be enforced in any court of law or equity of competent jurisdiction," does not render valid a stipulation that if interest is not paid when due, it shall bear interest the same as the principal. Wilson v. Davis, 1 Mont. 183.

So, also, in Co. v. Smith, 1 Nev. 161, 90 Am. Dec. 476, a similar statute was held not to warrant compound interest, such conclusion being strengthened by the fact that the California act from which such statute was copied contained a further provision permitting the parties to agree that if interest is not punctually paid, it shall become a part of the principal, and thereafter pay the same rate of interest as the principal debt.

The question of usury.

It is thoroughly settled that a stipulation made before interest has become due, that unpaid interest shall itself bear interest, or shall from time to time become principal, and bear interest as such, does not, unless intended as a cover for usurious interest, taint the original obligation with usury. This statement is supported by Le Grange v. Hamilton, 4 T. R. 613; Grider v. Driver, 46 Ark. 50; Carney v. Matthews, 86 Ark. 25, 109 S. W. 1024; Hovey v. Edmison, 3 Dak. 449, 22 N. W. 594; Scott v. Saffold, 37 Ga. 384; Bowman v. Neely, 137 Ill. 443, 27 N. E. 758; Burns v. Anderson, 68 Ind. 181; Breckenridge v. Brooks, 2 A. K. Marsh. 335, 12 Am. Dec. 401; Bradley v. Merrill, 91 Me. 340, 40 Atl. 132; Levens v. Briggs, 21 Or. 333, 14 L.R.A. 188, 28 Pac. 15; Baum v. Raley, 53 S. C. 32, 30 S. E. 713; Goodale v. Wallace, 19 S. D. 405, 117 Am. St. Rep. 962, 103 N. W. 651, 9 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 545; Yaws v. Jones, — Tex. —, 19 S. W. 443; Hillsboro Oil Co. v. Citizens' Nat. Bank, 32 Tex. Civ. App. 610, 75 S. W. 336; Tallman v. Truesdell, 3 Wis. 443; and by dicta in Ex parte Bevan, 9 Ves. Jr. 223; Pauling v. Creagh, 54 Ala. 646; First Nat. Bank v. Waddell, 74 Ark. 241, 4 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 818, 85 S. W. 417; Farwell v. Sturdivant, 37 Me. 308; Connecticut v. Jackson, 1 Johns. Ch. 13, 7 Am. Dec. 471; Mowry v. Bishop, 5 Paige, 98; Quackenbush v. Leonard, 9 Paige, 334; Stewart v. Petree, 55 N. Y. 621, 14 Am. Rep. 352; Young v. Hill, 67 N. Y. 162, 23 Am. Rep. 99; Van Rensselaer v. Jones, 2 Barb. 643; Geisberg v. Mutual Bldg. & L. Asso. — Tex. Civ. App. —, 60 S. W. 478.

If the original contract does not provide for a higher rate of interest than the law authorizes, an agreement to pay interest on overdue interest will not render the original contract usurious. Hager v. Blake, 16 Neb. 12, 19 N. W. 780; Mathews v. Toogood, 25 Neb. 99, 41 N. W. 130; Rose v. Munford, 36 Neb. 148, 54 N. W. 129; Lewis Invest. Co. v. Boyd, 48 Neb. 604, 67 N. W. 456; Sanford v. Lundquist, 80 Neb. 408, 114 N. W. 279, s. c. on rehearing, 80 Neb. 414, 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 633, 118 N. W. 129.

In Rose v. Bridgeport, 17 Conn. 243, it is said that to stipulate for the payment of compound interest a priori, although sometimes regarded as tending to usury, has never been holden to be really usurious; but it is suggested that such a stipulation may perhaps be considered as somewhat inconsistent with the phraseology of the statute which prohibits the taking of more than 6 per cent per annum, "directly or indirectly."

In Covington v. Fisher, 22 Okla. 207, 97 Pac. 615, it is held that a clause in a promissory note which reads "with interest at 12 per cent per annum after maturity, interest payable semiannually, defaulting interest to draw same rate as 33 L.R.A.(N.S.)

principal,"—does not make such note usurious on its face.

In Mount v. Suydam, 4 Sandf. Ch. 399, it was held that a mortgage drawn for $3,000, with interest, on a loan of $2,800, under an agreement that the interest on the loan should, as it fell due, be added to the principal until it should be made up to $3,000, and thereafter interest should be paid upon that sum, was not usurious.

The inclusion of the amount due as interest in a note to bear interest after maturity is not unlawful. McCrae v. Gunter, 14 Ky. L. Rep. 5, 18 S. W. 1034.

In Merchants' & Planters' Bank v. Caston, — Miss. —, 52 So. 633, it was held that a note the amount of which included interest on the indebtedness for which it was given up to the time of its maturity, and which provided that it should bear interest after maturity, was not usurious, the court saying that the case of Carter v. Holloway, — Miss. —, 28 So. 941, which holds the contrary, was necessarily overruled by PALM v. FANCHER.

But in First Nat. Bank v. Davis, 108 Ill. 633, a note the amount of which was made up of the amount of the loan, the amount of interest at the highest legal rate which would accrue thereon up to the time of its maturity, and the amount of interest on such interest, similarly computed, was held usurious; although it was conceded that interest might lawfully have been taken in advance.

Interest coupons themselves bearing interest after maturity are not usurious. Abbott v. Stone, 172 Ill. 634, 64 Am. St. Rep. 60, 50 N. E. 328; Martin v. Land Mortg. Bank, 5 Tex. Civ. App. 167, 23 S. W. 1032.

So, also, in Stickney v. Moore, 108 Ala. 590, 19 So. 76, and Graham v. Fitts, 53 Fla. 1053, 43 So. 512, 13 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 149, it is held that "the payment of interest on overdue instalments of interest, evidenced by separate coupon notes for interest on the principal, does not constitute usury, and such interest is recoverable upon coupon notes after their maturity, which were given at the time of the accrual of a debt, for the interest accruing thereon; for, being promissory notes, it is only just that, if not paid when due, they should draw interest, by way of damages for the detention of the money."

So, also, it has been held that a stipulation in a mortgage that interest should be paid on overdue instalments, evidenced by separate notes, of interest on the principal, does not render the transaction usurious. Ginn v. New England Mortg. Secur. Co. 92 Ala. 135, 8 So. 388.

An agreement made before interest becomes due, that interest shall be paid on overdue instalments of interest evidenced by separate notes, is enforceable in equity as well as at law. Stickney v. Moore, 108 Ala. 590, 19 So. 76.

As to the effect of a statute forbidding compound interest to render coupon notes usurious, see under heading, "Effect of statutory provisions," supra. As to whether such notes contravene statutes fixing maximum rate of interest, see infra.

There is a conflict of opinion as to whether a stipulation of the kind herein under consideration may be in contravention of a statutory provision fixing the maximum rate of interest; the preponderance of authority, however, being that it does not.

Thus, it has been held that a stipulation in a note bearing the maximum legal rate of interest, that interest should be paid periodically, although the principal is not payable until a future day, and that, if not paid when due, it should bear interest, does not violate a statute against the taking of more than legal interest. Ragan v. Day, 46 Iowa, 239; Hawley v. Howell, 60 Iowa, 79, 14 N. W. 199.

So, also, in Radford v. Southern Mut. L. Ins. Co. 12 Bush, 434, it was held that an agreement to pay interest semiannually, and that each instalment should bear interest from the time it should fall due until paid, does not violate the statute limiting the amount of interest which may lawfully be exacted, the court saying: "A party may lawfully contract for the payment of interest as it accrues, and it is not necessary that the principal debt should be due at the time the payment of accrued interest is exacted. It may be that the instalments of interest might be made so frequent or unusual as to indicate a disposition to evade the spirit of the law, and compound the interest so rapidly as thereby to secure a greater rate of interest than can be lawfully contracted for; but we cannot say that this transaction bears upon its face satisfactory evidence of such an intention. It is not unusual, when money is loaned for a long period of time, to exact the payment of the accrued interest at stated periods. It is not unreasonable that the borrower should pay interest upon accrued interest if he fails to pay it when, according to the contract, it ought to have been paid. It may be sued for and recovered, and it is neither oppressive nor unreasonable to require the defaulting debtor to pay interest on money wrongfully withheld from the creditor at the rate he agreed in advance to pay, that rate being authorized by law."

In Taylor v. Hiestand, 46 Ohio St. 345, 20 N. E. 345, a stipulation in a note bearing interest at the highest legal rate, that the semiannual instalments of interest, if not paid when due, should bear interest at such rate, was held not to violate a statute providing that the parties to any promissory note for the forbearance or payment of money at any future time may stipulate thereon for the payment of interest upon the amount thereof at any rate of interest not exceeding 8 per cent per annum, payable annually, although it is apparent that the note may earn in any one year as interest a sum greater than 8 per cent on the principal sum.

In Newton v. Woodley, 55 S. C. 132, 32 33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

S. E. 531, 33 S. E. 1, it was held by an equally divided court, affirming a judgment of the court below, that an agreement to pay interest in advance, unpaid interest to draw interest at the same rate as principal, was not usurious, although the result of such a transaction was to give the lender more than the lawful rate of interest.

In Blake v. Yount, 42 Wash. 101, 114 Am. St. Rep. 106, 84 Pac. 625, 7 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 487, a stipulation in a promissory note payable one year after date, with interest, that, if not paid when due, the interest should be added to and become a part of the principal sum, to bear interest thereafter at 12 per cent per annum, was held not to violate a statutory provision that no person shall, directly or indirectly, take or receive any greater interest, sum, or value for the loan or forbearance of any money, goods, or thing in action, than 12 per cent per annum, since it was within the power of the borrower to avoid paying interest on the interest by paying it to its legal and equitable owner, the court saying: "Of course, if it appears upon the face of the transaction that there is any trick or device or subterfuge by which the borrower is compelled, in order to get the money, to pay a larger amount of interest than is allowed by the statute, the note will be determined to be usurious; as, for instance, where the interest is computed in advance and added to the principal, and the maximum rate of interest charged on the principal and interest so compounded. In such case it is evident that the borrower is compelled to pay more than the maximum rate of interest prescribed by the statute, because the form of the note can in no wise change the legal character of the contract. Or, if the interest is to be paid so often, and, if not so paid, compounded, and it is evident that the intention is to obtain more than the legal rate of interest, the result would be the same. But in this case, where the interest is not due or payable until the end of a year (the cycle of time which is taken notice of by the statute), the borrower has the privilege of paying the interest at that time, and we see no reason for holding the note usurious."

There is, however, a series of Nebraska cases which hold that where the interest provided for in a promissory note is the maximum rate allowed by law, and is represented by coupon notes providing that interest shall be allowed thereon after maturity at the maximum rate, a stipulation for interest on interest will not be enforced, since, as the two notes represent but one transaction and one indebtedness, to enforce such stipulation would be to evade the statutory provision limiting the amount which can by law be taken. Mathews v. Toogood, 25 Neb. 99, 41 N. W. 130; Richardson v. Campbell, 27 Neb. 644, 11 L.R.A. 189, 43 N. W. 405; Rose v. Munford, 36 Neb. 148, 54 N. W. 129.

If such coupon notes had been separated and sold as independent notes to a bona fide purchaser for value before maturity, there is but little doubt that such purchaser would have been entitled to interest after the notes became due. Richardson v. Campbell, 27 Neb. 644, 11 L.R.A. 189, 43 N. W. 405.

But it is only where the rate agreed upon, together with the interest on the coupons, will exceed the amount of simple interest which might lawfully have been contracted for upon the principal, that the contract is unlawful; and so, where the interest on the coupon notes from the time of maturity until the principal debt becomes due does not, when added to the interest on the principal, exceed the amount of simple interest computed at the maximum rate, it may be collected. Murtagh v. Thompson, 28 Neb. 358, 44 N. W. 451; Richardson v. Campbell, 34 Neb. 181, 33 Am. St. Rep. 633, 51 N. W. 753; Lewis Invest. Co. v. Boyd, 48 Neb. 604, 67 N. W. 456; Sanford v. Lundquist, 80 Neb. 408, 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 633, 114 N. W. 279, 118 N. W. 129.

And the same rule applies where a stipulation for interest on interest is contained in the principal note. See Hallam v. Telleren, 55 Neb. 255, 75 N. W. 560.

In Brown v. Crow, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 29 S. W. 653, it was held that while the mere compounding of interest in a note is not, of itself, usurious, yet, if, by compounding, the legal rate of interest is exceeded, it is a violation of the law; but this decision is criticized in Crider v. San Antonio Real Estate Bldg. & L. Asso. 13 Tex. Civ. App. 399, 37 S. W. 237, 46 S. W. 863, as ignoring the principle that where, by the terms of the contract, payment by the time certain may avoid usury, the contract is not usurious, the interest in such case being regarded as a penalty for the default.

And in Crider v. San Antonio Real Estate Bldg. & L. Asso. 89 Tex. 597, 35 S. W. 1047, a position at variance with Brown v. Crow was taken by the Texas supreme court, which held that a note which included the amount of interest on the loan was not usurious in providing for interest on the whole amount from maturity until paid, even though the interest upon the matured interest and that upon the principal, added together, would exceed interest on the principal at the highest rate allowed by law, the court saying: "Interest is the compensation paid for the use of money and for the forbearance to sue. A contract for compounding interest upon a loan at the highest rate allowed by law is a contract for more interest than the law permits during the term of the forbearance. But a contract for the legal rate of interest during the time of the forbearance and for interest upon interest thereafter is not usurious; because the contract contemplates a continuance of the debt after maturity, only through the default of the debtor. When the debt falls due, the creditor is as much entitled to his interest as to his principal, and if the parties have elected, in good faith, to provide for the default, and to agree that after maturity the interest shall bear interest, it is a contract for interest upon the forbearance of a new obligation which has accrued, and not a contract for additional interest upon the original principal."

E. S. O.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE RAILROAD COMPANY, Appt.,
v.

D. S. GAY.

(143 Ky. 56, 135 S. W. 400.)

Carrier — refusal to accept part of shipment — effect.

A consignee of a machine shipped in parts cannot refuse to accept a tender by the carrier of a portion of the parts, although the others are missing, so as to prevent the liability of the carrier from changing from that of insurer to that of warehouseman.

(March 18, 1911.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Clark County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover the value of a certain machine, parts of which were destroyed by fire while in defendant's possession. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Pendleton, Bush & Bush, John T. Shelby, and Benjamin D. Warfield for appellant.

Mr. J. M. Stevenson for appellee.

Nunn, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Appellee brought this action to recover the value of a special seed separator which was shipped to him by S. Howes & Company, from Silver Creek, New York, to be delivered to him by appellant in Winchester, Kentucky. On March 21st the depot of appellant in Winchester was destroyed by fire, and five pieces of appellee's machine, which had arrived immediately prior to that date, were also burned. The other part of the machine did not arrive in Winchester until April 6, 1906. Appellee recovered judgment in the lower court against appellant for $420, the value of the machine, with interest from March 22, 1906, until paid. Appellant asks a reversal of that judgment for three reasons: First,

Note. — The right of shipper or consignee, as against the carrier, to refuse to accept goods damaged in its hands, is covered in the note to Parsons v. United States Exp. Co. 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 842.

because the court erred in instructing the jury, peremptorily, to find for appellee; second, because the court erred in sustaining appellee's demurrer to a part of appellant's answer; third, because the court erred in holding that appellee was not required to accept a tender by appellant to make a partial delivery of the machine. Although appellant submits the foregoing propositions for a reversal, its real contention is that appellee was not justified in refusing to accept the five parts of the machine tendered to him in Winchester before the fire, solely upon the ground that one part of the machine was missing, and that, as he did so refuse, it held them not as a carrier, but under the less onerous responsibility of a warehouseman. This we consider to be the real and only question necessary to be considered by the court. We deem it unnecessary to consider the difference between the liability of one undertaking to carry, and the liability of one acting as a warehouseman. We must determine whether or not appellant's responsibility as a carrier ended before March 21, 1906, the date of the fire. If it did, its responsibility was that of a warehouseman, and the judgment will have to be reversed. The liability of the carrier cannot end until that of the consignee, owner, or warehouseman begins, and the carrier must show some open act or offer of delivery before its liability can be changed from that of a carrier to that of a warehouseman. It is agreed that the separator was "knocked down" and shipped in six separate pieces; that it was delivered to the initial carrier in this manner; and that when appellant received it from the initial carrier in Cincinnati, Ohio, and delivered it in Winchester, only five parts of the machine were to be had. These parts were offered to appellee several days before the fire, but he refused to receive them because all of the machine was not there and tendered him. If appellee had a right to refuse to accept these parts the judgment should stand, but, if he had no such right, the judgment should be reversed. Appellant says that only five parts of the machine were delivered to it in Cincinnati, Ohio; that it accepted, carried them to Winchester, and offered to deliver them to appellee there. It admitted that the machine was shipped under one contract of carriage, and, of course, this fact was known to appellant at the time it received the five parts of the machine in Cincinnati.

Appellee contends that nothing short of delivery or an offer to deliver the whole of the machine could have relieved the company of its liability as an answer, and cites from 6 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 465, the following: "There may be delivery and acceptance as to a part of the goods, leaving the carrier liable as to the balance. But, unless there is something to indicate a contrary agreement, the contract of carriage will be deemed indivisible, and the consignee will not be bound to accept part performance." The cases of Sayward v. Stevens, 3 Gray, 97, and Chicago & R. I. R. Co. v. Warren, 16 Ill. 502, 63 Am. Dec. 317, are cited to support this, but they do not do so in all particulars. In the Massachusetts case the owner of a vessel sued the consignee for unpaid freight on a bill of lumber. A portion of the lumber was lost from the vessel while on its way from Boston to San Francisco, and the owner of the vessel sold the balance of the lumber for the freight, but it paid only a part of it. The exact question before us was not in that case. The Illinois case was one where the shipper delivered to the railroad company about 1,700 pounds of rags packed in sacks, to be delivered at a certain point to the consignee. The railroad company attempted to deliver the consignee about 500 pounds of rags lying loose about the depot, in fulfillment of its contract of carriage. The court determined that the consignee was not compelled to receive them. They were loose; that is, they were not packed in sacks as were the rags which he delivered to the company, and there was no evidence that the rags offered to be delivered were any part of the rags shipped to him.

Appellant cites from volume 3, § 1365, Hutchinson on Carriers, as the true rule governing cases like the one at bar, the following: "As a general rule, the doctrine that where goods are injured the owner may abandon them as for a total loss, and sue for their value, does not apply to contracts of affreightment. The fact, therefore, that the goods are injured upon the journey, through causes for which the carrier is responsible, does not of itself justify the consignee in refusing to receive them, but he must accept them and hold the carrier responsible for the injury. Where, however, the damage is such that the entire value of the goods is destroyed, the consignee may refuse to receive them, and sue the carrier for their value. Thus, where a patented machine, while being transported from the manufacturer's, was so injured as to be practically worthless, and to cost as much to repair it as to buy a new one, it was held that the consignee was justified in refusing to receive it, and might recover from the carrier the value of the machine and the amount paid for carriage, with interest from the time when it should have been allowed. But, where one of a number of boxes shipped was missing, it was held that the consignee was not justified in refusing to receive the balance, but was bound to accept them and hold the carrier for the missing portion." And in support of this text appellant cites the cases of Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Booton, 4 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. (Willson), 103, 15 S. W. 502; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Jackson, 4 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. (Willson) 73, 15 S. W. 128. These cases do support the text. In the Booton Case a lot of sewing machines were "knocked down" and put up in seventeen boxes and fifteen crates. Sixteen of the boxes and all the crates were transported and offered to be delivered to the consignee, but he refused to accept them because one of the boxes was missing. The court in that case determined that under the circumstances it was his duty to receive them and hold the company responsible for the other box. In the Jackson Case a trunk was shipped and a portion of the articles it contained when delivered to the carrier were missing when offered to be delivered to the consignee. The court determined that it was his duty to have received the trunk when tendered to him, and that the railroad would have still been responsible to him for the value of the articles lost. The trunk and the articles it contained, which were offered to be delivered to the consignee, were of value without the missing articles. This text and these authorities do not meet the issue presented in the case at bar. The things transported and offered to be delivered to the consignee in the cases cited were of value. The five pieces of machinery offered to be delivered in the case at bar were of no value as a machine without the missing part. We have been cited no opinion by this or any other court exactly in point.

Our conclusion is that, if appellant tendered to appellee the five parts of the machine, it was his duty to receive and receipt for these parts so tendered, and look to the railroad company for the delivery of the missing part and damages, if any, for the delay; and, if not delivered, he should have attempted to supply the missing part from the factory at the expense of appellant, and, in the event he could not supply it, he could recover the full value of the machine.

For these reasons, the judgment of the lower court is reversed, and remanded for further proceedings consistent herewith.
33 L.R.A.(N.S.)

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA COURT OF APPEALS.

HERMAN L. MINTON, Appt.,
v.

F. G. SMITH PIANO COMPANY OF WASHINGTON.

(36 App. D. C. 137.)

Prize — competition — right to award.

1. One who advertises an offer to give a prize to whoever rightly counts the dots in the advertisement, and states that in case of a tie a prize of equal value will be given to each one making a correct answer, cannot avoid liability to anyone making a correct answer, on the ground that the answer was not as neatly and legibly written as was the one for which the prize was awarded.

Same — decision of judges — agreement to obey — effect.

2. One who, in sending an answer to an advertised offer of a prize for a correct solution of a problem, agrees to abide by the decision of the judges does not thereby estop himself from contesting their rejection of his solution on a ground not made a condition of the contest in the advertisement.

Pleading — offer of prize — fraud.

3. An allegation of fraud is not necessary to enable one accepting an advertised offer of a prize for a correct solution of a problem, to hold the one making the offer responsible therefor in case he refuses to comply therewith, and it may be ignored if made, and will therefore not render demurrable a complaint stating the offer, acceptance, performance of the contract, and refusal of the prize.

(January 3, 1911.)

Note. — Right to maintain action for prize offered in prize contest.

Most of the cases involving the right to maintain an action for a prize offered in a prize contest are actions to secure prizes won in horse races. In such cases it is generally held that there is a sufficient agreement to support an action for the prize, and that such transactions do not come within the prohibition of statutes against gambling or wagering transactions. Alvord v. Smith, 63 Ind. 58; Deliar v. Plymouth County Agri. Soc. 57 Iowa, 481, 10 N. W. 872; Misner v. Knapp, 13 Or. 135, 57 Am. Rep. 6, 9 Pac. 65.

But in Bronson Agri. & Breeders' Asso. v. Ramsdell, 24 Mich. 441, under a statute making the racing of horses and giving of premiums therefor illegal, it was held in an action for the unpaid balance of a premium won in a horse race, that the whole proceeding, including the order on which the action was based, was illegal, and that

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Supreme Court entered upon demurrer to the declaration in an action for damages for deceit and for a breach of contract in the awarding of a prize alleged to have been successfully won by plaintiff. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. William Bradford, for appellant:

The court below should have considered each of the counts of the declaration separately, upon each separate demurrer; and should have decided the issue in each case separately, in order to avoid confusion and fallacy.

Gerhard v. Bates, 2 El. & Bl. 476, 22 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 384, 17 Jur. 1097, 1 C. L. R. 868, 1 Week. Rep. 383; Denton v. Great Northern R. Co. 5 El. & Bl. 860, 25 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 129, 2 Jur. N. S. 185, 4 Week. Rep. 240; Shippen v. Bowen, 122 U. S. 576, 30 L. ed. 1172, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1283; Brownlie v. Campbell, L. R. 5 App. Cas. 953; Pollock, Torts, 257.

The allegation and admission of the warranty, and its breach, are of themselves sufficient to establish the deceit, even if there were no allegation that the judges had or had not decided the question submitted to them by the parties. Carter v.

Glass, 44 Mich. 154, 38 Am. Rep. 240, 6 N. W. 200; Walsh v. St. Louis Exposition & Music Hall Assn. 90 Mo. 459, 2 S. W. 842; Ryer v. Stockwell, 14 Cal. 134, 73 Am. Dec. 634; Harson v. Pike, 16 Ind. 140; Wentworth v. Day, 3 Met. 352, 37 Am. Dec. 145; Carlill v. Carbolic Smoke Ball Co. 61 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 698 [1892] 2 Q. B. 484, 56 J. P. 665.

Mr. W. C. Sullivan for appellee.

Shepard, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On October 17, 1909, the F. G. Smith Piano Company, a corporation engaged in business in the District, published in the Washington Daily Post the following advertisement of a prize scheme:

Free—$675 Webster Player-Piano.
First Prize in the Great Counting Contest of the F. G. Smith Piano Company.

Prize No. 2—$25 in Gold.

Prize No. 3—$20 in Gold.

Prize No. 4—$15 in Gold.

Prize No. 5—$10 in Gold.

Prize No. 6—$5 in Gold.

These prizes given absolutely free to Successful Counters.

Additional prizes aggregating $4,250 will no action was maintainable for the money won.

A horse race for a prize does not become a wagering contract because the entrants paid an entrance fee. Hankins v. Ottinger, 115 Cal. 454, 40 L.R.A. 76, 47 Pac. 254; Porter v. Day, 71 Wis. 296, 37 N. W. 259.

But in Applegarth v. Colley, 7 Jur. 18, 12 L. J. Exch. N. S. 34, 10 Mees. & W. 723, which was an action against a stakeholder for a stake won in a horse race, part of which consisted of sums deposited by entrants and part of which was donated by a third party as a prize, whether or not plaintiff could recover the part of the wager represented by the subscriptions was left in doubt, though it was held that he was entitled to recover the amount put up by the third party as a prize.

In Wilkinson v. Stitt, 175 Mass. 581, 56 N. E. 830, it was held that an action in equity was maintainable by the members of a bicycle club, against the members of another club, to get possession of a cup won by the plaintiff club, which cup had been offered as a prize for a series of races between members of three different clubs, and was purchased by subscription of persons not members of any of the competing clubs, the court saying that the contention that the transaction was gambling, betting, or wagering was too plainly untenable to require discussion.

In Trego v. Pennsylvania Academy, 2 Sadler (Pa.) 313, 18 W. N. C. 98, 3 Atl. 819, defendant offered prizes for paintings to be submitted. The judges decided that 33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

no paintings submitted merited either the first or second prize, and awarded plaintiff the third prize. In a suit by him for the first prize, it was held that unless awarded by the judges the prize was not demandable, and a demurrer for defendant was sustained.

In Holt v. Wood, 24 Pittsb. L. J. N. S. 443, 14 Pa. Co. Ct. 499, defendant offered a house and lot worth \$2,500 to persons sending in a name which should be chosen for a new suburb, the name to be selected by a committee from those submitted. Nineteen different persons sent in the name selected, and defendant deeded the house and lot to the one first sending in that name. Plaintiff, one of the other eighteen, sued for the prize, and it was held that the transaction was not a lottery, and that plaintiff was entitled to recover; but whether he could recover the full value of the prize, or only $\frac{1}{19}$ thereof, was not definitely decided.

In Carlill v. Carbolic Smoke Ball Co. 61 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 698 [1892] 2 Q. B. 484, 56 J. P. 665, 698, defendant offered a reward to any person who, after purchasing and using according to directions a certain remedy, should contract influenza. Plaintiff used the remedy, and thereafter, in spite of its supposed powers, contracted influenza, and sued defendant for the reward. The court held that this was not a wagering contract, and not without consideration, which was furnished by the purchase and use of the remedy, and that therefore she was entitled to recover.

R. L. S.

be awarded contestants in the order of merit.

This great counting contest offers you the easiest chance you've ever had to earn a valuable prize by simply using your brains. All you have to do is to count the dots which appear in and around the outlined Webster player-piano. Then send your answer, with your name and address neatly and legibly written, to the "Contest Department," F. G. Smith Piano Company, before 6 P. M., Tuesday, October 26, 1909.

Enter the contest now. All who get their answers in within the time limit have an equal chance to earn a prize. This liberal offer is part of our plan for extending the fame and popularity of our Webster pianos and player-pianos.

Rules Governing Contest.

Count the dots and send your answer in with name and address plainly written. Only one member of a family may enter. Only one estimate will be accepted from the same contestant. No one connected with the music trade may enter. In case of ties, premiums of equal value will be given to each. Winners will be notified by mail. The correct number of dots is known only to the manufacturers of the Webster piano. This number has been forwarded in a sealed envelop to the four judges of the contest, who are representatives of the four newspapers of the city of Washington. We do not know the number, and the judges will not know it until they open the envelopes on the day the contest is decided.

Remember it costs nothing to enter this counting contest, and it requires very little time and just a little brain work to count the dots and send in your answer. Do it now!

The F. G. Smith Piano Company.

1225 Pennsylvania avenue,
Washington, D. C.

I have counted ——— dots in and around the piano player, and I agree to abide by the decision of the judges.

Name ———,

Address ———, City ———, State ———,

You may fill out this blank, or at your option use other paper.

Contest closes Tuesday, October 26, 1909, at 6 P. M.

All answers must be addressed to the "Contest Department."

The F. G. Smith Piano Company,
1225 Pennsylvania avenue,

Bradbury Building, Washington, D. C.

The appellant, Herman L. Minton, claiming to have successfully counted the dots and to have become entitled to the first prize offered therein, or its equivalent in 33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

value, began this action by a declaration filed January, 19, 1910. This declaration is in two counts.

The first count sets out in full the advertisement above quoted, declaring the same an offer to any and all persons who might undertake compliance with the same. It alleges that plaintiff, in consideration of defendants offer to give prizes to successful counters, and its promise and warranty that in case of ties premiums of equal value would be given to each, and that the judges of the contest should, within a reasonable time, decide said contest according to the "rules governing contest," and not otherwise, was induced to accept and did accept the said offer as made in said advertisement; that he counted the dots in and around said picture, and ascertained the true number to be 3,228; that on October 23, 1909, he sent his said acceptance and solution to defendant. The written statement of plaintiff's acceptance and compliance is set out, and it is alleged that it was made out by filling the blank spaces left for the number and the name and address of the answerer in the form attached to said advertisement. It further alleges that said form was deceitfully designed to entrap plaintiff and others to make in advance a promise to abide by the fraud contemplated and practised by the defendant; that plaintiff's acceptance, answer, and solution were duly received and the receipt thereof acknowledged. It then alleged facts showing that plaintiff was not within any of the exceptions of said offer of premiums as published; that having so done and made a correct answer, plaintiff became entitled to the first prize offered in case no other ascertained the true number of dots, and in case of other correct answers, so that a tie might arise, the plaintiff became entitled to receive a premium of equal value, to wit $675; that he became entitled to notice of action on his answer in a reasonable time, and to the delivery of said prize or premium on demand; that, notwithstanding plaintiff was a successful counter and had fully performed all of the requirements of said contract, the defendant has fraudulently and tortiously neglected to deliver him either the first prize or one in equal value thereto; that in pursuance of its design to defraud plaintiff, the defendant, on November 27, 1909, addressed him the following letter.

Washington, D. C., November 27th, 1909.

Mr. Herman L. Minton,

618 7th St. N. E., City.

Dear Sir:—

The judges in our recent dot counting contest regretted that your solution, while correct in number, did not measure up in the other two points, neatness and legibility, with other correctly numbered solutions submitted to them, so that, under the rules governing the contest, they were unable to award you one of the advertised prizes; however, they agreed that the originality of your design should have some recognition aside from contest rules, and suggested that an extra prize of $2.50 in gold be awarded to you as a mark of appreciation, and if you will call at our wareroom, will be pleased to carry out their suggestion.

Very truly yours,

(Signed, F. G. Smith Piano Company.

(Countersigned) W. P. Van Wickle,
Vice-President.

That on December 9, 1909, it addressed him another letter as follows:

Washington, D. C., December 9th, 1909.

Mr. William Bradford,

405 5th St. N. W., City.

Dear Sir:—

We have your favor dated December 8th, in which you state that a client of yours, Herman L. Minton, claims to have entered a "contest" advertised by us in the several daily papers a few weeks ago, and that he won a $675 piano, which has not been delivered to him.

This would be important if true, but unfortunately for Mr. Minton his statement is not correct; he won no prize, and there is absolutely no foundation for his claim.

In the contest referred to, persons were invited to compete under the printed rules governing the contest, in the Washington Post and other daily papers, we calling to mind the Star of October 21st, 1909; the rules specified that contestants were to count the dots in the advertisement, and send in their solution either on the printed coupon connected with the advertisement, or another paper at their option; the rules also stated that neatness, legibility, and accuracy (correctness of number) were to be the three points to be considered by the judges in coming to their decisions, making the awards of prizes; in other words, the mere sending in of the correct number was not of itself sufficient to win any prize; there were two other points to be complied with by all contestants; in addition to this, every contestant over his or her signature, had to agree to abide by the decision of the judges, four (4) representatives of the Washington daily papers; Mr. Minton entered the contest with this agreement, as did all contestants, the decision of the judges to be final; in this connection we wish to say that as advertised this company had nothing whatever to do with the making of the awards of prizes, or arriving at any conclusion whatsoever relative to the awards; this was relegated to the judges, and if Mr. Minton had any grounds for complaint, it would be against the judges, from whose decision he agreed not to appeal, and not against the F. G. Smith Piano Company.
33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

The correct number as announced by the judges was 3,238, and a great many persons sent in this number, among others Mr. Minton, and while they all had the correct number, one of the three points to be attained, many fell down on the other two points, neatness and legibility; the judges went over the correctly numbered solutions, eliminating those not up to the standard of neatness and legibility, and awarded the prizes in the order of merit to those solutions which they adjudged as the neatest and most legible; the judges did not find that Minton's solution, and many others, while correct in one point (the right number), compared with other solutions in points of neatness and legibility, the two other points to be observed, and Mr. Minton, and all others not awarded prizes, were so advised.

We trust we have made it plain that sending the correct number alone did not entitle anyone to a prize; there were other conditions to be observed under the rules; nor did sending the correct number alone by two or more persons constitute a tie under the rules, for solutions had to be not only correct in number, but so equal in point of neatness and legibility that the judges could not discriminate between them, but that did not occur; the judges found no solutions perfectly equal in all three points.

Plaintiff then further alleges that, in consideration of the representation and warranty so falsely and fraudulently made by defendant, he was induced to accept said offer supposing it to be bona fide, honest, and fair, and upon no other supposition and condition, and that his promise to abide by the decision of the judges in said contest was not absolute, but contingent upon said supposition and condition, and was nullified by defendant's fraud and deceit; that defendant has never performed the conditions on its part offered according to the terms of the same, but has fraudulently and tortiously neglected and refused to perform the same, to the great damage of plaintiff, namely, $675.

The second count sets out the offer of the premiums as advertised, and alleges that the same was fraudulent and deceitful. It further alleges that plaintiff was induced by the same to count the said dots, and perform all the things required by said offer and warranty to entitle him to the said prize. That he did so perform the same, and became entitled thereby to the benefit of said offer and warranty. That he has often requested the defendant to fulfil said warranty and deliver to him a premium equal in value to a $675 Webster player-piano, but that the defendant has neglected and refused so to do, and has broken its said warranty, although all conditions precedent have been performed, and the period of time for so doing has elapsed, and plaintiff has become entitled to maintain this action. That he therefore sues the defendant for $675 due and owing to him in consideration of the breach of said warranty. He asks judgment for said sum.

Defendant demurred to each count, assigning as one of the matters of law to be argued that neither count shows that plaintiff was a "winner" in the counting contest set out in said counts. The demurrer was sustained to each count, the opinion of the learned trial justice being stated as follows:

"If the plaintiff was induced into a contract by fraud, he can either rescind or affirm it; not both. If he affirms it, he must abide by its terms as well as the other party. By suing for its breach he appears to affirm it. One of its terms is that he shall abide by the decision of the judges, and this term is obligatory unless there was a fraudulent award by the judges. Indeed, in the absence of even an averment that the judges have or have not decided, he shows only a state of fact in which he can have no right of action."

Plaintiff declined to amend, and final judgment was entered for the defendant, from which this appeal has been prosecuted.

The appellant characterizes the first count as an action for damages for deceit, and the second as an action on an implied warranty, claiming that he is authorized to join the two counts in one declaration by the provisions of the Code, § 1532 [31 Stat. at L. 1418, chap. 854]. See also Shippen v. Bowen, 122 U. S. 575-582, 30 L. ed. 1172-1174, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1283.

The advertised offer of a reward or premium for the performance of a specified act is a proposition submitted to all persons who may accept and comply with its condition. Until accepted it may be withdrawn; but when accepted it becomes a binding contract between the proposer and the acceptor, who shall have performed the service or done the act required.

33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

The formal action by the acceptor against the proposer who fails to carry out his undertaking would seem to be assumpsit or possibly debt.

It may be conceded that the declaration in this case is inartificial and redundant. It contains unnecessary charges of fraud, but its character and sufficiency are not to be determined by these, but by the substantial facts alleged. The substantial facts to be alleged are a plain statement of the offer made, acceptance, and substantial compliance by the plaintiff with the terms and conditions of the offer, and the refusal of the defendant to perform. If these appear in either count, their effect is not impaired by superfluous charges of fraud. It is substance, not form, that governs the construction.

Although plaintiff entitles the contract a warranty, yet, as set out in the count with the allegations of performance by the plaintiff, it became a contract, for the failure to perform, which he sues. Treating the first count as sounding in tort, he had the right to join therewith the count sounding in contract. Code, § 1532. While this second count might have been more specific in its details, we are of the opinion that it was not subject to demurrer. The argument that he does not show that he was a winner in the proposed contest for prizes is founded upon the contention, sustained by the learned trial justice, that he was bound by the award of the judges of the contest, unless there was a fraudulent award by them, which has not been alleged.

The acceptance by plaintiff and his agreement to abide by the decision of the judges binds him, in the absence of allegations of a fraudulent award, to accept their decision in the matters properly submitted to them under the terms of the offer, which became a contract by plaintiff's compliance with its terms. The authority of the judges of the contest must be determined by the terms of the published offer and rules governing the contest. These must be given a reasonable interpretation, and in case of ambiguity in any particular, the construction should favor the acceptor rather than the proposer who prepared and submitted the offer.

There is, however, no ambiguity. The offer states: "All you have to do is to count the dots which appear in and around the outlined Webster player-piano. Then send your answer, with your name and address neatly and legibly written, to the 'Contest Department,' F. G. Smith Piano Company before 6 P. M., Tuesday, October 26th, 1909." In the "rules governing contest" the following appears: "Count the dots and send your answer in with the name and address plainly written." . . . "The correct number of dots is known only to the manufacturers of the Webster-piano. This number has been forwarded in a sealed envelop to the four judges of the contest, who are representatives of the four newspapers of the city of Washington. We do not know the number, and the judges will not know it until they open the envelopes on the day the contest is decided." Then follows the form which those entering the contest are authorized to send in after filling the blank left for the number, and signing the same with the address of the signer. It appears from this that the piano company was to ascertain if the name and address were plainly written. If not, it was under no obligation to transmit the answer to the judges. By such transmission they affirmed that these were plainly written. All that the judges were required to do was to compare the number of dots given in the answer with the number contained in the sealed envelop submitted by the manufacturers. The number was plainly enough written for them to make this comparison, and they reported that the answer contained the correct number of dots. Their duty according to the terms of the advertisement was fully performed when they did this. It seems that there was very little margin for "neatness and legibility" in the answer as returned on the blank form as authorized; but whether so or not, the determination of that was entirely beyond the power of the judges, and their finding on that ground was without weight or effect. Their duty was fully performed when they found and reported that the number given in the answer was the correct one. Everything beyond that was superfluous. The actual finding that plaintiff had given the correct number in his answer entitled him either to the special first prize offered, or, in case of a tie with others, to a premium of equal value. It was not necessary for him to allege fraud in the award of the judges in respect of a matter not submitted to their judgment by the terms of the offer as published and accepted.

It was error, therefore, to sustain the demurrers, and the judgment will be reversed, with costs. The cause will be remanded with directions to grant a new trial, and for further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion, pending which the plaintiff will be permitted to amend his declaration if so advised. Reversed.

33 L.R.A.(N.S.)

GEORGIA SUPREME COURT.

W. B. TATE, Plff. in Err.,

v.

MIKE GOODE et al.

('135 Ga. 738, 70 S. E. 571.)

Pleading — demurrer — joint defendants — benefit.

1. Where some of several joint defendants demur to the plaintiff's petition, and the demurrer goes to the substance of the whole petition, and challenges the plaintiff's right to any relief, such demurrer inures to the benefit of all, though some may be in default.

Appeal — reversal — remittitur — dismissal.

2. In a case described in the preceding headnote, if the trial judge overrules the demurrer, and, on exceptions of the demurrants, this judgment is reversed, and this court holds that the petition fails to state a cause of action against any of the defendants, upon the remittitur being made the judgment of the trial court, the petition will be dismissed, unless amended to meet the defects indicated by this court.

Appeal — permitting amendment of pleadings.

3. Where the remittitur is made the judgment of the trial court, reserving the right to the plaintiff to amend, and before any amendment is made, the court allows defendants who are in default to file pleading over the objections of the plaintiff, such a ruling is not a final judgment, from which a writ of error will lie.

(February 18, 1911.)

Headnotes by EVANS, P. J.

Note. — Right of one defendant to benefit of other's demurrer.

The scope of this note does not include cases arising upon answers, but some are cited in illustration and explanation.

The principle asserted in the first headnote to TATE v. GOODE was an ancient rule, applicable to defendants' other pleadings as well as to their demurrers. The matter is explained in Morrison v. Stoner, 7 Iowa, 493, where the matter arose upon an answer. The court said: "By the common law, when the makers of a joint contract were sued, the plaintiff must obtain judgment against all, or against none. The spirit of this rule still pervades the law to a greater or less extent. Thus, if one defendant pleads a defense which goes to the substance of the contract, it must, of course, inure to the benefit of the other. So, if his defense is to a part of the contract, but wholly destroys that portion as a payment of part. . . . In the case at bar, both contractors are in court. If the one pleads a matter which goes to the validity of the contract, or which is a defense for both, in its nature, on the whole or a part, and sue-ERROR to the Superior Court for Lumpkin County to review an order allowing defendants to file pleading over the objections of plaintiff. Dismissed.

Statement by Evans, P. J.:

W. B. Tate filed his petition against Barilla D. Satterfield, Mike Goode, and several other defendants, some of whom were residents of the county where the suit was filed, and others were nonresidents. Service was had on the nonresidents by publication. In the petition it was alleged that a testator devised certain lands to A and B, and conferred upon his executor power to sell any portion of the land should this be necessary by reason of some cause unforeseen to the testator, with the consent of the devisees. There was a limitation on the devise to A and B that, if they died leaving no child, children, or grandchildren, the property undisposed of in their lifetime "reverts to those who now by law would be entitled to the same if I had made no will." The devisees conveyed the land to the plaintiff by ordinary warranty deed, making no reference to the will, to the executor, or to the power of sale conferred on the executor. Under this deed the plaintiff went into possession of the land, and has since continued in possession. The executor was fully cognizant of and consented to the sale of the land to the plaintiff by this deed, and the plaintiff purchased the land from the executor, who acted in the premises on the authority of ceeds, the books hold that the other, even though in default, takes the benefit of it. 1 Chitty, Pl. 47, 50, 567; 1 Wms' Saund. 153, note 1; 2 Tidd, Pr. 803; Hall v. Rochester, 3 Cow. 374; Van Schaick v. Trotter, 6 Cow. 599."

So, in Bowman v. Noyes, 12 N. H. 302, the court said: "We are of opinion . . . that in an action on contract against two or more, if one defendant is defaulted, and the others, under the general issue, set up and maintain a defense which clearly negatives the plaintiff's right to recover against either of the defendants, and shows that he has no cause of action, the plaintiff cannot be entitled to judgment against the defendant who is defaulted. The court ought to take notice of the defense in such case. . . . It follows that, in such case, the defendant who is defaulted cannot be a witness for the other, because he has an interest. A verdict for that other will operate to discharge him."

The same was held in trespass. Thus, in a case of trespass quare clausum, and carrying away and converting the plaintiff's goods, against A and B, judgment was given against A by default. B pleaded that, as A's servant, he had, at his command, entered, the door being open, and taken the goods as a distress for rent due by the plaintiff to A, and that thereafter the plaintiff licensed him to sell the goods and pay the rent, which he did, so far as the proceeds availed (they being not sufficient to pay in full). A verdict was found for B, but judgment was entered against A for damages. Upon a motion by A in arrest of judgment, it was argued on his behalf, "that if, in a plea personal against divers defendants, the one defendant pleads in bar to parcel, or which extends only to him that pleads it, and the other pleads a plea that goes to the whole, that last plea shall first be tried, because it goes to the whole, and the other defendant shall have advantage of it; for in a personal action the discharge of one is the discharge of both. . . . In this case, the verdict having found that the goods were sold by the defendant [B] by the plaintiff's license, 33 L.R.A. (N.S.) that goes to the whole, as to the disposing and converting the goods to the defendant's use; and the damages being assessed entire against [A], no judgment could be given for the plaintiff against him." Of which opinion was the whole court for those reasons, and judgment was absolutely arrested. Biggs v. Bengier, 2 Ld. Raym. 1372.

In Marler v. Ayliffe, Cro. Jac. 134, it was said by way of explanation in a case of trespass against two for taking a gun and dagger away from the plaintiff, that if one defendant "justifies by gift of the goods so as he destroys the plaintiff's title, and shows that he could not have any cause of action, which is found accordingly for that defendant, although the other defendant be found guilty, yet no judgment shall be against him."

In State v. Williams, 17 Ark. 371, it was held in a suit on a forfeited recognizance to which one defendant demurred, that his demurrer, if successful, discharged a non-demurring defendant, unless the nature of the plea was of a character going to the personal discharge of the pleader, as distinguished from one challenging the cause of action.

Where the demurrer of one defendant in a chancery suit is not personal, but goes to the foundation of the complainant's right to recover upon the case stated, it is not error to dismiss the cause not only as to the demurrant, but also as to his co-defendant, although the latter failed to appear and make defense. Harrison v. Wallton (Harrison v. Turnbull) 95 Va. 721, 41 L.R.A. 703, 64 Am. St. Rep. 830, 30 S. E. 372.

In an action for the construction of a will and to remove a cloud on title, the court said: "The record shows that but two of the defendants appeared in the court below and demurred to the bill, and it is insisted that it was error to dismiss it as to all the defendants. The demurrer by the two defendants made an issue upon the bill, which, being sustained, left nothing to be decided by the court. It does not appear that the complainant asked that it be retained as to the defendants not appear-and by the consent of the devisees, A and B, and the sale was made pursuant to the provisions in the will. The devisee B died without children or grandchildren, and the devisee A is still in life, more than eighty years of age, and has no children or grandchildren, and the possibility of issue is extinct because of her great age. The defendants claim to be entitled under the will to the land on the death of A, and such claim operates as a cloud on the plaintiff's title. The prayers were that the defendants be required to set up their claim to the land, and that a decree be granted establishing the plaintiff's title, for injunction, etc. Some of the defendants failed to appear, and a default was noted on the docket. Others demurred and filed answers. Among the grounds of the demurrer were that the petition showed no title to the fee of the land in the plaintiff, and that no equitable right against the defendants was set forth. The demurrer was overruled, and the plaintiff submitted certain evidence, upon the conclusion of which a verdict was directed in his favor. The defendants who demurred and answered sued out a bill of exceptions, and this court ing, for the purpose of determining any rights personal to them, and it is perfectly clear that the complainant could have no equities against them distinct from her rights against those who did not appear. The court, having determined that, upon the face of the bill, the complainant was not entitled to the relief prayed, might, of its own motion, have dismissed it." Griffiths v. Griffiths, 198 Ill. 637, 64 N. E. 1069.

On a petition to redeem from a tax sale, the court said: "It is contended that the petition should not have been dismissed as against the defendant O'Hanlon, because he did not join in the demurrer. We think the ruling upon the demurrer in effect disposed of the case as to all the defendants. The petition sought to redeem the land from a tax sale to the defendant Stone. All the other defendants held under him. If there was no right in the plaintiff to redeem from Stone, there was no right to redeem from his grantees." Byington v. Stone, 51 Iowa, 320, 1 N. W. 647.

The principle, however, is not of universal acceptance. In Williamson v. Joyce, 140 Cal. 669, 74 Pac. 290, an action to foreclose an assessment lien, a demurrer of one defendant was sustained, and before the entry of judgment thereon, the other defendant put in a "cross complaint" to which the plaintiff filed an answer, after which judgment was entered on the demurrer. It was held that there was nothing in the contention of the plaintiff that it was error to enter such judgment before the issues arising on the "cross complaint" had been disposed of. The court said: "The complaint failed to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action against Joyce, and the judgment given upon the demurrer can have no greater effect than to prevent the plaintiff from proceeding upon his complaint as against Joyce. It does not affect the other parties to the action, nor does it prevent the court from proceeding upon the cross complaint of Winders, and determining all the issues tendered thereby." While the report is not full, it would seem to indicate that the defects challenged by the demurrer were fatal to the cause of action as to both of the defendants.

In Farwell v. Jackson, 28 Cal. 105, an action of foreclosure brought by the pledgee of a mortgage, one defendant demurred, and 33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

other defaulted in pleading and appearance, and the third was not served; the demurrer was sustained and judgment rendered against the plaintiff in favor of all the defendants. On appeal the demurrer was held bad, and it was held that "the judgment in favor of the defendant who was served, but did not appear in the action, cannot be sustained, whatever may be the nature of the action." It would seem that the demurrer did not reach the root of the cause of action; and that the defaulting defendant joined the plaintiff in his appeal.

Some of the cases seem to deny the principle, but leave it in some doubt whether the court meant to do more than rule that it was not applicable in the particular case. Thus, in Dyal v. Hays, — Ark. —, 12 S. W. 874, an action to enforce a vendor's lien, it was held that the legal effect of the sustaining of a separate demurrer was to dismiss as to the demurrant, leaving the action pending as to the other defendants. It does not appear that the demurrer touched the cause of action against the other defendants.

And in National Ins. Co. v. Bowman, 60 Mo. 252, it was held error to give judgment in favor of both defendants in an action against partners on a promissory note when only one of them filed a demurrer. As an additional ground for its decision, the court held the demurrer frivolous.

Where, in an action to recover money paid upon fraudulent representations, there were two defendants, one of them not served with process and not appearing or pleading, the other's demurrer was sustained, and the action dismissed as to both defendants. Upon a writ of error to which both of the defendants were cited, it was held that the demurrer should have been overruled, the court holding further that, as the nonserved defendant was not in the court below, it was error to sustain the demurrer and dismiss the action as to him. It seems that the legal liability of both defendants was substantially the same. United States v. Piatt, 157 U. S. 113, 39 L. ed. 639, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 498.

It is held in Georgia that when one of the defendants demurs separately for the want of equity, the bill will not be dismissed as to the other defendants, though there may be no equity as to them. Sustaining the demurrer dismisses the bill as held that the demurrer should have been sustained. Satterfield v. Tate, 132 Ga. 256, 64 S. E. 60. When the remittitur from this court was offered to be made the judgment of the trial court, the plaintiff claimed his right to amend his petition to cure the defects pointed out by the supreme court; and the trial court passed an order making the judgment of the supreme court the judgment of the trial court, "reserving the right to plaintiff to offer any amendment which may be adjudged to be legal as if offered before this order is signed." Pending the submission of an amendment, certain defendants who were in default, and had not accepted to the final decree, applied to the court to be permitted to file a demurrer and answer in the case. To this the plaintiff made written objections upon the grounds that applicants had been adjudged to be in default, which judgment of default has never been opened, and they were estopped from further litigation by the final decree, to which they did not except, and were not further parties to the cause. The court then passed an order, adjudging that the parties offering to plead were entitled to do so, and that their plead-to him only. Ballin v. Ferst, 55 Ga. 546. And this is probably what the court intended to decide in Byrom v. Gunn, 111 Ga. 805, 35 S. E. 649, where it is held that "when a petition is filed against two defendants, a separate demurrer by one of them in his own name and behalf only affords no cause for dismissing the petition as to the defendant who does not demur."

Conversely to the principle first referred to, where the demurrer of a defendant does not touch the cause of action against his codefendant, the latter will take nothing by such demurrer.

Thus, in an action for personal injuries against a lot owner and a city on account of negligence in the condition of a sidewalk, the separate demurrer of the lot owner having been sustained, it was claimed on the trial that there was no petition in court. The appellate court said: "The action of the court in sustaining the insurance company's demurrer to the plaintiff's petition in no way affected the cause of action therein stated against the city. The company thereafter was in court for one purpose only,—to take judgment on the demurrer,—and had no right to interpose objections upon the trial of the issue of fact joined between the plaintiff and the city on the amended petition of the plaintiff and the answer thereto of the city. The petition not having been demurred to by the city, or adjudged insufficient, in whole or in part, as to such defendant, nor any part of it stricken out on motion, it was not necessary that a further amended petition should have been filed." Norton v. St. Louis, 97 Mo. 538, 11 S. W. 242.

And whether averments are sufficient against a codefendant cannot be challenged by a demurrant on his separate demurrer to a paragraph which clearly states a cause of action against him on other grounds. Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Charman, 161 Ind. 95, 67 N. E. 923.

The following cases arising upon answers may be referred to in illustration:

In State use of Peterson v. Gibson, 21 Ark. 140, on action of debt the court said: "Three of the defendants having interposed pleas in bar of the whole action, a finding in their favor necessarily inured to the benefit of the party in default; and he, as well as the others, was entitled to a judgment of discharge."

33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Where, in an action at law for the possession of a slave, two defendants defaulted and two others answered and had judgment, the court said: "The defense made by Mary and Sarah, which resulted in the verdict and judgment for them, was not based upon any ground personally to themselves, but was equally available by the other defendants, and was such as showed that the plaintiff had no cause of action. And it is the settled law in such cases that after verdict and judgment for the defendant who pleads, the plaintiff cannot take judgment against the defendants in default, for the reason that, upon the whole record, it appears the plaintiff has no right of action." Adderton v. Collier, 32 Mo. 511.

In Tod v. Stambaugh, 37 Ohio St. 469, the supreme court of Ohio, in reversing a judgment of the intermediate court, and in sustaining the trial court in upholding a demurrer to an answer, held that where an answer in equity of one defendant was, if correct, a good answer as to all the defendants, it operated equally as a defense to the nonanswering defendants; and it was also held that where such an answer by one defendant was held bad on demurrer, judgment of reversal could not be entered solely in favor of the answering party.

While without the scope of the note, it may be of interest in this connection to refer to Walker v. Page, 21 Gratt. 636, where the court said in respect to appeals as to non-appealing parties: "The rule established by the practice and decisions of this court may be stated to be this: Where the parties stand upon distinct and unconnected grounds, where their rights are separate, and not equally affected by the same decree or judgment, then the appeal of one will not bring up for adjudication the rights or claims of the other. . . . But where the parties appealing and the parties not appealing stand upon the same ground, and their rights are involved in the same question, and equally affected by the same decree or judgment, this court will consider the whole case, and settle the rights of the parties not appealing, as well as those who bring their case up by appeal." Quoted and followed in Saunders v. Griggs, 81 Va. 506.

B. B. B.

ings be allowed filed as timely pleadings in the case. Exceptions are taken to this judgment.

Messrs. W. A. Charters, H. H. Dean, L. C. Tate, and Samuel H. Sibley for plaintiff in error.

Mr. H. H. Perry, for defendants in error:

If the ground of demurrer is common to all, the bill will be dismissed as to all, though some did not appear.

Saunders v. Griggs, 81 Va. 506; Walker v. Page, 21 Gratt. 636; Smith v. Cooper, 21 Ga. 359; Lewis v. Chisholm, 68 Ga. 42.

Messrs. O. J. Lilly and R. H. Baker also for defendants in error.

Evans, P. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The only matter passed on by this court was the correctness of the judgment overruling the demurrer of the excepting defendants. When that judgment was found to be erroneous, the subsequent proceedings, at least, as against the demurrants, were nugatory and presented no question for adjudication. Jones v. Hurst, 91 Ga. 338, 17 S. E. 635. It will be observed from the statement of facts that the grounds of the demurrer went to the right of the plaintiff to maintain his cause of action, and were common to all the defendants. The trial court was called upon to adjudicate, and did erroneously adjudicate, that the plaintiff had such title as could be asserted against all the defendants as residuary devisees under the will of the common propositus. If the trial court in the first instance had sustained the demurrer, that judgment would have inured to the benefit of all the defendants; because it is a general rule that, if one defendant pleads matter whereby it appears that the plaintiff has no cause of action against any defendant, and obtains a verdict, the plaintiff is not entitled to judgment against a defendant who has defaulted. Biggs v. Benger, 2 Ld. Raym. 1372; Marler v. Ayliffe, Cro. Jac. 134; State v. Gibson, 21 Ark. 140; Bowman v. Noyes, 12 N. H. 302; Adderton v. Collier, 32 Mo. 507; Morrison v. Stoner, 7 Iowa, 493. When the trial court erroneously overrules a demurrer interposed by some of the defendants, which goes to the very vitals of the plaintiff's case, and the parties excepting and those not excepting stand upon the same ground, and their rights are involved in the same question, and equally affected by the same decree or judgment, the judgment of reversal will operate in favor of all the defendants. Willie v. Thomas, 22 Tex. 175; Walker v. Page, 21 Gratt. 636; Tod v. Stambaugh, 37 Ohio St. 469. The adjudication by this court was that, under the allegations of the petition, the plaintiff had no other title than that of a tenant per autre vie,—that is, for the life of the surviving devisee, A,—and was not entitled to maintain the action against the residuary devisees of the testator, when the defendants were alleged to be. Satterfield v. Tate, 132 Ga. 256, 64 S. E. 60. So that the judgment of this court operates as a reversal of the decree as to all the parties to the case.

33 L.R.A.(N.S.)

We have found it necessary to actually decide the controlling point in the case on its merits, as a premise to the point actually up for decision; viz., that the writ of error is premature because no final judgment has been rendered. When the remittitur was made the judgment of the court, it was in order for the petition to be dismissed, unless its defects, as pointed out in the decision of this court, were cured by appropriate amendment. No amendment has been made, so far as this record discloses. Unless the petition be amended, the petition must be dismissed; if amended, then the case will still pend. If the amendment will suffice to hold the petition in court, necessarily it is a material amendment which will open a default. Calhoun v. Mosley, 114 Ga. 641, 40 S. E. 714; Lippman v. Aetna Ins. Co. 120 Ga. 247, 47 S. E. 593. The interlocutory character of the judgment complained of, as well as the uncertain status of the plaintiff's petition, furnishes no basis for a writ of error.

Writ of error dismissed.

All the Justices concur.

MICHIGAN SUPREME COURT.

FRANCIS H. WARREN

v.

WILLIAM F. CONNOLLY, Judge.

(— Mich. —, 130 N. W. 637.)

Contempt — charging bribery of jury — power of court to compel justification.

The court cannot by ex parte order require the publisher of a newspaper, although he is also an attorney at law, to justify in open court an article in which he raises a suspicion that the jury was bribed in an action tried before the court, where the information may necessitate the naming of persons in good standing before the community, and subject the publisher to libel suits.

(March 31, 1911.)

PETITION for a writ of mandamus to compel respondent to show cause why

Note. — WARREN v. CONNOLLY seems to be a case of first impression upon the question whether a court has power to require the an order requiring relator to justify the publication of certain articles should not be vacated. Writ granted.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Warren & Marshall, for relator.

Mr. Stewart Hanley, amicus curiae:

Every regularly constituted court has inherent powers to do all things that are reasonably necessary for the administration of justice within the scope of its jurisdiction.

8 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 28; Denton v. Erwin, 5 La. Ann. 18.

The court had the authority to direct relator to make the required statement.

Randall v. Brigham, 7 Wall. 523, 19 L. ed. 285; Re Wool, 36 Mich. 299; 7 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 44; Mechem, Pub. Off. § 24; 4 Enc. U. S. Sup. Ct. Rep. p. 887; 1 Wait, Act. & Def. 430; 2 Enc. U. S. Sup. Ct. Rep. p. 709; Ex parte Secombe, 19 How. 9, 15 L. ed. 565; Bradley v. Fisher, 13 Wall. 335, 20 L. ed. 646; Kneeland v. American Loan & T. Co. 138 U. S. 509, 34 L. ed. 1052, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 426; Weeks, Attorneys at Law, §§ 91, 92; Langdon v. Wayne Circuit Judges, 76 Mich. 358, 43 N. W. 310; Rapalje, Contempts, 2; Ex parte Briggs, 64 N. C. 202.

Moore, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On December 6, 1910, one Wesley B. Schram was tried in the recorder's court of the city of Detroit before the Honorable William F. Connolly, judge of the recorder's court, upon the charge of unlawfully discriminating against one Emma Davis, for the reason that she was a colored person. The case was in the recorder's court on appeal from the police court. The trial resulted in a verdict of not guilty, and the defendant, Schram, was accordingly discharged.

On the 10th day of December, 1910, an article appeared in a newspaper called the Detroit Reformer, reading as follows:

disclosure of facts upon which intimations of corruption or misconduct by the jury or officers of court are based.

A note on the question of the necessity of finding the facts before finding one guilty of contempt is appended to Hoffman v. Hoffman, 30 L.R.A.(N.S.) 564.

And the note appended to Haaren v. Mould, 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 404, deals with the right to take judicial notice of a decree in a proceeding to punish a violation of the same as a contempt.

Whether a judge is qualified to sit on a trial for contempt consisting of reflections upon himself is discussed in the note to Lamberson v. Superior Ct. 11 L.R.A.(N.S.) 619.

Attention is also directed to the following 33 L.R.A.(N.S.)

Was the Jury Fixed?

Prosecutor Aldrich Made a Very Strong Case for the People in the Majestic Theater Case.

Despite the fact that defense made weak case, the jury, after being out several hours, said defendant, Schram, was "not guilty."

Charge of Judge Connolly a Correct Statement of the Law.

The Emma Davis-Majestic Theater Case, otherwise known as the case of the People v. Wesley B. Schram, was tried in Judge Connolly's court, Tuesday, December 6. Judge Aldrich appeared for the people and made an exceptionally strong case. Misses Davis and Gertrude Thompson were the People's witnesses, and told a clear, straight forward story of their exclusion from the theater, expressly because "this place is not for colored people," and "if you don't go out, we will throw you out."

Defense Looked Like "Frame Up."

Mr. Frank D. Eamans was the defendant's counsel, and he made a rather novel, but apparently weak, defense. Setting up as facts that the two young ladies were politely told that the seats they occupied belonged to a lady and child who had gone to the retiring room, and that because of this gentle treatment they left the theater in a huff. But the very witness sworn for the defense admitted that the "lady and child" were given other seats, that seats were being vacated all the time, and others filling them. This witness got badly tangled in his testimony, and others were nearly as bad, exemplifying the old saying about certain persons needing "a long memory." Mr. Eamans made a strong plea to the jury, but his position was shot all to pieces by the powerful logic of Judge Aldrich.

Was the Jury Fixed?

And it seemed to many that the defend-notes, dealing with the questions whether contempt may be committed:

—by a refusal to produce books or papers in response to a subpoena, upon the ground that they contain private matter. 29 L.R.A.(N.S.) 716;

—by publishing an inaccurate report of a court decision, 17 L.R.A.(N.S.) 583;

—by the disclosure by a grand juror of evidence given before the grand jury. 17 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1049; —or by reflecting on a judge as a ministerial officer. 15 L.R.A.(N.S.) 621.

Other notes dealing with various specific aspects of the question what amounts to a contempt are referred to in the index to notes under the title "contempt."

L. A. W.

ant would surely be convicted by the jury under the correct statement of the law of the case by Judge Connolly. But a suspicious incident took place just as the jury was entering the jury room. One of the jurors tarried in the court room fumbling with his coat and hat, and had a conversation with the officer in charge of the jury. When the case first started this same officer was seen to receive a small package resembling money. Of course, there may have been no connection between the two acts of this officer receiving the small package and his conversation later with the juror, who apparently hung back for that purpose. Nor yet between either or both of these incidents and the verdict of the jury, and the Informer does not claim there is.

Mrs. Davis, mother of Miss Emma, and others, were told of these incidents at the time, and to look out for a verdict of not guilty, or a disagreement if the jury were out very long. In view of the verdict as thus predicted, the incidents referred to have at least a suspicious look.

Defendant Fined by Judge Jeffries.

This is the same case in which the defendant was fined $50 by Judge Jeffries when the case was tried in his court, and defendant was found guilty. He appealed the case to Judge Connolly's court, and here the jury discharged him as shown above.

An editorial appeared in the same issue as follows:

"The incidents related in another column of this issue, that cast a suspicion that there was a connection between the acts of court officers and verdicts of the jury, should never occur in courts of justice. The officials having in charge the jury to determine the right or wrong of a case should be like Cæsar's wife, above suspicion. There should be no clandestine passing of suspicious looking packages, no conversation with any of the jurors as they are passing into their room to judge the acts of defendants. They should stand out in the open all the time, and never do or say anything that could possibly lead one to believe that they were other than strictly honest in their official conduct."

Upon the same day, and without notice to the relator, the following order was entered:

"In the Recorder's Court of the City of Detroit.

"In re Francis H. Warren."

Connolly, J. The Session of December 10, 1910.

The Court: It appearing to the court that a paper called the Detroit Informer, which purports to be edited by Francis H. Warren, who is a member of this bar, contains 33 L.R.A. (N.S.) an article which the court feels reflects upon the conduct of the officers in charge of the jury in the case of the People v. Wesley B. Schram, by innuendo, and there appearing in the same edition an editorial in corroboration of the article, the court enters an order directing the said Francis H. Warren to file upon oath a statement of facts justifying the publication of this article, on or before Thursday, December 15th, at 9:30 A. M. Mr. Clerk, you will notify Mr. Warren of the order of the court."

Mr. Warren appeared before the court and stated he was appearing, not as an attorney, but as publisher and editor, and that he was willing to give the court all the information he had under oath, if desired, but not in open court. The court declined to receive this information, and a motion was made to vacate the order of the court for the following, among other, reasons:

"(1) The article complained of by the honorable court contains all the information necessary to aid the court in making such investigation it may see fit to make. There was but one officer that had charge of the jury in the case of the People v. Wesley B. Schram at the time it retired, and the court well knows who that officer is, and if he is an honest man, as he is said to be, he will tell the court all about the incidents referred to in the Detroit Informer, and should have told of them before now. Then there was but one juror who hung back in the court room after the others had entered the jury room. If his conversation with officer was innocent, he should step to the front and relieve his fellow jurors of suspicion. There was but one person who handed the officer the package 'resembling money.' This man is well and favorably known, but if his act was innocent of wrong, doubtless he can give the court a satisfactory explanation of the incident, for he knows Francis H. Warren saw it.

"(2) For the reason that the demand made in the order of December 10, 1910, calls for matter in a public way that is more properly the subject of private examination, resembling matters that should be examined by grand juries. . . .

"(5) There is no legal duty devolved upon publisher to comply with the court's order until matter is brought up in regular manner."

The notice to vacate was overruled, and the case is brought here by mandamus.

The attitude of the relator and the respondent is indicated by the following extract from the record. Mr. Warren is addressing the court:

It may be that the incidents referred to were innocent, and if they are, certainly

I ought not, as publisher of the Detroit Informer, to be made to expose these gentlemen in a criminal matter by making a criminal charge under oath. Your Honor can sit as a grand jury; the same matter may be disposed of by the grand jury method, by the court taking the place of a grand jury. The court says it does not approve of star chamber sessions; but the ordinary grand jury sessions are star-chamber sessions. Nothing is supposed to leak out from the grand jury, and nothing should leak out from an investigation of this kind, unless the court is satisfied that a crime has been committed. Let me point out that the Detroit Informer did not claim that a crime has been committed, but there was only a suspicion that there might have been a crime committed, and that gave rise to the question that the court objected to or does object to.

The court: You are entirely mistaken in your position of the attitude of the court—

Mr. Warren: Apparently you did object, or you would not have called me in to make a sworn statement about what I stated in the Informer.

The court: The natural inference was that some officer of the court, and jurors of the court, who were and are officers of the court, had so comported themselves as to render them open to the suspicion of fixing somebody, or being fixed. You are an officer of this court. As an attorney—

Mr. Warren: I am not appearing in this matter as an officer of the court. I am appearing as publisher and editor of the Detroit Informer.

The court: You cannot be a dual personality with reference to this. If you have any facts upon which to base a statement that this jury was fixed, and that any man on this jury was fixed, or that any officer did any act which would lay him open to the suspicion that he had tampered with the jury, the court is entitled to know it, and it is your duty to give it.

Mr. Warren: Not in open court.

The court: Why not?

Mr. Warren: Because it may be that the acts could be explained without exposing them to the open.

The court: You have done worse than that. In the way you publish the story no one knows who is the responsible one; and, among other things, one of the honored officers of this court has been retired since this thing happened; and we want to know, if anybody is under suspicion, who he is.

Mr. Warren: You are perfectly welcome to the information, but not to file it in a public way. The law says,—the Supreme 33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Court says that written complaints are unnecessary.

The court: That may be; but I don't want to do anything as judge of this court which is not public. I do not propose to have any man accused, unless in public. If any man is under suspicion, or is to be accused, I want him in public where he can hear it and defend himself against it. I won't allow any body to be accused in any other way.

Mr. Warren: In the very case that the court cited last Monday, the case of George W. Parker, the court does not say that it must be in the open; it does not direct that the investigation must be in the open, the preliminary investigation.

The court: The judge who wrote the opinion says that the practice indulged in in the Ascher Case was bad. That's what he does say. . . . Here is a case where an individual's constitutional right is involved, the equal right of a man to be treated the same as every other man, notwithstanding his color; and you print an article in your paper to the effect that the jury was fixed,—not saying that the jury was fixed, as a bald statement, but, by the use of that figurative form that is well recognized in rhetoric, asking the question, "Was the jury fixed?" which is tantamount to the expression,—

Mr. Warren: It is one thing to entertain a suspicion and another thing to make a charge.

The court: A suspicion may be more damning than a charge.

Mr. Warren: There is no law resting upon me to convey this information to the court.

The court: I think there is.

Mr. Warren: I wish the court would point it out.

The court: There is the oath which you took as an officer of this court when you were admitted to the bar.

The court: You occupy a peculiar position different from the ordinary individual, with reference to the court. You are an officer of the court, and as such, where anything affects the integrity of the court's proceeding or the administration of justice, your duty, it seems to me, is plain.

Mr. Warren: I have made no claim where it did affect it.

The court: I think you have.

Mr. Warren: If the court takes that view of it, we will have to try it out on that ground. But I claim I have made no such claim. I said these acts, specifically, may be innocent, but they gave rise to a suspicion; and not only in the article itself, but in the editorial, I say so.

The court: What the court wants to know,—the court will determine whether or not the acts are suspicious, or criminal,—but the court wants to know what the acts are.

Mr. Warren: The court is entitled to know; but not in public. That is the position we take in this matter, just the same as a grand jury is entitled to know.

The court: I think any proceedings of a court ought to be public. I do not propose to be led by anybody into the policy of holding secret investigations of anybody. Any time a man comes into my court, he is going to be where he can hear it, and if he isn't around he is not going to be accused.

Mr. Warren: There is no objection to his presence, and his hearing these things; hearing them right there with me and you.

The court: If you have any facts, and the court tells you it is your duty to indicate them, I can't see why you should hesitate.

Mr. Warren: I do not think the court has the right to censor publications, unless they are absolutely criminal.

The court: I am not trying to censor your publications.

Mr. Warren: That would be the effect of your order.

The court: Oh, no. I am trying to get from you all the facts.

Mr. Warren: If the suspicion proved groundless, then every one of these men could sue the Informer for libel.

The court: I think not.

The attorney who appears for the respondent says in his brief: "It would be well, we believe, at the outset of this discussion, that it be understood that the order entered by Judge Connolly was not for the purpose of censoring relator's publication, nor to punish relator as the publisher of the articles in question. The proceeding was solely for the purpose of requiring Mr. Warren, an officer of the court, to disclose those facts within his knowledge upon which were based the articles casting suspicion upon the jury in the Schram Case and the officers in charge thereof. Mr. Warren indicated his willingness to give these facts to the judge in private, but objected to filing such a statement in open court, as requested by the judge."

It appears to us that if that was the only purpose of the court, the relator indicated a willingness to do all he should be required to do to realize that purpose. Counsel say: "The court had authority to direct the manner in which Mr. Warren made his statement. Upon this point the only question involved is whether the court had authority to order Mr. Warren to file 33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

the required statement under oath in open court. By asking permission to file such a statement, but only for the private perusal of the judge, Mr. Warren practically concedes that the court had authority to demand the statement, but only questions the authority of the court to direct this to be done in open court." And cite in support of this proposition the language used in People v. Parker, 145 Mich. 488, 108 N. W. 999. A reference to the case will show that what was said does not refer to something which occurred out of court and after the trial was over, but related to an investigation during the progress of the trial, in which investigation the parties to the litigation were deeply interested. This was also true of the inquiry in the case of Re Ascher, 130 Mich. 540, 57 L.R.A. 806, 90 N. W. 418. The language quoted in the brief by the attorney for the respondent shows it was not necessary to the disposition of the case, and the justice writing the language was careful to say, "Speaking for myself, I desire to say I do not regard that as the proper practice." We find nothing in those cases to indicate that the course suggested by the relator was not a proper one.

We again quote from brief of counsel for respondent: "No court is bound to await the complaint of a third party before investigating any matter touching the misconduct of its officers, when information considered sufficient is received, and the circumstances in its judgment demand its interposition. The court alone is to judge of the grounds upon which a rule may issue. Randall v. Brigham, 7 Wall. 523, 539, 19 L. ed. 285, page 293; Re Wool, 36 Mich. 299." We submit that this matter is controlled by Randall v. Brigham and Re Wool, supra.

A reference to the two cases will show that they were both disbarment proceedings. In the last of these cases the disbarment proceedings grew out of what appeared in a chancery case, heard and decided by the court in which the disbarment proceedings were pending. In disposing of the case the court used the following language: "The charges made against Wool in the bill of complaint, which formed the only basis of action in that case, were such as, if true, were enough to render him deserving of punishment. If no such suit had been brought, and a complaint had been laid before us against him, a full hearing on evidence taken in some adequate way would have been necessary. But no method of examination adopted in summary proceedings could have been so full or suitable as that furnished by the issues and hearing in an equity cause, where the witnesses are examined and cross-examined in such manner as the parties desire, and there is time for an exhaustive scrutiny. After such a hearing there is no very good reason why any further showing on the main facts should be had, unless under circumstances which would justify a rehearing. Accordingly, where the court has itself heard the cause and passed upon the facts, as is done in equity, an order to show cause is properly based on the decree, and might have been incorporated in the decree itself.

In the case of Randall v. Brigham, supra, the court said, among other things: "The informality of the notice, or of the complaint by the letter, did not touch the question of jurisdiction. The plaintiff understood from them the nature of the charge against him; and it is not pretended that the investigation which followed was not conducted with entire fairness. He was afforded ample opportunity to explain the transaction and vindicate his conduct. He introduced testimony upon the matter, and was sworn himself. It is not necessary that proceedings against attorneys for malpractice or any unprofessional conduct should be founded upon formal allegations against them. Such proceedings are often instituted upon information developed in the progress of a cause, or from what the court learns of the conduct of the attorney from its own observation. Sometimes they are moved by third parties upon affidavit; and sometimes they are taken by the court upon its own motion. All that is requisite to their validity is that, when not taken for matters occurring in open court, in the presence of the judges, notice should be given to the attorney of the charges made, and opportunity afforded him for explanation and defense. The manner in which the proceeding shall be conducted, so that it be without oppression or unfairness, is a matter of judicial regulation."

So far as these cases are in point, they are against the contention of respondent. In the case at bar we have an ex parte order entered, not in the alternative, but requiring the relator to justify in writing under oath and in open court, an act which occurred out of court. Our attention has not been called to any authority justifying such an order.

The writ of mandamus will issue as prayed, but without costs to either party.
33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

NEBRASKA SUPREME COURT.

RE ESTATE OF MARY A. GRAY, Deceased.

ROBERT E. NEITZEL, Exr., etc., of Mary A. Gray, Deceased, Appt.,

v.

HARRIET E. PURCHASE et al.

(88 Neb. 835, 130 N. W. 746.)

Trial — instruction — absence of evidence.

1. In a contest over the probate of a will, it is error to instruct the jury that their verdict will be that the instrument offered for probate is not the will of decedent, if they find she did not sign it, where the evidence is insufficient to sustain such a finding.

Witness — privilege — capacity of testatrix.

2. In a contest over the probate of a will between the persons therein named as an executor or a legatee, and the heirs at law of decedent, § 333 of the Code of Civil Procedure, forbidding the disclosure of privileged communications, does not prevent a physician from testifying on behalf of either side of the controversy to the mental condition of testatrix, though the information which enables him to do so was acquired solely in his professional capacity while attending her during her last illness.

(March 24, 1911.)

APPEAL by proponent from a judgment of the District Court for Douglas County denying probate of the will of Mary A. Gray, deceased. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. McGilton, Gaines & Smith, and T. A. Hollister for appellant.

Messrs. John C. Wharton and Byron G. Burbank for appellees.

Rose, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

In this suit the will of Mary A. Gray, deceased, is contested. It was dated and witnessed at her home in Waterloo, Douglas county, October 31, 1907, and she died at the same place November 8, 1907. Robert E. Neitzel was named in the will as an executor, and is the proponent. The principal legatee is Electa A. Teal, with whom testatrix lived at the time of her death. They were relatives by marriage, but not by blood. When proponent presented the will to the county court of Douglas county for probate, the heirs at law of testatrix, who are contestants, made a number of objections, among which are the following: Testatrix was not of sound mind when she pretended to execute the will. She did not sign it. She did not execute it. In undertaking to make the will, she was unduly influenced by Electa A. Teal. The county court overruled all the objections, and admitted the will to probate. Contestants appealed to the district court, where a trial resulted in a verdict in their favor. From a judgment reciting that the instrument offered for probate is not the will of Mary A. Gray, deceased, proponent has appealed to this court. The real controversy is between the heirs at law and the principal legatee.

Headnotes by ROSE, J.

Note. — The question of the competency of an attending physician to testify as to the mental capacity of the testator, in a will contest, is covered in the note to Auld v. Cathro, 32 L.R.A. (N.S.) 71.

In substance, the trial court instructed the jury: Your verdict will be that the instrument offered for probate is not the will of decedent, if you find from the evidence she did not sign it. This is assigned as error on the ground that there is no evidence to sustain such a finding. The argument of proponent on this point seems to be conclusive. The attestation clause is in due form, and it was signed by the following witnesses: Helen B. Gould, a neighbor of testatrix; Anna Buman, a professional nurse who attended her during her last illness; Harvey D. Kelly, an attending physician; Robert E. Neitzel, cashier of the Bank of Waterloo. At the trial each of these persons testified to having signed the attestation clause as a subscribing witness at the time and place stated in the will, and that Mary A. Gray, in the presence of each of them, signed the will. Anna Buman further testified: "Mrs. Gray wrote her name first, and I was asked to write mine, and the rest followed me." She also testified: "We signed immediately after she signed her name." And further: "Mrs. Gray asked me to sign the will." The testimony of all the subscribing witnesses was of like import. In addition each testified, after showing the proper qualifications, that at the time the will was signed, testatrix was of sound mind. The evidence of her testamentary competency is uncontradicted. Contestants made no effort to prove that testatrix did not sign the will, except by H. B. Waldron, who was an officer of the Citizens' State Bank of Waterloo. She had formerly been a depositor of his, and her last business transaction with him occurred March 2, 1906, when she transferred by check from his bank to the bank of which proponent was cashier a balance of $3,538.89. Waldron produced the check on the witness stand, and identified the signature of the drawer as that of testatrix. In qualifying himself to express an opinion on the genuineness of her signature, he stated, in answer to a question, that he knew "the signature of Mary A. Gray in the usual transaction of her affairs." The will was then submitted to him, and he was asked whether the signature was that of Mary A. Gray, and answered: "It is not her signature." On cross-examination he was asked: "You do not say that she did not write the name that appears there?" His reply was: "No, sir." He was not present when the will was signed, and his opinion, in connection with the signatures themselves, is the only proof on that subject outside of the testimony of the subscribing witnesses. The facts showing the reasons for a difference in the appearance of the signatures on the two instruments were fully shown by uncontradicted evidence. The check was drawn March 2, 1906, when testatrix was an active woman. More than a year later she fell and was fatally injured by the breaking of a bone. She had been an invalid five months when she signed her will October 31, 1907, and she was reclining in an invalid's chair at the time. Her nurse had given her long-distance glasses, instead of her reading glasses, and for that reason she could not see well while signing her name. According to his own testimony, Waldron's last business transaction with testatrix occurred March 2, 1906, and there is nothing to indicate that he took into account the changed conditions when he expressed the opinion that the signature to the will was not hers. His testimony was applicable alone to earlier times and circumstances. When all the facts are considered, his opinion does not contradict the direct and positive testimony of the four subscribing witnesses, that testatrix signed the will in their presence October 31, 1907. There is nothing to impeach these witnesses or to discredit their testimony. The original check and the will itself are in the record, and the signatures themselves contain no indication that either is not genuine, when the changed conditions and difference in time are understood. The evidence is wholly insufficient to sustain a finding that the will was not signed by testatrix, and that question should not have been submitted to the jury. Proof that testatrix was of sound mind, and that the will was duly executed, is also uncontradicted. These questions likewise were erroneously submitted to the jury.

Proponent offered to show the mental condition of testatrix by Dr. James C. Agee, who was called as a witness, but the trial court rejected his testimony on the ground that the information which enabled him to testify on that subject was acquired by him in his professional capacity while he was attending her as a physician during her last illness. This ruling is assigned as error. To sustain the trial court, contestants invoke the statutory provision that no physician "shall be allowed, in giving testimony, to disclose any confidential communication, properly intrusted to him in his professional capacity, and necessary and proper to enable him to discharge the functions of his office according to the usual course of practice or discipline." Code Civ. Proc. §§ 333, 334. The question presented by the record may be stated in this form: In a contest over the probate of a will between a legatee or an executor, and the heirs at law of the testatrix, may the latter's physician testify to her mental competency, over the objection of such heirs, where the information which enables him to do so was acquired solely in his professional capacity, while attending her during her last illness? The Code provides that the patient may waive the privilege or protection of the statute; but there is eminent authority for the doctrine that the right of waiver cannot be exercised by anyone else, and that testimony of the physician as to the mental competency of his deceased patient should be excluded under the circumstances of this case. Re Hunt, 122 Wis. 460, 100 N. W. 874; Re Van Alstine, 26 Utah, 193, 72 Pac. 942; Auld v. Cathro, 20 N. D. 461, 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 71, 128 N. W. 1025, and cases cited; Re Nelson, 132 Cal. 182, 64 Pac. 294. This court, however, has held that the statutory right of waiver extends to "the personal representative of a deceased person." Parker v. Parker, 78 Neb. 535, 111 N. W. 119. May one class of representatives in a contest over the probate of a will waive the privilege to the exclusion of another class, where the respective rights of the disputants depend on the mental condition of a deceased person? Does the statute permit heirs at law to require a disclosure on part of the physician if his patient was insane, and suppress the truth if mentally competent? No such intention can be found in the statute or in the reasons for its enactment. If heirs at law to protect the property of their ancestor from an insane act, and to obtain their own rights under the statute of distributions, may require a physician to testify to the condition of his patient's mind, there is no reason why a legatee or an executor may not also call upon him for the purpose of protecting the will and a legacy under it. Having held in the case last cited that the right to waive the statutory privilege extends to the personal representative of a deceased person, consistency and justice require a construction which permits an executor or a legatee to compel a physician to testify to the mental condition of his patient, when that question is involved in a contest with the heirs over the probate of the patient's will. Though the courts of the country are divided on this question, the construction here announced has frequently been adopted under similar statutes. Thompson v. Ish, 99 Mo. 160, 17 Am. St. Rep. 552, 12 S. W. 510; Denning v. Butcher, 91 Iowa, 425, 59 N. W. 69; Winters v. Winters, 102 Iowa, 53, 63 Am. St. Rep. 428, 71 N. W. 184; Re Walker, — Iowa, —, 128 N. W. 386; Re Shapter, 35 Colo. 578, 6 L.R.A.(N.S.) 575, 117 Am. St. Rep. 216, 85 Pac. 688; Olson v. Court of Honor, 100 Minn. 117, 8 L.R.A.(N.S.) 521, 117 Am. St. Rep. 676, 110 N. W. 374, 10 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 622. The courts, however, have authority to protect the memory of deceased persons from objectionable disclosures. Denning v. Butcher, 91 Iowa, 425, 59 N. W. 69.

33 L.R.A.(N.S.)

For the errors discussed, the judgment of the District Court is reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings.

NEBRASKA SUPREME COURT.

JOHN M. WILLITS, by Guardian and Next Friend, Appt.,

v.

ROBERT EARLE CONKLIN et al.

(88 Neb. 805, 130 N. W. 757.)

Will — death without issue — construction.

1. The rule that words of limitation shall be applied to the death of the first taker without issue during the life of the testator is extremely technical in its character, and does not apply where there are any indications, however slight, that the testator referred to death subsequent to his own demise.

Same — time of survivorship.

2. The general rule is that the period of time to which survivorship relates depends

Headnotes by LITTON, J.

Note.—The question as to what time the contingency of death of a legatee or devisee without child or issue, upon which a gift is conditioned, is referable, is covered by the note to Smith v. Smith, 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1045. It may be noted, however, that what is said in WILLITS v. CONKLIN with respect to this question is of an obiter character, the limitation over therein under construction being conditioned upon the first taker's death simply, and not upon his death without issue. As pointed out in such note, while in the first class upon the intention of the testator, rather than upon technical language used in a particular clause in a will.

Same — equitable conversion — power to convert.

3. Where power is given to an executor to convert the real estate into money, and he is directed to pay the proceeds over to the guardians of certain minors during their minority, a court of equity will decree that an equitable conversion of the real estate of the testator took place, and that the estate should be distributed as personal property, in accordance with the terms of the will.

Same — alternative gift — time of vesting.

4. A testator devised and bequeathed all his property, real and personal, to A and B, two grandsons, share and share alike, and provided that, in case of the death of either, his share should revert to the other. He also gave power to the executor to sell the real estate, and directed that the proceeds should be paid to the lawful guardians of the minor grandsons, and held in trust "until each attain his majority, when he shall have his share." Held that the period of distribution limited the survivorship, and that the gift took effect at the testator's death, with a gift over to the survivor upon a contingency terminable at the attainment of majority.

Same — vesting of estate before death.

5. Held, further, that since A attained his majority before his death, the contingency by which his title might be divested and B substituted became impossible, and B thereafter had no interest in the one half of the estate given to A.

(Reese, Ch. J., dissents.)

(March 24, 1911.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the District Court for Harlan County affirming a decree of the County Court directing equal payment of the proceeds of the estate of Wells Willits, deceased, to plaintiff and to defendants as beneficiaries of the estate under the will of Lee C. Willits, deceased. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

of cases it is necessary, in order to give effect to the language which refers to the absolutely certain event of death as being contingent, to start with the presumption, in the absence of any indication of a contrary intention, that the period of time to which the testator refers is the period of possession or payment; in the second class of cases there is a contingency without resorting to any such presumption. In other words, in the one case the presumption is that the testator meant to refer to the period of possession or payment, which presumption may on the one hand be strengthened or on the other hand be overcome by the 33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Messrs. John Everson, C. M. Miller, and C. O. Flansburg, for appellant:

If there is any contingency the period referred to by the testator was the death of either of said grandsons before final distribution of his estate; in which event such share should revert to the other.

Vass v. Freeman, 56 N. C. (3 Jones, Eq.) 221, 69 Am. Dec. 734; Vandervee v. Slingerland, 103 N. Y. 47, 57 Am. Rep. 701, 8 N. E. 247; Cambridge v. Rous, 8 Ves. Jr. 12; 6 Revised Rep. 199; Rood, Wills, § 650; Ewing v. Winters, 34 W. Va. 23, 11 S. E. 713; Woolverton v. Johnson, 69 Kan. 708, 77 Pac. 559; Arlington State Bank v. Paulsen, 57 Neb. 717, 78 N. W. 303; Chick v. Ives, 2 Neb. (Unof.) 879, 80 N. W. 751; Engel v. State, 65 Md. 539, 5 Atl. 249.

Where, by the terms of a will, the executor is directed to sell the real estate and pay over the proceeds arising therefrom to or for the benefit of certain named persons, such real estate is, under the doctrine of equitable conversion, regarded as personal property, and the title thereto vested in the executor, so that such beneficiary would take nothing absolutely until final distribution by the executor.

People use of Jennings v. Jennings, 44 Ill. 488; Banta v. Boyd, 118 Ill. 186, 8 N. E. 671; Ebey v. Adams, 135 Ill. 80, 10 L.R.A. 162, 25 N. E. 1013; Starr v. Willoughby, 218 Ill. 485, 2 L.R.A. (N.S.) 623, 75 N. E. 1029; Barnes v. Johnston, 233 Ill. 620, 84 N. E. 610; Brown v. Lippincott, 49 N. J. Eq. 44, 23 Atl. 497; Bartholomew's Estate, 155 Pa. 314, 26 Atl. 550; Doe ex dem. Cooper v. Roe, 7 Houst. (Del.) 488, 31 Atl. 1043; Gordon v. Gordon, 32 S. C. 563, 11 S. E. 334; Brograve v. Winder, 2 Ves. Jr. 634; Newton v. Ayscough, 19 Ves. Jr. 534; Cudlip v. Rundall, 4 Mod. 11; Browne v. Lockhart, 10 Sim. 421; 9 L. J. Ch. N. S. 53; Sinton v. Boyd, 19 Ohio St. 30, 2 Am. Rep. 369.

A devise of personal property to one for life with limitation over is valid.

Harrison v. Stockton, 19 N. J. Eq. 235; Re Denton, 137 N. Y. 428, 33 N. E. 482; context, while in the other case construction starts with a presumption which refers the contingency to quite a different period, viz., the death of the first taker without issue whenever it may occur.

This comment is not intended in any way to impugn the correctness of the decision in WILLITS v. CONKLIN, but is made for the purpose of calling attention to the fact of the distinction between the two classes of cases. The question as to what time the contingency of the first taker's death, upon which a gift over is conditioned, is referable, will be annotated at a future time.

Re Winters, 114 Cal. 186, 45 Pac. 1063; Simpson v. Cherry, 34 S. C. 68, 12 S. E. 886.

Messrs. Gomer Thomas and J. G. Thompson for appellees.

Letton, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

In 1899 Wells Willits and Rachael C. Willits, husband and wife, resided in Harlan county, Nebraska. In that year Mrs. Willits died, leaving her husband and her only son, Edward L. Willits, surviving. In 1882 Edward L. Willits was married to his first wife, Blanche Conklin, who died in 1887, leaving as the only issue of the marriage a son, Lee C. Willits, born July 4, 1886. In 1898 Edward L. Willits was married to Rebecca Metz. The only issue of this marriage was John M. Willits, who was born May 14, 1902, and is still living. On October 8, 1903, Edward L. Willits died intestate, leaving surviving him his sons, Lee C. Willits and John M. Willits, and his widow, Rebecca M. Willits. His father, Wells Willits, died on November 13, 1903. From the time his wife died in 1899 until the time of his death, Wells Willits lived in the family of Edward L. Willits. He was an invalid, having suffered from locomotor ataxia for years, and was virtually on his deathbed when his son died. About two weeks after his son's death he executed a will, which was duly probated. The executor named in the will qualified, sold the personal property and real estate, and paid a portion of the proceeds in equal sums to the guardians of the respective minors before Lee C. Willits reached his majority. Lee C. Willits died on the 23d of September, 1907, after attaining his majority. He left a will by which his property was bequeathed to the defendants, Robert Earle Conklin and Mary E. Conklin.

The present controversy arose upon the final distribution of the proceeds of the estate of Wells Willits. Upon the final report of the executor being filed in the county court, John M. Willits, by his guardian, filed a petition in that court praying for a construction of the will, that the money paid by the executor to the guardian of Lee C. Willits be recovered back, and in substance that he be declared the owner of the entire estate. The county court held in substance that one half the estate vested in each of the grandchildren, and directed the payment of the proceeds to the guardian of John M. Willits and the executor of the estate of Lee C. Willits, respectively. On appeal to the district court, this judgment was affirmed, and the judgment is now before us for review.

33 L.R.A.(N.S.)

The point at issue is the construction which should be placed upon the second and third paragraphs of the will, which are as follows:

"I give, devise, and bequeath all my property both personal and real of which I may die possessed, to my grandsons, Lee C. Willits and John M. Willits, share and share alike. In case of the death of either of the above-named grandsons, his share of my estate to revert to the other.

"I give and confer upon the executor, to be hereinafter named, and acting under this will, full power and authority, by public or private sale, as he shall deem expedient, to make sale of all real estate of which I may die possessed, and do all needful acts to convey title to the purchasers thereof. The proceeds of such sales to be turned over to the lawful guardians of my grandsons, above named, and held in trust by said guardians until each attain his majority, when he shall have his share."

The question presented is, What right in the property did Lee C. Willits possess at the time of his death? Was it an indefeasible vested estate, or did all the property devised to him "revert to the other" grandson on the happening of that event? The surviving grandson takes the position that on the death of Lee C. Willits at any time the entire estate passed to him, and that the legatees of Lee took nothing by his will. He contends that the intention of the deceased was to divide his estate equally between his two grandchildren, and to prevent the diversion of the property to the heirs or legatees of either, and that the proper construction to be placed upon the will is that "whenever the first legatee dies, whether before or after the testator, the other shall take; or it means that, if one dies before some contingency which the testator then had in his mind, the other shall take all; or it means that, if the first is prevented from taking by dying during the lifetime of the testator, the other shall be substituted for him." On the other hand, the defendants contend that the contingency referred to in the will was death before the death of the testator, and that in any event the estate of Lee C. Willits became absolute upon his arrival at twenty-one years of age.

The general rule is that where there is a legacy to a person absolutely, and a provision that in case of his death the estate shall revert to another, the contingency referred to is the death of the first taker before the death of the testator, but special circumstances will prevent the application of this general rule. In Schnitter v. McManaman, 85 Neb. 337, 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1047, 123 N. W. 299, it is said: "The rule that the words of limitation shall be applied to the death of the first taker without issue during the life of the testator is said to be extremely technical in its character, and does not apply where there are indications, however slight, that the testator referred to death subsequent to his own demise."

In Britton v. Thornton, 112 U. S. 526, 28 L. ed. 816, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 291, Mr. Justice Gray says: "When, indeed, a devise is made to one person in fee, and 'in case of his death' to another in fee, the absurdity of speaking of the one event, which is sure to occur to all living, as uncertain and contingent, has led the courts to interpret the devise over as referring only to death in the testator's lifetime. 2 Jarman, Wills, chap. 48; Briggs v. Shaw, 9 Allen, 516; Lord Cairns in O'Mahoney v. Burdett, L. R. 7 H. L. 388, 395, 31 L. T. N. S. 705, 23 Week. Rep. 361. But when the death of the first taker is coupled with other circumstances which may or may not ever take place, as, for instance, death under age or without children, the devise over, unless controlled by other provisions of the will, takes effect, according to the ordinary and literal meaning of the words, upon death under the circumstances indicated at any time, whether before or after the death of the testator. O'Mahoney v. Burdett, above cited; 2 Jarman, Wills, chap. 49."

It is elementary that in the construction of a will it is the duty of the court to effectuate the intention of the testator, if it can be ascertained, and, in order to ascertain this intention, the court should place itself as nearly as possible in the position of the testator, and consider not only the particular clause of the will which is in dispute, but the whole instrument. McCulloch v. Valentine, 24 Neb. 215, 38 N. W. 854; Chick v. Ives, 2 Neb. (Unof.) 879, 90 N. W. 751; Yoesel v. Rieger, 75 Neb. 180, 106 N. W. 428; Lewis's Estate, 203 Pa. 219, 52 Atl. 208, 30 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 666; Albin v. Parmele, 70 Neb. 740, 98 N. W. 29, 99 N. W. 646.

Appellant bases much of his argument upon the provision that in case of the death of either grandson, his share "shall revert to the other," but we think he places too much stress upon this phrase, and does not give sufficient consideration to the other provisions of the will.

Coming now to a consideration of the whole instrument, the will first devises and bequeaths all the testator's property, both real and personal, to the grandsons, share and share alike. This language clearly conveys a vested interest upon the death of the testator to each grandson. The next provision is that in case of the death of either grandson, his share shall revert to the other. Standing alone, these two provisions would, under the general rule, apply to death before the death of the testator, but, as we shall see there are other clauses which must be taken into account.

The next paragraph empowers the executor to sell and convey all the real estate, and further directs: "The proceeds of such sales to be turned over to the lawful guardians of my grandsons, above named, and held in trust by said guardians until each attain his majority, when he shall have his share." While this provision does not expressly direct the executor to convert the real estate into money, it is apparent that it was the intention of the testator that the land should be sold and the proceeds paid during the minority of the grandsons; otherwise the provisions for payment to the guardian would be useless, and the direction that each shall have his share at majority would also be without force. 1 Jarman, Wills, 6th ed. 558; Chick v. Ives, 2 Neb. (Unof.) 879, 90 N. W. 751.

The direction in this clause that the proceeds shall be held in trust for each grandson until his majority, "when he shall have his share," seems to us to be of great importance in the ascertainment of the testator's intention. From his circumstances at the time the will was made, it is evident that he knew and realized his condition, and that the possibility of his living until either grandson reached the age of twenty-one years was beyond his most sanguine hope. He was an aged man; his wife was dead; he was suffering from a fatal disease, and required constant care and attention. In his ailing and stricken condition, he had just sustained the loss of his only son. He believed that his days were numbered, and so expressed himself. Placing ourselves as nearly as we can in his position, we think it clear that the contingency of the death of either of his grandsons before his own was not within his contemplation. By the terms of the will the money is placed beyond the reach of either until he reaches majority. If he die before majority, the fund which is then in the hands of either the executor or guardian must pass to the other grandson. It was evidently in the testator's mind that until each grandson arrived at man's estate, it was improbable that he should have issue of his own, and thus perpetuate the family name. He desired to take reasonable precaution that his property should remain in the family. We cannot think that it was his purpose to divert the estate conferred upon one grandson from the children of such grandson, or that the other should receive the whole estate. We think it was his intention that the period of distribution should limit the survivorship, and that the executory gift over to the surviving grandson was limited by its terms to that period.

The language of Lord Hatherley in O'Mahoney v. Burdett, L. R. 7 H. L. 388, 403, in discussing the second and fourth rule in Edwards v. Edwards, 15 Beav. 357, 21 L. J. Ch. N. S. 324, 16 Jur. 259, is peculiarly applicable: "So again, I apprehend, in another class of cases, many of which were cited before us, which have been decided since Edwards v. Edwards, one of them having been before myself; in those cases where the court has found upon the face of the will a positive direction to pay over the personalty to the legatee, or to make a distribution among several legatees at a given time, the period of distribution being fixed at which, as it appears from the face of the will, the whole estate was intended to be entirely disposed of and divided, and to pass from the hands of the executors, the courts have laid hold of that circumstance to say, 'We hold this defeasance to be before that period of distribution arrives,' holding it to be an unreasonable construction of the testator's will to say that he directed, on the one hand, that the money shall be absolutely paid and divided and distributed, and put into the hands of those who, having it in their hands, will of course, spend it without any farther trust, and, on the other hand, that a subsequent event, namely, a certain person's dying childless after that distribution has taken place, should divest the property; that is to say, make it necessary for the executor to take steps to get back again and recall that money which he has paid, in order to hand it over to those who would take under the executory devise. The courts have held that that was unreasonable. In the case I alluded to it was a trade, which was directed to be carried on by the executors until the son attained a certain age, when the trade (and not the trade only, but other property as well) was to be handed over to him, and then there was what appeared to be a divesting executory devise in the event of his dying without issue. I held in that case, and I should be disposed to hold the same again if a similar case came before me, that the time was evidently pointed out when the final and complete distribution was to be made, and that the executory devise must be held to be referred to that time, because it was impossible to call the property back again, and hold that the executory devise was then to take effect after there had been that full and complete distribution of the funds." Vice Chancellor Wood (the same judge) decided Dean v. Handley, 2 Hem. & M. 635, where there was a gift in remainder and a gift over, upon a contingency determinable at the period of distribution. 33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Mr. Hawkins, in his treatise on Wills, 2d ed. 254, deduces the following rule from the cases: "Where there is a bequest to one person, and 'in case of his death' to another, the gift over is construed to take effect only in the event of the death of the prior legatee before the period of payment or distribution, unless an intention appear to the contrary. Cambridge v. Rous, 8 Ves. Jr. 12, 6 Revised Rep. 199; Ommaney v. Bevan, 18 Ves. Jr. 291; Home v. Pillans, 2 Myl. & K. 15, Coop. t. Brougham, 198, 4 L. J. Ch. N. S. 2." See also 2 Jarman, Wills, 6th ed. 1602, 1609, 1610; Theobald, Wills, Can. ed. 681, 685; Lewis's Estate, 203 Pa. 219, 52 Atl. 208. We find it unnecessary to cite or consider at length all the cases an examination of which has aided us to reach this conclusion. Most of them may be found collected and examined in an exhaustive monographic note to Smith v. Smith, 25 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1045, 1145.

We are of opinion that the gift took effect at the testator's death, with a gift over to the survivor, upon a contingency terminable at the attainment of majority, which was the period of distribution. The contingency by which the title of Lee C. Willits might be devested, and the other grandson substituted, became impossible on Lee attaining his majority; after that time the appellant had no interest in the half of the estate given to the first taker.

It follows that the judgment of the District Court should be and is affirmed.

Reese, C. J., dissents.

ARKANSAS SUPREME COURT.

C. L. CARRELL et al., Appts.,
v.

STATE OF ARKANSAS EX REL PAUL LITTLE.

(— Ark. —, 136, S. W. 174.)

Injunction — against Sunday show — breach of criminal laws.

A court of equity will not enjoin the operation of a theater on Sunday upon the ground that it is a public nuisance in that it is a violation of the Sunday laws, and tends to bring together a lawless and tur-

Note. — Injunction at suit of state against public nuisance which is also a crime.

This note brings down to date the notes to State ex rel. Crow v. Canty, 15 L.R.A. (N.S.) 747, and State v. Ehrlick, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) 691.

In State ex rel. West v. State Capital Co. — Okla. —, 103 Pac. 1021, followed in State ex rel. West v. Journal Co. — Okla. —, 105 Pac. 655, it was held that, in the bulent assemblage of people contrary to the criminal laws of the state, where neither the civil or property rights or privileges of the public, nor the public health, is affected.

(March 27, 1911.)

APPEAL by defendants from a decree of the Sebastian Chancery Court in plaintiff's favor in a suit to enjoin defendants from operating their theater on Sunday. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Cravens & Cravens, for appellants.

If everything charged in the petition of the appellee for injunction is true, still the state is not entitled to the relief sought, and a chancery court is without authority to grant it.

Jones v. Little Rock, 25 Ark. 301; State v. Vaughan, 81 Ark. 117, 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 899, 118 Am. St. Rep. 29, 98 S. W. 685, 11 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 277; State ex rel. Circuit Attorney v. Uhrig, 14 Mo. App. 413; Sheridan v. Colvin, 78 Ill. 237; Cope v. District Fair Asso. 99 Ill. 489, 39 Am. Rep. 30; People v. Condon, 102 Ill. App. 449; Re Debs, 158 U. S. 564, 39 L. ed. 1092, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 900; State v. Patterson, 14 Tex. Civ. App. 465, 37 S. W. 478; Quarles v. State, 55 Ark. 10, 14 L.R.A. 192, 17 S. W. 269; Wood, Nuisances, §§ 788-791; State absence of express statutory authority, a court of equity will not enjoin the advertising for sale and purchase of intoxicating liquors kept for sale without the state, on the ground that it is a public nuisance, in that it is a solicitation in the state of the sale of such liquors, and prohibited by the laws of the state, where the state has an adequate remedy at law through constitutional and statutory provisions prescribing an adequate penalty and punishment to prevent such advertisements or solicitations.

In People v. Kizer, 151 Ill. App. 6, a proceeding by information for contempt in violating an injunction decree entered by consent at the suit of a city against a common nuisance consisting of the illegal sale of intoxicating liquors in a certain building, where it was urged that the court was without jurisdiction to hear and determine the contempt proceeding, as the city had no power or authority to invoke the aid of a court of equity in the proceeding for an injunction, upon the decree in which the contempt proceeding was based, the court said: "If the sufficiency of the bill for injunction in the proceeding in equity had been then questioned by the demurrer, upon the ground that there was a want of proper parties, or that there was an adequate remedy at law, or that the bill improperly sought to enjoin the commission of a criminal offense, such demurrer might properly have been sustained, but the defendants named in said bill not only confessed all of its allegations, 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) ex rel. Vance v. Crawford, 28 Kan. 726, 42 Am. Rep. 182.

Where the remedy at law was complete, equity is without jurisdiction and will not grant relief.

Crow v. Dallas County, 13 Ark. 630; M. & L. R. R. Co. v. Woodruff, 26 Ark. 649; Byers v. Danley, 27 Ark. 77; Shaul v. Duprey, 48 Ark. 331, 3 S. W. 366; People v. Condon, 102 Ill. App. 449; People v. Equity Gaslight Co. 141 N. Y. 232, 36 N. E. 194; McKibbin v. Ft. Smith, 35 Ark. 352.

Messrs. Hal L. Norwood, Attorney General, and William H. Rector for the State.

Frauenthal, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This was a suit instituted in the name of the state of Arkansas, on the relation of the prosecuting attorney of the twelfth judicial circuit, seeking to enjoin appellants from giving any vaudeville or moving picture shows upon Sunday in a theater conducted by them in the city of Ft. Smith. It was alleged in the complaint that appellants had advertised that they would conduct such shows at their theater on certain Sundays, and, upon being notified by the law officers that they would be arrested for the offense of Sabbath breaking if they did so, they thereupon made no charge for admittance to such performances, in order but expressly consented that the decree now sought to be held invalid should be entered in the case. . . . The mere fact that there was a defect of parties did not deprive the court of jurisdiction to hear and determine the question involved, so as to render the order granting the injunction void, and justify the plaintiff in error in wilfully violating the same. . . . A court of equity having jurisdiction to declare and abate a nuisance is not deprived of such jurisdiction merely because the maintenance of such nuisance constitutes a criminal or statutory offense. . . . Furthermore, the decree having been entered by the consent of the plaintiff in error, error cannot properly be assigned upon it."

In Ex parte Roper, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 134 S. W. 334, under a statute conferring power to enjoin a public nuisance at the suit of the state or of an individual, although it may be also a crime, the right of the state to proceed by way of injunction against a nuisance consisting of the illegal sale of intoxicating liquors was upheld against the contention that it was in substance an attempt to prevent the commission of crime by an injunction, which the law does not permit or sanction.

As to injunction against crime which is private nuisance or which involves property rights, see notes to Detroit Realty Co. v. Oppenheim, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 585, and Ex parte Allison, 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 622.

A. C. W.

to evade the criminal laws of the state in that respect. It was further alleged that such Sunday performances were legally and morally wrong, and would tend to create a violation of the Sabbath breaking laws; that they would bring together a lawless and turbulent assembly of persons, which would result in an injury to the morals and general welfare of the people of that community; and that such performances constituted a public nuisance. It was also claimed that one of the purposes of appellants in giving such Sunday exhibitions was to advertise their show which was given during the other days of the week, and that the amount of the fine fixed by law for Sabbath breaking was not sufficient to prevent appellants from violating such laws. There was a demurrer interposed to this complaint, which was overruled. Thereupon the appellants filed an answer in which they denied that these performances given by them were illegal, or that they constituted a nuisance. They alleged that the persons assembled at such exhibitions were quiet and orderly, and that the performances were of a good and proper character, and not detrimental to the moral and religious sentiment of the people.

It appears that the appellants were, and had been for some time prior to the filing of the complaint herein, engaged in giving moving picture shows in a building located on one of the principal streets in the city of Ft. Smith. They advertised that on Sunday October 30, 1910, and on the following Sunday, they would give these performances at their theater, and did so. There was no charge of any kind made for admission to these performances. The evidence shows that these performances were given in an inclosed building, and consisted of moving pictures. On the first Sunday there was portrayed by these pictures the life of Damon and Pythias, accompanied by a lecture thereon and sacred songs and music; and on the following Sunday light the performance was of a similar character. The undisputed evidence shows that neither the moving pictures, songs, or music was immoral or objectionable in any regard. Upon final hearing of this cause the chancellor entered a decree perpetually enjoining the appellants from giving these performances in their theater upon Sunday, and from this decree they have appealed to this court.

The question involved in this case is whether or not the acts complained of were of such a nature as a court in the exercise of its chancery jurisdiction would restrain. The appellants could not be enjoined from doing any act which was not in itself wrongful. Under the undisputed testimony adduced upon the trial of this case, the performances themselves were not of a character which was illegal or immoral. It is contended, however, that the day upon which these performances were given, being Sunday, made them wrong and immoral. It is urged that the giving of the performances upon Sunday constituted an infraction of the law against Sabbath breaking, and that they gathered together an assembly of lawless and turbulent persons, and that this constituted a public nuisance. But the illegal acts thus complained of were only violations of the criminal laws, and courts of equity will not interfere simply for the purpose of restraining acts constituting crimes because they are criminal. Courts of equity do not exercise their powers to enforce the criminal laws. It has been held by this court that theatrical performances or exhibitions given upon Sunday, where admittance is charged, are violations of the law against Sabbath breaking. Quarles v. State, 55 Ark. 10, 14 L.R.A. 192, 17 S. W. 269.

It is also well established that, although a theater is not a nuisance in itself, still it may become a public nuisance where it collects together a crowd of noisy and lawless people to the annoyance of the community in which it is situated; and such a nuisance is a violation of the criminal laws of the state, and punishable. Bishop, Crim. Law, § 1135; 29 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 1183.

It is true that courts of equity have jurisdiction to enjoin acts constituting public nuisances, and to abate them. But such jurisdiction is interposed solely for the protection of property or of civil rights; and, whether the nuisance be private or public, the same principle must guide the interference of a court of equity in both cases. In the absence of an injury to property or to civil rights, the chancery court has no jurisdiction to restrain acts simply because they are criminal, nor has it the power to enforce the performance of moral duties solely as such. The power of a court of equity to exercise its jurisdiction in cases similar to the one herein has been fully discussed by this court in the case of State v. Vaughan, 81 Ark. 117, 7 L.R.A. (N.S.) 899, 118 Am. St. Rep. 29, 98 S. W. 685, and its right to issue an injunction against acts constituting a public nuisance has therein been determined. In that case it is said that there are some courts holding that common-law nuisances may be restrained by injunction; and, after discussing the legality of the exercise of such right, this court finally decided that "it is a sound principle of equity jurisprudence that an injunction will not lie at the instance of the state to restrain a public nuisance where the nuisance is one arising from the illegal, immoral, or pernicious acts of men, which for the time being make the property devoted to such use a nuisance, where such nuisance is indictable and punishable under the criminal law." It was there held that before an injunction could issue restraining acts constituting a public nuisance, it was necessary that the public nuisance should affect the civil or property rights or privileges of the public, or the public health; that the criminality of the act itself will not be sufficient to give jurisdiction in chancery. In that case the defendants were charged with operating what is known as a "turf exchange," or poolroom, where a great number of people were assembled for the purpose of gambling. It was there held that this was in effect a gaming house, where these people were congregated, and that it constituted a public nuisance and a common-law misdemeanor, but that it did not touch civil property rights or the privileges of the public, and that an injunction would not lie at the instance of the state to restrain the operation and maintenance of this public nuisance.

We think that the principles enunciated in the opinion delivered in that case are controlling in the case at bar, even if the testimony proved that the appellants were violating the law against Sabbath breaking or the law against maintaining a public nuisance. No civil property rights or privileges of the public were affected by the giving of these performances; and therefore there was no ground shown for the exercise by a court of chancery of its power to issue a writ of injunction herein. Re Debs, 158 U. S. 590, 39 L. ed. 1104, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 900; State v. Patterson, 14 Tex. Civ. App. 465, 37 S. W. 478; Atty. Gen. ex rel. Muskegon Booming Co. v. Ewart Booming Co. 34 Mich. 462.

The decree is therefore reversed, and the complaint dismissed.

KANSAS SUPREME COURT.

MATTIE CRELLY

v.

MISSOURI & KANSAS TELEPHONE COMPANY, App't.

(— Kan. —, 113 Pac. 386.)

Master — assault by servant — scope of employment — liability.

A local manager of a telephone company demanded of an operator of the company who was about to quit the service, that she sign a voucher for the compensation due her, and, when she refused to sign the voucher, he violently assaulted and beat her. Held, in an action brought by her against the telephone company to recover damages for the assault and resulting injuries, that the assault and use of force by the local manager to procure the signature of the voucher was not within the scope of his employment, and the telephone company was therefore not liable for his wrongful acts.

(February 11, 1911.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Crawford County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for injuries alleged to have been sustained by her through the fault of defendant. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. J. W. Gleed, John L. Hunt, and D. E. Palmer, for appellant:

If the judgment of the court below is to stand, the court must find some authority, express or implied, for Casen to do what he did.

1 Thomp. Neg. § 525; 20 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 167; Hudson v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. 16 Kan. 470; Mirick v. Suchy, 74 Kan. 717, 87 Pac. 1141, 11 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 366; Collette v. Rebori, 107 Mo. App. 711, 82 S. W. 552; Thames S. B. Co. v. Housatonic R. Co. 24 Conn. 40, 63 Am. Dec. 154; Meehan v. Morewood, 52 Hun, 566, 5 N. Y. Supp. 710, affirmed 126 N. Y. 667, 27 N. E. 854; Jones v. St. Louis, N. & P. Packet Co. 43 Mo. App. 398; Knowles v. Bullene, 71 Mo. App. 341; Dillingham v. Anthony, 73 Tex. 47, 3 L.R.A. 634, 15 Am. St. Rep. 753, 11 S. W. 139; Little Miami R. Co. v. Wetmore, 19 Ohio St. 110, 2 Am. Rep. 373; Kinsella v. Hamilton, Jr. L. R.

Note.—For liability of master for assault by a servant sent to recover property, see note to Grant v. Singer Mfg. Co. 6 L.R.A.(N.S.) 567, and subsequent note to Hardeman v. Williams, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 653.

As to liability for tort by servant sent to commit trespass, see note to Waler v. Great Northern R. Co. 18 L.R.A. (N.S.) 297.

As to liability of master for tort committed by servant in course of his employment, and with a view to the furtherance of his master's business, but contrary to the master's express instructions, see note to Bartlett v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. Ste. M. R. Co. 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 416.

As to liability of innkeeper or restaurant keeper for assault by his servant upon a patron, see note to Chase v. Knabel, 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1155.

Various phases of a carrier's liability for assault by employees will be found in the notes referred to in the Index to Notes, under the title "Carriers."

26 C. L. 671; Poulton v. London & S. W. R. Co. L. R. 2 Q. B. 534, 8 Best & S. 616, 36 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 294, 17 L. T. N. S. 11, 16 Week. Rep. 309; Staples v. Schmid, 18 R. I. 224, 19 L.R.A. 824, 26 Atl. 193; Labatt, Mast. & S. § 537, p. 1540; Mali v. Lord, 39 N. Y. 381, 100 Am. Dec. 448; Howe v. Newmarch, 12 Allen, 49; Rounds v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 64 N. Y. 129, 21 Am. Rep. 597; Evansville & C. R. Co. v. Baum, 26 Ind. 70.

Messrs. J. J. Campbell, R. S. Galtskill, and W. J. True, for appellee:

Whatever Casen did, he did as a representative of the defendant, and was certainly acting within the scope of his employment in discharging plaintiff and settling with her and ejecting her from the premises.

Rogahn v. Moore Mfg. & Foundry Co. 79 Wis. 573, 48 N. W. 669; Fick v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 68 Wis. 469, 60 Am. Rep. 878, 32 N. W. 527; Bergman v. Hendrickson, 106 Wis. 434, 80 Am. St. Rep. 47, 82 N. W. 304; McDonald v. Franchere Bros. 102 Iowa, 496, 71 N. W. 427; Cohen v. Dry Dock, E. B. & B. R. Co. 69 N. Y. 170, 8 Jones & S. 368; Haehl v. Wabash R. Co. 119 Mo. 325, 24 S. W. 737; Meade v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 68 Mo. App. 92; Curtis v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 99 Mo. App. 502, 73 S. W. 1103; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Randall, 40 Kan. 421, 19 Pac. 783; Comphor v. Missouri & K. Teleph. Co. 127 Mo. App. 553, 106 S. W. 536.

Johnston, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This was an action by Mattie Crelly to recover damages from the Missouri & Kansas Telephone Company for injuries resulting from a violent assault made upon her by E. S. Casen, the local manager of the company at Pittsburg, Kansas.

She alleges that Casen was local manager with authority to supervise and control the business of the company at Pittsburg, including authority to employ and discharge the servants of the company in that office, including herself, who was acting as chief operator, and that, on October 25, 1907, while she was in the employment of the company, Casen came into the office and commanded her to sign a salary voucher, which she declined to do until she could figure out the amount actually due her, and, after another demand and refusal, he struck her upon the chest with great force and violence, then shoved her 7 or 8 feet, and ordered her from the room; that, as she left the room, he struck her several blows on the back and shoulders, and would have pushed her down the stairway leading to the street but for the interference of other employees of the company. The answer of the company was a general denial, and also that Casen was not authorized to do the acts complained of, and that, if such acts were committed, he did not act as its agent or servant. The averment that Casen was not acting for the company in assaulting and beating appellee, or with its authority, was verified. The testimony of appellee in a general way sustained the allegations of her petition. It appeared that she had learned from the district manager at Joplin that she was to be discharged, and that shortly afterwards, while she was preparing to leave, Casen asked her to sign the voucher. When she refused, he struck her with his fist, and then she struck him with her umbrella, and, following this, he violently shoved her through a door, and she, in turn, kicked him. He continued to push and strike her until another employee interfered.

Among other special findings the following were returned:

Q. Did Casen assault Miss Crelly because she refused to sign the voucher?

A. He did.

Q. Were the plaintiff's injuries due to the assault occasioned and caused by her refusal to sign the voucher?

A. Yes.

In a general verdict the jury awarded the damages to appellee in the sum of $1,470.

The telephone company appeals, and raises the question whether, on the pleading and the plaintiff's own testimony, it can be held responsible for the assault of Casen upon appellee, and liable for the resulting injuries. It is argued that, accepting her testimony as true, the assault of Casen had no necessary or legal relation to his authority from the company or his duty to it. The contention is that the assault, whatever may have been the occasion or provocation, did not tend to further any business or purpose of the company, and was not one of the methods or things which came in the line of Casen's duty, or any interest which he was employed to promote, and that the assault was a personal wrong of Casen, for which he alone is responsible. The general rule is that the master is responsible for the acts of his servants done in the execution of the master's business and within the scope of his employment. It is not enough to exempt the master that the act is wilful or malicious, or in excess of the authority expressly conferred. If the tortious act is done while the servant is acting in behalf of his master and within the scope of his employment, the master will be responsible, although the act may be wilful and wanton. The act, as in this instance, may have been done while the servant was in the master's service, but unless it was expressly or impliedly authorized, or within the scope of the employment, the servant alone is responsible. The question of difficulty is whether the wrongful act is within the scope of the employment, and the contrariety of judicial opinion in cases brought to our attention arises largely from the application of this test. Here Casen was in the employ of the company, and was acting for it when he asked appellee to sign the voucher; but did the obtaining of the signature to the voucher contemplate the use of any force, or can it be said that an assault had any natural or necessary relation to the authority conferred at the time of his employment? The case is quite similar in its facts to Hudson v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. 16 Kan. 470. The third paragraph of the syllabus of that case reads: "Where it appears that plaintiff was authorized to receive freight for certain parties, and, in pursuance thereof, went to the depot of defendant, and there demanded the same of the agent who was in charge of the depot and authorized to receive and deliver freight, and while so demanding it the said agent made an assault upon him, and it does not appear that said assault was made in ejecting or attempting to eject plaintiff from the depot, or in preventing or attempting to prevent him from committing any injury to the property of the defendant, or from transgressing any rules for the regulation of its depot and the transaction of its business; held that it did not appear that the company was liable for the assault, and that only the agent who actually made it was liable." In the course of the decision Mr. Justice Brewer tersely stated that "Trotter was employed to deliver freight. Plaintiff came and demanded freight. Trotter replied to his demand with an assault. Was such assault in the course of Trotter's employment? Did it grow out of any services he was engaged in, or was it in the line of his duty? It seems to us it was clearly disconnected therefrom, and a mere volunteer assault. True, the employment may have given the opportunity and occasion, but it was not an act which in any fair sense the company could have been said to have employed him to do, or to have anticipated that he would do, nor an act which was the act of the company." The assault of Casen did not grow out of the service he was employed to perform, and was not an act which the company, or anyone else, would have anticipated that he would do. It was not a case of enforcing discipline or preserving order in the office, and was not one which contemplated the use of force. The jury found that the assault was made by Casen because appellee refused to sign the voucher. No circumstances indicate that the company contemplated the use of force to obtain signatures to vouchers, nor anything to show any connection between the assault and any duty which devolved on him.

In the Hudson Case the court used this illustration: "A party goes into a store to purchase goods, and is therefore rightfully there. He makes an inquiry as to the price of an article of a clerk behind the counter, who in reply takes a weight and knocks him down with it. Can this be said to be an act which the proprietor contemplated when he employed the clerk? That it was in the line of the clerk's employment, and that therefore the employer was responsible? But the cases are parallel. The employment in each furnishes the opportunity and the occasion; but in each the act is not one the agent was employed to perform, nor within the scope of his employment." In Mirick v. Suchy, 74 Kan. 717, 87 Pac. 1141, 11 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 366, it was held that the master is not liable for acts outside the scope of employment, although the act was intended to promote the master's interest. In 26 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 1528, it is said: "The test is not the character of the act nor whether it was done during the existence of the servant's employment; but whether the injury complained of was committed by the authority of the master expressly conferred or fairly implied in the nature of the employment and the duties incident thereto." The case of Collette v. Rebori, 107 Mo. App. 711, 82 S. W. 552, involved the liability of one who sent another to collect a bill, and the collector assaulted the debtor because he refused to pay. It was said: "The best considered cases hold that the master is liable to third persons for the negligent, fraudulent, or tortious acts of his agent or servant when it is shown that the agent or servant was acting within the scope of his employment, and that the act complained of was done as a means or for the purpose of doing the work assigned him by the master. To assault and beat a creditor is not a recognized or usual means resorted to for the collection of a debt, nor is it one likely to bring about a settlement of a disputed account."

And so we might say here that to assault or beat a telephone operator is not a recognized or usual way of procuring her signature to a voucher on which to draw the wages due to her. There are many cases bearing upon the question involved, and the following are a few of those which tend to support the view that the assault did not pertain to the duty of Casen nor come within the scope of his employment: Sachowitz v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 37 Kan. 212, 15 Pac. 242; Laird v. Farwell, 60 Kan. 512, 57 Pac. 98; Clark v. Folcroft, 67 Kan. 446, 73 Pac. 86; Dolan v. Hubinger, 109 Iowa, 498, 80 N. W. 514; Henry v. Pittsburgh & L. E. R. Co. 139 Pa. 289, 21 Atl. 157; McCann v. Tillinghast, 140 Mass. 327, 5 N. E. 164; Stone v. Hills, 45 Conn. 44, 29 Am. Rep. 635; Chicago City R. Co. v. Mogk, 44 Ill. App. 17; Holler v. Ross, 68 N. J. L. 324, 59 L.R.A. 943, 96 Am. St. Rep. 546, 53 Atl. 472; Sagers v. Nuckolls, 3 Colo. App. 95, 32 Pac. 187; Vanderbilt v. Richmond Turnp. Co. 2 N. Y. 479, 51 Am. Dec. 315; Searle v. Parke, 68 N. H. 311, 34 Atl. 744; Waaler v. Great Northern R. Co. 18 S. D. 420, 70 L.R.A. 731, 112 Am. St. Rep. 794, 100 N. W. 1097; Rounds v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 64 N. Y. 129, 21 Am. Rep. 597; Mali v. Lord, 39 N. Y. 381, 100 Am. Dec. 448; Meehan v. Morewood, 52 Hun, 566, 5 N. Y. Supp. 710, also 126 N. Y. 667, 27 N. E. 854; Jones v. St. Louis, M. & P. Packet Co. 43 Mo. App. 398; Cobb v. Simon, 124 Wis. 467, 102 N. W. 891; Little Miami R. Co. v. Wetmore, 19 Ohio St. 110, 2 Am. Rep. 373; Wood, Mast. & S. §§ 286, 307; Labatt, Mast. & S. § 537; 1 Thomp. Neg. § 527; 20 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 167. The cases are not uniform as to what acts fall within the implied authority conferred on servants or agents, but most of those cited in behalf of appellee were where the business or employment contemplated the enforcement of discipline or implied the use of some force, and the rule is that, where the master authorizes force, he is liable for excessive force or the abuse of the authority given. In this case the use of force did not pertain to the business intrusted to Casen by the company. It was not an incident of the authority vested in him to compute what was due operators, and to procure their signatures to vouchers, and we find no basis in the pleadings or the evidence which would justify a holding that an assault upon an operator who refused to sign a voucher came within the implied authority of Casen, or can in any sense be regarded as within the scope of his employment.

The demurrer to the evidence should have been sustained, and the judgment will therefore be reversed, with the direction to sustain the demurrer to the evidence of appellee, and enter judgment in favor of the appellant.

All the Justices concurring.
33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

M. TUTT, Appt.,
v.

CITY OF GREENVILLE et al.

(142 Ky. 536, 134 S. W. 890.)

Municipal corporations — nonresident offender — prosecution.

1. A nonresident may be prosecuted in a police court of a city, the jurisdiction of which is limited to offenses occurring within its limits, for permitting his cow to be at large within the city, contrary to a municipal ordinance, although he was not personally within the city at the time, if process is subsequently served upon him within the jurisdiction.

Same — personal liability — remedy in rem.

2. The personal liability of a nonresident owner of a cow for permitting it to run at large within the limits of a municipal corporation, contrary to the provisions of its ordinances, is not defeated by the fact that the ordinances also provide for proceeding against the animal in rem for collection of the penalty.

(March 2, 1911.)

Note. — Absence of accused from territorial jurisdiction at time of offense as affecting jurisdiction of the offense.

There are many cases dealing with the question as to the locus of an offense where part of the action or sequence of events occurred in one jurisdiction and part in another, which, without discussing the point, assume that the absence of accused from the territorial jurisdiction at the time of the offense does not in itself deprive the court of jurisdiction if the offense is deemed to have been committed within the territorial jurisdiction. These cases, however, are not included in this note, which is confined to cases which expressly discuss the effect of the accused's absence on the jurisdiction as distinct from the question as to what part of the action or sequence of events must have occurred within the jurisdictional limits.

As to the locality of a crime committed through the agency of the mails or of carriers, see note to State v. Hudson, 19 L.R.A. 775.

As to the locality of a crime committed by shooting or striking across a state boundary, see note to State v. Hall, 28 L.R.A. 59.

It seems to be unanimously held that one accused of committing an offense within a certain territorial jurisdiction need not have been personally present therein at the time, in order to have committed the offense there, and to give the court jurisdiction. As said in Simpson v. State, 92 Ga. 41, 22 L.R.A. 248, 44 Am. St. Rep. 75, 17 S. E.

A PPEAL by plaintiff from an order of the Circuit Court for Muhlenberg County sustaining a general demurrer to a petition to prohibit defendants from enforcing the collection of a fine against plaintiff for permitting his cow to run at large, in violation of an ordinance of the city. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Ross, Clarke, & Stroud for appellant.

Mr. Campbell Howard, for appellees:

The running at large of stray cattle in a populous community is treated generally as a kind of public nuisance,—one that endangers the safety and the property of citizens. It is therefore competent to regulate the matter by punishing the owners, as well as by proceeding in rem against the property itself.

Thompson v. Millen, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 2479, 74 S. W. 288; McKee v. McKee, 8 B. Mon. 433; Paducah v. Ragdale, 122 Ky. 425, 92 S. W. 13; Ky. Stat. § 3637, subsec. 10.

Carroll, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The city of Greenville has an ordinance prohibiting cattle from running at large in the city, and making it a misdemeanor for any person to suffer or permit his cattle to be at large in the city. The appellant, Tutt, resides outside of the city limits, and under a warrant issued against him for suffering a cow owned by him to 984: "Of course, the presence of the accused within this state is essential to make his act one which is done in this state, but the presence need not be actual. It may be constructive. The well-established theory of the law is that, where one puts in force an agency for the commission of crime, he, in legal contemplation, accompanies the same to the point where it becomes effectual."

In State v. Lichliter, 95 Mo. 402, 8 S. W. 720, it was held that a criminal court of the city of St. Louis had jurisdiction of a prosecution for obtaining goods by false pretenses, although, at the time of the offense, the defendant was personally without the territorial jurisdiction of that court, where, for the purpose of obtaining the goods, he sent by mail from without the jurisdiction a statement as to his financial condition, which was received in the city, and the goods were there delivered to a railway company, consigned to him.

In De Queen v. Fenton, — Ark. —, 136 S. W. 945, a suit in chancery to enjoin certain nonresidents of a city from permitting their stock and cattle to run at large within the city limits, in violation of ordinances, the supreme court, holding that the chancery court had no jurisdiction in the matter, said that the ordinances should be enforced by a criminal prosecution for the violation thereof, instituted in the police court of the city, and that there could be no legal difficulty in enforcing them, although the defendants were nonresidents.

And in Moore v. Crenshaw, 1 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. (White & W.) 105, it was held that city ordinances prohibiting the running at large of certain animals within the city, and providing for the impounding and sale of animals found at large, in violation of the ordinance, and not redeemed by the owner before sale, were valid and binding, and operated upon all animals found running at large within the city limits in violation of the ordinance, regardless of whether owned by residents or nonresidents.

But in Beattie v. State, 73 Ark. 428, 84 S. W. 477, reversing a judgment convicting a nonresident of the state for permitting cattle to run at large within the state, by 33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

turning them out of his inclosure in an adjoining state, knowing that they would go across the state line, the court said that it was clear that the Arkansas statute "does not subject a resident of Missouri, who turns his cattle at large in that state, to a criminal prosecution and fine if the cattle afterwards come into this state; for the legislature of this state has no power to punish a resident of Missouri for a lawful act done in that state. Nor do we think that it would alter the case if the defendant knew, at the time he turned them at large in Missouri, that they would probably come into Arkansas, for the legislature of this state cannot compel the residents of Missouri who live near the state line to keep their cattle in inclosed lots or fields, in order to prevent them from coming into this state, and we do not think that it was the intention of this statute to do so. The people of Missouri have the right to permit their cattle to run at large in that state, unless forbidden by the law of that state; and if the people of this state desire to keep such cattle from entering this state, they can do so by putting up a fence along the line between this state and Missouri, or by a statute authorizing the cattle of nonresidents which stray into this state to be impounded and kept at the costs of the owners. But to undertake to arrest and fine a resident of Missouri because he does not prevent his cattle from straying into this state would be to assume a jurisdiction over the residents of that state never intended by the statute, and beyond the power of the legislature to confer."

A court whose jurisdiction is limited to offenses occurring within a certain county has jurisdiction of the crime of larceny by a bailee, although the accused was not at the time within the county, where he sent by express money placed in his custody to a bank in such county, with directions by letter to send him a draft payable to himself, which he did for the purpose of appropriating the money to his use, and facilitating his escape with it. State v. Barnett, 15 Or. 77, 14 Pac. 737.

And a court has jurisdiction of the offense run at large and wander into the city, he was arrested and fined in the police court. Thereafter he brought this suit in the circuit court against the city and the police judge, seeking to prohibit them from enforcing the collection of the fine and costs. A general demurrer was sustained to his petition, and he appeals.

The validity of the ordinance is not assailed, but it is insisted that appellant did not commit any offense in the city limits, because he did not in person take his cow into the city and turn her loose; and therefore the police court had no jurisdiction to impose a fine upon him for a violation of the ordinance, although it is conceded that the cow might have been impounded and proceeded against in rem, as it were. In support of the argument that the police court had no jurisdiction over the person of appellant, our attention is called to § 143 of the Constitution, reading: "A police court may be established in each city and town in this state, with jurisdiction in cases of violation of municipal ordinances and by-laws occurring within the corporate limits of the city or town in which it is established, and such criminal jurisdiction within the said limits as justices of the peace have. . . . And § 3051 of the Kentucky Statutes (Russell's Stat. 1862), relating to the class of cities of which Greenville is one, reading: "A police court is hereby established in such city, to be held by the police judge of such city. Said police court shall have of stealing a watch, although the thief was not at the time within the court's territorial jurisdiction, if he sends the stolen property by railway to an accomplice within such jurisdiction, for the purpose of sale. Reg. v. Rogers, 11 Cox, C. C. 38, 37 L. J. Mag. Cas. N. S. 83, L. R. 1 C. C. 136, 18 L. T. N. S. 414, 16 Week. Rep. 733.

Where a promissory note with forged indorsements has been sent by mail from one county to a person in another county, for the purpose of obtaining credit upon it, the offense is complete, and the forger should be tried in the latter county, although he was not personally present there at the time of the offense. People v. Rathbun, 21 Wend. 529.

And where one has given to another poison to be taken, and the latter carries the poison away with him into another county, where he swallows it and dies, the courts of the latter county have jurisdiction of the crime of murder thus committed therein by "administering" poison, although the one who gave the poison was not personally present in the latter county at the time. Robbins v. State, 8 Ohio St. 131.

In People v. Wiley, 10 N. Y. Crim. Rep. 231, 20 N. Y. Supp. 445, although it appeared that the defendant was personally present in the county where he was indicted, aiding and abetting in the commission of a larceny, the court said that even if his participation had been confined to the fact of counseling and inducing its commission while in another county, as, by statute, that made him a principal in the crime, he would have been properly indicted in the county where the crime was committed, although not personally present there.

Under an act to compel parents to maintain their children, expressly providing that the offense of abandonment or neglect of, or refusal to provide for, such children, shall be held to have been committed in any county of the state where they may be when complaint is made, and that the citizenship once acquired in the state of any father of any child living in the state shall be deemed to continue until the child arrives 33 L.R.A. (N.S.) at the age of sixteen, if he so long continues to live in the state, a nonresident may be prosecuted in the courts of the state for failure to provide for his children living therein, although he was not in the state at the time of the alleged offense. State v. Sanner, 81 Ohio St. 393, 26 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1093, 90 N. E. 1007.

And a nonresident who has been found and arrested within a state is amenable to its criminal justice, and may be prosecuted for the crime of embezzlement committed within the state by drawing, as agent, checks on his employers in the state, and obtaining money by means thereof, although he was without the state at the time of the commission of the offense. Ex parte Hedley, 31 Cal. 108.

In Hanks v. State, 13 Tex. App. 289, it was held that under a statutory provision that persons out of the state may commit, and be liable to indictment and conviction for committing, certain offenses not necessarily requiring a personal presence in the state, the courts of the state have jurisdiction of the offense of forgery of a transfer of a land certificate for land in the state, although the acts constituting the forgery were all committed, and the defendant was at the time present, in another state.

And in State v. Morrow, 40 S. C. 221, 18 S. E. 853, 9 Am. Crim. Rep. 28, a prosecution for abortion, although it was held that there was no ground for a plea to the jurisdiction, as there was evidence of acts done by the defendant while personally present within the state, in pursuance of an intention to effect an abortion, the supreme court said that assuming that there was no such evidence, still the court in that state had jurisdiction of the offense, although the defendant was absent from its territorial jurisdiction, if he procured and sent into the state by mail certain drugs intended to produce an abortion within the state, advising their use for the purpose of bringing about an abortion, and an abortion resulted.

So, in Simpson v. State, 92 Ga. 41, 22 L.R.A. 248, 44 Am. St. Rep. 75, 17 S. E. 984, it was held that the courts of this jurisdiction concurrent with the justice's courts of all actions and proceedings, civil and criminal, except that in criminal cases the jurisdiction shall be confined to cases occurring within the city, . . . and shall have exclusive jurisdiction of all actions for the recovery of any fine . . . and of all prosecutions for any violations of any ordinance. . . ." We have no disposition to question the proposition that unless an offense is committed within the city, the police court has no jurisdiction. This being so, the only question presented is: Did appellant, by permitting his cow to run at large and into the city, commit within the city an offense?

As we understand the argument of counsel for appellant, it goes to the extent of insisting that a person cannot commit an offense against an ordinance of a city or town unless he is actually present within the city limits when the offense is committed. But we do not think it necessary that a person charged with committing an offense against an ordinance should be actually within the city at the time of its violation, if in fact, through its acts or agents, or by or through means or things controlled and directed by him, the offense charged against him is actually committed within the city. Suppose a city had an ordinance prohibiting and punishing the throwing of explosive substances on the streets within the city limits, and a person should stand just outside the corporate boundary and throw an explosive substance within the city limits,—could it be contended that he was exempt from liability and punishment under the ordinance merely because he was outside of the city when he threw the offending article? Or suppose a city had an ordinance prohibiting the bringing into the city of intoxicating liquors for sale, and a person outside of the city sent for sale by his agent intoxicating liquors into the city,—would he state have jurisdiction of a statutory offense of shooting at another, although the accused, at the time of the shooting, stood in an adjoining state, if his bullet, missing the person shot at, who was in the state, struck within this state, in close proximity to him.

And a nonresident may be prosecuted for murder in the courts of the state where the crime was committed, although he was not personally present within the state at the time, where he stood with his gun just across the state line, some two or three hundred yards distant, ready and near enough to give assistance if necessary, while a band of men of whom he was the leader shot to death certain prisoners whom they had taken from the custody of officers of the law, and after the shooting he administered to each of the band an oath never to reveal the names of any of those implicated. Hatfield v. Com. 11 Ky. L. Rep. 468, 12 S. W. 309.

Likewise, a nonresident may be prosecuted in the courts of a state for the illegal sale of lottery tickets, an offense in which there is no accessory, although he was not personally within the state at the time, if he conspired with his agent to sell the tickets in the state, and the agent effected in the state the unlawful object of conspiracy. Com. v. Gillespie, 7 Serg. & R. 409, 10 Am. Dec. 475.

And one who in Virginia conspires to promote a scheme of lottery which is to be partly carried on in Virginia and partly in the District of Columbia may be prosecuted in the police court of the District of Columbia, when subsequently arrested within the District, for promoting a lottery scheme there in violation of statute, although he does not actually come into the latter jurisdiction at the time of the offense, but acts therein through agents. United States v. King, 9 Mackey, 404. 33 L.R.A.(N.S.)

Where one commits within a certain state, through an innocent agent, the crime of knowingly uttering and publishing as true and genuine a false and forged deed which he has procured to be forged and has mailed from another state, the former state has jurisdiction of the offense of uttering, although the accused was not at the time within the state. Lindsey v. State, 38 Ohio St. 507.

And the courts of a state have jurisdiction of the offense of obtaining money by false pretenses, committed within the state by a nonresident, through an innocent agent, although the former was not, at the time of the offense, within the state. Adams v. People, 1 N. Y. 173, affirming 3 Denio, 190, 45 Am. Dec. 468.

So, in Reg. v. Garrett, 17 Jur. 1060, a prosecution for obtaining money by false pretenses, holding that the facts of the case did not amount to an obtaining of money within the meaning of the statute, Ld. Campbell, Ch. J., said: "I do not proceed upon the ground that the offense was committed beyond the jurisdiction of the court, for if a man employ a conscious or unconscious agent to commit an offense in this country, he is amenable to the laws of England, although at the time the offense was committed he was living beyond the jurisdiction."

And a nonresident may be prosecuted in the courts of the state for the statutory offense of bringing paupers into the state, although he did not personally bring them, and was not himself within the state at the time of the offense, where he sent them into the state under the care of an agent of his. Barkhamsted v. Parsons, 3 Conn. 1.

Offense of accessory before the fact.

But one who, out of the state, merely becomes an accessory before the fact to a not subject himself to the penalty provided by the ordinance? Illustrations like this might be multiplied without number, but it is scarcely necessary to use others, as we think there can be no doubt that when any person violates a valid ordinance in person or by or through things, instrumentalities, or agencies that he owns or controls and directs, he is subject to the punishment imposed. It is the act or thing that is done within the city limits in violation of the ordinance that subjects the doer to the penalty. Where the doer in fact is at the time is a matter of no consequence. Possibly in some cases it might be difficult to get jurisdiction of the person of the offender, so that he might be punished, but this fact would not affect his guilt or his liability to punishment if he could be brought to trial. A person need not himself be within the territorial limits of a city in order to commit a violation of one of its ordinances if the act that he commits or the thing that he sets in motion occurs within the city. When appellant permitted his cow to wander at large within the city limits, he as certainly committed an act in violation of its laws as if he had himself driven his cow within the limits and turned her at large. There could be no difference between the legal effect and consequence of appellant's act in standing just outside the city limits, and driving his cow into the city, to run at large, and in leading her into the city, and then turning her loose. In both instances it would be through his agency or conduct that she was at large in the city. The fact that the cow might have been impounded, and subjected in a proper proceeding to any fine imposed against appellant, did not relieve him from liability, nor did it grant the city authority to subject his cow without giving him an opportunity to be heard. Varden v. Mount, 78 Ky. 86, 39 Am. Rep. 208; felony (larceny) committed within the state, cannot be prosecuted in the courts of the state, even under the statutory provision that "every person being without this state, committing or consummating an offense by an agent or means within the state, is liable," etc., as this language must be confined to persons who, without the state, commit a crime which, in legal contemplation, is to be deemed as having been committed within the state under circumstances that will make a person thus committing it a principal in the crime. Johns v. State, 19 Ind. 421, 81 Am. Dec. 408.

In State v. Wyckoff, 31 N. J. L. 65, however, holding that one who, without the state, becomes accessory before the fact to a felony by inciting and procuring a guilty agent or accomplice to enter the state and commit a larceny, is not guilty of any offense within the jurisdiction of the state, the court said: "It is undoubtedly true that personal presence within the jurisdiction in which the crime is committed is not, in all cases, requisite to confer cognizance over the person of the offender in the tribunals of the government whose laws are violated. In some cases the maxim applies, Crimen trahit personam. . . . The rule, therefore, appears to be firmly established and upon very satisfactory grounds, that where the crime is committed by a person absent from the country in which the act is done, through the means of a merely material agency, or by a sentient agent who is innocent, in such cases the offender is punishable where the act is done. The law implies a constructive presence from the necessity of the case; otherwise the anomaly would exist of a crime, but no responsible criminal."

And in State v. Chapin, 17 Ark. 561, 65 Am. Dec. 452, holding that an accessory before the fact, in one state, to a felony (arson) committed by his co-conspirators, the principals in the crime, in another state, is guilty of a crime only in the former state, the court said that if the defendant had been a principal in the offense, instead of an accessory before the fact, he would have been regarded as being present in contemplation of the law where the offense was committed, although he was at the time personally absent from the state, and would have been amenable to the laws of the state where the offense was committed; "it is not necessary in all cases that a man should be actually present in this state to make him amenable to our laws for a crime committed here. If the crime is the immediate result of his act, he may be made to answer for it in our courts, though actually absent from the state at the time he does the act, because he is constructively present, or present in contemplation of law."

And the courts of a state in which the distinction between principal and accessory in felony has been done away with by express statutory provision, and every person who aids and assists in the commission of a crime is made a principal, have jurisdiction to try and convict a defendant who has conspired with others in another state to commit a theft from an express car in a train in the former state, and who has assisted in the initiation of the offense in the other state, although he was not personally present within the state at the time of the commission of the offense, if jurisdiction of his person can be obtained. State v. Grady, 34 Conn. 118. In this case, the court further repudiated generally the doctrine held in the last three cases above cited as to the punishment in one state of a person becoming in another state an accessory before the fact to a felony committed in the former state.

A. C. W.

Paducah v. Ragsdale, 122 Ky. 425, 92 S. W. 13. The case of Earle v. Latonia Agri. Assn. 127 Ky. 578, 106 S. W. 312, is in no wise in conflict with the conclusion we have reached. In that case it was attempted by ordinance to prohibit and punish the sale of intoxicating liquors outside the limits of the corporation, and it was held that the ordinance, in so far as it attempted the punishment of offenses committed outside of the city limits, was void, and this for the reason that the act that constituted a violation of the ordinance was not committed within the city. Here the act that constituted a violation of the ordinance was committed within the city. It is therefore obvious that there is no similarity between this case and that.

Wherefore the judgment of the lower court is affirmed.

MAINE SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

SETH C. GORDON

v.

ROSE A. CONLEY.

JAMES B. O'NEIL

v.

SAME

HERBERT F. TWITCHELL

v.

SAME.

(— Me —, 78 Atl. 365.)

Witness — expert — compensation — amount.

1. Physicians employed without an agreement as to compensation, by a plaintiff in an action to recover for personal injuries, to make a personal examination of his condition in order to qualify as experts, and then to attend court to testify as such experts and assist counsel in meeting expert evidence from the other side, may recover from him reasonable compensation for their time, and are not limited to the regular witness fees, where they were not summoned, but appeared voluntarily under the agreement.

Appeal — erroneous ruling — materiality.

2. Erroneous rulings of the trial court upon abstract propositions of law will not require a reversal if, upon the law and legal evidence, the result of the trial was right.

(November 5, 1910.)

EXCEPTIONS by defendant to rulings of the Supreme Judicial Court for Cumberland County directing verdicts in plaintiffs' favor in actions brought to recover for professional services as expert witnesses. Overruled.

The facts are sufficiently stated in the opinion.

Mr. Henry J. Conley, for defendant:

When the expert comes into the court without being summoned, he has no greater rights to special compensation than he would have had if he had been duly summoned to appear in the case.

Barrus v. Phaneuf, 166 Mass. 125, 32 L.R.A. 619, 44 N. E. 141; Ex parte Dement, 53 Ala. 389, 25 Am. Rep. 611; Wright v. People, 112 Ill. 540; State v. Teipner, 36 Minn. 535, 32 N. W. 678, Dodge v. Stiles, 26 Conn. 463; Pool v. Boston, 5 Cush. 219.

Compensation for expert testimony on behalf of the state in a criminal case includes the usual witness fees, unless further provision is made by statute.

Flinn v. Prairie County, 60 Ark. 204, 27 L.R.A. 669, 46 Am. St. Rep. 168, 29 S. W. 459; Larimer County v. Lee, 3 Colo. App. 177, 32 Pac. 841; Ex parte Dement, 53 Ala. 389, 25 Am. Rep. 611; Summers v. State, 5 Tex. App. 374, 32 Am. Rep. 573; State v. Teipner, 36 Minn. 535, 32 N. W.

Note. — Compensation of expert witnesses.

Aside from GORDON v. CONLEY but two cases in point have been discovered since the note in 25 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1040, on the same subject.

In Keller v. Harrison, — Iowa, —, 128 N. W. 851, it was held that a surveyor who made a survey, and investigated one made by the defendant, and testified concerning both, was entitled to additional compensation as an expert, under a Code provision that "witnesses called to testify only to an opinion founded on the special study or experience in any branch of science, or to make scientific or professional examinations and state the result thereof, shall receive additional compensation, to be fixed by the court with reference to the time employed and the degrees of learning and skill required."

In Hough v. State, 68 Misc. 26, 124 N. Y. Supp. 878, the court of claims rejected the claimant's demand for compensation for making an examination and appraisal, preparatory to testifying as an expert for the state, of the plant of the Consolidated Gas Company in New York city, because of his failure to fix the appraisal at a figure substantially below that claimed by the gas company, in accordance with the claimant's understanding of what was wanted, and as agreed. The expert in this case was to have a certain sum as a retainer, and so much per day for the time his services were required, but the court held that the contract was entire, and upon its breach the claimant forfeited not only the stipulated sum per day, but also the retainer. W. A. S.

678; Allegheny County v. Watt, 3 Pa. 462; Northampton County v. Innes, 26 Pa. 156; Israel v. State, 8 Ind. 467; Re Atty. Gen. 104 Mass. 537; Smith v. McLaughlin, 77 Ill. 596; Wright v. People, 112 Ill. 540; Parks v. Brewer, 14 Pick. 192.

Mr. Joseph B. Reed, for plaintiffs:

If a witness agrees with a party that he will attend and testify, without being summoned, and he is not summoned, any reasonable promise for compensation is good and may be enforced.

Dodge v. Stiles, 26 Conn. 463.

Spear, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

These were three actions of assumpsit on accounts annexed, severally brought by Seth C. Gordon, James B. O'Neil, and Herbert F. Twitchell, all of Portland, in said county of Cumberland, physicians and surgeons, against Rose A. Conley and trustees, to recover for professional services as expert witnesses, three days each in the case of Dr. Gordon and Dr. O'Neil, and four days in the case of Dr. Twitchell; they having, at the request of Rose A. Conley and her attorney, Henry J. Conley, made a physical examination of the said Rose A. Conley, and at the request of her said attorney attended court and gave evidence of their opinion relative to her condition, and the causes that might have produced it, in an action for personal injuries brought by said Rose A. Conley against the Grand Trunk Railway, tried at the January term of the supreme judicial court for Cumberland county, A. D. 1908.

These three cases present substantially the same conditions of facts, and were tried together at the December term of the superior court for Cumberland county, A. D. 1909.

The jury rendered a verdict for the plaintiffs Seth C. Gordon and James B. O'Neil each the sum of $112.50, and for the plaintiff Herbert F. Twitchell the sum of $150. The defendant introduced no testimony. The evidence conclusively shows that the plaintiffs were employed by the defendant or her attorneys to make an examination of her physical condition for the purpose of enabling them to qualify as medical expert witnesses in her case about to be tried in the supreme judicial court against the Grand Trunk Railway for injury alleged to have been received by her through the negligence of the railway. While Dr. O'Neil was her regular attending physician, he nevertheless was used as an expert upon the witness stand. The evidence of Judge Foster, who was counsel for the defendant in her case against the railway, is so conclusive upon the nature of the employment of the three physicians in case at bar, their required attendance at court during the trial, and the time they spent at court, that the verdict of the jury must be regarded as fully warranted upon this issue if the law permits it to stand. The plaintiffs were not summoned, but appeared voluntarily at the request of the defendant's counsel, but without any agreement as to the compensation they were to receive for their services. Under these conditions, the plaintiffs contend that they were entitled to reasonable compensation instead of the regular witness fee.

But the defendant asserts, admitting the facts as claimed by the plaintiffs, that they are entitled to only the witness fees provided by law. The defendant's own statement of her contention is this: The defendant claims that the compensation of all witnesses, including expert witnesses, is established by § 13 of chapter 117 of the Revised Statutes, as amended by chapter 66 of the Public Laws of 1907, which reads as follows, to wit: "Witnesses in the supreme judicial or superior courts and in the probate courts, and before referees, auditors, or commissioners specially appointed to take testimony, shall receive $1.50, or before county commissioner, $1, for each day's attendance, and 6 cents for each mile travel going out or returning home; and before a justice of the peace, a judge of a municipal or police court, 50 cents a day for attendance, and for travel the same as at the court aforesaid."

"As there is no other provision made in our statutes for the payment of witnesses, the courts nor the law cannot distinguish between different classes of witnesses, between 'expert' testimony, so called, and that which is not expert; but must pay them all the same fee, which is the fee established by law."

It will be observed that the question raised is not whether an expert witness can be summoned into court in the regular way, and be required to give in evidence all the knowledge he may have acquired as an expert upon a particular subject under investigation, for the regular witness fee, but whether having been employed by a party to give special attention to the investigation of a matter out of court, and then appear in court, not only to testify as an expert witness, but to remain in court for a specific length of time with loss of regular occupation, not by order of the court, but by request of the party employing, a witness is entitled to receive reasonable compensation beyond the regular witness fee for such services. If a party saw fit to summon an expert witness to testify in court without any knowledge as to what he might say, whether the witness would be required for the usual fee to give all the expert knowledge he might have upon the subject under investigation does not now arise. That is not the case before us. In the case at bar the plaintiffs, without summons, came into court, not only to testify, but by special request remained in court three days in order to listen to the experts on the other side of the case advise counsel, and testify in rebuttal if necessary; while a witness under subpoena, after testifying for an hour or half an hour, might be excused by the court and enabled to pursue his ordinary occupation, instead of losing three days. He is under no contractual obligation whatever to the party calling him. He cannot even be unwillingly interviewed before testifying. He takes the stand, testifies, and leaves it. This is all he is required by law to do. The court, of course, could require him to remain in attendance, but it is an unusual case in which an expert witness, capable of earning perhaps $100 per day, would be required to remain at $1.50 per day for the benefit of private interests. Hence it appears that a witness summoned into court, and for nonappearance subject to contempt, stands in an entirely different relation to the court and the parties from the witness who appears in court without summons, but upon a special agreement not only to prepare and testify, but to remain in court for the special benefit of the party calling him. Such a witness performs services outside the statutory requirement, and is entitled to whatever his services are reasonably worth above the legal fee due to the ordinary witness. This conclusion with respect to the rights of expert witnesses brought into court, without summons, upon agreement to perform services not required by law of a witness summoned in the regular way, seems not only to be reasonable and equitable, but is fully sustained by a strikingly parallel case. Barrus v. Phaneuf, 166 Mass. 123, 32 L.R.A. 619, 44 N. E. 141.

It should be here observed that the case at bar is stronger in favor of the doctrine herein promulgated than the Massachusetts case, inasmuch as in the latter the expert was regularly summoned, and accepted without protest the statutory fee, and was not in fact asked questions calling for his opinion as an expert. This case was an action of contract to recover extra compensation as an expert. In stating the case the court says: "The jury must have found upon the evidence that the defendant engaged the plaintiff to go into court at a future day, and testify for him as an expert, in regard to a matter which the plaintiff had examined as a civil engineer. . . . The plaintiff agreed to do this and talked over the matter, and went into court and testified, and during the progress of the trial advised the defendant's attorney in regard to questions to be asked to himself and to the other witnesses." It would be difficult to find a state of facts more similar than those disclosed in the case at bar to those in the case quoted. Judge Foster, who assisted in the trial of this case, and "examined all the witnesses of the plaintiffs and cross-examined all the witnesses for the defense, and opened and argued the case," says that he examined all the plaintiffs as expert witnesses, consulted with them relative to their testimony before it was put on, had to have them "in court for the reason that he did not know what the defense was to prove or attempt to prove, and therefore must have their attendance not only during the introduction of the plaintiffs' evidence, but also during the testimony of the defense, in order that they might rebut if it became necessary," and that the nature of the case was such as to render expert testimony very material.

The court in the Barrus Case states the application of the law to the existence of the facts there found as follows: "In the present case, we are of opinion that upon the facts in evidence there was sufficient consideration to support a promise to pay a reasonable compensation in addition to the statutory fees, and that the jury was warranted in finding a promise to that effect, or a mutual understanding that the plaintiff was to be so paid. If such promise was made, or such understanding existed, the plaintiff's right to recover would not be taken away or lost by his omission to claim or demand extra compensation, or to notify the defendant that he should make such claim, or by his acceptance of the statutory fee without objection, or by the omission of the defendant at the trial to put any question to him as an expert witness, and the consequent omission of the plaintiff to testify as an expert. All these were merely matters for the consideration of the jury in determining whether any such promise was made, or such understanding existed." We also quote the following paragraph from Dodge v. Stiles, 26 Conn. 463, which is precisely applicable to the facts in the case at bar: "If a witness agrees with a party that he will attend and testify without being summoned, and he is not summoned, and so not brought under the order or censure of the court, we suppose any reasonable promise for compensation is good and may be enforced; for the proceeding or service is not under nor in pursuance of the statute." The evidence in the case before us conclusively shows that the plaintiffs appeared at court at the request of the defendant, without subpoena, were not under the order of the court, were under no obligation to remain in court, and voluntarily remained for three days, one four, at the special instance of the defendant, as already appears from the testimony of Judge Foster.

It is the opinion of the court that the jury were fully warranted in finding an implied promise on the part of the defendant to pay the plaintiffs whatever their services were reasonably worth, and a sufficient consideration to support it. The plaintiffs rendered a bill of $50 per day. The jury allowed in their verdict $37.50 per day. In view of the reputation and skill of the plaintiffs, it would seem that the damages were entirely reasonable.

During the course of the trial, the defendant filed forty-three exceptions to the rulings of the presiding judge. In view of the conclusion of the court upon the motion, it becomes immaterial whether the rulings of the court as abstract principles of law were right or wrong. We shall therefore not undertake to discuss the exceptions. Upon the law and legal evidence, whatever the errors in the rulings of the court, the result of the trial was evidently right. It would seem like trifling with the ends of judicial procedure to say that an erroneous ruling, which did not affect the truth of the result, should be regarded as a sufficient reason for the overturning of a fair and honest judgment. If the court erred, the jury did not. They were right. If the exceptions were sustained and the case retired along the lines of law laid down in the discussion of the motion, the only possible difference in the result would necessarily be confined to the amount of damages a new jury might render. But, as the damages are clearly not excessive, the case should not be sent back for a new speculation upon this question.

In view of our conclusion upon the merits in this case, we have not examined the exceptions for the purpose of determining whether, as abstract principles of law, the rulings of the court were right or wrong. A careful examination of the law and the evidence fully satisfies the court that the case upon its merits has been rightly decided, and that the result should not be disturbed because of abstract errors of law, if they exist, which could not and do not interfere with the truth.

This view of the law with respect to the consideration of exceptions seems to have been established in one of the very first opinions ever announced by the court of Maine. In Farrar v. Merrill, 1 Me. 17, at the August term in 1820, the court laid 33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

down the rule of law in precise accord with that stated in the present opinion. The case was a writ of entry, putting in issue the title of a certain tract of land. It seems that a paper apparently bearing upon the question was offered and admitted under objection. The court say that this evidence, "being viewed alone, would seem to be inadmissible as proof. . . . But we consider the question as to the admissibility of the paper as wholly unimportant in the view we have taken of the cause, for we are all of opinion that the facts appearing on the undisputed records of the proprietors, taken in connection with some other facts which have been proved, fully justify the instructions and objections delivered by the judge to the jury, and the verdict which the jury have returned. It is our duty, in deciding on the exceptions, to look to the whole evidence, and not disturb the verdict when the facts proved, independent of the papers objected to, furnish the tenant with a substantial defense." It will also be observed that in Elliott v. Sawyer, 107 Me. —, 77 Atl. 782, this doctrine was reiterated. In this case the court did not undertake to determine whether the testimony was erroneously admitted or not, saying: "Exceptions to the erroneous admission of testimony will not be sustained, if the excepting party was not aggrieved by it." Between these two decisions, covering a period coincident with the judicial history of the state, may be found numerous analogous cases by referring to the digest under "New Trial" and "Misdirection." The doctrine, however, is so well established that it is not deemed necessary to cite the cases in detail.

Motion and exceptions overruled.

MINNESOTA SUPREME COURT.

DELIA KEEVER, Admr., etc., of Lewis Eugene Keever, Deceased, Appt.,

v.

CITY OF MANKATO, Respnt.

KATE FLANAGAN, Admr., etc., of F. R. Flanagan, Deceased, Appt.,

v.

SAME, Respnt.

(113 Minn. 55, 129 N. W. 158.)

Municipal corporation — polluted water supply — liability.

A complaint charged that defendant city negligently allowed the supply in its water-works system to become polluted with poisonous substances, and large quantities of filth and sewage to escape into and saturate its water supply, by reason whereof plaintiffs' intestates contracted typhoid fever and died as a consequence. On demurrer it is held:

Headnote by JAGGARD, J.

(1) The municipality was liable for its negligence in its private or corporate capacity, and was not exempt because it was carrying out a governmental function.

(2) Under § 4503, Rev. Laws 1905, an administrator of a person whose death was due to the wrongful act of a municipality may maintain an action against it for damages consequent thereon.

(December 23, 1910.)

APPEALS by plaintiffs from judgments of the District Court for Blue Earth County in actions brought to recover damages for wrongful deaths caused by negligence of the defendant city in furnishing impure water to plaintiffs' intestates. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Chris Carlson and Dunn & Carlson, for appellants:

The city, as to the waterworks system, stands on the same footing as any individual.

Bailey v. New York, 8 Hill. 531, 38 Am. Dec. 669; 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. 3d ed. §§ 66, 67; 5 Thomp. Neg. § 5829; 2 Smith, Modern Law of Mun. Corp. § 802; 3 Abbott, Mun. Corp. § 892; Tiedeman, Mun. Corp. § 327b; 1 Jaggard, Torts, p. 179; 28 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 1289; Wiltse v. Red Wing, 99 Minn. 255, 109 N. W. 114; Western Sav. Fund Soc. v. Philadelphia, 31 Pa. 185; Aldrich v. Tripp, 11 R. I. 141, 23 Am. Rep. 434; Esberg-Gunst Cigar Co. v. Portland, 34 Or. 282, 43 L.R.A. 435, 75 Am. St. Rep. 651, 55 Pac. 961; Wagner v. Rock Island, 146 Ill. 139, 21 L.R.A. 522, 34 N. E. 545; Illinois Trust & Sav. Bank v. Arkansas City, 34 L.R.A. 518, 22 C. C. A. 171, 40 U. S. App. 257, 76 Fed. 282; Winona v. Botzet, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) 204, 94 C. C. A. 563, 169 Fed. 321; Judson v. Winsted, 80 Conn. 384, 15 L.R.A. (N.S.) 91, 68 Atl. 999; Brown v. Salt Lake City, 33 Utah, 222, 14 L.R.A. (N.S.) 619, 126 Am. St. Rep. 828, 93 Pac. 570, 14 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 1004; Chicago v. Selz, S. & Co. 202 Ill. 545, 67 N. E. 386; Ottersbach v. Philadelphia, 161 Pa. 111, 28 Atl. 991; Todd v. Crete, 79 Neb. 671, 113 N. W. 172, 115 N. W. 307; Davoust v. Alameda, 149

Cal. 69, 5 L.R.A. (N.S.) 536, 84 Pac. 760; Hill v. Boston, 122 Mass. 344, 23 Am. Rep. 332; Oliver v. Worcester, 102 Mass. 497, 3 Am. Rep. 485; Merrimack River Sav. Bank v. Lowell, 152 Mass. 556, 10 L.R.A. 122, 26 N. E. 97; Lynch v. Springfield, 174 Mass. 430, 54 N. E. 871; Little v. Holyoke, 177 Mass. 114, 52 L.R.A. 417, 58 N. E. 170; Collins v. Greenfield, 172 Mass. 80, 51 N. E. 454.

Minnesota has applied the distinction between the public and governmental functions of a corporation, and those which are in their nature private and proprietary.

Snider v. St. Paul, 51 Minn. 470, 18 L.R.A. 151, 53 N. W. 763; Reed v. Anoka, 85 Minn. 294, 88 N. W. 981; Powell v. Duluth, 91 Minn. 53, 97 N. W. 450; Grand Forks v. Luck, 97 Minn. 373, 6 L.R.A. (N.S.) 198, 107 N. W. 393, 7 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 1015; Wiltse v. Red Wing, 99 Minn. 255, 109 N. W. 114; Gordon v. Doran, 100 Minn. 343, 8 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1049, 111 N. W. 272; State ex rel. Lathaw v. Water & Light Comrs. 105 Minn. 472, 127 Am. St. Rep. 581, 117 N. W. 827; Winona v. Botzet, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) 204, 94 C. C. A. 563, 169 Fed. 321.

Messrs. John W. Schmitt, Harrison L. Schmitt, Samuel B. Wilson, and Lorin Cray, for respondent:

Cities are not liable in damages for injuries resulting from the negligence of their officers or agents while engaged in the performance or carrying out of so-called government functions.

Schigley v. Waseca, 106 Minn. 94, 19 L.R.A. (N.S.) 689, 118 N. W. 259, 16 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 169; Davoust v. Alameda, 149 Cal. 69, 5 L.R.A. (N.S.) 536, 84 Pac. 760; Richmond v. Long, 17 Gratt. 375, 94 Am. Dec. 461; Claussen v. Luverne, 103 Minn. 491, 15 L.R.A. (N.S.) 698, 115 N. W. 643, 14 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 673; Gullikson v. McDonald, 62 Minn. 278, 64 N. W. 812; Lane v. Minnesota State Agri. Soc. 62 Minn. 175, 29 L.R.A. 708, 64 N. W. 382; Snider v. St. Paul, 51 Minn. 466, 18 L.R.A. 151, 53 N. W. 763; Hill v. Boston, 122 Mass. 344, 23 Am. Rep. 332.

The city, in its ownership and operation of its waterworks system, is exercising and performing governmental functions.

Smith, Modern Law of Mun. Corp. §§ 269-271, 273, 779, 780; 1 Abbott, Mun. Corp. § 146; 3 Abbott, Mun. Corp. § 2226; Elliott, Mun. Corp. §§ 146-306-321; Crawfordville v. Braden, 130 Ind. 149, 14 L.R.A. 268, 30 Am. St. Rep. 214, 28 N. E. 849; Smith v. Nashville, 88 Tenn. 464, 7 L.R.A. 469, 12 S. W. 924; Jacksonville Electric Light Co. v. Jacksonville, 36 Fla. 229, 30 L.R.A. 540, 51 Am. St. Rep. 24, 18 So. 677; Miller v. Minneapolis, 75 Minn. 131, 77 N.

Note.—Cases involving municipal liability for damages caused by pollution of its water supply will be found collected in the note on establishment and regulation of municipal water supply, in 61 L.R.A. 88, and the note on the liability of a municipality for tort in connection with its waterworks system, in 25 L.R.A. (N.S.) 245. 33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

W. 788; Claussen v. Luverne, 103 Minn. 491, 15 L.R.A.(N.S.) 698, 115 N. W. 643, 14 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 673; East Grand Forks v. Luck, 97 Minn. 373, 6 L.R.A.(N.S.) 198, 107 N. W. 393, 7 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 1015; Springfield F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Keeseville, 148 N. Y. 46, 30 L.R.A. 660, 51 Am. St. Rep. 667, 42 N. E. 405; Grube v. St. Paul, 34 Minn. 402, 26 N. W. 228.

It is exercising its police power for and in behalf of the health, safety, and general welfare of its inhabitants and the public generally.

2 Abbott, Mun. Corp. §§ 1142, 1143, note to § 888; Chicago v. Selz, S. & Co. 202 Ill. 545, 67 N. E. 386; Tollefson v. Ottawa, 228 Ill. 134, 11 L.R.A.(N.S.) 990, 81 N. E. 823; Evans v. Kankakee, 231 Ill. 223, 13 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1190, 83 N. E. 223; Prime v. Yonkers, 192 N. Y. 105, 84 N. E. 571; Bryant v. St. Paul, 33 Minn. 289, 53 Am. Rep. 31, 23 N. W. 220; Claussen v. Luverne, 103 Minn. 491, 15 L.R.A.(N.S.) 698, 115 N. W. 643, 14 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 673; 1 Farnham, Waters, § 146; Crawfordville v. Braden, 130 Ind. 149, 14 L.R.A. 268, 30 Am. St. Rep. 214, 28 N. E. 849; Smith v. Nashville, 88 Tenn. 464, 7 L.R.A. 469, 12 S. W. 924; Jacksonville Electric Light Co. v. Jacksonville, 36 Fla. 229, 30 L.R.A. 540, 51 Am. St. Rep. 24, 18 So. 677; Elliott, Mun. Corp. §§ 146, 306, 321; Miller v. Minneapolis, 75 Minn. 131, 77 N. W. 788; Springfield F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Keeseville, 148 N. Y. 46, 30 L.R.A. 660, 51 Am. St. Rep. 667, 42 N. E. 405; Brenham v. Brenham Water Co. 67 Tex. 542, 4 S. W. 143; Green v. Ashland Water Co. 101 Wis. 258, 43 L.R.A. 117, 70 Am. St. Rep. 911, 77 N. W. 722.

It would not be sound policy to open the door, and permit actions for injuries like these.

23 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 455; Mechem, Pub. Off. 348; Orme v. Kingsley, 73 Minn. 143, 72 Am. St. Rep. 614, 75 N. W. 1123; McNamara v. Gargett, 68 Mich. 454, 13 Am. St. Rep. 355, 36 N. W. 218; Eastman v. Meredith, 36 N. H. 284, 72 Am. Dec. 302; Conway v. Beaumont, 61 Tex. 10; Stewart v. New Orleans, 9 La. Ann. 461, 61 Am. Dec. 218; Dargan v. Mobile, 31 Ala. 469, 70 Am. Dec. 505; Richmond v. Long, 17 Gratt. 375, 94 Am. Dec. 461.

On petition for reargument.

Section 4403, Revised Laws, does not authorize actions of this kind to be maintained against a municipal corporation.

Maylone v. St. Paul, 40 Minn. 406, 42 N. W. 88; Orth v. Belgrade, 87 Minn. 237, 91 N. W. 843; State ex rel. Erickson v. West, 42 Minn. 147, 43 N. W. 845. 33 L.R.A.(N.S.)

Jaggard, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action for death by wrongful act, occasioned by the negligence of the defendant city. The complaint alleged that defendant, a municipal corporation, negligently allowed waters and the water supply in its waterworks system to become infected and polluted with poisonous substances "and large quantities of filth and sewage, all of which were saturated with the germs of diseases, . . . and did carelessly and negligently . . . permit . . . filthy, foul, and dangerous substances, common sewage, and other filth to escape into and saturate the water supply;" that by reason thereof the water became imminently dangerous to life and health, of which defendant had full notice and knowledge; that plaintiffs intestate, a citizen and resident, used the water, contracted typhoid fever, and died in consequence. The complaint set forth additional facts, as [to] the right of the administrator to recover. Defendant's demurrer to plaintiff's complaint was sustained. From that order the plaintiff appeals. It is to be noted that the complaint in the case at bar set forth not a mere action against the defendant to recover damages because the city failed to provide an adequate supply of pure water. The question here is whether the city is liable for, among other things, recklessly causing dangerous substances, like common sewage and other filth, to saturate its water supply and the wells, mains, and appurtenances thereto.

1. The first essential question is whether the city is exempt because it was carrying out a governmental function, or whether it is liable because it operated the waterworks in its private or corporate function. The defendant naturally insists that it was performing merely a governmental function. There is ambiguity in that term as used in this connection. It may mean that the operation of waterworks by a municipality is infra vires as distinguished from ultra vires, or it may mean that such function is public as distinguished from private or proprietary, in which capacity the city may voluntarily assume, for business purposes and for its own advantage, to conduct certain operations, and is held responsible for negligence therein, although the work is done ultimately for the benefit of its citizens. Many of the authorities to which defendant refers us properly hold that a city may properly operate waterworks. They have no tendency whatever to determine whether or not the city is or is not exempt in its operation of waterworks.

Defendant also insists that the city can make no profit out of its operation of these waterworks. Doubtless this is in a general way true. At all events it may be here admitted. But the sequence which defendant seeks to draw does not at all follow, i. e., that therefore it should be exempted from all liability for mismanagement. For the city is liable for neglect in connection with its streets, sidewalks, and sewers, from which, in their very nature, no profit is or can be made. The city operates the waterworks for profit, in the sense that it is voluntarily engaged in the same business which, when conducted by private persons, is operated for profit. The city itself makes a reasonable and varying charge. The undertaking is partly commercial. It is enough that the city is in a profit-making business. The city "is exercising a special privilege for its own benefit and advantage, notwithstanding a portion of the water is used by the city for protection against fire and in promoting the public health." Hamersley, J., in Hourigan v. Norwich, 77 Conn. 358, 59 Atl. 487. The English authorities regard cities in such matters as "substitutions on a large scale for individual enterprises." Mr. Justice Blackburn, in Mersey Docks & Harbour Board Trustees v. Gibbs, L. R. 1 H. L. at page 107, approving Mr. Justice Mellor in Coe v. Wise, 5 Best & S. 440.

Finally, defendant insists that it would not be sound policy to open the door and permit actions like the present to be maintained, for the reason that as a result the defendant city, as well as any other city, would be liable at any time to have the same misfortune, and would be bankrupted thereby. The assessed valuation of the city is less than $4,000,000. If the city is not exempted from liability, it is subject to claims of the same nature as the present, amounting to over $10,000,000. Thus, the very existence of the city is threatened, and the city subjected to total destruction, which could be of no proportionate advantage to the individuals who suffered. It readily suggests itself as an answer to this dark prognostication that the number and nature of these cases does not appear in the record, and is not known to the court; besides, for the purposes of this case, the neglect of defendant is necessarily assumed. To the defendant, under the law, a number of defenses are available. How conclusive they may be in fact is wholly beyond any conjecture which we can recognize. Accordingly, we must regard defendant's figures as purely hypothetical. The question is one of general principles recognized by the law, and not of the private views of court or counsel as to what the convenience or necessity of a particular city may dictate under particular circumstances. The general experience of public and private waterworks is that ordinarily their operation involves no such financial disaster as defendant portrays.

It is obvious that a sound public policy holds a city to a high degree of faithfulness in providing an adequate supply of pure water. Nor does it appear why the citizens should be deprived of the stimulating effects of the fear of liability on the energy and care of its officials; nor why a city should be exempt from liability while a private corporation under the same circumstances should be held responsible for its conduct, and made to contribute to the innocent persons it may have damaged. As Elliot, J., said in East Grand Forks v. Luck, 97 Minn. 373, 6 L.R.A.(N.S.) 193, 107 N. W. 393, 7 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 1015: "When the municipality enters the field of ordinary private business, it does not exercise governmental powers. Its purpose is, not to govern the inhabitants, but to make for them and itself private benefit. As far as the nature of the powers exercised is concerned, it is immaterial whether the city owns the plant and sells the water, or contracts with a private corporation to supply the water. It is not in either case exercising a municipal function. . . . When a municipality engages in a private enterprise for profit, it should have the same rights and be subject to the same liabilities as private corporations or individuals." See Powell v. Duluth, 91 Minn. 53, 97 N. W. 450; Gordon v. Doran, 100 Minn. 343, 8 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1049, 111 N. W. 272; State ex rel. Latshaw v. Water & Light Comrs. 105 Minn. 472, 127 Am. St. Rep. 581, 117 N. W. 827. Thus, in Wiltse v. Red Wing, 99 Minn. 255, 109 N. W. 114, a city operating the waterworks was held liable for water escaping from an embankment, under the rule in Rylands v. Fletcher, L. R. 3 H. L. 330, 6 Mor. Min. Rep. 129, 1 Eng. Rul. Cas. 235, "for," said Start, Ch. J., "although a municipal corporation, it was engaged in the business of supplying water to its inhabitants for profit, an undertaking of a private nature."

This is undoubtedly the general rule. See Piper v. Madison, 140 Wis. 311, 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 239, 133 Am. St. Rep. 1078, 122 N. W. 730; People ex rel. Park Comrs. v. Detroit, 28 Mich. 229, 15 Am. Rep. 202; Bailey v. New York, 3 Hill, 531, 38 Am. Dec. 669. As to the reasoning of this case, however, see Darlington v. New York, 31 N. Y. 164-193, 88 Am. Dec. 248. Cf. Misano v. New York, 160 N. Y. 123, 54 N. E. 744; Aldrich v. Tripp, 11 R. I. 141, 23 Am. Rep. 434; Illinois Trust & Sav. Bank v. Arkansas City, 34 L.R.A. 518, 22 C. C. A. 171, 40 U. S. App. 257, 76 Fed. 271, 282; Winona v. Botzet, 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 204, 94 C. C. A. 563, 169 Fed. 321; Judson v. Win- sted, 80 Conn. 384, 15 L.R.A.(N.S.) 91, 68 Atl. 999; Wagner v. Rock Island, 146 Ill. 139, 21 L.R.A. 522, 34 N. E. 545; Esberg-Gunst Cigar Co. v. Portland, 34 Or. 282, 43 L.R.A. 435, 75 Am. St. Rep. 651, 55 Pac. 961; Brown v. Salt Lake City, 33 Utah, 222, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 619, 126 Am. St. Rep. 828, 93 Pac. 570, 14 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 1004; Hourigan v. Norwich, 77 Conn. 358, 59 Atl. 487; Lynch v. Springfield, 174 Mass. 430, 54 N. E. 871; Chicago v. Selz, S. & Co. 202 Ill. 545, 67 N. E. 386; Philadelphia v. Gilmartin, 71 Pa. 141; Springfield F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Keeseville, 148 N. Y. 46, 30 L.R.A. 660, 51 Am. St. Rep. 667, 42 N. E. 405; Asher v. Hutchinson Water, Light & P. Co. 66 Kan. 496, 61 L.R.A. 58, 71 Pac. 813.

The cases in which a city has been held responsible or irresponsible for damages by fire consequent upon an inadequate supply of water are in a class of cases by themselves. The rule holding the city liable for its negligence in this case may not be consistent with the rule there announced. The law does not undertake to achieve the impossible. As was said in Gould v. Winona Gas Co. 100 Minn. 258, at page 264, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 889, 111 N. W. 254: "It is evident that the ultimate justification of the inapplicability of the rule [there in question] lies in the controlling regard of the common law, not for doctrine, but for common sense. Its paramount object is to work out substantial, and not metaphysical, justice. Its just claim to distinction is to be found, not in the logical consistency of its applied theories, but in the practical wisdom with which it has adapted its rules to varying subject-matter and conditions."

Defendant also urges that in no case has the city been held liable for negligence in the operation of its waterworks, unless the act involved a trespass, or an invasion of a direct property right. Thus, water escaping from a city reservoir runs onto another's property and does damage; this is trespass, and there is liability. Wiltse v. Red Wing, 99 Minn. 255, 109 N. W. 114. But if the escaping water should do damage to a person and a public highway, there would be no trespass, but the law would recognize liability. Liability of the city is recognized in the case of streets and sidewalks, which cannot properly involve trespass. Nor has defendant shown any reason for imposing liability in the case of trespass or the breach of insurance of safety, which does not logically apply to cases of negligence. On general principles, liability for negligence is more just and more generally recognized, because it is based upon culpability.

33 L.R.A.(N.S.)

2. The question then arises whether, upon the assumption that plaintiff's intestate could have maintained an action against the defendant city, had he lived, can his executor maintain an action under our statutes. Section 4503, Rev. Laws 1905, provides: "When death is caused by the wrongful act or omission of any person or corporation, the personal representative of the decedent may maintain an action therefor, if he might have maintained an action, had he lived, for an injury caused by the same act or omission." Defendant has pressed upon us very earnestly that "corporation," as here used, refers only to private corporations (see § 2839, Rev. Laws 1905), and does not include municipal corporations. The matter is not de novo in this state. In Maylone v. St. Paul, 40 Minn. 406, 42 N. W. 88, and in Orth v. Belgrade, 87 Minn. 237, 91 N. W. 843, the administrators of deceased persons were allowed to pursue the statutory action against the city for negligence causing death. Such has been the settled construction in practice for many years. We do not feel at liberty to change that construction.

Reversed.

A petition for rehearing having been filed, Jaggard, J., on February 3, 1911, handed down the following response:

In its motion for reargument defendant contends, in the first place, that the question of the construction of § 4503, Rev. Laws 1905, securing the cause of action in case of death by wrongful act,—that is, the question whether the defendant, a municipal corporation, was a corporation within the meaning of that statute,—is de novo in this state, notwithstanding the fact that in Maylone v. St. Paul, 40 Minn. 406, 42 N. W. 88, and in Orth v. Belgrade, 87 Minn. 237, 91 N. W. 843, this court determined that recovery on such a cause of action could be had in this state against a municipality under that statute, and sustained such recovery. It is only by ignoring these two decisions that defendant's argument is tenable. There is neither reason nor authority for so doing. It is entirely obvious that the self contradictory proposition which defendant emphasizes gains no force by its own iteration. No reason accordingly is thereby suggested for changing the original opinion on this point.

Defendant urges, in the second place, that the court erred in assuming that the question of the nonliability of the city on the ground of public policy was not before the court. In point of fact, the court neither so assumed nor so determined. What it said on this point was this: "The question is one of general principles recognized by the law, and not of the private views of court or counsel as to what the convenience or necessity of a particular city may dictate under particular circumstances." The court did determine that the conjectural hardship of the operation of the rule of liability of a municipal corporation in this particular case was not an exclusive nor controlling consideration. The decision rested in effect upon this supreme consideration, namely, that public policy requires the conservation of human life, the preservation of public health, and the establishment of public sanitation on a firm and certain basis in the law. No reason whatever for changing our opinion as to the soundness of this view of public policy has been suggested.

Defendant urges, in the third place: "The court overlooked what it has repeatedly held, that the cases holding cities in this state responsible for injuries caused by defective streets, in the absence of a statute making cities responsible for such injuries, are 'illogical exceptions' to the general rule, and should therefore not be considered as authority in favor of liability in the case at bar." In point of fact this is not in accordance with the actual record. The court did not overlook this familiar and elementary point. On the contrary, it expressly adverted to the lack of philosophical and metaphysical consistency in the authorities on the question of the immunity or liability of municipal corporations in tort. The court in its opinion did not, however, undertake the equally venturesome and improper feat of ignoring the thousands of decisions on the point whose authority is unquestioned and unquestionable. Defendant contends in this connection, without apparent consciousness of the humor of the situation, that the original conclusion of the liability of the city for its tort was erroneous, because it was held in Nerlien v. Brooten, 94 Minn. 361, 102 N. W. 867, that a city could be restrained from using a public building as a place for selling flour. It is perfectly obvious that that decision furnishes no reason, apparent or otherwise, direct or indirect, for holding the city either immune or responsible in this case.

Finally, defendant demonstrates the unsoundness of its position by this argument, namely: "That this conclusion in chief invades the province of the legislature. The legislature alone can give a city the right to furnish itself and its citizens water from a municipal waterworks, and it is for the legislature, and not for the court, to say under what conditions as to liability such cities may do so. The general rule is that cities are immune from liability resulting from torts." When this controversy was presented to this court, it was the duty of the court to determine it by reference to both precedents and principle. The result was not judicial legislation, but a judicial declaration of what the law was. That declaration made no change in the law; au contraire, it would have been judicial legislation if the court had changed the law, and decided this case in accordance with defendant's contention. The many authorities referred to in the opinion in chief, and many others, declare the law to be as this court found it to be. See, for example, 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. 3d ed. §§ 66, 67; 3 Thomp. Neg. § 5829; 2 Smith, Modern Law of Mun. Corp. § 802; 3 Abbott, Mun. Corp. § 892; Tiedeman, Mun. Corp. § 327b; 1 Jaggard, Torts, p. 179; 28 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 1289. Compare Ottersbach v. Philadelphia, 161 Pa. 111, 28 Atl. 991; Todd v. Crete, 79 Neb. 671, 113 N. W. 172, 115 N. W. 307; Davoust v. Alameda, 149 Cal. 69, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 536, 84 Pac. 760, 9 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 847.

The fallacy of inferring that this defendant was not liable from a general rule of immunity is obvious. That general rule is merely this: That sometimes cities are immune, and sometimes they are not. Defendant does not insist that the rule of immunity is universal or invariable; on the contrary, defendant distinctly recognizes exceptions to that rule. Whether this case fell within the rule or the exception was the very point we were called upon to decide. Defendant's argument would have had much more weight if it had referred the court to a single case in which under like circumstances the rule of immunity had been applied. This defendant has failed to do, as we believe for the perfectly good and natural reason that there is no such authority. Certainly Hughes v. Auburn, 161 N. Y. 96, 46 L.R.A. 637, 55 N. E. 389, to which defendant now calls our attention, is not an authority; to the contrary. This case did not involve liability in the conduct of waterworks at all. The cases concerning the inadequacy of water supply for fire departments, it is perfectly obvious, involve essentially different circumstances from those presented by the case at bar.

The motion for reargument must therefore be denied.

PENNSYLVANIA SUPREME COURT.

AUGUST THALER et al.

v.

WILHELM GREISSER CONSTRUCTION COMPANY et al., Appts.

(229 Pa. 512, 79 Atl. 147.)

Building contract — architects' certificate — absence — recovery — bad faith.

1. Where a building contractor, acting as owner, sublets a portion of the work, with the provision that the work is to be done to the satisfaction of its architects, upon whose certificate payments are to be made, recovery may be had in the absence of certificate upon proof that the certificate was not withheld in good faith.

Same — acceptance of work — evidence of compliance.

2. An architect's certificate for work may be found not to have been withheld in good faith, where the work was accepted and used for several years without objection, until an attempt was made to enforce a mechanics' lien upon the property to secure compensation for it.

Judgment — new trial — similar evidence — effect.

3. The effect of a judgment cannot be avoided on the second trial on the theory of a difference in evidence if it is clear that the court, in rendering the first judgment, acted upon the facts substantially as they appear in the newly offered evidence.

(January 3, 1911.)

APPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas for Butler County in plaintiffs' favor in an action to enforce a mechanics' lien. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. A. M. Neeper, C. L. McQuistion, and J. R. D. Huston for appellants.

Messrs. John M. Greer, Frank E.
Lord, John B. Greer, Thomas H. Greer, and John M. Greer & Sons for appellees.

Moschzisker, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This was a mechanics' lien proceeding in which Thaler Brothers, subcontractors, were plaintiffs, and the Butler Brewing Company, owner, and the Wilhelm Greisser Construction Company, contractor, were defendants. The verdict was for the plaintiffs for the full amount of their claim, with interest, and the defendants have appealed.

The claim was founded upon a written contract dated September 25, 1902. Throughout this contract the plaintiffs are designated as "the contractor," and the construction company as "the owner;" and it is therein provided: "The contractor, under the direction and to the satisfaction of Wilhelm Greisser Construction Company, architects, acting for the purpose of this contract as agents of the said owner, shall and will provide all the materials and perform all the work mentioned in the specifications and shown on the drawings prepared by the said architects for the eleven (11) pressure tubs for the Butler Brewery, Butler, Pennsylvania, delv. and set up, as per specifications, at above Brewery, which drawings and specifications are identified by the signatures of the parties hereto." It is also provided: "The architects shall furnish to the contractor such further drawings and explanations as may be necessary to detail and illustrate the work to be done;" and "it is hereby mutually agreed . . . that the sum to be paid by the owner to the contractor for said work and material shall be $2,750. . . . All payments shall be made upon written certificates of the architects to the effect that such payments have become due." Further: "It is . . . agreed . . . that no certificates given or payments made under this contract, except the final certificate or final payment, shall be conclusive evidence of the performance of this contract, either wholly or in part; and that no payment shall be construed to be an acceptance of defective work or improper material."

The plaintiffs claimed that their work had been properly performed and that a balance of $1,370 was due and unpaid. In addition to a defense that the tubs were deficient in several particulars, which defense was correctly and fairly submitted to the jury, the defendants contended on other grounds that the plaintiffs should not be allowed to recover.

The plaintiffs failed to produce a certificate from the architects that the balance claimed was due them. Their testimony was that while they had received payments on account during the progress of the work, they had never received a certificate from the architects; that upon the completion of the work they made a demand for such a certificate; that the certificate was not given, but at that time the construction company sent them a check for $500 on account, which check was returned marked "no funds;" and that no fault had been found

Note. — As to the effect of the decision of an architect, engineer, or umpire in case of fraud or mistake, see note to Edwards v. Hartshorn, 1 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1050.

As to whether full or substantial performance of a construction contract will excuse, as a matter of law, the failure to secure the architect's or engineer's certificate required by the contract, see note to Bush v. Jones, 6 L.R.A. (N.S.) 774. 33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

with their work or material until after the filing of the mechanics' lien. No specific reason appears to have been assigned for the failure or refusal to give the certificate. The plaintiffs showed that after the completion of the work, the head brew master of the brewery expressed satisfaction with the tubs in the presence of Mr. Greisser, a representative of the construction company, and of Mr. Smith, the president of the brewing company, and that Mr. Greisser made no complaint at that time; that in point of fact Mr. Greisser had never made any complaint, although Mr. Smith, in 1904, after the filing of the lien, said for the first time that "the tubs was not good." One of the plaintiffs testified that in 1903, prior to the filing of the lien, in an effort to secure the money due them, he had met Mr. Greisser, and had been referred by him to Mr. Smith, who said he would not "pay out money until Mr. Greisser gets through completely," but found no fault with the work, and offered the witness "two $1,000 second-mortgage bonds for the brewery for our amount that was due the Greisser Construction Company;" that at a later date subsequent to the filing of the lien, when the brewery was running and the tubs were in use, the witness again saw Mr. Smith, who told him "that he had $2,700, holding back from the Greisser Construction Company, and said that I would have to get the money from them, and that they would pay Mr. Greisser just as soon as he got through with the buildings and the contractors." Smith then for the first time said that "some of the tubs down there had worm holes in them." The tubs are still in use at the brewery, and one of the witnesses for the defense stated that they had not had any material trouble with them for the last three years. The trial judge instructed the jury that, if the declaration of dissatisfaction by the construction company was made in good faith, it was a sufficient defense, and the plaintiffs could not recover; on the other hand, if it was not made in good faith, but was merely an arbitrary expression of dissatisfaction for the purpose of avoiding payment of the balance due on the contract, then it would not be a good defense.

In considering these instructions, it is to be borne in mind that the lien was not filed under a contract between the brewing company, the real owner, and the construction company, the main contractor, but under a contract between the latter company and the plaintiffs, in which the brewing company is nowhere referred to as the owner. On the contrary, the construction company is expressly designated as owner, and it is provided that the work shall be done "under the direction and to the satisfaction of Wilhelm Greisser Construction Company, architects, acting for the purpose of this contract as agents of said owner." In other words, for the purposes of the contract, the construction company was the owner, the agent of the owner, and the architect.

In Pennsylvania two classes of cases involving contracts requiring satisfactory performance have given rise to two lines of decisions, the first of which is most aptly illustrated by Singerly v. Thayer, 108 Pa. 291, 56 Am. Rep. 207, 2 Atl. 230, and the other by Payne v. Roberts, 214 Pa. 568, 64 Atl. 86. The former of these cases lays down the rule to be applied where the work or material is to be satisfactory to the party acquiring it, and the latter where it must be satisfactory to a third party designated as arbitrator. Under the first rule, the question for determination is not as to whether or not the one complaining ought to be satisfied, but solely as to the good faith of the dissatisfaction alleged. "To justify a refusal to accept . . . on the ground that it is not satisfactory, the objection should be made in good faith. It must not be merely capricious." Singerly v. Thayer, 108 Pa. 291, 56 Am. Rep. 207, 2 Atl. 230, followed in Krum v. Mersher, 116 Pa. 17, 9 Atl. 334, 15 Mor. Min. Rep. 415; Seeley v. Welles, 120 Pa. 69, 13 Atl. 736; Sidney School Furniture Co. v. Warsaw School Dist. 130 Pa. 76, 18 Atl. 604; Howard v. Smedley, 140 Pa. 81, 21 Atl. 253; Adams Radiator & Boiler Works v. Schnader, 155 Pa. 394, 35 Am. St. Rep. 893, 26 Atl. 745. Under the second rule, it is not a question of the good faith of the dissatisfaction alleged; there, in order to maintain the action, the claimant must show that the expression of dissatisfaction was the result of fraudulent collusion between the arbitrator and the owner. Payne v. Roberts, 214 Pa. 568, 64 Atl. 86. Also, see Pittsburg Terra-Cotta Lumber Co. v. Sharp, 190 Pa. 256, 42 Atl. 685; Brown v. Decker, 142 Pa. 640, 21 Atl. 903; Hostetter v. Pittsburgh, 107 Pa. 419; Reynolds v. Caldwell, 51 Pa. 298; McNally v. Montour R. Co. 33 Pa. Super Ct. 51.

In the present case, while the mere fact that the construction company had a direct interest in the matter in controversy would not debar it from acting as a designated arbitrator (Monongahela Nav. Co. v. Fenlon, 4 Watts & S. 205), the fact that it was the owner for the purposes of the contract, and the architect who was to act as the arbitrator and issue the certificates, coupled with the circumstance that it was the party with whom the plaintiffs were actually contracting, makes this an instance where the first rule is applicable rather than the second.

Owing to the different relations in which the construction company stood toward the plaintiffs, the character of its alleged dissatisfaction and the failure to give the certificate were bound together as one question, the determination of which turned upon the finding of the jury as to the company's good faith in withholding its approval of the tubs; and that issue was fairly and properly submitted to the jury.

It only remains to determine whether there was sufficient evidence to sustain the jury's finding in favor of the plaintiffs. While much of the evidence to which we have heretofore referred was denied by the defendants, yet the credibility of the witnesses was for the jury, who had a right to draw their own inferences. We cannot say that there was not sufficient evidence to justify the conclusions that the dissatisfaction alleged was feigned for the purpose of avoiding payment under the contract, and that the certificate was arbitrarily withheld. The physical production of the final certificate was not an absolute prerequisite to the right of recovery. Hunn v. Pennsylvania Institution, 221 Pa. 403, 18 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1248, 70 Atl. 812. Although there was testimony introduced on both sides concerning the alleged defects in the tubs, the defendants made no claim for reduction of damages, as in Stutz v. Loyalhanna Coal & Coke Co. 131 Pa. 267, 18 Atl. 875, and Loeper v. Haas, 24 Pa. Super. Ct. 184. The defense was placed upon the issues already disposed of and upon one other ground, which we shall now consider.

The defendants contended that the notice of the lien and the lien itself were invalid owing to the absence of certain specifications. This question was raised on a former trial and adjudged in favor of the defendants; but on appeal to the superior court, the judgment was reversed. Thaler v. Greisser Constr. Co. 40 Pa. Super. Ct. 331. The defendants insist that the decision of the superior court was not based on the facts as they now appear in the case. They contend that the specifications that should have been attached to the notice and to the lien were not those specially referred to in the contract, but were certain other specifications contained in a letter written by the construction company to the plaintiffs.

It is true that on cross-examination one of the plaintiffs was made to refer to the contents of this letter as the specifications. Upon this testimony the defendants rest practically their whole contention that the judgment of the superior court on the point in question should not have been taken as a controlling guide by the trial judge. However, when we look at the opinion, it is clear that the superior court had the facts substantially as they appear before us, and that they fully understood the existence of this letter and the use to which it had been put. Furthermore, in the affidavit of defense which was offered in evidence, the only complaint concerning the absence of specifications alludes specifically to those referred to in the contract, a copy of which specifications the defendants annexed to the affidavit; the defendants offered this contract in evidence, calling special attention to the provision that the materials were to be furnished and the work done as per the specifications mentioned therein; and we find upon the record a motion to strike off the lien because of the absence of these particular specifications. It appears as if the claim that the contents of this letter comprised the specifications must have come to the defendants as an afterthought. However this may be, we feel that the trial judge committed no error in treating the matter as finally disposed of on the former appeal.

On a careful consideration of the entire record we find no reversible error. The assignments are all overruled, and the judgment is affirmed.

UTAH SUPREME COURT.

RE ESTATE OF GEORGE SHEARN, Deceased.

GEORGE SAXTON, Exr., etc., of George Shearn, Deceased, Appt.,

v.

FRANK B. DINDORFF, Resp't.

(— Utah, —, 114 Pac. 131.)

Tenant — amount of rent — boarding landlord.

A tenant of property for a term of years who is to pay a monthly rental and furnish the lessor with the reasonable comforts of life, including room and board, cannot be required upon death of the lessor to pay more than the specified amount during the remainder of the term, although the rental value of the property amounts to such sum plus the value of the room and board.

(February 9, 1911.)

Note. — Liability of lessee for rent during part of term remaining after death of person whom he agreed to support.

There are but few cases in which the question at issue in RE SHEARN has arisen. In Re Williams, 1 Misc. 35, 22 N. Y. Supp. 906, it appeared that a lease for twelve years provided as rent the boarding, clothing, taking care of, and supporting the

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the District Court for Salt Lake County in defendant's favor in an action brought to recover a portion of rent alleged to be owing by defendant as tenant of deceased under the terms of a certain lease. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. C. S. Patterson, for appellant:

Where the performance of a contract becomes impossible subsequent to its making, the promisor is not therefore discharged.

Paradine v. Jane, Aley, 26; 9 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 627; Cassady v. Clarke, 7 Ark. 123; Worthington v. Charter Oak L. Ins. Co. 41 Conn. 401, 19 Am. Rep. 495; Schwartz v. Saunders, 46 Ill. 18; Union v. Smith, 39 Iowa, 9, 18 Am. Rep. 39; Wells v. Calnan, 107 Mass. 514, 9 Am. Rep. 65; Stees v. Leonard, 20 Minn. 494, Gil. 448; Sherman v. Bates, 15 Neb. 18, 16 N. W. 831; Public Schools v. Bennett, 27 N. J. L. 513; Booth v. Spuyten Duyvil Rolling Mill Co. 60 N. Y. 487; Dermott v. Jones (Ingle v. Jones) 2 Wall. 1, 17 L. ed. 762.

Mr. H. A. Smith for respondent.

lessor "during said term of twelve years." The lessor died during the term, and it was held that the maintenance of the lessor during his life was a full performance on the part of the lessee.

In Oliver v. Moore, 53 Hun, 472, 6 N. Y. Supp. 413, reviewed in RE SHEARN, the court said, in holding that the lessor's recovery should be lessened by what the actual expense to her of boarding the lessee would have been: "The plaintiff insists that the contract entitles her to recover the whole amount specified therein, less what she has already received, inasmuch as she was at all times prepared and willing to furnish board to two persons up to the end of the term. But the persons thus to be boarded were particularly designated in the agreement, and Harriet Gross, one of them, was expressly named therein. It could not have been within the contemplation of the parties that the undertaking to furnish board would become applicable to some other person in the event of her death. . . . As the agreement was to board Miss Gross personally, I think her death operated to lessen the amount recoverable by the plaintiff under the lease, to the extent of the actual cost of boarding the tenant during the balance of the term." The court having already expressly ruled that the agreement was a lease, it is not clear how the rent could be reduced by striking out so much of it as would have been expended by the landlord in providing for board of the tenant had she lived.

In Nine's Estate, 2 Woodw. Dec. 403, under a lease for a year, by which the lessee covenanted inter alia to board the lessor and her sister during the term for $150, the lessor having died before the commence-

Frick, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This was an action by appellant, as executor of the last will of one George Shearn, deceased, to recover a portion of the rent alleged to be owing by respondent as a tenant of said decedent under the terms of a certain lease, the material parts of which are that on the 17th day of August, 1908, said decedent, as lessor, leased to respondent, as lessee, a certain house, known as the "Shearn house, . . . from the 1st day of September, A. D. 1908, for and during and until the 1st day of September, A. D. 1913, a term of five years." He also agreed to pay "as rental for said premises the sum of fifteen hundred (1500) dollars, payable in sums of twenty-five (25) dollars per month, monthly, in advance." The lessee, at the end of the term, agreed to deliver up possession of said premises in good condition, and further covenanted that "if said rent above reserved or any part thereof shall be unpaid for fifteen days after the same become due, or if default be made in any of the covenants here-ment of the term and the sister having been boarded during the term, an allowance to the lessee of $75 against the estate of the lessor was upheld, there being apparently no claim on account of the board agreed to be furnished the lessor.

In Shouse v. Krusor, 24 Mo. App. 279, the liability of the lessee for use and occupation during the nine months he remained in possession of property after the death of his mother, under a letting from year to year, in consideration of his agreement to support her, was not decided, the case being disposed of upon the ground that, if there was any liability, it belonged to the heir, and not to the administrator.

In Willington v. West Boylston, 4 Peck. 101, it was held that the death of a pauper a few days after the commencement of the year prevented recovery upon an express contract to support him for a year at $1 per week, but that there might be a recovery on an implied promise for the part performance. Whether or not the recovery should be limited to a pro rata compensation was not decided.

In Varney v. Bradford, 86 Me. 510, 30 Atl. 115, it was held that the death of the mother shortly after the commencement of the term did not deprive the lessee of the right to subsequent instalments of the $100 under a lease for a year by which the lessee covenanted, "in consideration of this lease and the sum of $100 payable in amounts of 8½ dollars monthly," to board the lessor's mother, and improve the property and keep it in good condition, there being a stipulation that the lease should not terminate in case of her death, but no provision as to the $100 in that event.

B. B. B.

in contained," the lessor may re-enter and repossess himself of said premises. It is also provided that the lessee will "pay all water rates, plumbing bills, gas and electric light charges," and "that the rent and charges above reserved shall be a first lien on the furniture, fixtures, and personal property of said lessee." Then follows the following provisions which constitute the bone of contention in this case, namely: "It is further agreed and understood that said lessee, his heirs and assigns, shall keep said lessor during the life of this lease, with the reasonable comforts of life, including board and room." The court also found that said George Shearn died on the 21st day of April, 1909, and that up to the time of his death respondent had "furnished him with the comforts of life, including board and room, in accordance with the terms of said agreement," and that, since the death of said decedent, respondent had paid to appellant as executor the sum of $25 per month as rent, as the same accrued. The court, upon the request of appellant, also found that the rental value of said premises when the lease was entered into was $45 per month, and that the value of board and room for one person was $20 per month. At the request of respondent, the court found that for six months preceding the death of the lessor he was in a helpless condition physically, and that the lessee and his wife during that time were required to and did bestow upon the decedent "almost constant attention, both day and night." Upon the foregoing findings, the court made his conclusions of law that the appellant was not entitled to receive any sum in excess of the said $ 25 per month as rent for said premises, and entered judgment accordingly. From the conclusions and judgment aforesaid, this appeal is prosecuted.

Appellant contends that the court erred in not entering a judgment to the effect that respondent, after the death of the lessor, should have been required to pay the $25 plus the value of the board and room, amounting to $20 per month, as the monthly rent for said premises. In other words, that respondent should be required to pay the sum of $45 per month as rent. Upon the other hand, respondent contends that he has complied with all the conditions and covenants of the lease, and hence should not be required to do more. The rights of the lessor, as well as the obligations of the lessee, must be found in and determined from the contract they entered into. What are those terms? It will be observed that the rent respondent agreed to pay, and the time and manner of payment, are in express terms provided for in the lease itself. The rent the lessee agreed to pay is fixed at a sum of money in gross for the entire term, namely, the sum of $1,500. This sum is made payable in instalments of $25 each, payable monthly, in advance. That the amount stated in the lease was considered to be all that the lessee should be required to pay as rent for the premises is, we think, made clear by other provisions in the lease. For instance, the lessor reserved the right to enforce a forfeiture and of re-entering the premises only upon the condition that "the rent above reserved or any part thereof shall be unpaid." The "rent above reserved" clearly referred to the $1,500, and nothing else. Language could not well have made it plainer. Again, when a lien is provided for in the lease, such lien is given only for the rent and charges "above reserved." What are those charges which are included with the rent? Here, again, there can be no doubt with respect to what the parties intended, because the charges referred to are expressly enumerated to be the "water rates, plumbing bills, gas and electric light charges." These charges and the $1,500 thus constituted the "rent and charges above reserved," for which the lien on the furniture, fixtures, and personal property of the lessee was given. To our minds it is clear, therefore, that the "reasonable comforts of life, including board and room," were by neither party considered as falling within either the term rent or charges. If the parties had considered the comforts and board and room provided for as constituting either rent or charges, they would not in express terms have limited the lien and forfeiture as we have indicated. Moreover, from the language employed in the lease, it would seem that the "reasonable comforts of life" were the principal thing the parties had in mind, since in their view the board and room were to be included in what they termed the reasonable comforts of life. It seems to us, therefore, that both the lessor and the lessee must have regarded the things that the lessee obligated himself to do for the lessor in the nature of a personal trust which it was intended the lessee should discharge personally. It is true that in the lease it is said that the "lessee, his heirs or assigns," should discharge the duties imposed, but this provision, when taken in connection with the covenant that the lessee shall not "let or underlet" the premises without the written consent of the lessor, is not controlling. Indeed, the provision that the heirs or assigns might discharge the obligation could not become effective without the lessor's consent. This, in view of the covenant not to let or under-let, is too plain to require argument. But covenants for support are almost universally regarded as personal and unassignable without the express consent of the beneficiary. Bethlehem v. Annis, 40 N. H. 42, 77 Am. Dec. 700; Flanders v. Lamphear, 9 N. H. 201; Eastman v. Batchelder, 36 N. H. 141, 72 Am. Dec. 295; Clinton v. Fly, 10 Me. 292. We are of the opinion, therefore, that the "reasonable comforts of life, including board and room," were not to be treated as part of the rent as such, which the lessor had the right to receive in the form of money if he so elected.

It is quite clear that the lessee could not have absolved himself from the obligation by offering to pay the lessor a sum equal to the value of the room and board. No doubt, if the respondent as lessee had refused or neglected to comply with the obligation, the lessor could have recovered the money value of the thing stipulated for, because that is just what he would have been compelled to pay to some one else, and would have been the only way to enforce the contractual obligation assumed by the lessee. It would have been the only method known to the law to make compensation for a breach of the contract. Upon the other hand, we think the respondent as lessee had the undoubted right to discharge the obligation assumed by him in the precise manner stipulated for. Suppose the lessor had elected that he did not want the reasonable comforts of life or the board and room any longer, but would rather have the money value thereof, could he have gone to Europe or any other place and legally have demanded the money value of the comforts and the board and room from the respondents so long as respondent was able, ready, and willing to comply with the obligation he had assumed in that regard? We think no one would so contend. Upon what legal principle, therefore, is the appellant, as the legal representative of the lessor, placed in a better position to recover the money value of the comforts and board and room as a part of the rental for the demised premises, than the decedent in his lifetime would have been? Wherein has the respondent failed to comply with any obligation assumed by him? In what part of the lease has he agreed to pay any sum as rent in addition to the $1,500? The court cannot change the terms and conditions of the contract merely because one of the parties thereto dies. The appellant, as the legal representative of the decedent, can only enforce the provisions of the contract that the latter could have enforced under the same conditions. We are of the opinion, therefore, that, so long as the respondent as lessee was able, ready, and willing to provide for the lessor during his lifetime, as respondent had agreed to do, the lessor could not have sustained an action for the money value of the comforts and board and room. Neither do we think that the mere fact that the lessor has died, and hence can no longer receive the comforts stipulated for, changes the obligation imposed on respondent. It is a case where the lessor no longer requires the personal care and attention, and hence, in the absence of an express stipulation providing for such an emergency, we know of no power in the courts whereby the law can supply the defect for the benefit of the estate. Moreover, the promise of the respondent was not to, nor for the benefit of, the estate, but for the personal benefit of the decedent only. In view of the death of the lessor, and of the circumstances of this case, we think that, from a legal point of view, respondent must be held to be relieved from any obligation except the payment of the money rent agreed to be paid by him at the times and in the manner provided for by the terms of the lease. This in our judgment is also the view taken by the authorities upon the subject. In 13 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 274, it is said: "Where the rent to be rendered is the support of the lessor, no other rent can be demanded if the lessee is willing to supply such support; and upon the death of the lessor during the term demised, the tenant cannot be held for a money rent." The foregoing doctrine is stated in similar language in 24 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 1190. The case of Re Williams, 1 Misc. 35, 22 N. Y. Supp. 906, is a case precisely in point. It was there held that the administrator of the lessor could not recover the money value of the support after the death of the lessor, which was agreed to be provided for him in the lease. To the same effect is Shouse v. Krusor, 24 Mo. App. 279.

23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Appellant's counsel cites one case which he insists lays down a contrary doctrine, namely, Oliver v. Moore, 53 Hun. 472, 6 N. Y. Supp. 413. In that case the party bringing the action had agreed to furnish board to the tenant and her maid. The lessor had let to the lessee two rooms in one of the upper stories of a large building in New York city, —to a certain woman and her maid, for the term of eight and one-half months at the rate of $2,725, to be paid in instalments of $75 each, payable weekly. The lessor, for the consideration aforesaid, however, had also agreed to furnish suitable board for the lessee and her maid during the period of time mentioned in the lease. The lessee, therefore, agreed to pay the sum of $2,725 in weekly instalments of $75, for room rent and board for herself and her maid. It seems that the board was as much a part of the consideration as the rent. The lessee died, and after her death the lessor sued the executor of the lessee to recover the whole sum as rent. The court held that the lessor could recover rent for the entire term, but was required to deduct from the amount stipulated to be paid in the lease, the "expense to which she (the lessor) would have been put if she had been obliged to provide board for the decedent during the whole term." The lessor was thus not allowed to recover the value of the board she had not furnished, but she was permitted to recover the difference between the cost or "expense" of furnishing board and the price the lessee had agreed to pay for it. In other words, she was allowed her profits on the board the same as she would have been if the lessee had lived, but had refused or failed to receive and pay for the board. In such a case there is no personal trust or confidence involved. Nor is there any way to enforce the terms of such a contract, except in the manner it was done by the New York court. If, under the contract in question, respondent were required to pay what appellant demands, we would not enforce the provisions of the contract, but, upon the contrary, we would ignore them. Under the express terms of the contract, respondent was required to pay only $25 monthly as rent for the premises, but in addition had agreed to give something for the personal benefit of the lessor. This latter obligation, however, respondent had the right to discharge from day to day personally, and no agreement was entered into, either expressly or by implication, that in case the lessor should no longer wish or require the personal attention and board, the respondent should pay the equivalent thereof in money either to the lessor or to his estate. The death of the lessor, so far as respondent's obligation is concerned, is, in legal effect, the same as though the lessor in his lifetime, without cause therefor, had refused to occupy the room and receive the board and comforts provided for in the lease. Had he so refused, he could not recover their money value, unless he established some agreement to pay them in that form, or some breach thereof on the part of the respondent. Nor can appellant recover unless he shows that respondent has failed in what he obligated himself to do.

The judgment is clearly right; hence is affirmed, with costs to respondent.

McCarty, J., concurs.
33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Straup, J.:

I am of the same opinion. The covenant in the lease requiring the lessee to board and room the lessor during the life of the lease was personal. The rights of the lessor under it were unassignable. They ended with his death, and hence did not pass to his heirs or legal representatives.

WASHINGTON SUPREME COURT.

THOMAS B. YARBROUGH, Appt.,

v.

F. K. PUGH, Sheriff, etc., et al., Resp'ts.

(— Wash. —, 114 Pac. 918.)

Writ — service on partnership — treating as corporation.

1. Service of summons by publication and mailing upon a foreign partnership in the partnership name as upon a corporation is not sufficient to give jurisdiction over the partners individually or collectively, at least where the firm name does not contain the full name of either partner.

Same — mailing — wrong address.

2. Mailing a summons directed to a partnership in which the full name of neither partner appears is not mailing directed to defendant as required by statute, and will therefore not give jurisdiction over the individual partners.

(April 14, 1911.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court for Spokane County in defendants' favor in an action brought to recover certain property in possession of the sheriff under an alleged writ of attachment. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Danson & Williams, for appellant:

The action and the attachment being against the Hefley-Coleman Company, a corporation, no jurisdiction could be obtained over W. J. Hefley and W. L. Coleman, or the partnership. Especially is this true when neither member of the partnership was served with process nor entered any appearance.

Perry-Rice Grocery Co. v. W. E. Craddock Grocery Co. 34 Tex. Civ. App. 442, 78 S. W. 966; Sinsabaugh v. Dun, 214 Ill. 70.

Note. — The general question whether a partnership may sue or be sued in the firm name is considered in the note to Spaulding Mfg. Co. v. Godbold, 29 L.R.A. (N.S.) 282; and the question as to the validity of constructive service upon a partnership in the firm name, in the note to Ord v. Neiswanger, 29 L.R.A. (N.S.) 287.

73 N. E. 390; Likens v. McCormick, 39 Wis. 313.

Jurisdiction in personam could not be acquired by a publication of summons, nor where service was made outside of the state, unless there was a general appearance.

Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, 24 L. ed. 565; Paxton v. Daniell, 1 Wash. 19, 23 Pac. 441; Hays v. Peavey, 54 Wash. 78, 102 Pac. 889.

In order for the court to acquire jurisdiction in rem by the publication of summons, it is necessary that the summons should state that property had been attached which the plaintiff was asking the court to subject to its claim.

Ballew v. Young, — Okla. —, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1084, 103 Pac. 623; Cackley v. Smith, 38 Kan. 450, 17 Pac. 156; Drake v. Hale, 38 Mo. 346; Wescott v. Archer, 12 Neb. 345, 11 N. W. 491, 577; Riley v. Nichols, 1 Heisk. 1; Hays v. Peavey, 54 Wash. 78, 102 Pac. 889.

No summons having been served, or publication of summons having been commenced, against Hefley or Coleman, the court had lost jurisdiction of the case.

Savage v. Sternberg, 19 Wash. 679, 67 Am. St. Rep. 751, 54 Pac. 611; State ex rel. Reed v. Gormley, 40 Wash. 601, 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 256, 82 Pac. 929, 5 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 856; Tacoma Grocery Co. v. Drahm, 8 Wash. 263, 40 Am. St. Rep. 907, 36 Pac. 31; Beatty v. Davenport, 45 Wash. 555, 122 Am. St. Rep. 937, 88 Pac. 1109, 13 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 585; Dittenhoefer v. Coeur d'Alene Clothing Co. 4 Wash. 519, 30 Pac. 660; Wick v. Rea, 54 Wash. 424, 103 Pac. 462.

Messrs. Cannon, Ferris, Swan, & Lally for respondents.

Parker, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a proceeding to recover personal property under chapter 4, tit. 4, Rem. & Bal. Code, relating to adverse claims to property levied upon. While the property was in the possession of the sheriff, under a writ of attachment in an action commenced in the superior court for Spokane county by the Manufacturers' Furniture & Bedding Company, a corporation, against the Hefley-Coleman Company, a corporation, the plaintiff in this proceeding, claiming to be the owner, demanded possession thereof from the sheriff, at the same time delivering to him proper affidavit and bond under § 573, Rem. & Bal. Code. The sheriff thereupon delivered possession of the property to the plaintiff. A trial before the court without a jury, upon the question of the plaintiff's right to the property, resulted in findings and judgment against him, from which he has appealed.

The facts upon which the rights of the parties depend are not in dispute, and may be briefly stated as follows: On and prior to November 11, 1909, there was in storage with the Sheehorn Transfer Company of Spokane, 50 bales of cotton linters, the property of the Hefley-Coleman Company, a copartnership consisting of W. J. Hefley and W. L. Coleman, of Ft. Worth, Texas. On November 11, 1909, there was commenced in the superior court for Spokane county an action by the Manufacturers' Furniture & Bedding Company, a corporation, against the Hefley-Coleman Company, a corporation, to recover damages in the sum of $2,632.50. On the same day the plaintiff in that action caused a writ of attachment to issue therein; its president making the usual affidavit and stating as grounds for the attachment that "said defendant is a foreign corporation." Thereupon a writ of attachment was issued and placed in the hands of the sheriff, when he levied upon and seized the 50 bales of cotton linters as the property of the Hefley-Coleman Company, a corporation, defendant in that action. Thereafter, for the purpose of obtaining constructive service upon the defendant in that action, one of the attorneys for the plaintiff therein, on December 27, 1909, made and filed in the cause his affidavit, stating upon information and belief that the defendant is a corporation under the laws of Texas, "with its principal office and place of business located in the city of Ft. Worth, state of Texas," and that he deposited in the United States postoffice at Spokane on that day a true copy of the summons and complaint, securely sealed in an envelope, with postage thereon prepaid, "addressed to the above-named defendant at the address above given." Thereafter, commencing on January 1, 1910, the summons was published in a newspaper in Spokane county. The evidence in this proceeding renders it plain that no other service of the summons, of any nature, was ever made in that case than as shown by the affidavit of mailing as above quoted, and the affidavit of publication in the newspaper. Neither the summons nor complaint referred to any attachment. On February 26, 1910, the defendant, "the Hefley-Coleman Company, a corporation," appeared by its attorneys specially in that action, and moved to quash the summons and the service thereof on several different grounds. None of which grounds, however, related to any question of misnaming the defendant. There was nothing in that appearance by which it could be construed to be an appearance, special or general, of the partnership consisting of W. J. Hefley and W. L. Coleman, or of any member thereof. That motion to quash was denied; and on March 28, 1910, judgment by default was rendered in that action against "the Hefley-Coleman Company, a corporation." On February 21, 1910, "the Hefley-Coleman Company," the partnership consisting of W. J. Hefley and W. L. Coleman, sold the 50 bales of cotton linters here involved to appellant, who thereafter on March 12, 1910, commenced this proceeding to recover the same.

The question for our determination is, Was the action of Manufacturers' Furniture & Bedding Company, a corporation, against the Hefley-Coleman Company, a corporation, and the judgment rendered therein in fact and in law against W. J. Hefley and W. L. Coleman as partners, under the name of "the Hefley-Coleman Company," and did the superior court in that action acquire jurisdiction over the members of that partnership. In our discussion of this question, we will not concern ourselves with the jurisdiction which the court may have acquired over "the Hefley-Coleman Company, a corporation." We are not advised by this record as to whether or not there is such a corporation, other than as it so appears in the record of that case, which was introduced in evidence in this case. Learned counsel for respondents insist, that this question is only one of misnomer, which does not affect the court's jurisdiction over the party actually served with process, and that the partnership was in this case actually so served, and was in fact the real defendant. In support of this contention our attention is called to a number of decisions of the courts, holding that the defendant actually served with process is bound to respond as defendant, or suffer judgment to go against him, even though he be erroneously named in the process. Counsel cite the following: Orman v. Salvo, 54 C. C. A. 265, 117 Fed. 233; Davis v. Jennings, 78 Neb. 462, 111 N. W. 128; Nisbet v. Clio Min. Co. 2 Cal. App. 436, 83 Pac. 1077; Lafayette Ins. Co. v. French, 18 How. 404, 15 L. ed. 451; Foshier v. Narver, 24 Or. 441, 41 Am. St. Rep. 874, 34 Pac. 21; Whitlsey v. Frantz, 74 N. Y. 456; Hoffield v. Board of Education, 33 Kan. 644, 7 Pac. 216; Kingen v. Stroh, 136 Ind. 610, 36 N. E. 519; Pond v. Ennis, 69 Ill. 341; Bloomfield R. Co. v. Burrass, 82 Ind. 83; Ueland v. Johnson, 77 Minn. 543, 77 Am. St. Rep. 698, 80 N. W. 700. In none of these cases does it appear that the jurisdiction of the court depended upon other than personal service of summons, save in Nisbet v. Clio Min. Co., and in that case the jurisdiction was materially aided by a liberal statute relating to the misnomer of corporations; nor was there any partnership there involved. It might well be argued that the failure to correctly name a defendant in a case where the jurisdiction of the court depends upon constructive service is a matter of much more seriousness than where a defendant is personally served with process. A personal service is made by an officer or some person making actual delivery of the process to the person to be served, and such officer or person so serving is supposed to know who the person is who is intended to be sued. A constructive service depends almost entirely upon the correctness of the name in the process, of the person to be served, for its coming to the notice of such person. This is especially so where the constructive service consists only of publication and mailing, though it might not be so where there is personal service out of the state.

In this case we have no service save by publication and mailing. However, we are here confronted with another question which we regard as decisive of this case. Now, the service depended upon here is the service which under the law may be made upon a corporation. Let us suppose for the sake of argument that it was sufficient to give jurisdiction over a corporation. Let us even go farther and suppose that it would give jurisdiction over a corporation, even though there was a misnomer as to the defendant in the process. This is not a question of acquiring jurisdiction over a corporation; but of acquiring jurisdiction over the members of a partnership. So, the real question is as to whether or not this service has resulted in the court acquiring jurisdiction over W. J. Hefley and W. L. Coleman, or either of them, as members of the partnership known as "the Hefley-Coleman Company." If a corporation and a partnership could, under the law, be sued in the same manner as to naming each, and each could be served with process in the same manner as to the persons to be served, jurisdiction might have been acquired over the partnership in this case, assuming that the matter of misnomer, as affected by the fact of constructive service only, created no obstacle to the jurisdiction. If the case of Manufacturers' Furniture & Bedding Company, a corporation, against the Hefley-Coleman Company a corporation can be said to be in any sense a suit against this partnership or its members, it is in no event any more than a suit and process against it in its partnership name. It is not pretended that the names of these partners appear anywhere in a single file or record of that suit. It is not pretended that any member of the partnership was served with process therein, personally or constructively. The nearest approach thereto was the mailing of the summons and complaint, as stated in the affidavit of one of the attorneys in that case, which statement, taken literally, means that such mailing was to "the Hefley-Coleman Company, a corporation," though, for the sake of argument, we will assume that the words "a corporation" were not used in the mailing.

In the absence of statute providing otherwise, a partnership cannot sue or be sued apart from its members. The rule is stated in the text of 15 Enc. Pl. & Pr. p. 839, as follows: "At common law a partnership or firm is not regarded as a legal entity apart from its members, and as it is a general rule that actions can only be brought by and against persons, natural or artificial, and partnerships are not considered persons, it is almost universally held that, in the absence of express statutory authority, all actions and suits involving partnership claims or liabilities must be brought by or against the persons individually who compose the firm." 30 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 565. This was recognized as the law in this state in Olson v. Veazie, 9 Wash. 481, 482, 43 Am. St. Rep. 855, 37 Pac. 677. We have no statute in this state changing this rule. We have, however, statutes which evidently were enacted in recognition of this rule. Section 8366, Rem. & Bal. Code, provides that actions against limited partnerships "shall be prosecuted by and against the general partners only." And § 8369, Rem. & Bal. Code, provides for the filing of certificates with the county auditor by persons conducting business under other than their true names, and stating therein their true names. These statutes clearly recognized the necessity of partnerships suing and being sued in the name of the individual partners, and that the partnership does not exist in law apart from the individuals composing it. We are not called upon here to determine any doubtful question as to whether or not these partners were sued as individuals, such as might arise where only the name of the partnership appears as defendant in a title to an action, and the individual names appeared elsewhere in the record, showing they were being proceeded against as individuals, as in Olson v. Veazie, supra. Nor where there is a personal service upon one or more of the partners. We are left with the single question, Has jurisdiction been acquired over them, waiving the question of misnomer, by constructive service in the partnership name only?

In the case of Moses P. Johnson Machin- ery Co. v. Watson, 57 Mo. App. 629, the court had under consideration' this exact question. The Magnolia Lumber Company, a partnership of Arkansas, was sued in Missouri, in the firm name only. One of its creditors was garnished, and paid, in compliance with an order of the court, the amount of the debt toward a judgment rendered in the action against the Magnolia Lumber Company. The service upon which that judgment was based was constructive and in the firm name only. It was held that the judgment against the Magnolia Lumber Company was a nullity, it not having appeared, and was no protection to the garnishee. At page 633 the court said: "Making application of the law to the conceded facts, it is very evident that the judgment against the appellant as garnishee in the Luking Case was a nullity, for the reason that the justice rendering the judgment did not, as against the owners, acquire the right to dispose of the fund. In the absence of a statute authorizing it, a firm can only be sued in the individual names of its members. This rule rests on the principle that a firm has no legal existence apart from its members. It is a mere ideal entity. Moore v. Burns, 60 Ala. 269; Halliday v. Doggett, 6 Pick. 359; Cushing v. Marston, 12 Cush. 431; Mexican Mill v. Yellow Jacket Silver Min. Co. 4 Nev. 40, 97 Am. Dec. 510, 11 Mor. Min. Rep. 175; Rohrbough v. Reed Bros. 57 Mo. 292; Fowler v. Williams, 62 Mo. 403; House v. Duncan, 50 Mo. 453; Beattie v. Hill, 60 Mo. 72; Conrades v. Spink, 38 Mo. App. 309."
33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

In the case of Perry-Rice Grocery Co. v. W. E. Craddock Grocery Co. 34 Tex. Civ. App. 442, 78 S. W. 966, we have a situation much like that here involved. Action was commenced against Arbuckle Brothers, alleging it to be a corporation under the laws of New York. Service was made personally in New York by delivering process to one John Arbuckle, who appeared to be a member of a partnership called Arbuckle Brothers. Garnishment was issued and served upon Perry-Rice Grocery Company, a creditor of the partnership, in Texas. There was an attempt to amend the complaint by alleging that Arbuckle Brothers was a partnership composed of John Arbuckle and others, but without notice of such amendment to any of the partners. They did not appear. Judgments against Arbuckle Brothers and the garnishee were removed by the garnishee by writ of error to the court of civil appeals, contending that the judgment against Arbuckle Brothers as a partnership was a nullity for want of jurisdiction. In sustaining this contention the court said: "The original petition, of which Arbuckle Brothers had notice, presented an action against them as a corporation, and by amendment the capacity in which they were sued was changed from that of corporation to a partnership. This was equivalent to the institution of a new suit, and, defendants not having pleaded thereto, before a valid judgment can be rendered therein against them, service of such amendment must be had upon them. The seizure of a defendant's property by a writ of attachment or garnishment does not obviate the necessity of service of citation as provided by law in ordinary suits. It has been held in this state that the mere change of parties, such as an amendment which strikes out one of the plaintiffs or corrects the Christian name, is not such a change in the character of the suit as would give the defendant the benefit of limitation. It has also been held that the mere addition of the name of one of the partners of a firm sued, whose name had been omitted in the original petition, the other plaintiffs remaining the same, or, where suit is brought in the name of a nominal plaintiff for the use of another person, the substitution by amendment of the person for whose benefit the suit was originally brought, would not require the service of notice thereof on the adverse party. Roberson v. McIlhenny, 59 Tex. 615; Martel v. Somers, 26 Tex. 551; Price v. Wiley, 19 Tex. 142, 70 Am. Dec. 323. But where there is an entire change in the names of the plaintiffs, or the capacity in which the defendant is sued, service of such an amendment must be made upon the other party, or else judgment taken against such new party will, in the absence of a voluntary appearance and answer thereto, be void." Sinsabaugh v. Dun, 214 Ill. 70, 73 N. E. 390; Smith v. Hoover, 39 Ohio St. 249; Likens v. McCormick, 39 Wis. 313. The case last cited, because of the peculiar situation involved, did not present a question of jurisdiction; but we infer from the opinion of the court that, had such question been involved, the judgment would have been held void for want of jurisdiction. The only case coming to our attention which we regard as being opposed to this view, upon this precise question, is that of Neiswanger v. Ord, 81 Kan. 63, 29 L.R.A.(N.S.) 287, 105 Pac. 17. In that case, however, the full name of one of the partners appeared in the name of the defendant firm, thus showing there was at least one defendant having legal capacity to sue or be sued. Cases dealing with the question as one of jurisdiction are collected in a note to that case in 29 L.R.A.(N.S.) 287.

It is elementary that, in order to acquire jurisdiction by constructive service, the statute permitting such service must be strictly followed. Wick v. Rea, 54 Wash. 424, 428, 103 Pac. 462. And the mailing of process prescribed by such a statute "is as indispensable as any other step in the service, and without it the court can acquire no jurisdiction." 17 Enc. Pl. & Pr. p. 102. The mailing of process addressed to the partnership, in the partnership name only, which at most is all that was done in this case, is not a mailing "directed to the defendant," as required by § 228, Rem. & Bal. Code, since the partnership is in no event the defendant. It could as well be said that the return of an officer, to the effect that he personally served a process upon a partnership by delivering it to the partnership, without naming the person to whom he delivered it, would show a service sufficient to support jurisdiction.
33 L.R.A.(N.S.)

We are of the opinion that in the suit of Manufacturers' Furniture & Bedding Company, a corporation, against the Hefley-Coleman Company, a corporation, the superior court acquired no jurisdiction over the partnership consisting of W. J. Hefley and W. L. Coleman, and that therefore their property could not be subjected to seizure or sale in that cause.

The judgment is reversed, with directions to render judgment in favor of appellant, awarding him the property involved.

Gose, Fullerton, and Mount, JJ., concur.

WISCONSIN SUPREME COURT.

THOMAS P. HANNA, Resp't.,
v.

KELSEY REALTY COMPANY, Impleaded, etc., Appt.

(145 Wis. 276, 129 N. W. 1080.)

Foreign corporation — purchasing real estate — unrecorded liens.

1. Title to real estate taken by a foreign corporation without complying with the provisions of the local statute necessary to entitle it to do business in the state is subject to an unrecorded mortgage lien for unpaid purchase money in favor of a prior

Note.—Who may take advantage of statute rendering foreign corporation incapable of taking title to real property.

As to the right of a foreign corporation in general to own real property, see note to Lancaster & A. Improv. Co. 24 L.R.A. 322.

As to the right of a private person in general to contest the power of a corporation to take or hold property, see note to vendor, where the statute provides that every contract in relation to real estate made by a corporation under such circumstances shall be wholly void.

Estoppel — leaving mortgage off record — subsequent purchase.

2. Failure of the holder of an unrecorded purchase money mortgage on real estate to give notice thereof does not estop him from setting it up to defeat the title of a foreign corporation which purchased the property without complying with the provisions of the local statute necessary to enable it to do business in the state, under which circumstances the statute provides that its contract shall be wholly void.

(February 21, 1911.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Polk County in plaintiff's favor in action for the enforce-Hanson v. Little Sisters of the Poor, 32 L.R.A. 293.

The decided weight of authority is to the effect that the state alone can raise the objection that a foreign corporation is holding real estate in violation of a statutory inhibition.

Thus, in Gilbert v. Hole, 2 S. D. 164, 49 N. W. 1, in holding that where a foreign corporation is authorized for some purposes, or to a limited extent, to take a conveyance of and hold real estate, a deed of land for other purposes or beyond the limit allowed is not absolutely void, but passes the title as between the parties, subject only to be inquired into in a direct proceeding by the state, the court said: "The rule is general that when the corporation has capacity to take title under certain conditions, it cannot be the subject of inquiry between third parties whether in any case the requisite conditions were met, or the title made to depend upon proofs as to whether in such case the corporation was acting within its power in taking or attempting to take such title. It is a question of the power of the corporation to receive the title, not a question of the conditions under which such power may be exercised. If the power exists, the state only can question the manner of its exercise."

And in Oregon Mortg. Co. v. Carstens, 16 Wash. 165, 35 L.R.A. 841, 47 Pac. 421, it was held that a deed of land by an alien corporation conveys a title indefeasible at the suit of an individual, notwithstanding the land was acquired in evasion of a constitutional provision, if the state has not undertaken by a direct proceeding to have the conveyance set aside.

And in Summet v. City Realty & Brokerage Co. 208 Mo. 501, 106 S. W. 614, it was held that the fact that a foreign insurance company had held land in violation of the Missouri Constitution was a matter which did not concern any individual, and could be raised by the state alone.

So, in Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Ep- 33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

ment of a mortgage lien for a certain sum and interest, on premises purchased by defendant. Affirmed.

Statement by Barnes, J.:

The plaintiff was the owner of several parcels of land in Polk county on the 8th day of April, 1908, which lands were encumbered by a mortgage on which there was due the sum of $3,100. Prior to said date, the plaintiff and the defendant Johnson entered into a verbal agreement by which plaintiff agreed to convey by warranty deed to said Johnson, subject to said mortgage, the lands referred to. Said Johnson agreed to execute a mortgage back to the plaintiff for the sum of $3,450 to secure his note, which was to be taken as part payment for the purchase price of said lands. Johnson also agreed to convey person, 85 S. C. 134, 67 S. E. 235, it was held that an individual cannot question the right of a foreign corporation to bring suit to recover possession of a part of its right of way which was occupied by defendant, by contending that it had no right to own property in the state as it had failed to comply with local laws. And in Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Lewis, 53 Iowa, 101, 4 N. W. 842, in arriving at a similar conclusion, the court said that "this is a question between the corporation and the government, and is one which does not concern the defendants."

And in Myers v. McGavock, 39 Neb. 843, 42 Am. St. Rep. 627, 58 N. W. 522, it was held that an individual cannot recover property from a railroad corporation organized under the laws of Congress, although the corporation under the state Constitution is incompetent to take title, the ground being that the title of the corporation is valid against everyone but the state, by which alone it can be divested by direct proceedings brought for that purpose. The court said: "The Union Pacific Railway Company, because it took title to his property in violation of the Constitution, did not thereby become an outlaw; nor does the fact of its incompetency to be a grantee of such property authorize anyone to appropriate the property who may see fit to bring a suit for that purpose. The citizen has no right, title, or claim, as such, to property attempted to be acquired in contravention of law, whether the person attempting such acquisition be an English lord, a Turkish pasha, or an ordinary foreign railroad company. It would be a monstrous construction of this Constitution to say that if A should, for a valuable consideration, convey his real estate to B, that, because B was incompetent under the law to take such conveyance, that therefore the title should revert to A." To the same effect, see Hannon v. Union P. R. Co. 40 Neb. 52, 58 N. W. 590.

In Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ, to the plaintiff certain real estate in St. Cloud, Minnesota. Pursuant to such agreement, the plaintiff and his wife executed a deed of the Polk county property to Johnson, and Johnson executed a mortgage to the plaintiff covering the same property, and also a deed of the St. Cloud property. The conveyances were delivered on the 8th day of April, and immediately thereafter Johnson requested the plaintiff to permit him to examine the note and mortgage which he had given to plaintiff. The mortgage was handed to Johnson, who thereupon said that there were some back taxes against the lands conveyed, and that he would hold the note and mortgage until such time as they were paid. It was thereupon agreed between the parties that Johnson should hold the mortgage until the taxes were taken care of, and that neither the deed nor the mortgage should in the meantime be placed on record. The plaintiff at various times demanded the surrender of the note and of the mortgage which was given to secure such note, which demands were refused; Johnson endeavoring to induce the plaintiff to take in lieu thereof some corporate stock of small or uncertain value which he owned. In the meantime Johnson recorded his deed and conveyed the lands to one Bart. J. Goodwin of Minneapolis; the name of the grantee in the deed being left blank. Thereafter Goodwin inserted the name of one Maggie M. Finlay as grantee, and on August 26, 1908, recorded the deed in the office of the register of deeds of Polk county. No consideration was paid by said Maggie M. Finlay for the deed, she permitting her name to be used as grantee therein at the request of Goodwin. The court found on sufficient evidence that

L. D. S. v. Church of Christ, 60 Fed. 937, it is held that the question whether a foreign corporation has attempted to acquire more land than it is allowed by local statute to hold is one which can be determined only in a direct proceeding by the state.

And in Reed v. Todd, — S. D. —, 127 N. W. 527, it was held that a foreign corporation may acquire title to real property within the state without having complied with the law as to holding property therein, subject only to a direct proceeding by the state to prevent it from continuing to exercise its franchise.

The general rule is also recognized in Plummer v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. post, —, and in Schwab Clothing Co. v. Claunch, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 29 S. W. 922.

In Fritts v. Palmer, 132 U. S. 282, 33 L. ed. 317, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 93, where the statute relating to the holding of property by foreign corporations provided that no foreign corporation should purchase or hold real estate except as provided for, which provision required the filing of certain papers, but the only penalty provided for carrying on business without the right to do so was that its officers and agents were made personally liable upon its contracts made before such a right had been acquired, it was held that a conveyance to it of real property was not void, but only voidable, and that the sovereign alone could question its rights, the court saying that such question cannot be raised collaterally by private persons, unless authorized to do so by statute. Mr. Justice Miller earnestly dissented on the ground that the statutory provision above set out rendered the conveyance to the corporation absolutely void, and that such invalidity could be raised by an interested private citizen.

And in Chattanooga, R. & C. R. Co. v. Evans, 14 C. C. A. 116, 31 U. S. App. 432, 66 Fed. 809, where a foreign railroad corporation sold its lines which extended into Tennessee to another foreign corporation, which, under the laws of Tennessee, was incapable of doing business therein, but which did take possession and operate the road, it was held that a creditor of the selling corporation could not, in a suit against such corporation to subject seized railroad property to the payment of his debt, question the validity of the transfer or the right of the purchaser to the use and possession of the purchased property, the court saying that the state alone can take advantage of the want of capacity of a foreign corporation under an executed contract to take and hold real property, where the state merely subjects the corporation violating it to a fine, and nowhere declares that the conveyance by which the offending corporation acquired the property should be inoperative to pass the title out of the grantor.

And under acts forbidding foreign corporations to acquire and hold the real estate except upon specified conditions, which provide that all corporations holding in violation of such acts shall escheat to the commonwealth, it is held that a deed of conveyance of land to such a corporation is not "void," and that the commonwealth alone can object to the legal capacity of the corporation to hold the real estate. Runyan v. Coster, 14 Pet. 122, 10 L. ed. 382; Re Palmer Window Glass Co. 183 Fed. 902; Hickory Farm Oil Co. v. Buffalo, N. Y. & P. R. Co. 32 Fed. 22.

In McDiarmid v. Hughes, 16 Ont. Rep. 570, it was held that a conveyance of lands to a foreign corporation which could not, under the statutes of mortmain, hold land in the province of Ontario, was voidable only, and could be forfeited only by the Crown. It was also held that where a foreign corporation holds property beyond the period allowed by statute, the Crown alone can take advantage of the unlawful holding, and that it is not a defense to an action of ejectment that the lands were acquired by plaintiff from the corporation after the expiration of the statutory period during which the corporation could lawfully hold them.

Goodwin was not a purchaser in good faith, but took the title with full knowledge of the fraud that Johnson was attempting to perpetrate upon the plaintiff. Thereafter Goodwin sold the lands to the defendant, the Kelsey Realty Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the state of Minnesota, and authorized by its articles of incorporation to deal in real property, and caused the lands to be deeded to that company by Maggie M. Finlay. The court found that the Kelsey Realty Company was a purchaser in good faith for a valuable consideration, but that said corporation failed to comply with the provisions of § 1770b, Stat. 1898, and that it was not authorized or licensed to transact any business in Wisconsin prior to October 26, 1909. The deed to the Kelsey Realty Company was dated September 7, 1908, and was delivered on September 16, and recorded October 9, 1908, in the office of the register of deeds of Polk county. The plaintiff did not learn that the deed from Johnson to Finlay had been placed on record or that any other transactions in reference to the land had taken place, until September 25, 1908, and on the 29th day of that month he tendered to Johnson all taxes due against the same and demanded the note and mortgage, which Johnson refused to deliver, and which he had in fact destroyed during the month of August. The evidence tends to show that plaintiff knew that Johnson had placed the deed to him on record as early as April 28th. The plain-

So, in Bone v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. 2 Sadler (Pa.) 55, 18 W. N. C. 125, 5 Atl. 751, it was held that in an action of ejectment brought by a foreign corporation, the defendant cannot set up a want of authority in the corporation to hold the property, as such authority can only be questioned by the commonwealth in a direct proceeding.

And in Galveston Land & Improv. Co. v. Perkins, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 26 S. W. 256, it was held that the capacity of a foreign corporation which by its charter is authorized to hold real estate in a manner not authorized in Texas, to hold any particular piece of property, can be attacked only by the state, and not by a private litigant in trespass to try title.

And in War Eagle Consol. Min. Co. v. Dickie, 14 Idaho, 534, 94 Pac. 1034, it was held that even if the title of a foreign corporation was declared forfeited by a statute providing that foreign corporations cannot hold title to property in the state prior to compliance with certain other statutory conditions, the forfeiture would be to the state, and could not be raised by the individual claiming some interest in the property, in an action by such corporation to quiet title to such property.

So, in Rachels v. Stecher Cooperage Works, — Ark. —, 128 S. W. 348, it was held that an individual claiming title to land as to which a foreign corporation was seeking to quiet title cannot have the deeds, which had been delivered to the corporation upon payment of the price, declared void under a statute prohibiting foreign corporations doing business in the state, under penalty of no right to sue on any demand arising out of contract or tort.

And in Miller v. Williams, 27 Colo. 34, 59 Pac. 740, it was held in an action to quiet title to real estate, that the grantee in a quitclaim deed cannot maintain, as against a purchaser at foreclosure sale under a deed of trust given a foreign corporation to secure certain notes prior to the execution of the quitclaim deed, that the foreign corporation had not complied with certain statutory conditions which must be met to entitle it to do business in the state.

And in American Mortg. Co. v. Tennille, 87 Ga. 28, 12 L.R.A. 529, 13 S. E. 161, it was held that the maker of a note and deed to secure same could not raise, by affidavit of illegality, the question of the right of a foreign corporation to whom the land had been conveyed, and which had sued the note to judgment and had execution issued, to hold the land, because the acreage was greater than the statute allowed without having become incorporated in the state as required by statute, it being said that the state alone can question the right of foreign corporations to hold lands in excess of the amount limited by statute.

In Carlow v. Aultmann, 28 Neb. 672, 44 N. W. 873, it was held that a mortgagor could not maintain an action to have a sheriff's deed executed on foreclosure sale set aside, on the ground that the purchaser was a foreign corporation incapable under the laws of the state of acquiring or holding real property, the court saying that the title is valid against everyone but the state, and that it can be divested only by proceeding brought by the state for that purpose.

And in McKinley-Lanning Loan & T. Co. v. Gordon, 113 Iowa, 481, 85 N. W. 816, it was said that where a foreign corporation claims a note and mortgage which it is seeking to foreclose, as a part payment for land sold defendant, the latter cannot maintain that the foreign corporation has no title to the land sold, because it could not hold land under the laws of the state, that defense being held available to the state alone.

And in Diefenbach v. Vaughan, 116 Ala. 150, 23 So. 88, it was held that one who has executed a mortgage to a foreign corporation which has not complied with the statute regulating its right to do business in the state cannot attack either the validity of the mortgage or the right of the mortgagee to purchase the property on foreclosure, where the contract has become executed by foreclosure, in an action for tiff commenced an action to enforce his lien for the sum of $3,450 and interest against the premises conveyed to Johnson, and to have the title of Johnson's grantee decreed to be subsequent and subject to his mortgage.

The summons and complaint in this action were filed in the office of the circuit court for Polk county on October 30, 1908, and notice of lis pendens was apparently filed on the same day. Maggie M. Finlay executed a quitclaim deed of the lands in controversy under date of November 6th to the Kelsey Realty Company. The circuit court found that the deed first executed to the Kelsey Realty Company was void because of the failure of that company to comply with the provisions of § 1770b, Stat.

possession brought by the purchaser at foreclosure.

In Grant v. Henry Clay Coal Co. 80 Pa. 208, it was held that the defendant in a suit for the price of coal sold by a foreign corporation owning local mining leases could not raise the question of the plaintiff's right to hold such leases, and that such an inquiry could be made only by the commonwealth.

In Omnium Invest. Co. v. North American Trust Co. 65 Kan. 50, 68 Pac. 1089, it was held that one who, with knowledge and without giving any consideration, takes title to real estate from an agent of a foreign corporation who had wrongfully taken title in his own name, could not defeat an action brought by the corporation to compel the conveyance to it of the title, by proof that the foreign corporation was not entitled to hold real estate under a statute providing that such corporation shall be incapable of taking or holding title, and directing that real estate so held shall be forfeited to the state, it being said that the state is the only one that can insist upon such a forfeiture.

So, in Seymour v. Slide & S. Gold Mines, 153 U. S. 523, 38 L. ed. 807, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 847, it was held that an agent of a foreign corporation when sued by such corporation to recover land held by him, but to which it was entitled, could raise the question of the right of the corporation so to hold title, even if such title was held in violation of the laws of the state, as in such case the state alone could challenge the corporation's right.

And in Rogers v. Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. 33 C. C. A. 534, 62 U. S. App. 49, 697, 91 Fed. 299, it is held that a stockholder bringing action to set aside a contract by which his corporation leased a railroad line from a foreign corporation cannot raise therein the question of the power of the lessor corporation to acquire the ownership of the leased line by purchase, where the purchase has been executed and the title vested, as in such case the question can only be raised by the state in direct proceeding for the purpose. The decision in Rothchild v. Memphis & C. R. Co. 51 C. C. A. 310, 113 Fed. 476, writ of certiorari denied in 188 U. S. 740, 47 L. ed. 677, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 848, is to the same effect.

1898, and that by the subsequent deed of November 6th the corporation acquired the interest of Johnson in said lands, subject to the mortgage lien of the plaintiff. It was provided by the judgment that unless the Kelsey Realty Company should elect on or before July 1, 1910, to pay to the plaintiff the sum of $3,450 with interest at 6 per cent per annum from April 8, 1908, plaintiff might apply to the court for an order for foreclosure of plaintiff's lien upon the property. From a judgment entered in pursuance of the order of the court, defendant prosecutes this appeal.

Mr. W. N. M. Crawford, with Mr. Frank B. Dorothy, for appellant.

In Whitman Gold & S. Min. Co. v. Baker, 3 Nev. 386, it was held that a foreign mining corporation limited by the laws of Nevada to such quantity of land as may be necessary for the purposes of the corporation is not estopped by the fact that it holds more than it is entitled to, from demanding protection from trespassers. The court said: "If they [the foreign corporation] have violated the law in taking a greater quantity of land than is allowable, then they have committed a wrong, not against any particular individual, but against the whole community, and this wrong can only be inquired into by a proceeding on the part of the state. Their deed to the land, if they buy it from one having title, or their possession if they only derive title from occupation, gives them a right to hold against all the world except the state."

And in Louisville Property Co. v. Nashville, 114 Tenn. 213, 84 S. W. 810, it was held that noncompliance on the part of a foreign corporation, with a statute which did not absolutely prohibit foreign corporations from purchasing or holding real property, did not permit the defendant to defend against an otherwise just claim for damages to plaintiff's property, upon the ground that the plaintiff corporation had failed to comply with the statutory regulations as to acquiring title to property within the state before taking title to the damaged property.

But where the statute renders any conveyance made in defiance of a prohibiting statute absolutely void, there would seem to be, as is stated in HANNA v. KELSEY REALTY Co., no reason why an individual affected by a foreign corporation acquiring or holding real property in violation of such a statute may not show that fact, and take advantage of it. See also dissenting opinion in Fritts v. Palmer, 132 U. S. 282, 33 L. ed. 317, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 93, as set out supra.

Messrs. Morris E. Yager and Walter L. Chapin for respondent.

Barnes, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

It is urged by the appellant (1) that the court was in error in holding that the Kelsey Realty Company acquired no title to the lands involved because § 1770b of our statutes (Stat. 1898) had not been complied with; and (2) that the plaintiff is estopped from setting up any such defense to the action. Some other errors are assigned, but the contentions of the appellant in reference thereto are either untenable or immaterial in view of the conclusion reached, and they will not be discussed.

The appellant was a foreign corporation amenable to the provisions of § 1770b, provided it saw fit to extend its activities to the state of Wisconsin, and to do any of the things which such corporations are forbidden to do without compliance with the statute. By subd. 2 of the law it is provided that no foreign corporation "shall transact business or acquire, hold, or dispose of property" in the state, unless it shall have first complied with the requirements of the statute, and by subd. 10 of the law every contract relating to property within this state before compliance with the requirements of the law is declared to be "wholly void" on the part of the corporation making it. It must be conceded that the appellant attempted to acquire property within the state, and did so, unless the statute we are considering provides otherwise, and that there was no element of interstate commerce involved in the transaction which takes it outside of the statute. The claim of the appellant is that the statute does not render the transaction void, but voidable only, at the election of the state, and that the state only can question the validity of its title and decree a forfeiture.

In support of his contention counsel for appellant invites our attention to a number of cases, which for convenience may be divided into three classes. The first class comprehends those wherein it is held that, although aliens are disabled by the common law from acquiring, owning, or holding real estate within a state, yet if an alien does acquire property by grant or descent, the transaction is not void, but is voidable only, at the election of the state. Such were the cases of Craig v. Radford, 3 Wheat. 594, 599, 4 L. ed. 467, 468, and Doe ex dem. Gouverneur v. Robertson, 11 Wheat. 332, 351, 6 L. ed. 488, 493, as well as other cases that might be cited. The second class comprehends those cases where a corporation acquires real estate without being authorized so to do by its charter or its articles of incorporation, and where, therefore, its act in this behalf is ultra vires. In such a situation it is generally held that the right at least of a foreign corporation to hold property can only be questioned by persons directly interested in the corporation, or by the state whose charter and franchises are being exceeded or abused. Such was the holding in Illinois Steel Co. v. Waras, 141 Wis. 119, 123 N. W. 656, and in the cases cited on page 126, of the opinion. To the same effect is

And for a case in which the question under discussion arises, but which does not involve a controversy as to a right of property, see Plummer v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. post, 362, in which the question as to the effect of a conveyance by a public service corporation to a foreign corporation incapable of taking, upon the continued duty and liability of the former to members of the public, is discussed.

The question whether an heir may question the right of a foreign corporation to take land devised seems to rest upon somewhat different principles than do the preceding cases.

Thus, in Proctor v. Methodist Episcopal Church South, 225 Mo. 51, 123 S. W. 862, it was held that the heirs may question the right of a foreign corporation to take under local laws property which has been devised to it, and that in so doing they do not infringe upon the right of the sovereign state to question the legality of the defendant corporation's existence. The court said that if the question concerned the forfeiture of the charter of the corporation, there would be no question but what the state 33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

alone would be the proper party to intervene, but that where the question was simply one of title to the property, and since, if the corporation was incapable of holding it, the title would vest in the heirs, and as there was no question of a contract nature nor of estoppel, there was nothing to preclude the heirs from setting up any legal bar to the right of the foreign corporation to take title to the property as devised.

And in Boyce v. St. Louis, 29 Barb. 650, 18 How. Pr. 125, it was held that the heirs, in an action for partition of devised real estate, could defeat the taking of title by a foreign corporation to a portion of the real property devised to it, by proof that under the laws of New York the foreign corporation was incapable of taking by devise.

As to the right to question the power of a corporation to take by will property in excess of its charter authority, see notes to Hubbard v. Worcester Art Museum, 9 L.R.A. (N.S.) 689, and to Hanson v. Little Sisters of the Poor, 32 L.R.A. 293.

G. J. Q.

Cowell v. Colorado Springs Co. 100 U. S. 55, 60, 25 L. ed. 547, 549. It should be noted, however, that the rule in Illinois Steel Co. v. Warras is expressly limited to cases where there is no statutory prohibition against the holding of the property involved. The third class of cases pertains generally to statutes akin to our § 1770b, although in most instances differing therefrom in some respects. Some courts hold that under such a statute the conveyance is voidable only, at the election of the state. It was so held in Carlow v. Aultman, 28 Neb. 672, 44 N. W. 873, and in Reed v. Todd — S. D. —, 127 N. W. 527, two of the five judges dissenting; also in Hickory Farm Oil Co. v. Buffalo, N. Y. & P. R. Co. (C. C.) 32 Fed. 22. The case of McKinley-Lanning Loan & T. Co. v. Gordon, 113 Iowa, 481, 85 N. W. 816, can hardly be said to be authority on the proposition, as the suit involved a contract relating to Nebraska real estate, and the Iowa court construed the contract in accordance with the law of Nebraska as announced in Carlow v. Aultman, supra.

Other courts have held that where there is a valid statute expressly prohibiting a corporation for acquiring real estate, and declaring any conveyance made in defiance of the law to be void, such a conveyance should not be held voidable merely, and that any party in interest might take the benefit of the statute. Such was the conclusion of the New York court in the elaborately considered case entitled Re McGraw, 111 N. Y. 66, 96, 2 L.R.A. 387, 19 N. E. 233, which decision was affirmed on appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, although the decision of that court is not particularly valuable, inasmuch as it followed the construction of the New York statutes placed thereon by its court of appeals. Other cases where the view of the New York court is upheld are Wunderle v. Wunderle, 144 Ill. 40, 64, 19 L.R.A. 84, 33 N. E. 195; Hanchey v. Southern Home Bldg. & L. Assn. 140 Ala. 245, 37 So. 272. The same doctrine by inference is found in Chicago Title & T. Co. v. Bashford, 120 Wis. 281, 97 N. W. 940, although that case did not necessarily involve a decision of the question. The New York court differentiates between an act of a corporation which is merely ultra vires and one which is in contravention of a positive statute, holding that, while the former may be voidable merely, at the election of the state, the other is void, and may be taken advantage of by any party in interest. This court has had before it a number of cases arising out of business transactions by foreign corporations in the state, where the statute had not been complied with, as well as cases involving contracts made in the state by such corporations, and has uniformly held that parties in interest might assert the benefit of the statute. See International Textbook Co. v. Peterson, 133 Wis. 302, 113 N. W. 730, 14 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 965; Southwestern Slate Co. v. Stephens, 139 Wis. 616, 626, 29 L.R.A. (N. S.) 92, 131 Am. St. Rep. 1074, 120 N. W. 408; Duluth Music Co. v. Clancy, 139 Wis. 189, 131 Am. St. Rep. 1051, 120 N. W. 854; Ashland Lumber Co. v. Detroit Salt Co., 114 Wis. 66, 89 N. W. 904.

No good reason suggests itself why a party who is affected by a foreign corporation doing business or making a contract in the state in violation of the statute may take advantage of it, while one who is affected by the corporation acquiring or holding property may not do so. All these prohibitions occur in the same sentence in the statute, and the penalty is precisely the same as to the violation of each of them. But more convincing is the fact that this court has unequivocally held that the words "wholly void" as used in the statute "mean just what they say," and that is, "absolutely void and a nullity." Ashland Lumber Co. v. Detroit Salt Co. supra. In adopting such construction the court followed the decision in Land, Log & Lumber Co. v. McIntyre, 100 Wis. 245, 69 Am. St. Rep. 915, 75 N. W. 964, wherein the word "void" as used in § 692, Stat., was given a like construction. So, unless we overrule our former decisions, it naturally follows that we cannot adopt for our guidance the pronouncements of courts that elect to construe the word "void" as meaning simply "voidable" in such a statute. It therefore appears that the real question in issue has already been decided, as it would hardly be contended that, if the deed to the appellant was "absolutely void and a mere nullity," the plaintiff could not show that fact, and take the benefit of it. If its deed was void, the appellant took nothing under it, and has no right or title to assert by virtue of such deed.

The statute is, in fact, plain and unambiguous on the question we are considering, and leaves little room for construction. Drastic and harsh in its penalties it may be, but the legislature undoubtedly knew that cases involving great hardships might arise because of the statute. The state evidently intended to make the consequences of violating the law so great as to enforce obedience to it. It was within the legislative province to prescribe those penalties, and this court cannot soften or mitigate them without violating the law. Ashland Lumber Co. v. Detroit Salt Co. supra, and cases cited on page 78 of 114 Wis. If the construction contended for by the appellant should prevail, the statute, in so far as it relates to the acquiring or holding of property in this state, would be practically nullified. Even if the state should attempt to assert its right, it might be utterly impossible for it to get any service upon the foreign corporation so as to commence any action or proceeding in the courts of this state. It is no great hardship in the present case to hold that the appellant must comply with § 1770b before it can take the benefit of our recording statute, § 2241, Stat. (1898), under and by virtue of which it claims priority over the plaintiff. We hold, therefore, that the conveyance first made to the appellant was not simply voidable, but was void, and that the plaintiff may show that fact, and take the benefit and advantage of it. The ground of estoppel relied on is failure on the part of the plaintiff to take the necessary steps to appraise parties of his rights, who might be induced to purchase the real estate. There is no claim that the plaintiff ever had any communication with the appellant in reference to the lands, directly, or indirectly, or even that he knew of the corporation. Inasmuch as the appellant could not lawfully acquire the lands until it had complied with the law, and the transaction by which they were acquired was void, the plaintiff did not owe to the appellant the duty of more promptly beginning his action and filing a notice of lis pendens. Constructive notice is intended to protect innocent parties who are about to engage in lawful transactions.

Judgment affirmed.

Vinje, J., took no part.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

L. P. PLUMMER, Appt.,

v.

CHESAPEAKE & OHIO RAILWAY COMPANY OF KENTUCKY et al.

(143 Ky. 102, 136 S. W. 162.)

Foreign corporation — acquisition of railroad right of way — constitutional provision.

1. A constitutional provision that no foreign railroad company shall have power to acquire a right of way or real estate for a depot or other uses, until it shall have become a domestic corporation, applies to the purchase of existing lines as well as to the construction of new ones.

Same — conflicting statutes — construction — purchase or operation of railroad.

2. A foreign railroad company wishing to purchase a railroad line within the state must comply with the statute applicable to such corporations which wish to purchase and hold lands for depot, tracks, and other purposes and compliance with the statute applicable to those wishing to possess, control, maintain, or operate a railway within the state is not sufficient.

Commerce — interference — requiring domestication of railroads.

3. Requiring foreign corporations to become domesticated before they shall be permitted to own or operate railroads in the state does not unconstitutionally interfere with interstate commerce.

Foreign corporation — operation of railroad — compulsory domestication.

4. A state has power to require foreign railroad companies to become domesticated as a condition to acquiring and operating railroads within the state.

Same — right to question power to own real estate.

5. One seeking damages for personal injuries from a domestic railroad company,

Note. — Conveyance by public service corporation to foreign corporation incapable of taking title, continued duty and liability of former to members of public.

An extended search discloses no case in addition to PLUMMER v. CHESAPEAKE & O. R. Co. in which the question as stated has arisen. This decision, while recognizing the general rule that no person except the state can raise an objection that a foreign corporation is holding real estate in violation of local statute, establishes a seemingly well founded exception to such rule, in holding that where there is no controversy as to title, and therefore no property rights involved, an individual to whom a duty is owed as a member of the public may take advantage of the statute, when a public service corporation attempts to excuse itself from liability for a wrongful act by pleading that it had disposed of the property.

For a discussion of the general question as to who may take advantage of a statute rendering foreign corporations incapable of taking title to real property, see Hanna v. Kelsey Realty Co. ante, 355, and note appended thereto.

As to the right of a foreign corporation in general to own real property, see note to Lancaster v. Amsterdam Improv. Co. 24 L.R.A. 322.

As to the right of a private person in general to contest the power of a corporation to take or hold title, see note to Hanson v. Little Sisters of the Poor, 32 L.R.A. 293.

As to the right to question the power of a corporation to take by will property in excess of its charter authority, see note to Hubbard v. Worcester Art Museum, 9 L.R.A. (N.S.) 689.

G. J. C.

which denies liability on the ground that it had conveyed its property to a foreign corporation, may question the right of the latter to take the title, for the purpose of showing that defendant had not relieved itself from responsibility for the operation of the road.

Railroad — liability for injury — transfer of property — unauthorized grantee.

6. A domestic railroad company cannot, by conveying its property to a foreign corporation which has no authority to own it, relieve itself of liability to persons injured in the operation of the road, which the state imposes upon it as a condition to its right to construct and operate the road.

(April 12, 1911.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Lewis County in favor of defendant, the Kentucky corporation, in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by the negligence of defendants' servants. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Allen D. Cole, S. J. Pugh, and A. R. Campbell for appellant.

Messrs. Worthington, Cochran, & Browning for appellee.

Carroll, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellant, Plummer, while engaged for a shipper in loading a railroad car with tan bark, was injured by the negligence of the train men in moving, without notice to him, the car in which he was at work. To recover damages for the injuries thus sustained, he brought suit against the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company, a Virginia corporation, and the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company of Kentucky, a Kentucky corporation. The lower court directed the jury to return a verdict in favor of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company of Kentucky, and from the judgment upon this verdict, this appeal is prosecuted.

It appears from the admitted facts: That for several years prior to July 1, 1907, the railway and its appurtenances were owned by the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company of Kentucky, and that during this period the railway was operated by the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company as lessee. That on July 1, 1907, the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company of Kentucky executed and delivered to the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company a deed of conveyance, by which it transferred and conveyed to it in fee simple the railway, with all the rights, privileges, and appurtenances appertaining thereto, and all property, real and personal, possessed or used in connection therewith. That the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company of Virginia, in 1893, when it first undertook as lessee to operate the Kentucky railway, complied with § 841 of the Kentucky Statutes (Russell's Stat. § 5391), hereinafter copied, but has made no attempt to comply with § 765, of the Kentucky Statutes (Russell's Stat. § 5365), hereinafter set forth. Its contention, which was sustained by the lower court, being that, as it had, while operating the road as lessee, complied with § 841, this act relieved it from the necessity of complying with § 765 when it became the purchaser of the railway. The correctness of the ruling of the trial court depends primarily upon the question whether or not this compliance with § 841 of the Kentucky Statutes was sufficient under the laws of this state to authorize the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company to purchase, own, and operate the railway in this state, and to enable the Kentucky corporation to divest itself of title by the conveyance. If it was, the appellee, Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company of Kentucky, was not answerable in damages to the appellant, because the injury to him happened after the conveyance was made. On the other hand, if the compliance with § 841 of the Kentucky Statutes was not sufficient to authorize the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company to purchase, own, and operate the railway, and to enable the Kentucky corporation to divest itself of title by the conveyance, then the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company of Kentucky was jointly and severally liable with it, as it sustained at the time of the injury the relation of lessor to the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company, and consequently was responsible to persons not employees of the operating company, for injuries sustained by them on account of the negligence of the operating company. McCabe v. Maysville & B. S. R. Co. 112 Ky. 861, 66 S. W. 1054; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Sheegog, 126 Ky. 252, 103 S. W. 323.

Only two questions are presented by the record for decision: (1) Was the purchase and conveyance made on July 1, 1907, made and executed in accordance with the Constitution and laws of this state, and therefore sufficient to divest the selling corporation of title? (2) Assuming that it was not, can the validity of the purchase and conveyance be questioned by any person other than the state of Kentucky? Taking up the first question, its solution renders it necessary that we should construe § 211 of the Constitution of the state, reading as follows: "No railroad corporation organized under the laws of any other state, or of the United States, and doing business, or proposing to do business, in this state, shall be entitled to the benefit of the right of eminent domain, or have power to acquire the right of way or real estate for depot or other uses, until it shall have become a body corporate pursuant to and in accordance with the laws of this commonwealth." Section 765 of the Kentucky Statutes, which provides that "no railroad corporation organized or created by or under the laws of any other state shall have the right to condemn land for, or acquire the right of way for, or purchase or hold land for, its depots, tracks, or other purposes, until it shall have first filed in the office of the secretary of state of this state, in the manner provided in the 1st article of this chapter, its acceptance of the Constitution of this state, and shall have become organized as a corporation under the laws of this state, which it may do by filing in the offices of the secretary of state and the railroad commission articles of incorporation in the manner and form provided in § 763 of this article." And § 841 of the Kentucky Statutes, reading: "No company, association, or corporation created by, or organized under, the laws or authority of any state or country other than this state, shall possess, control, maintain, or operate any railway or part thereof in this state, until, by incorporation under the laws of the state, the same shall have become a corporation, citizen, and resident of this state. Any such company, association, or corporation may, for the purpose of possessing, controlling, maintaining, or operating a railway or part thereof in this state, become a corporation, citizen, and resident of this state by being incorporated in the manner following, namely: By filing in the office of the secretary of state, and in the office of the railroad commission, a copy of the charter or articles of incorporation of such company, association, or corporation, authenticated by its seal and by the attestation of its president and secretary, and thereupon, and by virtue thereof, such company, association, or corporation shall at once become and be a corporation, citizen, and resident of this state. The secretary of state shall issue to such corporation a certificate of such incorporation."

In the consideration of the case before us, it is not necessary to consider or discuss the power of the state to directly prohibit a foreign railway corporation from owning property or doing business within its territory, or its power to impose such restrictions and conditions as would virtually amount to a denial of this right, as neither the Constitution nor the statute attempt to prohibit a foreign railway corporation from purchasing a domestic railway corporation, nor do they place any unreasonable restrictions or limitations upon the right so to do. The conditions annexed to the right of a foreign railway corporation to come into this state, and purchase a domestic railway corporation and operate the same, are neither prohibitory nor unreasonably restrictive. The only terms imposed are that, before the foreign railway corporation purchases or undertakes to operate a railway in this state, it must comply with our laws enacted for the purpose of placing foreign and domestic corporations upon the same footing. Section 211 of the Constitution, before quoted, as well as § 202, reading, "No corporation organized outside the limits of this state shall be allowed to transact business within this state on more favorable conditions than are prescribed by law to similar corporations organized under the laws of this commonwealth," and the statutes enacted in pursuance thereof were not designed to and do not impose upon foreign corporations any limitations or burdens not put upon home corporations. They were only intended to place as near as may be foreign and domestic corporations upon an equality under the law. The foreign corporation is not discriminated against, nor is it extended by the state any favors not granted to domestic corporations. If a foreign corporation wishes to purchase, own, or operate a railway in this state, it may come here under the protection of our laws, and enjoy all the privileges and rights that are allowed to home corporations, and, in addition, those guaranteed by the Federal Constitution and laws. There is no reason why it should be granted any greater, or why any distinction or discrimination should be made by the state between corporations engaged in the same line of business, whether they be foreign or domestic. One should not be allowed, so far as the operation and effect of state laws are concerned, to do business upon more favorable conditions than the other. As § 202 of the Constitution merely declares a general principle that shall be observed in the legislative treatment of corporations, we do not think it worth while to further allude to it; but § 211 relates directly to the matter in hand, and requires more careful consideration. This section provides that a foreign railway corporation shall not be entitled "to the benefit of the right of eminent domain, or have power to acquire the right of way or real estate for depot or other uses, until it shall have become a body corporate pursuant to and in accordance with the laws of this commonwealth." We think it clear this language should not be limited in its application to a foreign railway corporation that desires to come into this state for the purpose of constructing a line of railway. This narrow view of the meaning of this section would exclude from its operation a foreign railway corporation that purchased outright an existing domestic railway corporation. It would impose upon corporations desiring to build a line of railway, and seeking to acquire under the right of eminent domain real estate or right of way for such purpose, the duty of becoming incorporated under the laws of this state, and exempt from this duty a foreign corporation that acquired by purchase from another corporation all the real estate and rights of way that it needed in the conduct of its business. There seems no reason why a distinction like this should be permitted. We are unable to perceive why one corporation under the conditions stated should be allowed greater privileges than another. If one corporation cannot, except by observing certain requirements, acquire rights of way for the purpose of building a road and operating it, neither should another be permitted to purchase a road already built for the purpose of operating it, without complying with such requirements. A construction that made a distinction like this would defeat in part the purpose of the Constitution, and create inequality and discrimination that should not exist. We are therefore of the opinion that § 211 of the Constitution applies to every foreign railway corporation that owns and operates a railway in this state, whether the railway so owned and operated was constructed by the foreign corporation, or purchased by it from a domestic or other foreign corporation.

The next question is: How is a foreign railway corporation that desires to purchase, hold, and operate a line of railway in this state to become a body corporate under the laws of this commonwealth? The answer to this question is found in § 765 of the Kentucky Statutes, which points out the manner in which the constitutional provision may be complied with. This section was enacted for the purpose of furnishing a means by which foreign railway corporations desiring to purchase, hold, and operate railways in this state might become, in the language of the section, "a body corporate pursuant to and in accordance with the laws of this commonwealth." As the legislature has pointed out in § 765 the manner in which a foreign railway corporation desiring to purchase, hold, and operate a railway in this state may become incorporated in this state, this method must be pursued to the 33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

exclusion of all others. A compliance with this section is a condition precedent to its right to engage in this character of business in this state. Until it has done this, it may operate and control, but it cannot purchase or own, any railway in this state. We think the legislature had the unquestioned authority to prescribe the terms upon which foreign railway companies should be permitted to "acquire the right of way for, or purchase or hold land for, its depots, tracks, or other purposes," and, as it has pointed out the terms, their observance is an indispensable prerequisite to the exercise of the privilege. This section was not intended to provide a means by which foreign railway corporations that operated under lease or contract lines of railway might become incorporated. The incorporation of such companies is provided for in § 841 of the Kentucky Statutes. Under this last-mentioned section, a method is provided by which foreign railway corporations that "possess, control, maintain, or operate any railway or part thereof in this state, may become incorporated." There is no conflict between these sections. They were enacted for different purposes and to meet different conditions. One refers to foreign corporations that own the title to and operate railways in this state; the other to foreign corporations that lease lines of railway in this state for the purpose of controlling, possessing, maintaining, or operating the same, the title remaining in the lessor corporation. It is manifest from the language of § 765 that it was not intended to embrace the mere conduct or operation of a railway. Therefore it became necessary to enact § 841 to provide the manner in which a foreign corporation might obtain under lease or contract the right to control, maintain, and operate a railway in this state. In making provision for the incorporation of lessee corporations, the legislature saw proper to prescribe a different method from that adopted to apply to foreign corporations that desired to actually purchase and own a railway in this state. Why this distinction was made, it is not essential, in the consideration of the question before us, to inquire. As the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company did not become incorporated in the only manner provided by law for its incorporation as a purchaser of a railway, the conveyance made to it was not valid or effectual to invest it with title to the railway it attempted to purchase. Its compliance with § 841 did not leave it in any better or other position than it would have been if it had made no attempt to observe the requirements of that section.

But it is insisted by counsel that such a construction as we have put upon these sections and the corresponding duty imposed upon foreign railway companies has the effect of rendering § 765 unconstitutional, in that it is an attempted regulation of and interference with interstate commerce. It is said that the result of this construction is that no corporation except one created under and brought into existence by the laws of this state will be authorized to operate a railroad in this state or to engage in interstate commerce therein. But we are not ready to agree with counsel in their interpretation of the effect of the construction we have given these sections. The requirement that a foreign railway corporation, before it is permitted to purchase, own, and operate a railway in this state, must become incorporated in the manner provided by the laws of this state is not an interference with or regulation of interstate commerce. It does not conflict with the Federal Constitution or any laws made in pursuance thereof. Nor does it follow that the incorporation of a foreign railway company in this state will deplete it of its original citizenship or deprive it of any rights or privileges it enjoys as a foreign corporation. What these rights and privileges are or may be it would be outside the scope of the question before us to undertake to define, and we shall not attempt to do so. We are only concerned with the single question,—whether or not it is within the power of the state to impose the reasonable terms that our Constitution and statute do upon foreign railway corporations as a condition precedent to their coming into this state and acquiring by purchase lines of railway therein. Upon this point we have not been furnished with any authority in conflict with the views expressed. The Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company of Virginia before its purchase of the Kentucky corporation was engaged in interstate commerce as the lessee of the Kentucky corporation. While the Virginia corporation was holding and operating the Kentucky corporation as such lessee, by its compliance with § 841 of the Kentucky Statutes, it became, in the language of that section, “a corporation, citizen, and resident of this state.” If, upon its purchase of the Kentucky corporation, it had complied with § 765 of the Kentucky Statutes, it would have become “organized as a corporation under the laws of this state.” It would therefore seem that, so far as our laws can affect the question, the corporation that has complied with § 841 is to the same extent a Kentucky corporation as is a foreign corporation that complies with § 765. The only difference between the two sections is in the means or method by which the foreign corporation is converted into or becomes a Kentucky corporation. If a forced compliance with one is an interference with or regulation of interstate commerce, so is a forced compliance with the other. If one section is invalid because it places a burden upon interstate commerce, so is the other. The question then comes to this: Can the state impose upon a foreign railway corporation, as a condition precedent to its right to purchase, own, or hold and operate a railway in this state, the duty of becoming in any manner or for any purpose a corporation and citizen of this state? If it can, then both §§ 765 and 841 are valid exercises of power. If a foreign corporation desires to lease a railway in this state, it must perform the conditions imposed by § 841; and if it desires to purchase a railway in this state, it must observe the conditions imposed by § 765. So far as the principle involved is concerned, the requirements imposed by one section cannot be distinguished from those imposed by the other. In St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. James, 161 U. S. 545, 40 L. ed. 802, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 621, the Supreme Court had before it a question in some respects similar to that involved in this case. After saying that “it must be regarded, to begin with, as finally settled by repeated decisions of this court that, for the purpose of jurisdiction in the Federal courts, a state corporation is deemed to be indisputably composed of citizens of such state,” the court in the course of the opinion proceeded to say: “It is competent for a railroad corporation organized under the laws of one state, when authorized so to do by the consent of the state which created it, to accept authority from another state to extend its railroad into such state, and to receive a grant of powers to own and control by lease or purchase railroads therein, and to subject itself to such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the second state. Such legislation on the part of two or more states is not, in the absence of inhibitory legislation by Congress, regarded as within the constitutional prohibition of agreements or compacts between states. Such corporations may be treated by each of the states whose legislative grants they accept as domestic corporations. The presumption that a corporation is composed of citizens of the state which created it accompanies such corporation when it does business in another state, and it may sue or be sued in the Federal courts in such other state as a citizen of the state of its original creation.” In Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Louisville Trust Co. 174 U. S. 552, 43 L. ed. 1081, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 817, the Supreme Court again said: "This court has often recognized that a corporation of one state may be made a corporation of another state by the legislature of that state, in regard to property and acts within its territorial jurisdiction." Again, in Southern R. Co. v. Allison, 190 U. S. 326, 47 L. ed. 1078, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 713, it appears that the state of North Carolina enacted a statute containing some of the features of both §§ 765 and 841 of our statute, providing a means by which foreign railway corporations desiring to own property and carry on business in that state might become domestic corporations. In compliance with this statute, the Southern Railway Company, a Virginia corporation, became a North Carolina corporation, and the question presented to the court was whether or not this compliance operated to divest the corporation of the right to remove to the Federal court a suit brought against it in a state court of North Carolina. In the course of the opinion holding that it did not, the court said: "So it seems that a corporation may be made what is termed a domestic corporation, or in form a domestic corporation, of a state in compliance with the legislation thereof, by filing a copy of its charter and by-laws with the secretary of state, yet such fact does not affect the character of the original corporation. It does not thereby become a citizen of the state in which a copy of its charter is filed, so far as to affect the jurisdiction of the Federal courts upon a question of diverse citizenship." In each of these cases the court had before it legislation in substance similar to ours, but in neither did the court hold that the legislation was invalid. On the contrary, its validity was impliedly at least recognized. Without further extending the opinion upon this branch of the case, we are of the opinion that a compliance by the Virginia corporation with § 765 of the Kentucky Statutes was essential to its purchase and ownership of the Kentucky corporation, and, as it did not do this, it cannot be treated in this state as the owner of the Kentucky corporation. It follows from this that the lower court erred in directing a dismissal of the action as to the Kentucky corporation, unless it be that the appellant could not attack the validity of the purchase and conveyance, or that, notwithstanding the failure of the purchasing corporation to comply with the statute, the title passed out of the grantor and to it by the conveyance. If either of these questions should be answered adversely to the appellant, the ruling of the lower court must be sustained. It is insisted by counsel for the appellee corporation that the purchase and conveyance in question is good as against all persons until assailed by the state of Kentucky in a direct proceeding instituted by it for that purpose; and, this being so, the appellant, Plummer, could not attack its validity, or set up in avoidance of its plea the fact that the purchaser had failed to comply with the laws of this state necessary to make valid the purchase and conveyance. It is undoubtedly well settled that no person except the state can raise the objection that a corporation is holding real estate in excess of its corporate power. Louisville School Board v. King, 127 Ky. 824, 15 L.R.A.(N.S.) 379, 107 S. W. 247; Fritts v. Palmer, 132 U. S. 282, 33 L. ed. 317, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 93; 1 Beach, Priv. Corp. § 378; 5 Thomp. Priv. Corp. 2d ed. § 2391.

33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

But no attempt is made in this proceeding to forfeit the property of the appellee railway company, or to divest the purchasing corporation of any estate acquired by its purchase. The only question presented is, Did the appellant, Plummer, have the legal right, in avoidance of the defense made by the appellee corporation, to assert and establish that the defense relied upon was not authorized by law? In other words, the appellee corporation when sued set up a complete defense to the action that, previous to the accrual of the cause of action asserted, it had parted with its title to the railway. In avoidance of this plea, the appellant, Plummer, insisted below, and insists here, that it had not done this. We think he had the right to make this issue, and to put the appellee corporation upon proof of the sufficiency of this defense. But, if this be conceded, the question yet remains,—Did the conveyance made by it divest it of title to the property? It is not to be doubted that the Kentucky corporation had the right to sell its railway and to execute a conveyance that would divest it of all title to it. Neither the Constitution nor the statute forbids a domestic railway corporation from disposing of its property and franchises, nor do they prescribe any terms that must be complied with by the selling corporation before it can make a conveyance. The duty of complying with the statute is imposed alone upon the purchasing corporation.

We have then sharply presented the further question whether or not a domestic railway corporation can, by making a conveyance to a foreign corporation not authorized to purchase, own, or hold the property conveyed, relieve itself of the obligations imposed upon it by the state of Kentucky as a condition to its right to acquire a railway in this state. We think considerations of public policy forbid the legality of a transaction like this. A railway corporation created and organized under the laws of this state, given authority to exercise the right of eminent domain and to enjoy the other privileges and benefits conferred upon railway corporations, owes to the state in consideration of these privileges certain duties that it should not be allowed to divest itself of by disposing of its property to a corporation not authorized to purchase or hold it. If this course of conduct be legalized, then it would not be necessary for any railway corporation to become or remain a domestic corporation or citizen of this state longer than was necessary for it to acquire such rights of way and privileges as it desired. When it had received from the state all the benefits the state could confer, it could dispose of its property to some foreign corporation not authorized by our laws to purchase or hold it, and the result would be that we would soon have no domestic railway corporations if a more agreeable place of abode could be found. The statute does not impose any penalty upon a foreign railway corporation for purchasing or operating a railway without a compliance with our laws, and the only method by which a corporation could be forced to acknowledge the laws of this state would be by an appropriate action on the part of the state, to dispossess it of its rights under the purchase. But we are not disposed to concede that a domestic railway corporation may trifle with the authority of the state by disposing of its holdings to a corporation not authorized to acquire them, or to consent that a foreign railway corporation may acquire title to property in violation of our laws, and hold the same until the state sees proper to take suitable action against it. The Constitution and statute prohibit a foreign railway corporation from purchasing a railway in this state, until it shall have complied with the laws of this state; but it is manifest that if, notwithstanding these provisions of the law, a foreign corporation may acquire by purchase a line of railway in this state, their efficiency would be greatly impaired and for a time at least virtually nullified. In view of the public nature of railway corporations, and the duties they are under to the people and the state, we do not believe that a domestic railway corporation can divest itself of title or make a valid conveyance to a corporation not authorized by the laws of this state to acquire the property. It is true that it is held in many cases that, although the grantee in a conveyance may not be authorized to purchase the property conveyed, yet a conveyance to it by a grantor authorized to convey will divest it of title, and lodge the title in the grantee. But we have not found any case in which this doctrine was attempted to be applied to conditions such as exist in the case before us. In Fritts v. Palmer, 132 U. S. 282, 33 L. ed. 317, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 93, the facts were that one Groshom conveyed certain mining property in the state of Colorado to the Comstock Mining Company, a Missouri corporation. The mining company had not at the time of its purchase, and did not afterwards, comply with the laws of Colorado prescribing the terms and conditions upon which a foreign corporation might do business in that state. After the conveyance to the mining company by Groshom, he disposed of the property to other persons, and in a contract between them and the vendees of the mining company the question was raised that the conveyance to the mining company was void, because it had no authority to acquire property in that state. But in denying this claim, the Supreme Court of the United States said: "It is not for the judiciary, at the instance or for the benefit of private parties claiming under deeds executed by the person who had previously conveyed to the corporation, according to the forms prescribed for passing title to real estate, to inflict the additional and harsh penalty of forfeiting, for the benefit of such parties, the estate thus conveyed to the corporation and by it conveyed to others. . . . If the legislature had intended to declare that no title should pass under a conveyance to a foreign corporation purchasing real estate, before it acquires the right to engage in business in the state, and that such a conveyance should be an absolute nullity as between the grantor and grantee, leaving the grantor to deal with the property as if he had never sold it, that intention would have been clearly manifested. If the construction placed by the plaintiff upon the Constitution and statutes of Colorado be sound, there would be some ground to say that a foreign corporation taking a conveyance of real estate for purposes of its business in Colorado, before it had acquired the right to do business there, would have no standing in the courts of that state for the purpose of having the estate so acquired protected against trespasses upon it. . . . Where a corporation is incompetent by its charter to take a title to real estate, a conveyance to it is not void, but only voidable, and the sovereign alone can object. It is valid until assailed in a direct proceeding instituted for that purpose." To the same effect is Chattanooga, R. & C. R. Co. v. Evans, 14 C. C. A. 116, 31 U. S. App. 432, 66 Fed. 809, and many other cases cited in the authorities mentioned.

But the question here does not involve a controversy as to the title to property between contending claimants. The right of property is not in any manner presented by the record. It is a case between a Kentucky corporation and one of the public to whom the Kentucky corporation owed a duty that it seeks to avoid by the plea that it had disposed of the property. We think there is, and should be, a broad distinction between cases like this, and cases in which the title to the property attempted to be conveyed is drawn in question, and that the rule laid down in the cases cited should not be extended to railway corporations. In short, our conclusion is that a conveyance made by a domestic railway corporation to a foreign corporation that has not complied with the laws of this state is void and of no effect in a controversy between the domestic corporation and a party to whom as such domestic corporation it owed duties. As the conveyance was void and of no effect, it did not present any defense to a cause of action that might have been maintained against it if the conveyance had not been made.

Wherefore the judgment is reversed, with directions for a new trial in conformity with this opinion.

NEBRASKA SUPREME COURT.

JULIUS HELPHAND, Appt.,
v.

INDEPENDENT TELEPHONE COMPANY
OF OMAHA et al.

(88 Neb. 542, 130 N. W. 111.)

Surface water — diversion — contributory negligence.

Where damage is caused by surface water negligently collected in a ditch or trench

Headnote by BARNES, J.

Note. — Failure to protect property against surface water wrongfully or negligently collected or diverted by another as contributory negligence.

General rule.

It seems to be well settled, as illustrated in HELPHAND v. INDEPENDENT TELEPH. CO., that a property owner, while bound to exercise reasonable care to protect his property against known dangers, is under no duty to anticipate and guard against negligent or wrongful acts of others whereby his property may be injured by surface water.

Thus, where a city has negligently allowed an alley to become obstructed so that surface water that should properly flow along the alley is gathered and caused to flood a building on an abutting lot, there is 33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

dug through a public alley, and thence allowed to soak through a sewer connection previously constructed, into a basement of an adjacent building, the fact that the owner or occupant of the building in making his sewer connection failed to tamp the earth replaced therein sufficiently to render it impervious to water does not constitute contributory negligence.

(Sedgwick, J., dissents.)

(February 28, 1911.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the District Court for Douglas County in defendants' favor in an action to recover damages for injury to plaintiff's stock of goods by surface water, alleged to have been caused by defendants' negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. H. C. Brome and Clinton Brome for appellant.

Mr. Benjamin S. Baker for appellees.

Barnes, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Action for damages to a stock of goods by surface water alleged to have been negligently collected in a ditch dug by defendants, and thence thrown into the basement of a building occupied by the plaintiff. It appears that plaintiff was the owner of a stock of gents' furnishing goods, a part of which were stored in the basement of a building situated in the city of Omaha and occupied by him; that in the month of August, 1907, defendants, in constructing certain telephone lines in that city, dug a ditch or trench to be used as a conduit for its wires, through a public alley adjacent and in close proximity to the plaintiff's building, and left it in such a condition that the heavy rains which fell in that season of the year were collected therein, and thence escaped into the base-no contributory negligence in the fact that the lot owner allowed his yard drain to become so that at times it would clog with gravel. Bowen v. Kansas City, 140 Mo. App. 695, 128 S. W. 790. The court said: "That drain was not to carry off the water that should properly flow along the streets. Though one's premises may become out of repair in any way, that will not justify nor tend in the least to excuse another in doing such premises an injury, and when called to account, to answer: If your place had been in repair by wrongful conduct would not have harmed it."

And where a city has negligently permitted a culvert to become and remain obstructed, whereby surface water is diverted onto private premises, injuring the foundations of a house, the owner, while bound to exercise ordinary care in repairing and ment and damaged plaintiff's goods. There was no dispute as to the foregoing facts. Defendants, to defeat a recovery, claimed that when they were digging the ditch in question, their workmen discovered that at some prior time a sewer connection extending from the basement of plaintiff's building across the alley had been made, either by the plaintiff or his grantor; that the earth replaced in the sewer trench had not been sufficiently tamped to render it impervious to water, and by reason thereof the surface water collected in the ditch soaked through the sewer trench into the plaintiff's basement, and caused the damage of which he complains. It was therefore contended that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence.

It appears that the trial court, after correctly instructing the jury as to the defendants' legal duties and liabilities, by another instruction, submitted the question of contributory negligence to the jury. The giving of that instruction is assigned as error, which plaintiff strenuously contends entitled him to a new trial. The argument of the defendants in support of the instruction is that both parties had an equal right to the use of the public alley in which their conduit was being constructed, and therefore the plaintiff owed them the duty to so construct the sewer connection as to render it impervious to the water which they collected and allowed to flow into their ditch, and by failing to do so he was guilty of contributory negligence. Counsel has strengthening his walls, is not required to anticipate and provide against similar negligence on the part of the city in the future, and his failure to provide stronger walls and to dig trenches around them, while it may increase the damage occasioned by a future overflow from the street, is not such contributory negligence as will preclude a recovery for the city's negligence in permitting it. Johnson v. Cincinnati, 20 Ohio C. C. 657, 11 Ohio C. D. 318.

So, where an abutting owner, for his own benefit, has made an excavation in a public street in front of his own and the adjoining premises, into which excavation surface water flows and thence into the basement of the adjoining building, it is immaterial that some of it goes through holes in the side wall of such adjoining building, as the owners thereof are under no obligation to make the wall impervious to water wrongfully thrown upon their premises. Mairs v. Manhattan Real Estate Assn. 89 N. Y. 498.

It is no part of the duty of the owner of a building to protect it against surface water from higher premises near by, collected into the sewer or other artificial channel and wrongfully cast against it. Bonte v. Postel, 109 Ky. 64, 51 L.R.A. 187, 58 S. W. 536.

And in Paddock v. Somes, 102 Mo. 226, 10 L.R.A. 254, 14 S. W. 746, it is held that one who has wrongfully discharged surface water from his premises onto the premises of another, through an artificial drain, is not exonerated from liability; nor is the injured property owner debarred from recovery by reason of the fact that he could have prevented the injury by reasonable exertion, and at trifling expense. "The law of contributory negligence has no more place in an action of this sort than has the law of self-defense."

The owner of a city lot below the established grade of an adjacent street must protect himself against the accumulation of surface water from other directions, by filling his lot to grade, or by constructing sewers and sluices, if possible, to drain the lot; and the city is not liable for stopping the flow of surface water off from the lot by making improvements on the street. Gilfeather v. Council Bluffs, 69 Iowa, 310, 28 N. W. 610.

But where a city, in grading and paving certain streets, has raised the grade of the streets higher than adjoining lands, and has laid an insufficient sewer in an alley in the rear of such lands, and has stopped the catch basin at the mouth of the sewer, whereby surface water is discharged upon such premises, the owner, while it may have been his duty under all the circumstances to incur a moderate expense to protect himself from damages, cannot, as a matter of law, be said to have been guilty of such contributory negligence, by failing to raise his premises to the grade of the streets at a cost of $500, so as to prevent an overflow, as will bar his recovery against the city, under a constitutional provision that no person's property shall be "taken, damaged, or destroyed" for public use without compensation. Cooper v. Dallas, 83 Tex. 239, 29 Am. St. Rep. 645, 18 S. W. 565, later appeal, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 34 S. W. 321.

Nor is it his duty, as a matter of law, to unstop the catch basin, though he should use ordinary and reasonable care and means to prevent injury, and can recover only for such damage as could not by such care and means have been avoided. Dallas v. Cooper, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 34 S. W. 321.

An owner of a properly constructed store building in a city is not guilty of contributory negligence in storing in his cellar goods likely to be damaged by an inundation caused by the wrongful or negligent collection and diversion of surface water by the city by means of an embankment constructed along the street in front of the building as the owner has a right to make a reasonable use of his own premises in such way as will prove most profitable to him, and the city has no right by its wrongful act to deprive him of the use of his property; he cannot be required to forego the enjoyment of his cellar throughout a year, because the wrongful or negligent act of the city has placed it in a position that its use may be attended with loss. Damour v. Lyons City, 44 Iowa, 276.

33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

cited no authorities to support this argument, and we doubt if any can be found by which it can be sustained.

On the other hand, the plaintiff asserts that the evidence shows conclusively that when the earth was replaced in the sewer excavation, and the paving replaced thereon, the alley was left in a safe, suitable, and proper condition for the public use; that no surface water had thereafter penetrated the basement of his building; and he therefore insists that, having done all that was required of him, both for the protection of the public and his own property, he owed no additional duty to the defendants, and could not be said to have been guilty of contributory negligence. This contention seems to be well founded. It appears that when the sewer connection was made, neither the plaintiff nor his grantor owed any duty to the defendants, and, when defendants entered upon the construction of their conduit, it was their duty to so construct the ditch as not to injure the property of the plaintiff, who was an abutting lot owner.

In the case of Cook v. Champlain Transp. Co. 1 Denio, 91, it was said: "Where one, in the lawful use of his own property, exposes it to accidental injury from the lawful acts of others, he does not thereby lose his remedy for an injury caused by the culpable negligence of such other persons." The rule is to so use one's own as not to injure others, and not, as the defendants contend, to use your own so that another

But, under the duty of a property owner to use reasonable care to prevent injury to his property where a city, in improving a street, has wrongfully diverted surface water, so that it flows in large quantities onto certain private premises with every storm, negligence of the owner of the premises in so placing personal property thereon that it is injured by the water, and his failure to use reasonable care to prevent the injury, while not such contributory negligence as will defeat an action against the city, as it does not operate to cause the injury, but merely adds to the resulting damage, will go in mitigation of the damages,—the portion thereof directly attributable to the plaintiff's failure to exercise ordinary care and diligence in preserving his property, after he has knowledge of the wrong, being deductible from the damages as a whole. Cromer v. Logansport, 38 Ind. App. 661, 78 N. E. 1045.

And in Emry v. Raleigh & G. R. Co. 109 N. C. 589, 15 L.R.A. 332, 14 S. E. 352, it was held that a landowner who, with knowledge that his land for many years has been flooded in times of freshet, on an average of four years out of five, by a backwater from an insufficient culvert where a railroad crosses a stream, places and keeps a brickyard and brick kilns upon such land, is guilty of contributory negligence which will defeat a recovery for injuries thereto by such flooding.

Negligence of property owner operating to cause injury.

Where negligence on the part of the property owner directly contributes to cause the injury, he is, of course, barred from recovery against another on account of such injury. Thus, although a city has allowed surface water flowing along the gutters in a street to run over an adjacent piece of ground owned by it, which was formerly a stone quarry, but has been filled with loose earth to support the street, whence earth is washed into an excavation on adjoining private property, causing damage, the owner of such property cannot recover against 33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

the city, if the damage was done by reason of the negligent way in which he excavated under the existing circumstances, and would not have occurred but for his taking away the lateral support of the city's property. Curry v. Cincinnati, 12 Ohio C. C. 736, 4 Ohio C. D. 545.

And where the fee of city streets, including the sidewalks, is in a municipality, and an abutting owner, for his own benefit, has made an excavation under the sidewalk in front of his building, which excavation tends to allow water flowing over the sidewalk to flow into his cellar, he is thereby guilty of such contributory negligence as will prevent a recovery against the city on account of its negligence in failing to construct a sufficient sewer to carry off a usually hard rain, by reason whereof water accumulates and flows through the excavation under the sidewalk and floods the basement of the building, which it would not have done had the excavation not been made. Guthrie v. Nix, 5 Okla. 555, 49 Pac. 917.

So, in Peoria v. Adams, 72 Ill. App. 662, reversing a judgment in favor of a servant of the occupant of a building in a city, for personal injury sustained by him in consequence of the collapse of the building in which he was working, alleged to have been caused by the weakening and softening of its walls and foundations by surface water flowing from the street into the cellar of the building, through open gratings left in the sidewalk and maintained for the use and benefit of the owners and occupants of the building, where it did not appear that any considerable quantity of water would have flowed into the cellar but for these open gratings, through which it found its only passage, the court said: "Certainly the city would not be liable to the owner or occupant of the building for damages occasioned by the flowage of water through these gratings, maintained by them for their own benefit, and the appellee [plaintiff] would stand in no better position in that regard than they would."

shall not injure your property. In other words, one cannot lawfully use his own property or exercise his rights in such a manner as to increase the risk or danger of injury to another's property. In Miles v. Postal Teleg. Cable Co. 55 S. C. 403, 415, 33 S. E. 493, 498, it was said: "On the contrary, it behooves a telegraph company, in its legal use of a way or road, or even a highway or post road, to guard such use so that no injury shall result to the property of its owner which may be located opposite such telegraph lines, through its negligence or want of due care." Speaking of the rule of contributory negligence, it is said in 29 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 516: "This rule is subject to the exception that, as a person is entitled to use his own prem-

Duty to mitigate damages.

Similarly, where property is being injured by surface water, it is the duty of the owner to use reasonable efforts to mitigate the damage. Thus, although a city may be liable in damages to a lot owner because of its negligence in permitting a drain or culvert to be so obstructed as not to carry away the surface water from his lot, he is charged with the duty of caring for and protecting his property as far as he may be able, and the city is not liable for the consequences of his failure to do so. Macon v. Dannenberg, 113 Ga. 1111, 39 S. E. 446.

So, in Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Moore, 31 Ky. L. Rep. 141, 10 L.R.A. (N.S.) 679, 101 S. W. 934, where it appeared that a railroad company had turned surface water onto land, where it has made a pond which stood until it dried up, and also that all the water might have been taken off and trouble avoided by plowing a short furrow through the land from the railroad to a nearby creek, it was held that it was the duty of the occupant of the land to exercise ordinary care to protect his property from the water; and that no damages should be allowed for injury which might have been avoided by the exercise of ordinary care on his part.

But a farm tenant, having only a temporary and qualified interest in the land, is not bound to dig a ditch and drain the land in order to mitigate damages resulting to his crops from an overflow of surface water caused by a railroad embankment and ditches. Kankakee & S. R. Co. v. Horan, 23 Ill. App. 259.

And a property owner is not required to commit a trespass in order to mitigate damages to his property from surface water. Thus, the owner of a mining claim is not bound to commit a trespass by pulling off a board from a flume of a water company running across his claim, in order to protect his property against water pouring over the sides of the flume by reason of a severe snowstorm. Wolf v. St. Louis Independent Water Co. 15 Cal. 319, 10 Mor. Min. Rep. 653.

And where an irrigation company constructed an embankment for an irrigation canal across a natural drain, with only a small culvert, insufficient to carry off the surface water in times of freshet, so that adjacent lands were entirely inundated by the surplus water, and so remained until the owner cut the canal embankment and drained them, he is not guilty of contributory negligence in not having sooner committed the trespass by cutting the embankment, and thus prevented much of the damage, as it was not his duty to commit such trespass at all, although "the rule in cases of this character is that an injured person must use ordinary and reasonable care and means to prevent an injury and the consequences of it, and that he can only recover damages for such losses as could not by such care and means be avoided." Barstow Irrig. Co. v. Black, 39 Tex. Civ. App. 80, 86 S. W. 1036.

So, a landowner whose property has been injured by an overflow of water caused by the construction of a railroad and culvert, while bound to use ordinary care to render future injuries as light as possible, is not guilty of such contributory negligence as will bar recovery for future injuries from the same source, merely by reason of his failure to prevent the overflow by cutting a ditch on the line of his land where the water strikes it, at a cost which he is able to pay and which is much less than the probable amount of the damages to his property in the absence of such ditch, unless it is further shown that he has a right to make such ditch without detriment to neighboring lands. Austin & N. W. R. Co. v. Anderson, 85 Tex. 88, 19 S. W. 1035.

In Klopp v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 142 Iowa, 483, 119 N. W. 377, a condemnation proceeding for an additional right of way contiguous to defendant's former right of way, in which one item of the damages claimed by plaintiff was for the overflow of his land by surface water caused by an embankment constructed by the company on the new right of way, it was held that, although the damage from this cause could have been prevented by making a ditch or channel along one side of the right of way for a short distance, carrying the water into a water way, instead of discharging it onto the plaintiff's land, the plaintiff had no right and was under no duty to enter upon the defendant's right of way, and dig such ditch or channel for the protection of his property.

And where a city has discharged into a ravine in one body surface water from a large territory, a lot owner through whose land it flows is not bound to protect his lot against an overflow caused by an obstruction below his premises, not attributable to any act of his or for which he is responsible, and in a place over which he has no control, by removing or causing the removal of the obstruction. Noonan v. Albany, 79 N. Y. 470, 35 Am. Rep. 540.

A. C. W.

ises for any lawful purpose, his failure to protect it from the negligence of another will not be contributory negligence." The text above quoted is well supported by the following authorities: Werner v. Cincinnati, 23 Ohio C. C. 475; Yik Hon v. Spring Valley Waterworks, 65 Cal. 619, 4 Pac. 666; Martin v. North Star Iron Works, 31 Minn. 407, 18 N. W. 109; Stone v. Hunt, 114 Mo. 66, 21 S. W. 454; and many others.

We are therefore of opinion that the question of contributory negligence does not arise in this case, and the trial court in submitting that question to the jury by the instruction of which the plaintiff complains.

The judgment of the District Court is therefore reversed, and the cause is remanded for further proceedings.

Sedgwick, J., dissenting:

It is said in the majority opinion that "the trial court, after correctly instructing the jury as to the defendants' legal duties and liabilities, by another instruction, submitted the question of contributory negligence to the jury," and that this was erroneous, requiring a reversal. If, after correctly instructing as to defendants' legal duties and liabilities, it is erroneous to submit the question of contributory negligence to the jury, it must be that no matter how negligent the plaintiff may have been in constructing its part of the trench which caused the damage, and however careful and diligent the defendants have been in constructing their part, and in seeking to prevent the ordinary effects of plaintiff's own negligence, the defendants are still liable for damages. This cannot be the law. The defendants argued that the plaintiff or his grantor in making the sewer connection owed the duty to the defendants, as well as others, to properly construct the same so as to prevent water from running into his (the plaintiff's) own basement. This argument is a little misleading. The plaintiff owed the duty to the defendants and others to construct the sewer connection so as not to injure the defendants or others who rightfully used the alley, but upon the point involved in this case the duty which the plaintiff owed was not so much to the defendants as it was to himself. He owed a duty to himself to make his sewer connection so that water from the alley would not flood his basement. Suppose that both trenches had been dug at the same time; that the plaintiff had dug the sewer trench and the defendants the trench for the telephone cable, and both trenches had been negligently dug and negligently filled, would it be true that, if the jury should find that, if the plaintiff had filled his part of the trench properly, there would have been no damage, still the plaintiff could have recovered? Of course, if the defendants in digging their trench and filling it found that the plaintiff's sewer trench was imperfectly filled, and that damage was liable to ensue on that account, then the defendants should have been the more careful to avoid damage, since the sewer trench had been made a long time before, and the plaintiff might probably not be aware of its condition. If the defendants disregarded the danger of damages that might be caused from the conditions which they found in making their trench, they might still be liable for damages notwithstanding the imperfect conditions of the plaintiff's trench. But this point was fully and carefully guarded by the court in its instruction No. 5. The court instructed the jury to the effect that, when the defendants found that the plaintiff's part of the trench was not properly constructed, it would be the duty of the defendants to use correspondingly greater precaution to prevent damage to plaintiff's property, and that if, in constructing their part of the trench, the defendants "came upon a previously constructed sewer ditch leading to the basement of said building, the exposed condition of which was of such a nature as it was known to defendants, or should have been known to them in the exercise of ordinary care, that there was danger that surface water flowing into or upon defendants' trench would the more readily flow into and through said sewer trench and into plaintiff's building, then defendants would be required to exercise such a degree of care to prevent such accident as would be commensurate with the increased danger and circumstances surrounding the situation."

A similar instruction was requested by the defendants, and the correct theory upon which the case was tried appears to be that, if the plaintiff negligently constructed his part of the trenches in question, when there would have been no damage if he had properly constructed the same, and the defendants, when they discovered the faulty condition of the plaintiff's trench, used such reasonable and proper precautions as an ordinarily prudent man would use to prevent the defects in the plaintiff's own trench from causing him damage, the defendants would not be liable. The questions tried were: First, were the defendants negligent in constructing their part of the trench? Second, did the plaintiff negligently construct his trench? Third, if the plaintiff's trench was negligently constructed, did the defendants, when that fact was discovered, use all reasonable precautions to prevent damage as the result of the plaintiff's own negligence? The last two propositions were determined in favor of the defendants by the jury upon "correct instruction as to the defendants' legal duties and liabilities," as said in the majority opinion, and, if so, their verdict ought to settle the matter.

ALABAMA SUPREME COURT.

BASS, HEARD, & HOWLE, Appt.,
v.

INTERNATIONAL HARVESTER COMPANY.
NY.

(— Ala. —, 53 So. 1014.)

Conditional sale — use of property by purchaser — right of vendees.

A manufacturer who places goods for sale with a retailer, retaining title by a conditional bill of sale, which is not recorded as required by statute to become notice to purchasers, cannot recover the property from a corporation to which the retailer turns over his stock in trade in satisfaction of a subscription to stock of the corporation, where the corporation had no notice of the rights of the manufacturer.

(November 15, 1910.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Calhoun County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover certain property purchased by defendant without notice of the plaintiff's claim or title thereto. Reversed.

Plaintiff manufactured the Weber wagons and sold them to merchants and dealers in vehicles for resale. The Shelnut Mercantile Company, a partnership composed of Bryant Shelnut and Ewell Howles, doing a general mercantile business in Anniston, Alabama, gave an order in October, 1906, to the plaintiff for thirty Weber wagons, which were shipped to them and placed with their stock for sale. Two of the wagons were sold by the company, and in January the mercantile company was dissolved, Shelnut selling to Howle his interest in the business, which was conducted by Howle as the Howle Mercantile Company. In February, Bass, Heard, and Howle formed a corporation, and in payment of his subscription thereto, Howle conveyed to it all the stock of goods which had formerly belonged to the Shelnut Company, including twenty-seven or twenty-eight of the wagons. He did not disclose to the corporation that plaintiff had any claims to the wagons, and the defendant corporation had no knowledge of it at the time of the conveyance. He parted with his stock before notice came to the corporation of plaintiff's alleged claim to the wagons. A demand was made on the corporation by an agent of the plaintiff, and at the time it was made eighteen of the wagons were delivered to said agent; the other nine or ten having been sold to customers of the defendant corporation without notice of plaintiff's claim.

The contract of sale was as follows:

Anniston, Ala., Oct. 20, 1906.

International Harvester Company of America, Chicago, Ill.

Gentlemen:—

Please ship to us on or about at early date as possible, or as soon as possible thereafter, on conditions named herein and hereon, the following goods at prices specified herein: . . . Should we fail to give you settlement as herein provided for, or fail to pay at maturity any obligations due you, or should we become or apparently become financially embarrassed, all our indebtedness to you shall immediately become due and subject to sight draft, and, if necessary to be put in hands of attorney for collection or settlement, we will pay all expenses and fees incurred by your so doing. The title and ownership of all goods you ship us, and their proceeds, of whatever nature, shall remain in you until you have been fully paid in money.

Messrs. Lapsley & Arnold for appellant.

Messrs. H. D. McCarty and E. H. Hanna for appellee.

Anderson, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendant was a purchaser of the wagons in question for value and without notice of the plaintiff's claim or title to same. Howle may have, and, of course, did have, notice of the plaintiff's title, and subsequently became connected with the defendant corporation; but at the time of the sale he was representing himself as the successor to or owner of the Shelnut Mercantile Company, and notice to him cannot be imputed to the defendant corporation. Frenkel v. Hudson, 82 Ala. 158, 60 Am. Rep. 736, 2 So. 758. If, therefore, the instrument under which the purchase was made is a mortgage, the failure to record same would give the defendant protection under the statute of registration. And

Note.—As to respective rights of the conditional vendor of personal property and one who acquires the same from the vendee on the supposition that he is the owner, see note to Davis v. First Nat. Bank, 25 L.R.A. (N.F.) 766.
33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

§ 3394 of the Code of 1907 applies the same results for a failure to register, to conditional sales as does the statute as to the registration of mortgages; but said § 3394 does not apply to the instrument in question, if a conditional sale, as Calhoun county was excepted from the influence of said § 3394 when the sale was made. Acts 1900-1, p. 1516.

The said instrument is unlike the one construed in the case of Dowdell v. Empire Furniture & Lumber Co. 84 Ala. 316, 4 So. 31. And we may concede that it is a conditional sale, and not a mortgage, for the purpose of deciding this case, as the result will be the same as applied to the facts contained in the record. It is well settled, in this and other states, that where the vendor retains title to the thing sold until the price is paid, the title does not pass, the transaction being a mere conditional sale; "and that a bona fide purchaser of such property acquires only the conditional title of his vendor, and cannot be protected against recovery on suit brought by the original vendor and owner of the legal title. The fact that the first purchaser, or second vendor, was at the time of sale in possession of the property, does not change the principle. It is a question of right, and not notice, and the maxim of caveat emptor applies with as much force as in cases of ordinary bailments. The principle, of course, does not obtain where the condition has been expressly or impliedly waived by the vendor, or he has done or suffered anything by reason of which the purchaser from the vendee has been misled." Sumner v. Woods, 67 Ala. 139, 42 Am. Rep. 104. "When the owner, by his own act or consent, has given another such evidence of the right to sell or otherwise dispose of his goods as, according to the customs of trade or the common understanding of the world, usually accompanied the authority of sale or disposition, as where a manufacturer delivers property, retaining title, to a retail dealer for the purposes of sale by the latter, a sale by the person thus intrusted with the possession of the goods, and with the indicia of ownership or of authority to sell or otherwise dispose of them, in violation of his duty to the owner, to an innocent purchaser for value, will prevail against the reserved title of the owner." Bent v. Jenkins, 112 Ala. 485, 20 So. 655; Leigh Bros. v. Mobile & O. R. Co. 58 Ala. 165; Lawrence v. Owens, 39 Mo. App. 325; Winchester Wagon Works & Mfg. Co. v. Carman, 109 Ind. 31, 58 Am. Rep. 382, 9 N. E. 707; 6 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 483, and cases cited in note 1.

33 L.R.A. (N.S.)

A few cases confine the protection of purchasers only from a retailer in the due or ordinary course of trade, and not to one who buys the whole stock in bulk or by wholesale from a retailer. Burbank v. Crocker, 7 Gray, 158, 66 Am. Dec. 470; Pratt v. Burhans, 84 Mich. 489, 22 Am. St. Rep. 703, 47 N. W. 1064. The weight of authority, however, and among which are our own cases of Bent v. Jenkins and Leigh Bros. v. Mobile & O. R. Co. supra, do not confine the waiver or estoppel in favor of purchasers in retail or the ordinary course of trade alone, but extend it to all innocent purchasers for value. They hold that, notwithstanding goods be sold, with title reserved, to a retailer to dispose of only in the ordinary course of trade, an innocent purchaser from him will be protected, although he exceeded his authority in making the sale. If he sold only in the customary way, he would not exceed his authority, or breach of his duty to the owner, and the expression that protection will be awarded an innocent purchaser, although the second vendor exceeds his authority, and breaches his duty to the owner in making the sale, was needless if the rule was confined to retail sales; for if a retailer sells only in the usual or customary manner, he would not exceed the authority given him as a retailer. The case of Lawrence v. Owens, 39 Mo. App. 325, cited approvingly in the case of Bent v. Jenkins, supra, involved a purchase in bulk.

The facts in the case at bar show that the wagons were sold to the Shelnut Mercantile Company, a retailer, with authority to sell or dispose of same in the ordinary course of business. If the said company breached a duty to the plaintiff in making the sale, the said plaintiff gave them the indicia of ownership and authority to sell, and is estopped from claiming under a reserved title as against this defendant, who was an innocent purchaser for value, and who was not charged with the Shelnut Company's breach of duty to the plaintiff as to the manner of making the sale.

The trial court erred in rendering judgment for the plaintiff, and the judgment must be reversed; and, as the case was tried by the court without a jury, under the practice act for the Circuit Court of Calhoun County (Acts 1907, p. 397), a judgment will be here rendered for the defendant.

